Nathaniel M. Cox was reared on the farm in Bartholomew county, and lived at home until he had reached his nineteenth year. His education was secured in the district schools, and then he began to sell goods, at Edinburg, where he remained for seven years. Mr. Cox then learned the trade of wood turner which he followed for a number of years. In 1877 he moved to Martinsville and bought a farm of twelve and one-half acres, in Jefferson township, which, with a farm inherited by his wife, made a fine estate of 220 acres, and there the family resided for some eleven years. For a number of years past Mr. Cox has lived in the town of Martinsville.

On May 26, 1875, he was married to Miss Kibby C. Stout, daughter of Amos and Sarah (Rusk) Stout, the three children of this union being: Sarah Lou Dasie, who married Edward Howard, a railroad man of Indianapolis, and has one daughter; William S., who lost his right arm railroading and is now caller for the trainmen in the I. & V. yards in Indianapolis; and Edward E., a brakeman on the Big Four Railroad. Mrs. Kibby C. Cox died Nov. 4, 1904, in the faith of the M. E. Church. Mr. Cox was married (second) to Miss Martha A., daughter of Vance and Maryann (Weidner) Rusk, and they have one child, Erma.

Mr. Cox is a member of the Methodist Church, and his wife of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat. Prior to his second marriage he settled farms on his first children, but still owns a fine home in Martinsville and a farm of 134 acres in Jefferson township. As a citizen and as a neighbor, he is much esteemed.

JOSEPH A. STUDEBAKER, one of the substantial citizens of Anderson, Ind., was born in Preble county, Ohio, son of Jacob and Catherine (Lock) Studebaker, and grandson of Peter Studebaker, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock.

Jacob Studebaker removed to Preble county, Ohio, with his father, and when a young man cleared a farm from the woods. Three of his sons were in the Civil war: David, who was in the 152nd O. V. I., 100-days service, and participated in the battle of the Cumberland river; Henry M., who served three years in the 81st O. V. I., and was in many battles, including Sherman's March to the Sea; and Joseph A.

Joseph A. Studebaker was born Dec. 19, 1845, and received a district school education in his native county, working on the farm when young. He enlisted at the age of sixteen years in the National Guards, being well drilled in 1862, and was called out in May, 1864, serving ninety days in Virginia, Maryland and Kentucky, and was in the battle of the Cumberland river. After the war he went to Illinois, where he worked at farm labor, and in the town of Gilman, Iroquois county, was married in October, 1872, to Maggie Thomas, born in England, daughter of William and Rebecca Thomas, the former a shoemaker by trade, who owned a farm near Gilman, where he was a pioneer. In 1878 Mrs. Studebaker died, leaving one child, Elmer H., and Mr. Studebaker returned to Preble county, Ohio, whence he went to Warren, Huntington county, Ind., and after one and one-half years, in 1889, he came to Anderson, and here he has resided to the present time, becoming well and favorably known. He engaged in teaming on locating in this city, and in 1891 purchased his present property. Mr. Studebaker is a member of the G. A. R. and is officer of the guard. In political matters he is a Republican.

JOSEPH L. GOSS, one of the prosperous farmers of Ray township, Morgan county, Ind., is a son of William J. Goss, and was born Nov. 25, 1861.

(I) Ephraim Goss was a native of North Carolina who came to Owen county, Ind., at a very early day, being among the first settlers of that locality. He cleared up 900 acres of government land, and founded a town, now the flourishing city of Gosport, and there lived until his death. He was recognized as a leader among men, and he was also very charitable.

(II) Ephraim Goss, Jr., son of Ephraim, was born in North Carolina, but he came to Indiana also at an early day, and settled at Gosport, where he conducted a store, but in the forties he removed to Morgan county and took up government land in Ray township, beginning his pioneer life in the woods. There the family lived as pioneers—the father clearing the land, and the mother working as few women could today, not only doing all her own housework and sewing, but making the cloth from which she fashioned the clothing. The family larder was always supplied with game, for the father was renowned for his skill as a hunter. He cleared the place, and made it his home until he died in 1848. The mother died in 1881. The mother, who bore the maiden name of Sally Goss, was a native of North Carolina, daughter of another Ephraim Goss. Both Ephraim and Sally Goss were consistent members of the Christian Church. In politics, he was a Whig, and supported the candidates of his party, earnestly and conscientiously. Eleven children were born to this couple, of whom William J. Goss is the fifth in order of birth. Ten of the children are now deceased.

(III) William J. Goss received a common school education, and when he was twenty-one years of age, his father gave him 160 acres of land, partially cleared. With characteristic energy, the young man cleared off his property, and made it his home until his death Jan. 5, 1906. He added to his farm until at one time he owned 465 acres. Part of this he gave to his children, only retaining the original farm. In 1867, he built a comfortable house, which is now the family home. During the early eighties Mr. Goss spent two years as a general merchant at Paragon, Ind., but returned to his farm, where he carried on a general farming business, and handled a good grade of stock.

On Jan. 11, 1857, William J. Goss married Sarah Goss, born in Owen county, Ind., daughter of Joseph and Deliah (Sandy) Goss, the former a son of Daniel Goss, the first man to enter land in Morgan county, Ind. Joseph Goss and his wife were born in Owen county, Ind. Four children were born to William J. Goss: Theodore D., born Aug. 11, 1859, and now a farmer in Morgan county, married Annie Caldwell, now deceased; Joseph L. was born Nov. 25, 1861; Corna L. married Anna Warthen, of Ray township; Sally D. married Cosmore Isenhower, and is now deceased. These children received a good common school education, and as they grew up, became prosperous. Mrs. Goss is an earnest member of the Christian Church, as was her husband, and takes an active part in its good work. Mr.

Goss was a Republican, and took an active interest in the workings of his party. He had rural free delivery and telephone connection, and was a very enterprising farmer and public-spirited citizen.

(IV) Joseph L. Goss was born Nov. 25, 1861, as before stated. Like his brothers and sister he was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. Remaining at home until the age of twenty-seven years, he rented his father's property for twelve years, when his father, following the example of his own father, gave the young man eighty acres of good land. Upon this Joseph L. Goss carries on general farming, and has been wonderfully successful, as he is quick to see the efficacy of new methods and to adopt them in his business.

On July 15, 1888, Mr. Goss was married to Dollie V. Fowler, born in Morgan county, Ind., Sept. 28, 1871, daughter of William and Martha (Dilley) Fowler. William Fowler is a son of John Fowler, a pioneer of Indiana who went to Kansas in later life, and there died one of the richest men in Lyon county, Kans. William Fowler is a successful farmer in Gregg township, and a veteran of the Civil war. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Goss: William Frederick, born April 26, 1890; and Daisy V., born Dec. 23, 1897. Mrs. Goss is a member of the Methodist Church, and is a charming and cultivated lady, who takes an active part in the church work, and is beloved by a wide circle of friends. In politics, Mr. Goss is a Republican, although he has not been an office seeker, preferring to do his duty as a citizen in the ranks. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, No. 431, Morgan Lodge. The Goss family in all its branches is a well known and highly honored one, connected as it is with the early history and growth of Indiana, and today some of the most prosperous and highly respected men of the State bear this name. The immediate branch of the family taken up in this sketch is well represented in Morgan county, and all who are connected with it may well feel proud of the blood which runs in their veins.

CHRISTOPHER S. FIFER, one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, and an esteemed citizen of Anderson, Ind., was born Jan. 5, 1832, in Wayne county, Ind., son of John and Mary (Tacket) Fifer, the former of whom was born Dec. 25, 1784, on a farm in Monroe county, Va. (now in West Virginia), a descendant of an old Colonial Virginia family of English stock, and the latter Sept. 20, 1792, in the same county.

John Fifer and his wife resided in Monroe county until eleven children had been born to them, and in 1831 they made their way to Wayne county, Ind., where he rented land. He was a hard-working man and cleared up several farms. Several years later he removed to Henry county, living there about ten or twelve years, and then located in Pipe Creek township, Madison county, whence after a short time he removed to LaFayette township, and there he died in 1850. The children of John Fifer and his wife, with dates of birth, follow, the record having been copied from the family Bible of Mrs. John Fifer: Nimrod, June 26, 1807; William, Aug. 29, 1810; John W., Nov. 4, 1812; Anna W., Aug. 10, 1814; Elizabeth, May 22, 1816; Erasmus, March 25, 1818; Charles M., May 4, 1821; Margaret J., June 22, 1823; James M., Aug. 20, 1825; Henry P., May 3, 1827; Rachael C., Feb. 28, 1829; Christopher S., Jan. 5, 1832; and Sarah E., July 1, 1835. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fifer were members of the Baptist Church. In politics he was an old-line Whig. While he had no education, he had a natural liking for mathematics, being able to solve mentally almost any problem.

Christopher S. Fifer was reared among the pioneers, helped to clear the land, and to make rails for the first railroad that ran through Anderson. He received but little schooling, what he did being gotten in a little log cabin, during the days when the school boys were supposed to cut the wood for the school-house fire. For three months of each winter he attended school, the rest of the time being spent in work on the farm.

On Aug. 8, 1862, Mr. Fifer enlisted at Middletown, Henry county, as a private of Company H, 60th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He was honorably discharged at Mobile, Ala., in 1865, arriving home on July 25th of that year. His services took him through Kentucky, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Arkansas, and he participated in the battles of Richmond, Ky.; Vicksburg; Arkansas Post; Champion Hills; Thompson's Hill, Miss.; Black River Bridge; Siege and Charge of Vicksburg; Jackson, Miss.; Red River expedition and many smaller engagements and skirmishes. He had fifteen bullet holes shot through his clothing, and during one battle a shell exploded so close to him as to kill a comrade, the concussion rendering Mr. Fifer deaf. It also injured his left arm, which disabled him for a time. After the fall of Vicksburg, the end of his right forefinger was shot off; and at Blakeley, Ala., he was knocked over by a shell, which knocked off his hat and injured his forehead. He was captured by the enemy at Richmond, Ky., but was paroled thirty-six hours afterward. In spite of his various injuries, Mr. Fifer was never in the hospital, nor did he ever miss a roll call, and he never missed an engagement of any kind in which his regiment participated. For faithful services he was promoted, in 1863, to the rank of orderly sergeant, and that rank he carried to the end of the war.

After his discharge, Mr. Fifer returned to Henry county, Ind., and engaged in the dry goods business in Honey Creek, that county, for eighteen months. Mr. Fifer has been twice married: In 1850, in Henry county, Ind., he wedded Rebecca Jane Gossett, daughter of Joseph and Rebecca Gossett. She died Jan. 25, 1861. No children were born of this union. On Sept. 9, 1866, he married Emma A. Neff, born in Rockingham county, Va., Dec. 12, 1847, daughter of Hezekiah Neff. The Neff family was an old one in that county, descended from old Dunkard stock. Hezekiah Neff was born in Rockingham county, Va., son of John and Elizabeth Neff, German Baptists. John Neff and his wife both died in Virginia, where he had followed farming, and where their children—George, Levi, Hezekiah, Leah, Catherine and Diana—were born. The children all died in Virginia with the exception of Hezekiah, who passed away in Henry county, Ind., where he owned a good farm, to which he brought his wife, Deborah Garver, whom he had married in Rockingham county, Va. She was born there, daughter of William and Deborah Garver. After marriage Hezekiah Neff and his wife settled on his farm in Rockingham county, Va., but in 1855 removed to Henry county, Ind., near Middletown, Mr. Neff taking up forty acres of improved land. This he further improved, and the last four years of his life were spent on Honey Creek, where he had purchased property. Mr. Neff, at the time of his death, was aged sixty-nine years, his wife passing away at about the same age. His children were: William H., Rebecca J., A. C., Emma A., and Samuel D. Mr. and Mrs. Neff were members of the German Baptist or Dunkard Church, and were prominent members of this faith, taking an active interest in its welfare. In politics Mr. Neff was a staunch Democrat. One of the sons of Mr. Neff, A. C., served in the Civil war, as a private of Company C, 8th Ind. V. I., for three years, and saw much hard service.

After his second marriage, Mr. Fifer spent one year on Honey Creek, and then purchased a forty-acre farm in Howard county, situated in Liberty township. There they spent five years, after which they removed to Miami county on a farm of eighty acres. After ten years they removed to a 160-acre farm in eastern Tennessee, where the next eight years were spent. At the end of this time Mr. Fifer returned to Indiana and located at Wabash, where for a time he worked at his trade of carpenter, and then went to Jonesboro. Five years were spent in the latter place, and they then located in North Anderson, where they now reside. Since locating here Mr. Fifer has served as janitor of the Mt. Hope school house.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Christopher S. Fifer: Ardella Olivé, born Aug. 10, 1867, in Henry county, Ind.; Charles Oscar, born Dec. 19, 1868, in Howard county, Ind. (died unmarried at the age of twenty-eight years); Minnie Jane, born Oct. 27, 1870, in Howard county, Ind.; Louise Viva, born Oct. 23, 1872. The children all received good educations. Ardella Olive married Leslie C. King, of Athens, Tenn., now of Frankfort, Ind., and has three children, Ora May, Roscoe Glenn and Bessie Marie. Minnie J. married William L. Elliott, of Kokomo, Ind., and has one child, Clarence William. Louise Viva married Daniel M. Fowler, a resident of Danville, Ill., and has two children, Alvin V. and Alta Irene.

Christopher S. Fifer is a staunch and steadfast Republican, and takes a great interest in local political matters. His first Presidential vote was cast for John C. Fremont, and he has voted for every Republican candidate for President since that time, except the year Peter Cooper ran for president, when he made an exception. He is an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Major May Post, Anderson, while his wife belongs to the Woman's Relief Corps. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. They are members of the Methodist Church, in which faith they have reared their excellent family of children. Mr.

Fifer has a fine war record, one of which any man might well feel proud, and he stands as a model of good citizenship. Ex-Gov. "Private Joe" Fifer, of Illinois, is of the same ancestral stock.

BRICE M. HOWELL, one of the well-known farmers and respected citizens of Morgan county, resides on a fine farm of 223 acres, located in Section 13, Jefferson township. Mr. Howell was born Jan. 7, 1847, in Morgan county, Ind., son of Miller and Martha (Duty) Howell, natives of North Carolina. Of the ten children born to them, five now survive, as follows: Jemima E., widow of William Callahan, of Rochester, Ind.; Margaret, wife of Martin Leonard, of Eminence, Morgan county, Ind.; Martha Jane, wife of Mathias A. Costin; Brice M.; and Samuel, of Greenwood, Indiana. Mrs. Martha (Duty) Howell died in 1850, in the faith of the Baptist Church. The second marriage of Miller Howell was to Mary Ann McClain, to which union seven children were born, the six surviving ones being: Michael, of Gregg township; Alpha, wife of William Goble, of Monroe county; Caroline, wife of Mr. Spickelmeir, of Hendricks county; Sibbie, wife of Samuel Applegate, of Gregg township; John R., of Gregg township; and Miss Etta, of Gregg township. Miller Howell was a farmer, cooper and carpenter, following the latter trade mainly. He came to Indiana in 1835, located first in Hendricks county, but afterward removed to Morgan county and bought land in Adams township. Later he went to Gregg township, and there he died in 1887, aged seventy-eight years. He, too, was a worthy member of the Baptist Church.

On both paternal and maternal sides, Mr. Howell's grandparents belonged to North Carolina, William Howell living and dying in North Carolina, while William Duty became an Indiana pioneer and died in Morgan county.

Brice M. Howell was reared in Morgan county and attended the district school, remaining at home until the age of sixteen years. In the fall of 1863 he enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering Company D, 117th Ind. V. I., and after six months' campaign, re-enlisted, entering this time, Company E, 139th Ind. V. I., for four months, and then he re-enlisted in Company A, 33d Ind. V. I., serving until the close of the war. Mr. Howell then returned to Morgan county and worked at farming by the month, until his marriage in October, 1869, when he purchased a tract of forty acres. At various times he has added to this original purchase, and at one time owned 303 acres. With parental generosity he has given farms to his children, and now retains but 223 acres which he has finely improved. In 1889 he built a handsome brick residence.

On Oct. 3, 1869, Mr. Howell was married to Miss Isabel Foster, daughter of Robert and Ellen (Dixon) Foster, and eight children have been born to this union, two sons and six daughters, as follows: Martha Ellen, who died aged ten years; Theodosia E., who married Absolem Bailey, of Jefferson township, and has four children, Jessie, Bessie, Robert and Teddy W.; Emma R., who married Charles Curtis, of Jefferson township, and has six children, Wallace E., Hobart, Verna B., Mabel M., Zora and Nora; Robert, of Martinsville, who married Cora Bailey; Walter, a teacher in Martinsville, who married Hazel Shipley, and has one child, Byron; Ethel, who married Jesse Shipley, of Martinsville, and has five children, Elsie B., Agnes V., Edith, Russell and Harold; Cary B.; and Bessie M.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Howell are members of the M. E. Church, in which he is steward. In politics he is identified with the Republican party, and has served one term as township assessor and for five years as township trustee. His fraternal relations are with the Improved Order of Red Men, and Blankenship Post, No. 77, G. A. R.

JOHN S. HOWE, a highly respected citizen of Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, Ind., and a substantial farmer and land owner, is a survivor of the Civil war, in which he took an active part. Mr. Howe was born Oct. 2, 1848, son of Nelson and Elizabeth (Smith) Howe, who were of English descent, and the death of the former left him an orphan when but a year old. He was taken into the home and reared on the farm of Robert Brown, and though his educational advantages were very limited, his boyhood being spent in the hard work on the farm, and his entire schooling consisting of no more than five winter terms of sixty days each, yet by his own efforts he gained a good common education. On Jan. 4, 1864, at Indianapolis, Mr. Howe was enrolled as a private in Company L, 9th Ind. Vol. Cav., his service lasting until Aug. 28, 1865, when he was honorably discharged at Vicksburg, Miss., the war having closed. He served in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, participating in the battles of Elk River, Florence, Lynnville, Hollow Tree Gap, Reynoldsville, Lawrenceburg, Pulaski, Brentwood, Little Harpeth, Sugar Creek, Nashville, Franklin, New Orleans and Vicksburg, and as his regiment was mounted and acted as cavalry, he participated in many skirmishes and raids. His horse was shot under him at Nashville, where his regiment followed Hood to the Tennessee river, and he was in the raid in Tennessee which extended as far as Lynnville, following Gen. Joe Wheeler. In the detail of 100 men, picked from each company of the regiment, and commanded by Capt. Robbins, of Company I, Mr. Howe and his comrades went from Pulaski to Florence, Ala., where Gen. Wheeler's men were met. The young soldiers made excellent cavalymen, and young Howe was no exception to this rule, he being in active service with his regiment all the time, although for a period he was greatly troubled with rheumatism.

After the war Mr. Howe returned to Indiana, and located in Marion county, where he engaged in farming. He was married Nov. 20, 1879, to Laura Beeler, born Oct. 1, 1857, in Marion county, daughter of Joel and Rebecca (Rice) Beeler, and to them were born two children: Frank R., born Sept. 4, 1880, who received a high school education at Fisher's Switch, is engaged in farming on one of his father's properties; he married Myrtle Kincaid, and has one son, Russell J. Jesse, born Dec. 1, 1883, was also educated at the high school at Fisher's Switch.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Howe settled on a thirty-acre farm near Julietta, which Mr. Howe had bought out of his wages, and here they resided for two and a half years, whence, in 1883, they removed to his present fifty-acre tract, on which stood a log cabin. This land he cleared and cultivated, and he also owns a farm in Delaware township of eighty acres, and another in Fall Creek of sixty acres, making in all 190 acres. He built a story and a half frame house in 1892, and here he and Mrs. Howe have resided to the present time, becoming people of prominence and worth in their community. Mr. Howe has always been an industrious, hardworking man, and from very humble circumstances in youth has worked his way up to the top in his chosen work. He is a member of the G. A. R., at Fisher's Switch, and is an unaffiliated member of Irvington Lodge, No. 508, I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Republican, and since the second administration of Grant has voted for every Republican candidate for the Presidency.

REZIN HOSFORD. The man who has won his way from the very beginning until he has by his industry and perseverance attained a position of assured influence and of material prosperity, may well look back with satisfaction on his course, and he abundantly deserves the respect and honor so fully accorded him. Among the prominent citizens of Lebanon who have made a name for themselves is Rezin Hosford, who was born at Eugene, Vermilion county, Ind., Feb. 3, 1851, son of Leman and Mary (Givens) Hosford.

Mr. Hosford comes of German stock on his mother's side, and English on his father's. The paternal grandfather was a farmer and soldier in the War of 1812. He died in middle life in 1818. The maternal grandparents were James and Mary Givens, early settlers near Terre Haute, where there is still standing, in a good state of preservation, a brick house which they built at Armiesburg, eighty years ago. Mr. Givens died in middle life, the father of a good sized family.

Leman Hosford, father of Rezin, was a native of New York, and one of a family of five children, three sons and two daughters. In his boyhood he learned cigar making, but when he grew older he abandoned that occupation, and ran a flat boat down the Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans. At one time, too, he was an engineer. Later in life he settled down on a farm in Eugene, and it was there his demise occurred in 1874, at the age of sixty-six years. He married Miss Mary Givens, who was born in Virginia about 1817, and died in 1871. Their children numbered five: Leman, deceased; Mary, widow of Rev. Whitfield Hall, and a resident of La Porte, Ind.; Rezin; Ella, wife of William Massey, of Indianapolis; and William N., of Cleveland.

Rezin Hosford grew up on a farm just on the edge of Eugene, and was sent to the common schools there. He remained at home until he was twenty-two, but in 1873 started out for himself and going to California was overseer of the Chinese workmen on a beet sugar ranch for a year and a half. He was then recalled to Indiana by the death of his father, and has remained in the State ever since with the exception of the summer of 1878, which he spent in Kansas. When he first went back to Eugene he worked as a butcher for two years, and then for the succeeding two years tried farming. A business life, however, appealed to him more strongly, and in 1878 he engaged in selling meat and groceries in Lebanon. After seven years in that line he took up the ice, sand and gravel business, and for the past twenty years has given his whole attention to that, building up a large business, and accumulating a handsome property. Mr. Hosford has built nearly half of the gravel streets in Lebanon. He also manufactures sand and gravel dredges, which have not been on the market long, but for which there is a constantly increasing demand.

On Dec. 31, 1884, occurred the marriage of Rezin Hosford and Miss Rena Ross, daughter of James and Mary (Millett) Ross. Three daughters have blessed this union: Mabel, Cora Belle and Mary. Mrs. Hosford and the oldest daughter are members of the Christian Church. The family reside on Pearl street in a beautiful home which Mr. Hosford built in 1904. In politics his party affiliations are with the Prohibitionists, although until of late years he was a Republican.

WILLIAM A. CHAMBERS, a successful general farmer and extensive breeder of blooded stock, residing at Monrovia, Morgan county, Ind., was born in Monroe township, that county, Jan. 24, 1853, son of Baxter K. and Martha J. (Thompson) Chambers, natives of Orange county, North Carolina.

King Chambers, grandfather of William A., was a native of North Carolina, where he was an extensive and prosperous farmer.

Baxter K. Chambers, son of King and father of William A., came from North Carolina to Indiana, a year prior to his marriage, which took place about 1850 or 1851, and he located in Morgan county, buying a farm, where he lived until his death, at which time he had 320 acres of land. His death occurred June 6, 1888, while his wife, whose maiden name was Martha J. Thompson, passed away Oct. 11, 1870, and both were firm in the faith of the Methodist Church. Baxter K. Chambers was an active Republican, and a man widely respected. The children born to Baxter K. Chambers and his wife were: William A.; Atlas, who died Oct. 28, 1862; one who died May 7, 1870; Julia, who died Aug.

30, 1877; Oliver P., who died March 28, 1881; and Franklin F., who died in February, 1886.

William A. Chambers received a good, common school education, and when he had completed his studies, he moved on eighty acres of his father's land, and lived there for seven years, then bought 100 acres in Monroe township, and a farm of seventy-six acres near Monrovia. In 1895 he built his present handsome residence, and has a good house on his other farm. In addition to carrying on general farming, he breeds full blooded short-horn cattle and Poland China hogs, and is very successful in all his operations.

On Nov. 26, 1874, Mr. Chambers was married to Eunice Rawnsley, born in Morgan county, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Hadley) Rawnsley, and six children were born of this union: Irvin, at home; Herbert, who died in 1903, at the age of twenty-three years; Dora, who married Thomas Hobson, a farmer of Monroe township; Laura, who married E. Hadley, a rural mail carrier, and resides in Monrovia; and Harry and Hazel, at home. All these children have been well educated, and the daughters are talented in music. In politics Mr. Chambers is a Republican, from 1890 to 1896 serving as county commissioner. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., No. 354, and Encampment, No. 309.

Joseph and Mary (Hadley) Rawnsley, parents of Mrs. Chambers, were both born in North Carolina, but came to Indiana at a very early day in its history. They purchased their present home, clearing it up, and making of it a very pleasant place and one of the most valuable farms in Hendricks county. The father is aged ninety-five years, but he lost his good wife in October, 1865. He, his wife and family were all members of the Society of Friends, and very active. Eight children were born to Joseph Rawnsley and wife: Ruth, deceased, who was for some time a school teacher; Manley, deceased; William, deceased; Neuton, deceased; one child that died in infancy; Eleanor, deceased; Sarah, who married Robert Franklin, and resides in Hendricks county, where he is engaged in farming; and Eunice, Mrs. Chambers.

WILLIAM ELDRIDGE, one of the leading representatives of the legal profession in Franklin, Ind., and a man of prominence and substance in the community, was born Aug. 4, 1853, in Tippecanoe county, Ind., son of Willet and Melinda (Neville) Eldridge, natives of Henry county, Kentucky.

The paternal grandfather of William Eldridge was a native of Kentucky, where he lived and died, pursuing the occupation of a farmer, being quite advanced in years at the time of his death. He was married three times, and by each of his three marriages he had children, Willet being a son by the second marriage. The maternal grandfather was named Stewart Neville, a native of Kentucky, who died there at the age of ninety-two years. By occupation he was a farmer, and he had a large family. The Neville family is of English descent.

Willet Eldridge during his younger days was a hotel keeper, but he spent the greater part of his life on a farm. Coming to Indiana in 1852, he settled in Tippecanoe county, near Battle Ground, and engaged in farming, which he continued until 1864, when his death occurred at the age of forty-five years. His wife, Melinda Neville, preceded him to the unknown land by but five days, dying when about thirty-five years of age. Both were consistent members of the Baptist denomination. Five children were born to Willet and Melinda Eldridge, two sons and three daughters, three of whom are now surviving: William; Stewart G., of Logansport, Ind.; Eliza, wife of Samuel Park, of Greenwood, Indiana.

William Eldridge remained in Tippecanoe county until 1869, attending the common schools of that locality and what was known as Purdue College, and later Brookston College. In 1869, he located in Johnson county and for thirteen years taught school in the county, eleven years of this time in his home township. He studied law with Col. S. P. Oyler, of Franklin, Johnson county, and was admitted to the Bar of the county. Since that time he has practiced in Johnson county with the exception of a short period, just after his admission to the Bar, when he taught school. From 1889 to 1895 Mr. Eldridge resided at Greenwood, Ind., but at that date he removed to Franklin, and formed a law partnership with Elihu F. Barker, which partnership continued until Jan. 1, 1902, when Mr. Eldridge retired from the firm. He remained in the practice of law at Franklin until April, 1903, when failing health caused him to give up his work. He then removed to a farm in Scott county, Ind., where he now resides. While he is a member of the Scott county Bar the condition of his health prevents his active participation in the work of his profession.

On Nov. 6, 1882, Mr. Eldridge married Miss Appie Parmer, daughter of James and Caroline (Oldham) Parmer, and three children have been born of this union, Clem, Eugene and Harry. Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge are consistent members of the Christian Church, in which they are earnest workers. In politics Mr. Eldridge is a Republican.

GEORGE W. IFERT, a responsible citizen of Madison county, and a veteran of the Civil war, was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, June 6, 1837, son of Jacob and Sarah (Hetzel) Ifert.

Jacob Ifert was born of German ancestry, near Baltimore, Md., in a little place called Frederickstown, and it is thought his father was a native of Germany. He learned the trade of a blacksmith in Maryland, but when a young man he went to Montgomery county, Ohio, where he lived seven miles from Dayton. There he married Miss Sarah Hetzel, who was born in Pennsylvania, daughter of Jacob Hetzel, and connected with the famous Indian fighter and hunter of that name. For thirty years Mr. Ifert worked in Alexandersville, Montgomery county, and was known as a skilful mechanic, and woodworker. In 1850 he moved with his family to Madison county, Ind., making the trip with wagons in four days. He bought 160 acres of land in Fall Creek township, of which only ten were cleared, and which had a log cabin on it. This he developed into a good farm and became quite well off. During the War of 1812 Mr. Ifert served as a soldier. In politics he was originally a Democrat, but afterward accepted Republican principles, and voted for Lincoln. His children were: William, who served eighteen months in Company B, 89th Ind. V. I., and was honorably discharged at the close of the war; Betsey; Mary; Peter; Emeline; and George W.

George W. Ifert was about thirteen when his father settled in Fall Creek township. He went to the district school in the winter, and worked at clearing the land and farming during the summers. He remained at home until he was twenty-five years of age, and then enlisted at Pendleton, Ind., Sept. 28, 1862, in Company B, 89th Ind. V. I., and served nearly his whole term of three years, being discharged at Mobile, Ala., in July, 1865. Mr.

Ifert was in the battles of Munfordville, Ky.; LaGrange, La.; Jackson; Mobile; Sheffield Bayou, La.; Pleasant Hill, La.; Fort Scott, Ark.; in the second battle of Franklin, and in the two days' fighting at Nashville. He was taken prisoner at Munfordville, with 3,500 other Union men, was paroled the next day, and wandered for a week with no food, except what he could find in the fields. He took part in all the campaigns and marches of his regiment, but was laid up in his quarters for some two months with rheumatism and swamp fever, contracted from exposure. His left leg was so badly disabled by this that he has never recovered its full use.

Mr. Ifert went home after the war and in the following December was married. The next six years were spent on the old Ifert farm, whence he moved to a farm in Vernon township, Hancock county, and from there to his present farm in 1884. His wife inherited twenty acres from her father, and he has improved the place and built a frame house on it. Mrs. Ifert was Miss Mary A. Wynn in her maidenhood, and was married to Mr. Ifert in Vernon township, Hancock county, Dec. 21, 1865. She was the daughter of Joseph and Miriam (Jarrett) Wynn. The children born to this union are: Mary A., who married William A. Wiseman, a lumber man in Vernon township, and has a son, Glenn; and Charles L., residing on the home farm, who married Miss Ida Wells, and has a son Paul. Mr. Ifert is a member of the Sol D. Kempton Post, G. A. R., and is past commander. In politics he is a Republican, and has been from the early days of the party, and voted for Lincoln for his first term. He is a well known and much esteemed citizen, and is somewhat prominent in local affairs. He held the office of supervisor for two terms.

On April 10, 1901, Mr. Ifert met with a great loss in the death of his faithful wife. She had been a help in every sense and a good wife to him, and was much liked in the community, where her death was deeply lamented. She and Mr. Ifert both belonged to the Christian Church.

LAFAYETTE FERGUSON, a highly respected citizen of Elwood, Ind., where he is engaged in carpentering, sawmilling and teaming, was born April 3, 1844, in Shelby county, Ind., son of James N. and Esther (Gibson) Ferguson.

James N. Ferguson was born in Pennsylvania, son of William Ferguson, a pioneer of Franklin county, Ind., where he died. He came with his father to Indiana, where he was engaged in farming all of his life, also owning a sawmill. He was very patriotic and tried to enlist several times, but was always refused on account of his age. He had four children: Lafayette; Jane, who married John F. Frush; Emeline, who married Lewis Heffner; and Loretta, who married Perry Parker. Mr. Ferguson was a Republican, and his religious connections were with the Methodist Church. His death occurred in Elwood, when he was aged eighty-three years.

Lafayette Ferguson was eight years of age when he came with his father to Tipton county, Ind., and fourteen years old when he went to Miami county, he having attended school in both of these places. He enlisted near Peru, Miami county, in the Union army, and was enrolled Aug. 16, 1861, when seventeen years of age, as a member of Company A, 39th Ind. V. I., afterward reorganized as the 8th Ind. Cav., to serve three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged, and re-enlisted at Ringgold, Ga., Feb. 21, 1864, to serve three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged at Lexington, N. C., July 20, 1865, being mustered out at Indianapolis. He served in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, and North and South Carolina. He was in the battles of Shiloh, in April, 1862, and Corinth, and after many skirmishes participated in the battle of Murfreesboro, being taken prisoner Dec. 31, 1863, when 250 members of his regiment were captured. He was confined in the famous Libby prison for six weeks, and then taken to Annapolis, Md., and paroled. When captured he was stripped of his overcoat and everything in his pockets. The rations were soup and about an ounce of light bread once per day, but Mr. Ferguson was treated fairly well, considering the state of the prison. After his exchange he rejoined his regiment at Murfreesboro and went to Tullahoma, taking part in a battle there, and was also at Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge and in Sherman's March to the Sea. He was in many skirmishes, and also did a great deal of foraging, often alone. On one expedition a foraging party of which Mr. Ferguson was a member went sixty-nine miles and captured a great amount of meat. He was in the battle of Black River, and was on the steamer "City of Columbus" when that vessel was burned.

During his entire service, about four years, Mr. Ferguson was an active, faithful soldier, and his war record is one of which any man might well be proud.

After the war Mr. Ferguson returned to Indiana and settled in Cass county, where for some time he engaged in sawmilling, also learning the carpenter's trade from his father. In 1879 the family came to Elwood, and here Mr. Ferguson has resided to the present time, being engaged in carpentering, and in sawmilling and teaming. He is one of the substantial business men of the place, and is highly esteemed for his many sterling qualities of character. He is a member of Elwood Post No. 61, G. A. R., and has held the office of adjutant for three years and also been quartermaster. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, of which he has been a trustee.

On April 10, 1879, Mr. Ferguson was married in Tipton county, Ind., to Mary A. Nash, born Aug. 29, 1856, in Tipton county, daughter of George and Rachel (Shields) Nash, and they have three daughters: Emma A., who married Fred Clark, has one child, Albert L.; Esther Ann, who married Charles Price, resides in Elwood; and Ethel A.

REV. ISAAC DUCKWORTH. Unquestionably the loftiest and noblest of earth's creations is man, and equally without question the noblest of men is he whose self-abnegation is complete. In this age of bitter competition for wealth and personal aggrandizement, how beautiful and inspiring is the picture of one who has risen above these sordid aspirations and in the higher atmosphere of disinterested reflection, finds time to concern himself with the sufferings and sins of humanity, seeking to alleviate them! No picture in history has endured, nor will exist through all time, as will that of the divine One who gave up all for friends and foes alike.

After more than three score years of ministrations among men, the Rev. Isaac Duckworth is resting from his earthly labors. For some years before his life closed he was retired from active work, and he enjoyed a well-earned rest. He was born in Green county, Ky., Oct. 2, 1820, son of John Duckworth, a native of Old Virginia. The father by occupation was a farmer, and he came to Indiana in 1830, locating in Shelby county, near the Johnson county line, where he entered forty acres of land, buying other land from time to time and becoming very well-to-do. He died at the age of seventy years at this place. His first wife, the mother of our subject, was Nancy (Clifton) Duckworth, who claimed Kentucky as the place of her nativity, and who died in the year 1829. To them were born seven children, of whom but one now survives, the Rev. Housan Duckworth, of Logansport, an earnest minister in the Methodist Church to which he has belonged since a boy. The second wife of John Duckworth was a Miss Sandifur and by her he had six children, two of whom are now living, John and Samuel.

The paternal grandfather of Rev. Mr. Duckworth was born in Old Virginia, and served for seven long years in the Revolutionary war, undergoing great hardships and conducting himself with great honor and bravery in behalf of the cause of freedom. He joined Daniel Boone in the second company which he took out from the Colonies over the mountains into Kentucky, and he died there at an advanced age as the result of a fall in which his neck was broken. He left ten children. The maternal grandfather of our subject was William Clifton, of Kentucky, also a farmer in that State. After a long life of usefulness he died there, leaving a large family.

When the Rev. Mr. Duckworth was but ten years old, his parents came to Indiana, taking up land here. At seventeen being ambitious to see more of the world, he started out in his early manhood for the South, and for the ten years following was engaged in driving teams in the great cotton State of Mississippi. Returning at the expiration of that time to Indiana, he bought 160 acres of land in Hensley township, Johnson county, as an investment. He never moved there; but settled in Needham township on the farm on which he made his home at the last. By his thrift and good management he acquired from time to time additional land, until he found himself owner of several hundred acres. In later years he sold off and gave to his children as they matured the principal part of this, keeping but eighty acres for himself.

On Aug. 27, 1846, the Rev. Mr. Duckworth was joined in marriage to Serenna Beard, daughter of Jesse and Hannah (White) Beard, and of this union seven children were born as follows: Mary Eliza, born Aug. 23, 1847; Jesse M., July 28, 1850; James N., Feb. 18, 1853; John Harvey, March 5, 1855; Hannah M., Jan. 24, 1858; Sarah M., Nov. 20, 1860; and Isaac S., March 1, 1863. Mrs. Duckworth died April 3, 1901, at the honored age of seventy-three years and six months.

The Rev. Mr. Duckworth received a common school education, all that was open to him in the place of his birth, but in years following by reading and experience accumulated a very large fund of information and knowledge. He became a licensed local preacher in the Methodist Church and ministered throughout Franklin, Johnson and Shelby counties, where he was much sought as a speaker. When the war broke out he enlisted, in 1862, in Company I, 70th Ind. V. I., and served as a private in the infantry, being detailed to drive teams, in which work he was so proficient that at the end of his three-years term of service, he had the same six mules that he started with, having preserved them in good condition throughout all the hardships of the war. Coming home he was received into the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Church, and remained a member as long as he lived, being toward the close of his life on the superannuated list on account of his great age, and inability to continue active work. In his circuits and stations he took into the Church 1,208 persons, in all, and united in marriage 253 couples, each of which he presented with one of his photographs. Johnson and Shelby counties were his home for seventy-two years, and the rest of his time was spent in the war and in Mississippi.

His political faith many years ago was that of a Democrat, but he always opposed slavery in the South. In later years he generally voted the Republican ticket, feeling that the principles of this party best accorded with his beliefs. The three brothers in his family, Robert, Isaac and Housan, together, in their life work, served over one hundred years in the ministry.

Rev. Duckworth was not a man content with sermonizing to others, but instead was himself a living sermon, and throughout his long life never shirked duty nor privation. When his country needed him he quickly responded, seeking no high sounding praise nor office, but being content to serve faithfully where he was most needed. Courageous alike in the battles of war and peace, whether the trial was of conscience and denial, or the deadly field of battle, he carried the same high estimate of right and duty, and at the last with his crown of age and infirmity he found his compensation and reward in the devoted admiration and love of all, and more than this, in his own consciousness that he fought well the good fight unto the end.

CAPT. WILLIAM A. DILLEY, one of the prominent citizens, excellent farmers and much respected residents of Morgan county, located on Section 12, in Jefferson township, is also an honored survivor of the Civil War.

Mr. Dilley was born Jan. 7, 1840, in Darke county, Ohio, a son of Arthur M. and Elizabeth (McInturf) Dilley, the latter of whom was born in Tennessee, a daughter of Jacob McInturf, a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent. He took part in the War of 1812. His death took place in Ohio while he was visiting one of his ten children. Arthur M. Dilley, father of Capt. Dilley, moved from Ohio in 1842 and settled in Jefferson township, Morgan county, Ind., and there bought first a tract of forty acres, to which he subsequently added until he owned 120 acres. Mr. Dilley died on a farm adjoining the old home. Although he engaged in farming he was a skilled carpenter and followed that trade through life. His widow survives and resides with her son James in Martinsville, having reached the advanced age of ninety-two years. Mr. Dilley served one term as justice of the peace. Both he and wife were members of the M. E. Church.

Although Captain William A. Dilley later became a brave and valiant soldier, his childhood and youth were spent in peaceful seclusion on his father's farm in Jefferson township. His education was obtained in the district schools, and in early manhood he worked at the carpenter's trade and operated a sawmill. Farming, however, has been his choice of occupations. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was one of the first to enlist, in April, 1861, entering Company K, 7th Ind. V. I., and after the three months of service expired he testified to his patriotism by re-enlisting, entering Company A, 33rd Ind. V. I., Gen. John Coburn being commander as its colonel. Captain Dilley served his country over four years, entering the ranks as a private and returning to his home with the epaulets of a captain. His first promotion was as fifth sergeant; in 1863 he was made first sergeant; on Nov. 8, 1864, he was made first lieutenant and served in that capacity until March 27, 1865, when he was commissioned captain. In the following July he was discharged at Louisville, Ky., and reached home in August. Captain Dilley fairly won his promotion, having seen hard and continuous service. Some of the battles in which he took part were: Wild Cat, Ky.; Pumpkin Vine Creek; Burnt Hickory; Kenesaw Mountain; Peach Tree Creek; Averysboro, N. C.; Bentonville; the Atlanta campaign and the March to the Sea, and he was wounded at Thompson's Station, Tenn., March, 1863, where he was captured with his regiment and taken to Libby prison.

On April 14, 1864, Captain Dilley was married to Miss Lucy A. Dane, daughter of Stephen L. and Maria (Champlin) Dane. Mr. and Mrs. Dane came to Indiana from Vermont, in 1847, and located for one year at Belleville, and then moved to Gregg township, where both died. They had four children, the two survivors being Amelia, wife of Daniel B. Kivett; and Mrs. Dilley. Mr. Kivett was also a soldier in the Civil War. The children born to Captain and Mrs. Dilley were six in number, namely: Augustus M., who died when nearly fourteen years of age; Minnie V., who married Rev. Arthur J. Cheeseman (of the M. E. Church, of English birth, and a graduate of a London college, who was drowned in July, 1901) and had children, Stanley H., Pearl L., Annie L., and Grace (the latter deceased); Effie M., who married Fred McClellan, of Indianapolis, and has two children, Mabel and Nadine; Pearl M., who married Edward Crone, of Adams township, and has children, Lula and William; Ruby, who married Oras Crews, of Gregg township, and has two children, Elmer and Muriel; and Grace, who died at the age of eight months.

Captain Dilley and wife are active members of the M. E. Church, in which he is class leader. His father was one of the early organizers of the church in his township, the family long having been leaders in this religious body. Like his father, Captain Dilley has always supported the Republican party, and he is one of the advisory board of the township. He is one of the good farmers of the locality, owning forty acres in the home place and thirty-seven in another tract. The family is held in high esteem in Jefferson township.

DR. LEWIS N. HOWARD, one of the older and more prominent physicians and surgeons of Indianapolis, where his personal character, public spirit and professional skill have won him many friends, was born in Decatur county, Ind., Aug. 16, 1838, son of Edward and Clarissa (Lewis) Howard. The father was born in Ohio, and the mother in Kentucky. They had two sons, namely: Dr. Lewis N.; and William O., who died when he was about thirty years old.

Edward Howard learned the harness and saddle-making trade, when he was a young man, and followed that line of work in Cincinnati some years, when he came to Indiana, and established himself in Decatur county. There he was married and, studying medicine under his father-in-law, began a professional career at Greensburg. A few years later he removed to Knightstown, in Henry county, where he practiced until 1854. That year he made a home in Indianapolis, at that time a thriving country place of about 12,000 people. He died here in December, 1899, at the age of eighty-five years, having led a long and creditable professional career. His widow, who makes her home with her son, is now over eighty years old. Both were Presbyterians. The special line of professional work which Dr. Edward Howard followed, was the treatment of cancer, in which he was very successful, and in which he had a marked standing in several States.

George Howard, grandfather of Dr. Lewis N., was a native of Pennsylvania, of English descent. He married and settled in Hamilton county, Ohio, where he died at the age of ninety-four years. To him were born nine children. He was a farmer, and it is thought that he built the first brick house in Cincinnati.

Nathan Lewis, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Lewis N. Howard, was a native of Virginia. For a time he lived in South Carolina, and then went to Kentucky, from which he moved to Decatur county, Ind., where he practiced medicine until his death in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He was the father of eight children.

Dr. Lewis N. Howard lived in Decatur county until he was about twelve years old, when he accompanied his parents to Knightstown, where he spent the ensuing four years. At the age of sixteen he came to Indianapolis, and this city has been his home to the present time. His education which began in the common school, was continued in the old seminary that stood on what is now the University Park. In 1857 he was a graduate of Hanover College, and then he began the study of medicine and surgery under his father, and in 1859 entered Transylvania Medical College at Lexington, Ky., which at that time was ranked among the leading schools of medicine in the West. For a time he practiced with his father, and in 1873 graduated from the Missouri Homeopathic Medical College at St. Louis. While there he had an office, and devoted a part of his time to professional labors. After completing his course in that institution he returned to Indianapolis, where he has practiced to the present time, his specialty being Orthopaedic Surgery and the treatment of cancer and chronic diseases. For the past twenty years his practice has been entirely office work.

Dr. Howard was married Feb. 22, 1859, to Miss Mary, a daughter of George and Ethelinda (Keen) Keen, in Lexington, Ky. She died in 1868. Two children were born to them, both now deceased. In 1873 Dr. Howard was married to Miss Margaret, daughter of Dennis and Margaret (Lancaster) McGouldrick. She died in 1877. In 1894 Dr. Howard was married to Mrs. Allie Crawford, widow of Samuel Crawford, and daughter of a Mr. Hodgins. She is a member of Howard Place Methodist Church, which was named after her. In politics the Doctor is a Democrat, and his fraternal connection is with the Odd Fellows, his professional connection with the State Homeopathic Medical Society. He lives at No. 1419 East Fifteenth street, where his wife owns a comfortable home. His office is at No. 114 South Illinois street.

HON. GEORGE H. GIFFORD, formerly State Senator, of Tipton, Ind., and a leading member of the Bar of the State, is a member of one of the old and honored families of this section. Mr. Gifford was born Jan. 10, 1850, in Fayette county, Ind., son of Solomon W. and Malinda Gifford.

The Giffords were of Honfleur, Normandy, three centuries before the conquest of England by Duke William. At the battle of Hastings Sire Randolph De Gifford was a standard bearer of Duke William, and was rewarded by him with lands in Somersetshire and Cheshire, which were erected into a barony from which his descendants had summons to Parliament. In the reign of Henry II, Sir Peter married Alice, daughter and heiress of Sir Guy de Corbuchin. Sir Stephen Gifford was one of the barons accompanying Richard Coeur de Lion to the Holy war, and was killed at the siege of Jerusalem. His son, Sir Stephen, was wounded there. George Baron Gifford was made Earl of Buckingham by Henry V, but joining the House of York against that of Lancaster, and he being one of the prime favorites of Edward V, he was created Duke of Buckingham, and married to the Princess Maude Plantagenet, the King's cousin.

George Gifford, his son, being caught by Richard III in the act of correspondence with the Earl of Richmond (Henry VII), was attainted of high treason and beheaded by Richard's orders. The Duke of Buckingham left several infant children, but as they had been deprived of their lands and titles, that mercenary king, Henry VII, found it more convenient not to restore, but to leave them in their then condition; and as Humphrey Stafford, a powerful noble, had married the eldest daughter, Henry created him Duke of Buckingham. The Staffords followed the same fate as the Giffords, and the grandson of Humphrey was beheaded and the family deprived of their estates.

The Giffords in the reign of Henry VIII, put their claims before Parliament, but failed to get judgment. In the reign of James I, Sir Ambrose Gifford again put their claims before Parliament, but in the second year of Charles I's reign they were disallowed.

Walter Gifford, son of Sir Ambrose, emigrated to Massachusetts in 1630, and was the American progenitor of those of that name.

George H. Gifford, of Tipton, Ind., received his preliminary education in the common schools near Falmouth, Ind., and then attended Fairview and Milroy academies in Rush county. He later spent three years at the State University at Bloomington, Ind., afterward attending the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, graduating in 1872. Mr. Gifford then began the study of law in the offices of Green & Waugh, was admitted to the bar in 1873, and immediately took up the practice of his profession, in which he has continued successfully to the present time. Mr. Gifford is a staunch Democrat, and in 1892 was elected to the State Senate, serving in that body with distinction during 1893-94-95. He was the originator and presenter of the bill known as the Gifford Law, in regard to building and loan associations for the protection of home companies and the people, and this law is still in active force. After completing his term of office Mr. Gifford returned to Tipton, and immediately resumed his practice, serving in many of the most important cases in the county. He is a Mason, and an Elk, and in college was a Phi Delta Theta, four of his sons also belonging to that Greek fraternity. He is a close student of literature and the sciences, is a versatile conversationalist and an earnest and convincing public speaker. He is greatly interested in anthropology and is also well versed in historical matters. He is one of the most public-spirited men of Tipton, and is always one of the leading factors in any movement that will prove to be of benefit to the citizens of the community.

In Fairview, Fayette county, Ind., Senator Gifford was united in marriage with Rachel Anna Smiley, and to this union there were born children as follows: Dr. Allen W., a graduate of the State University and of the Central Medical College, Indianapolis, is now practising in Tipton, as a member of the firm of Newcomer, Dickey & Gifford; Frank H., a student of the State University, is a well-known educator of Tipton; Glen J., a graduate of the State University, is in the law office with his father; Manley R. is engaged in business in Tipton; Hanson S., a graduate of the State University and of the Central Medical College, is practising his profession in the town of Sharpsville, Tipton county, Indiana.

DANIEL H. PRUNK, M. D., a physician and surgeon of Indianapolis, Marion county, is a Virginian by birth, from Fincastle, Botetourt county, where he was born Nov. 3, 1829, son of Daniel and Catherine (Edwards) Prunk.

The Prunk family is of German origin, but the paternal grandfather's history is lost; on his mother's side Dr. Prunk comes from Virginia stock, and his grandfather died in that State. Daniel Prunk and his wife were both natives of Virginia, but in 1832 they moved West. He was a blacksmith by trade and at first settled at Hennepin, Ill., where he pursued that calling, but eventually engaged in farming at Tiskilwa, in which place his death occurred in 1862, when he was sixty-five years old. He had been a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife survived him several years, passing away at the age of eighty-four years. They were the parents of twelve children, six sons and six daughters, of whom the following are still living: Madison, of Minnesota; Dr. Daniel H.; Rev. George E., a Baptist minister of California; Magdalene, widow of James K. Polk, now living in Ohio; Kate, wife of a Mr. Blaisdell, of Manchester, Iowa; and Mary, a widow.

Daniel H. Prunk was reared on his father's farm in Illinois and was given a good education. As a boy he attended the old fashioned subscription school, and as he grew older he was sent in turn to the seminary at Henry, Ill., to Judson College, and to Mt. Morris Seminary. For several terms he taught school and then began his studies for his life work, first in Princeton, Ill., and later at the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, from which he graduated. Twenty years later he took a second course of study at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Indianapolis, and was given a degree from that institution also. In 1854 he began practising in Princeton, but later located at Carthage, Ohio, and spent two years there and at Springdale. After a brief residence in Rockford, Ill., he returned to Princeton in 1857, and was there at the breaking out of the Civil war.

When troops were called for Dr. Prunk enlisted in the 19th Indiana regiment as assistant surgeon, and later in the 20th, and until the early part of 1864 was in the army, in the contract service. After the close of his military experience, the doctor remained for a year or two in the Southern States, and started embalming establishments at Nashville, Chattanooga, Huntsville, Knoxville and Atlanta, but in the spring of 1866 he returned to the North and locating at Indianapolis, has practiced there ever since.

On March 30, 1858, Dr. Prunk was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Augusta Smith, daughter of William J. and Lavinia Smith. Their family consists of three sons, all bright, enterprising, active men and already successful in their chosen lines. Frank H., the eldest, who is married to Miss Estella Boggs, is engaged in the hardware and tin business, as is also his next brother, Harry C. Byron F. is a physician in practice with his father. His wife was Miss Pauline Shafer, and they are the parents of four children, Byron Parvin, Harriet Augusta, Helen and Horace Willard (or "Bunnie" as he is generally called).

Dr. Daniel H. Prunk was brought up in the Methodist faith, but his wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In his political views the Doctor is an ardent Republican, though his onerous professional duties leave him little time for any participation in public affairs. He has been most successful as a physician, and has a large practice which bespeaks both his skill and personal popularity. He resides at No. 716 West New York street, where he built in 1871-72, and has his office at No. 36 North Senate avenue. He is a member of the Commercial Club.

DR. HARVEY SATTERWHITE, late a prominent citizen and one of the leading capitalists of Martinsville, Ind., was born on a farm near Bedford, Trimble county, Ky., Jan. 15, 1832, son of John M. and Martha (Branch) Satterwhite, the former of whom was also born in Kentucky, and the latter in Virginia. Twelve children were born to these parents, three sons and nine daughters, the two survivors being: Mary T., wife of George M. Walker, of Washington township; and John W., of Fergus county, Montana.

John Satterwhite, the paternal grandfather of Dr. Satterwhite, was a native of Kentucky, of German ancestry, and was a blacksmith by trade. When in middle age an accident terminated his life, and he left a family of two sons and three daughters. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Satterwhite, William Branch, was a native of Virginia, and a farmer by occupation. He lost his life by drowning when advanced in years, and he left a large family of children.

John M. Satterwhite lived and died in Kentucky, where he was a well known blacksmith in Trimble county, and he passed away in 1849 at the age of fifty years. His wife died Oct. 1, 1843. She was a consistent Christian woman and a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Until he was fourteen years of age Dr. Satterwhite lived in Trimble county, Ky., and there he secured his first educational training. In 1846 he came to Indiana and settled on a farm in Franklin township, Johnson county, where he remained three years. Then he embarked in a mercantile business, and worked at the tinner's trade, and he took up the study of dentistry, studying at night. In 1856 he came to Martinsville and was engaged in active dental practice for six years. From that he went into a banking business, first opening a private bank and later organizing the First National Bank with which he was connected as president and cashier for thirty-two years. Upon retiring from the bank he lived a comparatively quiet life, in the main looking after his large estate, and he passed away Dec. 4, 1904. In politics he was a Republican, and as such represented Morgan county in the special and regular sessions of the Indiana Legislature in 1872 and 1873. For many years he was an active member of the Odd Fellows fraternity.

On May 1, 1862, Dr. Satterwhite was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Thomas, daughter of Isaac and Mary (Fitzgerald) Thomas, and two children were born to this union, both of whom died in infancy. Mrs. Satterwhite died March 17, 1868. On Feb. 2, 1871, Dr. Satterwhite married (second) Miss Harriet Ellen Stephens, who was born March 25, 1836, in Lebanon, Ohio, daughter of Aaron Solomon and Sarah (Hutchinson) Stephens, and one daughter was born to this marriage, Beatrice, who married, Oct. 26, 1894, Frank Steele Rudy, of Lebanon, Ohio, and is the mother of two children, Harriet C. and Josephine. Mrs. Ruby is an accomplished lady; she graduated from a school in Providence, R. I., and later from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, pursuing a classical course in the latter institution. Dr. Satterwhite belonged to the M. E. Church, of which his wife was also a member.

On April 9, 1908, Mr. Noah J. Major wrote: "Dr. Harvey Satterwhite was born on a farm near Bedford, Trimble county, Ky., Jan. 15, 1832. His ancestors were Virginians. He came to Indiana in 1846, locating for a time in Johnson county. After studying dentistry in Franklin he came to Martinsville in 1856. He was an excellent dentist, practised five or six years, then became one of the organizers of the First National Bank in company with Parks and Hite, later president of this. He was also a stock holder in a bank in Indianapolis; was a man of fine business qualities. At various times he held office on the town board of education and corporation. His books were remarkably free from errors; he was a fine book-keeper and penman. He was elected in 1872 as representative of Morgan county. He was a member of the M. E. Church. He was a good man of fine mind and excellent principles. He was a straight Republican."

Solomon Stephens, paternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Satterwhite, was a captain in the Revolutionary war, and was a personal friend of Washington. He married Mary Ann Potts. Ebenezer Stephens, son of Solomon and grandfather of Mrs. Satterwhite, was born near Morristown, N. J., and died at Abingdon, Ill. By trade he was a wheelwright and he also engaged in farming. He married Maria Phoenix, and they had two sons and two daughters.

The maternal great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Satterwhite, was Thomas P. Hutchinson, an officer on the staff of General Washington, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Silas Hutchinson, son of Thomas P., was born in Maryland, and was a pioneer of both Kentucky and Ohio, and was the first treasurer of Clermont county, Ohio. Joseph Hutchinson, son of Silas, was a farmer of Clermont county, Ohio. He married Elizabeth Rosa, and they had a family of eight children. They were devout Methodists. Aaron Solomon Stephens, son of Ebenezer and father of Mrs. Satterwhite, was born in Morristown, N. J., Dec. 2, 1810, and later migrated to Lebanon, Ohio, where he married Sarah Hutchinson, who was born June 20, 1816. They became the parents of two children: Mrs. Satterwhite; and Dr. Joseph L. Stephens, a celebrated physician who conducted a sanitarium at Lebanon, Ohio, and died in November, 1899. Mr. Stephens died May 12, 1874, aged sixty-four years, and his wife passed away Dec. 18, 1894, at the age of seventy-eight. Both were members of the Methodist Church.

MICHAEL QUILL, a retired citizen of Muncie, Delaware county, and a veteran of the Civil war, was born Sept. 29, 1840, in County Kerry, Ireland, son of Thomas and Ellen (Laughlin) Quill. Thomas Quill was a butcher by trade and followed that occupation in the town of Kilflyn. He married in Ireland, and in 1856 came to America with his wife and family of seven children. The father died near New Paris, Ohio, at the age of seventy-eight years, and the mother died the same year, aged seventy-six. Both were members of the Catholic Church. They were the parents of eight children, John, James, Mary, Ellen, Michael, Thomas, Mons, and Johanna, the last named dying in Ireland when young.

The others all reared families except Mons, and all but Michael reside in Indianapolis.

Michael Quill was sixteen years old when the family came to this country, previous to which time he had received a good common school education in his native town. The family embarked at Cork in the good ship "Janie Johnson," an old-fashioned sailing vessel, and were seven weeks on the voyage. The weather was very stormy, and Mr. Quill well remembers the trip. Landing at New Orleans, they came by steamboat up to Cincinnati, and thence proceeded to a farm in Preble county, Ohio, near Eaton, where the father bought thirty acres of improved land, with good buildings. Michael Quill worked on the farm during the summer time, and in the winter season attended the local school until 1860, thus receiving an unusually good training for his day. The school in the new home was of the old log cabin style, with puncheon seats, but it afforded him an opportunity to improve his literary knowledge, and he took advantage of it. When about nineteen years old he commenced to learn shoemaking, in Richmond, Ind., beginning in the old-fashioned way, and serving more than three years, until he became a skilled tradesman. On July 14, 1862, he enlisted at Richmond, becoming a private of Company A, 69th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He was mustered out and honorably discharged at Mobile, Ala., July 15, 1865. He was in the Department of the Cumberland under Grant and Sherman, and saw service in Mississippi, Texas, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas and Louisiana. In the battle of Richmond, Ky., a few weeks after his enlistment, the regiment lost 275 killed and wounded. Mr. Quill was captured and paroled with others at Lexington, and was in Richmond, Ind., two weeks on furlough, being finally exchanged. The regiment was recruited and returned to the front, and Mr. Quill was in many skirmishes on the way to Vicksburg. They went down the Mississippi on steamboat, and up the Yazoo river, and fought a battle at Chickasaw Bluffs, later being engaged at Richmond, La., Port Gibson, Champion Hills and Black river. He was also in the siege of Vicksburg, forty-two days, under fire all the time. He was in a skirmish in Texas, at Matagorda Bay, at Blakeley, Ala., and in many other skirmishes. He escaped uninjured until the battle of Mobile, April 9, 1865, when a shell struck near him while he was in a charge within thirty yards of the front. One of his comrades in Company G, same regiment, named Thomas Ford, lost a leg, and several were injured, Mr. Quill being covered with earth and picked up unconscious by his comrades. He was taken to the field hospital, where it was found that a piece of shell had struck him under his right eye, or that the eye had been injured by the sand striking it. This large shell, with several others, was strung on a telegraph wire as an obstruction, and on the charge, when the troops struck the wire, the shells exploded. Mr. Quill remained in camp at Mobile and returned to service with his regiment, but he always had trouble with that eye afterward, and for sixteen years it has been totally blind. He was always a faithful defender of his country, doing his full duty promptly and cheerfully, and was in all the campaigns, marches, battles and skirmishes of his regiment with the exception of the battle of Jackson, Miss., when he was sick, and except at Richmond, Ky., he was not in Hospital.

After the war Mr. Quill opened a shoe shop at New Paris, Ohio. On Oct. 15, 1865, he was married, in Huntington, Ind., to Ellen Kennedy, who was born in Limerick, Ireland, about 1848-50, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary (Collins) Kennedy. Jeremiah Kennedy came from Ireland in 1854 and settled on land in Preble county, Ohio, for a few years. Later he moved to Wells county, Ind., and bought a farm of eighty acres, where he died when eighty years of age. Michael and Ellen (Kennedy) Quill moved to Wells county, Ind., and bought a farm of fifty acres of timber land of which ten acres were cleared and upon which stood a log house. Mr. Quill finished the clearing of that tract and added fifty-three acres, in time owning 103 acres of fine farm land. He bought and sold several farms, on which he lived, in the same township, and in 1873 bought the farm of sixty acres which he at present owns, and of which but ten acres were then cleared. He cleared the balance and improved the place with good buildings, the farm at present being a valuable piece of property. Mr. Quill was elected trustee of Chester township, and served two terms in that office. In 1901 Mr. Quill moved his family to Muncie and bought the pleasant home in which he has since lived retired. As long as his health permitted he was a most industrious man, and he has always won the respect of all who knew him. The hardships of his army life have told permanently on his constitution, however, and he has felt their effects for many years. Mr. Quill is a G. A. R. man, a charter member of Lew Daily Post, of Bluffton, a member of Johnson Post, Montpelier (Ind.), of which he served as adjutant and officer of the day, and at present affiliates with Williams Post, of Muncie. In political sentiment Mr. Quill was originally a Democrat, and he was elected trustee of Chester township on that ticket, against a Republican, receiving a good majority—fifty-six votes. He has been a Republican since the Cleveland campaign.

Mrs. Ellen (Kennedy) Quill died on the farm Feb. 5, 1879. She was the mother of children as follows: Jeremiah E., born Sept. 13, 1866, died in January, 1867. Laura Ellen, born Aug. 5, 1868, married James H. Carnes, an iron worker, and they reside in Muncie; they have had three children, Francis Hugh, Jeremiah Harvey and Ellen B., of whom the last named died in infancy. Mary Josephine, born Nov. 15, 1870, married William Walter Herbert, an oil man, of Muncie, and is deceased. Thomas William, born Jan. 8, 1872, died Jan. 30, 1872. John, born Oct. 18, 1874, died Jan. 5, 1895. Thomas William (2), born Feb. 18, 1878, died in infancy. On March 30, 1880, Mr. Quill was married, in Anderson, to Ellen R. Ryan, whose father, Thomas Ryan, was a blacksmith of Newport, County Tipperary, Ireland; he and his wife both died in that country. Mrs. Quill and her brother and sister came to America in 1864, making the ocean voyage by steamer from Cork to New York City. She was but thirteen years old at the time, and she accompanied her brother Patrick to Anderson, Ind. The other members of the Ryan family, Michael, William, Canada and Johanna, are all now deceased except Canada, who is a resident of Anderson. Two children have been born to Mr. Quill's second marriage: Hattie Blanche, born July 2, 1881, who is the wife of Stephen Edward Herbert, an iron worker in Muncie; and Thomas Francis, born May 23, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Quill are Catholics in religious faith.

HON. L. ERT. SLACK, Representative of Johnson county in the Indiana State Legislature, and formerly the junior member of the legal firm of Deupree & Slack, of Franklin (Wm. E. Deupree, now Circuit Judge), was born in Nineveh township, Johnson county, Oct. 8, 1874, and despite his youth, is one of the leading citizens of the county in many lines. The parents of Mr. Slack were Elisha O. and Nancy A. (Teeters) Slack, the former a native of Johnson county, and the latter of Morgan county, Indiana.

The Slack family is of Scotch-Irish descent. Reason Slack, grandfather of Hon. L. Ert., was born in Ohio, in 1803, coming with his parents to the wilds of Indiana, in 1813. He assisted in clearing up a farm in Hensley township, Johnson county, and entered land for himself. He was twice married, and he reared a family of nine children. His death occurred in his home there when he was eighty-six years old. He became prominent in his county, and at one time served as commissioner.

Henry Teeters, maternal grandfather of Mr. Slack, was a pioneer in Indiana from Kentucky, coming to this State when a young man, and locating in Green township, Morgan county. He remained on the same farm the balance of his life, and died there in 1899, at the age of seventy-eight years. His children resulted from two marriages.

Elisha O. Slack, son of Reason and father of L. Ert., engaged in farming until within the past few years, at present conducting a meat market at Trafalgar. Mr. Slack has been a resident there nearly all his life, farming in Hensley township, working at the carpenter's trade, and for the past four years has been in the meat and stock business. For some four years he served as assessor of the township, and he is a well-known and leading citizen. His wife, Nancy A. (Teeters), is a member of the Christian Church, but he is not identified with any religious body. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Slack consisted of two sons and three daughters, named as follows: Mary, the wife of Webb Hunt, of Trafalgar; Maude, now at home; Jessie, wife of Guy Clore, Union township; L. Ert.; and Henry T., who died at the age of twelve years.

Mr. L. Ert Slack was reared on the old home place at Trafalgar, and he holds a record as having attended the public schools for a period of five years without ever missing a day or being once tardy. It might be profitable to comment upon this as typical of Mr. Slack's character, the steadfastness shown in boyhood, attending his career on the larger stage of manhood. While attending school, in odd hours, he perfected himself in the blacksmith's trade, but at the age of seventeen, he secured a position in the Central Hospital for the Insane, at Indianapolis, where he remained for four and one-half years. During these years, the ambitious youth persisted in the study of law, and prepared himself so well that in the fall of 1896, he was able to enter the senior year of the Indiana Law School, and was admitted to the Bar on Sept. 6, 1897, at Franklin, Ind. A partnership was immediately formed with W. E. Deupree, the firm name becoming Deupree & Slack, and on the same day, he was appointed deputy prosecuting attorney for Johnson county. Until Nov. 15, 1898, when he resigned, Mr. Slack performed the duties of this office with efficiency. On Dec. 4, 1899, his legal ability was recognized by his appointment as county attorney for one year, which honor was six times repeated. In the meantime, his Democratic friends could not help recognizing his fitness as a standard bearer, and on Feb. 24, 1900, he was nominated for representative of Johnson county, over John M. Dill, by a majority of 450 votes, and on Nov. 6th was elected to the position, over Eugene A. Robinson, by a majority of 528 votes. His service through the session of 1901 was so satisfactory to his constituents, on the committees of Judiciary, Education, County and Township Business, Cities and Towns and Mileage and Accounts, that he was nominated on Nov. 29, 1901, for the same office, without opposition. He was elected State Senator from Johnson and Shelby counties in 1904, and served during 1905 and 1907. During the session of 1903, he received the minority vote for speaker of the House of Representatives.

On Oct. 31, 1897, Mr. Slack was united in marriage with Miss Mary Shields, of Columbus, Ind., daughter of F. G. Shields. One child was born to this union, which died in infancy. Both Mr. Slack and wife belong to the Methodist Church, in which he has been the leader of the choir for the past four years. The pleasant family home, on South Home avenue, is one of the best appointed in the city, and is the center of much social life. Mr. Slack's interest in fraternal orders began when he was admitted to the order of Odd Fellows, and in which he is now Past Grand, in Johnson Lodge, No. 76. He also belongs to Franklin Lodge, No. 107, F. & A. M.; Franklin Chapter, No. 65, R. A. M.; Franklin Commandery, No. 23, K. T., and is Generalissimo in the Commandery; and a member of all Scottish Rite bodies and the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Slack also has membership in Oakleaf Camp, No. 2640, Modern Woodmen of America. Judging the future by the light of the past, Johnson county will probably hear more of her brilliant son.

HARRY L. KENWORTHY, of the firm of Witt & Kenworthy, is one of the rising young business men of Lebanon, Boone county, who has already achieved a position of wealth and influence. He was born in Lebanon, June 22, 1869, and was the only child of his parents, William A. and Sophina H. (Haun) Kenworthy.

William A. Kenworthy was born in Thorntown, Ind., May 23, 1841, and came to Lebanon in 1859. He was a soldier in the Civil war as first lieutenant in the 135th Ind. V. I. For a number of years after coming to Lebanon he was in the hardware business in partnership with Wesley Lane, then engaged in the milling business with Robert Matthews, and in his later years was connected with the old Midland railroad. He died May 28, 1893, and his wife still survives him. She, too, was born in Indiana, near Thorntown, in February, 1845. She is a Methodist, while all the Kenworthys were Quakers. The grandfather, David Kenworthy, was one of the pioneers of Indiana, and he settled on a farm east of Thorntown, where he lived until 1859. In that year he was elected county treasurer and moved to Lebanon. He died in that city May 3, 1877, aged sixty-one years. He was of English ancestry. He married Sarah Burkhalter, who was born in North Carolina in 1816, daughter of Abraham Burkhalter. The Burkhalter family moved from North Carolina to Indiana in 1833, and lived in a tent on the James Staley farm until the father could build his log cabin. Mrs. Kenworthy was married in 1837, and outlived her husband by more than twenty years. Her death took place May 29, 1904, at the age of eighty-four years, one month and three days. She was a member of the Christian Church.

The maternal grandfather of Harry L. Kenworthy married a Miss Snyder, and they were old settlers in Boone county, where they engaged in farming near Thorntown. They were the parents of twelve children, but two of whom are now living: Margaret, the widow of Abner Shepherd, of Galesburg, Ill.; and Mrs. Sophina H. Kenworthy. The mother of this family passed away in 1850, but the father lived to a good old age.

Harry L. Kenworthy has spent his whole life in Lebanon, and there he was educated in the public schools. His business career began as a clerk in a drug store, and later he embarked in the fire insurance line. He was one of the organizers of the electric light and ice plant, and was both a stock holder in the company and the assistant secretary and treasurer for some years. Then he returned to the insurance work, but in 1899 went into partnership with Mr. R. C. Witt, and since that time has dealt in real estate under the firm name of Witt & Kenworthy. The firm do a large business and hold considerable property in farm lands and city lots. Mr. Kenworthy has not been specially active in politics, but he is a Republican in casting his vote. He is treasurer of the school board. He is interested in lodge work and belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Lebanon Lodge, No. 45; Ivanhoe Company, No. 47, Uniformed Rank; the Elks, of Lebanon; Lodge No. 635; and to the Sons of Veterans.

The marriage of Mr. Kenworthy took place Sept. 30, 1890, when he was united to Miss Rose A. Dean, daughter of William and Catherine (O'Brien) Dean, natives of Ireland. They have one daughter, Mary Helen, who is a member of the Catholic Church. The family reside at No. 217 South East street, where Mr. Kenworthy owns a handsome and well appointed home.

LUTHER BEDEL, a highly esteemed citizen of Ingalls, Ind., and veteran soldier of the Rebellion, was born Aug. 4, 1841, in Jackson county, Ind., son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Brooks) Bedel, and grandson of Luther and Sarah (Ramsey) Bedel.

The Bedels were an old Virginia family of English extraction, and both Luther Bedel and his brother Calvin were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, the latter being in a Virginia regiment. In later years Calvin Bedel removed to Ohio, thence to Kentucky, and from there he came to Scott county, Ind., where he died. He first took up his home under the squatter's right and attested 160 acres of land in the woods near Pigeon Roost, so called for the fact that pigeons in great numbers would come to roost in the beech woods, late in the afternoon. So vast were the flocks that Audubon, the famous naturalist, says that they darkened the sky. In the roost their weight would be so great as to break off large branches, and sometimes whole trees were broken down in this way. The early pioneers, after night fall, would go to the roost and with long poles knock the pigeons from the branches, killing them by the hundreds and thousands. For years the pigeons were hunted without restraint, and they gradually began to disappear, although as late as 1872 they were still found plentiful in St. Joseph county, where they fed on acorns. However, they have now entirely disappeared, and this is explained variously, although not satisfactorily. Some well-informed persons believe that as the timber was cut off and hunters multiplied, they were gradually killed off, but as all others of the small game birds still exist this explanation is not accepted by others, among whom is Mr. Bedel, who thinks that they emigrated, as the beech mast and pigeon acorns, which were their principal food, were gone, and as they were closely hunted they went in search of food and peace, and were drowned in trying to cross the ocean. Some writers say that they are still to be found in other countries.

Luther Bedel, grandfather of Luther Bedel of Ingalls, was born in Virginia, and removed with the family to Kentucky, serving in a Kentucky regiment in the war of the Revolution, as well as with Daniel Boone in the trouble with the Indians. He finally settled in Jackson county, Ind., where he cleared a farm of 200 acres, built a log cabin and here reared his family. These children were: Elizabeth; Calvin, who was a soldier in the Mexican war; Hester; Mariah; James; Daniel; Luther; Phoebe; Jane; and Samuel, who was also a soldier in the Mexican war. Luther Bedel was wounded in the battle of Tippecanoe, while serving under General Harrison, and was there captured with a comrade, an Englishman named Samuel Spole, who was wounded in the hip. Later Mr. Bedel took this gentleman home to Jackson county, Ind., where he took the oath of allegiance, married and settled in the neighborhood adjoining Mr. Bedel's farm, and lived to be 102 years old, his wife dying aged eighty-nine years. Luther Bedel was a member of the Missionary Board of the Baptist Church, as was his wife, and he was an old-line Whig in politics. He died aged about seventy-two years, and was buried on the farm, as was also his wife.

Samuel Bedel, son of Luther, was born on the homestead in Jackson county, Ind., in 1813, and received a limited pioneer education, after which he engaged in farming and continued therein all of his life. He was married in Jackson county to Elizabeth Brooks, born in 1812 in Scott county, Ind., daughter of William and Nancy (Peak) Brooks, the former of Scotch descent and the latter of German stock. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks were the parents of these children: John, Elizabeth, Benjamin, Achilles, Kittie, Fannie, Nancy, Matilda, William and Paulina. William Brooks owned about 600 acres of land in Jackson county, some of which he secured with Mexican war claims. He was a substantial and well-to-do farmer and lived to be eighty-four years old, his wife passing away in her seventy-sixth year.

After marriage Samuel Bedel and his wife settled on land in Vernon township, Jackson county, where he bought 200 acres of land and built a log house and barn, these buildings still standing, relics of pioneer days. He and his first wife were members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon, and both died in that faith, he when seventy-seven years old, and she in her forty-ninth year. Their children were: Isaiah, Nancy, Luther, John, Sarah Jane, Calvin and Malinda. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Bedel married (second) Hannah Donald, born in Jennings county, Ind., and to them were born two children, Louetta and Mary Alice.

Luther Bedel, son of Samuel and the subject proper of this sketch, was reared among the pioneers of Jackson county, Ind., and attended school in a log school house, the punch-ions for which were hewed by his father. Mr. Bedel's first teacher was Martin McCarty, who taught school for twelve dollars per month and boarded around, and when he whipped a child he made it a rule to go home with the boy and stay over night. Luther worked on the farm and in the clearing, and at driving oxen at a breaking plow, being able to attend school only for two or three months in the winter time. Most of his education was gained at home. After his marriage in 1850, he settled in Vernon township, Jackson county. On June 22, 1862, he enlisted at Uniontown, being mustered in to the service Aug. 20th, of that year, as a private of Company G, 67th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He was honorably discharged at Galveston, Texas, July 19, 1865. He participated in the following battles and skirmishes, as written in his discharge: Munfordville, Ky., Sept. 14 to 17, 1862, where 300 Union troops were captured by the Confederates, and Mr. Bedel, with others, was paroled on the field and exchanged at Indianapolis, Ind., about two months later; Chickasaw Bayou, Dec. 27 to 31, 1862; Arkansas Post, Ark., Jan. 11, 1863, and assisted in the capture of 7,000 Confederates under General Longstreet; Laurel hill Mill; Port Gibson, Miss., May 1, 1863; Champion Hills, Miss., May 16, 1863; Black River, Miss., May 17, 1863; Siege of Vicksburg, May 19 to July 4, 1863; Jackson, Miss., July 10 to 18, 1863; Carrion Cross, La., Nov. 3, 1863, where he was captured, remaining a prisoner until March 4, 1864; Forts Gaines and Morgan, Ala., Aug. 5 to 24, 1864; siege and charge of Fort Blakeley, Ala., April 2 to 9, 1865, and many skirmishes too numerous to mention. He campaigned in nine different States. Mr. Bedel was wounded at Arkansas Post, Ark., being shot in the left leg below the knee, and still pieces of bone are occasionally discharged from the old wound. He was not in the hospital, but remained in his tent and was treated by Dr. G. W. F. Gerrish, the surgeon of the regiment for two weeks. He received a flesh wound on the left cheek at Jackson, Miss., and was also ill for some time but did not go to the hospital, remaining with his company. He was ever an active, faithful soldier, and was respected by his officers and admired by his fellow soldiers for his gallantry in battle.

After his return to Jackson county, Mr. Bedel engaged in farming for a short time, and in 1866 removed to Riley county, Kans., settling on an eighty-acre squatter claim. Here he remained until 1869, when he sold out and returned to Indiana, where he owned 120 acres, on which he lived until 1894. In that year he moved to Madison county, where he remained until 1899, and then went to Alabama, but in 1905 he returned to Madison county, Ind., where he has since made his home, one of Ingalls' most highly esteemed citizens.

On Dec. 22, 1859, in Jennings county, Ind., Mr. Bedel married Sarah Jane Williams, born in 1844, in Ohio. To this union was born one child, Sarah Jane. Mrs. Bedel died prior to the war, and while home on parole furlough Mr. Bedel was married (second), Dec. 13, 1862, in Jennings county, Ind., by Rev. T. B. Lewis, of the Baptist Church, to Sarah Ellen Carpenter, born June 13, 1845, in Marion township, Jennings county, daughter of Samuel and Jane (Donald) Carpenter. Samuel Carpenter was a farmer of New York, and was married in Miami county, Ohio, after which he settled in Jennings county, Ind., and there cleared up a farm of eighty acres, which he entered, having paid $100 gold for the property. He improved this farm and made a good home, but after the Civil war removed to Missouri, buying a farm on the St. Francis river, where he died aged about seventy-five years. His wife died at the home of Mr. Bedel, when seventy six years of age, a member of the German Baptist Church, while her husband was a Missionary Baptist. Their children were: Hezekiah, Joseph, Samuel, John, Robert, Hannah, Matthias, Sarah Ellen, Samantha Catherine, Squire, Silas Benjamin, and Francis Marion. All of these children lived to maturity except Samantha, who died aged four years, and Francis, who died in infancy. The others all married except Hannah, who died in young womanhood. To Mr. and Mrs. Bedel have been born children as follows: James Edward, born April 5, 1867; Isaiah, born Sept. 7, 1869; Cora Effie, born Jan. 31, 1872, married Melvin C. McGuire, a farmer of Green township, Madison county, and has children, Mary E., Grant, Cora and Ferdinand; Victor M., born Nov. 26, 1874, married Ellen Richards, a native of Green township, and they have three children, Sarah E., Clarence and Ored; Arthur Elmore, born Feb. 25, 1876; and Maude E., born Nov. 22, 1878, married Ira G. Pherigo, a farmer of Hamilton county, and has one child, Casper.

Mr. Bedel is a member of the German Baptist Church, although formerly a Missionary Baptist, being a deacon and preacher. In earlier years he was a Republican, but through his interest in the cause of temperance has become a Prohibitionist.

REV. JOHN M. SHULSE, a retired minister of the Gospel, of the Christian Church, has been a resident of Boone county for over sixty-eight years, has seen the country develop from a wilderness of heavy timber, frequented by wild animals, to the present state of high cultivation, and has himself played no mean part in forwarding the process of civilization. He was born in Nicholas county, Ky., June 1, 1830.

The Shulse family is of German descent. Peter Shulse, grandfather of John M., lived and died in Kentucky. His trade was that of a cooper. He and his wife Elizabeth had a large family, and both lived to a good old age. Her last years were spent in Indiana, and she passed away when eighty-six years of age. The maternal grandfather was a native of Virginia. He married Susanne Dale, who bore him two daughters. She died in Boone county at the age of eighty-seven years. John G. Shulse, father of John M., like his son after him a minister of the Christian Church, went from his native State of Kentucky to Missouri, and then joined other pioneers in Boone county about 1836. He settled there, and was always busy with his ministrations to others. He died in Lebanon at the age of fifty-six years, and his wife, Elizabeth (Dale) Shulse, survived him until 1894, when she passed away in the fullness of eighty-seven years. They were the parents of eleven children, nine sons and two daughters, three of whom are still living, namely: Rev. John M., Dr. William H. and Thomas J.

John M. Shulse was six years old when his parents brought him to Boone county, and he has made his home there ever since, although he spent some time in Illinois and Iowa. He grew up on a farm a mile and a half north of Lebanon, and received his first schooling in the subscription schools. Later he studied one term with Judge Keal in Lebanon. Remaining at home until he was twenty-five years of age, he began life for himself as a farmer, with a half interest in the homestead of 160 acres. In fact throughout his life and whatever his calling, he has always owned a farm. For a couple of years he was associated with his father in a drug business, in Lebanon, but since 1860 he has devoted his life to the ministry. He was ordained that year, with H. Saint Van Dake and Samuel Otterman officiating, assisted by the elders of the Central Christian Church. He began preaching at once, and until March, 1904, pursued his calling without intermission. At the time of his retirement from active work, he was pastor of the Hazelrig Church, an organization of his own founding. He also was the founder of the Old Independence Christian Church.

Rev. John M. Shulse was united to his first wife, Miss Mary Jane Bowers, Aug. 17, 1855. She was the daughter of Abram and Lavica (Hamilton) Bowers. To this first union three children were born: William Lincoln, who married and is employed by Kingan & Co., packers of Indianapolis; Louisa J., who married Thomas Allen and lives on the old home farm; and Sarah Lavica, who married J. H. Stone, of Watseka, Ill., and has three children, John, Fred and Louise. Mrs. Mary J. Shulse died in 1866, aged twenty-eight years. She was a devout member of the Christian Church.

On Nov. 14, 1868, Mr. Shulse married Miss Sarah Elizabeth Hawkins, daughter of Gregory and Elizabeth (Shulse) Hawkins. Of this union there were seven children as follows: John, who lived only six months; Bertha, who died at the age of twelve years; Elizabeth, wife of Goldsmith Hedges, of Lebanon, who has one daughter, Esther; Josephine, the wife of the late Albert Hawkermith, deceased in January, 1904, and the mother of one child, Doris; Joseph, a stenographer in Indianapolis; Harrison, at home; and Benjamin F., a stenographer in the employ of the Big Four railroad and a resident of Indianapolis.

Gregory and Elizabeth Hawkins, the parents of the second Mrs. Shulse, were natives of Kentucky. They had eleven children, six sons and five daughters: Mary J., widow of John Allen, of Thorntown; William M., of Boone county; Frances, wife of John Keys, of Boone county; Henry C., who died May 5, 1904; Abigail, wife of William Henry Pennington, of Lawton, Okla.; Susan, wife of Martin Witt, of Boone county; John W., of Olathe, Kans.; Sarah Elizabeth, Mrs. Shulse; Joseph, Samuel and Benjamin, all deceased. The father of this family was a carpenter who came to Indiana and located in Boone county in 1849. He and his wife were both members of the Methodist Church, and their deaths occurred, respectively, in May, 1900, at the age of eighty-nine years, and in 1885, at the age of seventy-two years. The paternal grandfather, William Hawkins, a native of Virginia, was an early settler in Kentucky and Indiana, and died in the latter State, in Hendricks county, a farmer all his life. He married Abigail Caldwell, and had a large family. The maternal grandfather was Peter Shulse, a common ancestor of both Rev. John M. and Sarah E. Shulse.

Rev. John M. Shulse has been for years a power for good in the county, is widely known and is widely held in the highest esteem for his integrity and uprightness and for his many good qualities. He was formerly a Republican in politics, but is now a Prohibitionist.

OSCAR T. KUHN, a veteran of the Civil war, and a man widely and favorably known as a successful farmer of Warren township, Marion county, Ind., was born in Wayne county, in the town of Centerville, Aug. 8, 1844, son of Solomon and Julia Kuhn, natives of Frederick county, Md., born in 1800 and 1810 respectively, and the latter died at the age of ninety-three years.

Solomon Kuhn was a hatter, having been apprenticed to the hat making industry at an early age. He traveled to some extent, buying furs to use in his hat making, and he frequently would relate of his visit to Indianapolis, when it was but a village of only a few log huts. His first visit was in about the year 1819 or 1820. At one time he owned a business block in Centerville, and was in comfortable circumstances, but reverses in business swept away his property. His family of five children consisted of: Mary, who married Harrison Shank, a stock dealer, and lives at Irvington; William H., who died in the Federal service while a member of Company K, 52d Ind. V. I., in 1862; Oscar T.; Calvin, who married Elizabeth Springer, and is a butcher at Irvington; Emma, who married Joseph L. Hunter, of Irvington, an ex-commissioner.

On the maternal side, grandfather David Sackett was recorder of Wayne county for thirty-four years, and was a physician all his life. Born in Scotland, he came to Wayne county and died aged ninety-three years, a most highly esteemed gentleman.

In 1871 Oscar T. Kuhn married Mary J. Askren, daughter of William and Catherine (Buchanan) Askren, the former a native of Hamilton county (mentioned elsewhere). Three children have been born of this union: Bert, married to Maggie Toon, at home; William F., at home; Victor F.

Mr. Kuhn has a war record which deserves more than passing mention. Enlisting in Company B, 117th Ind. V. I., while his brother enlisted in the 132d Ind. V. I., our subject was out for ten months, and when his term of service expired, he re-enlisted twice thereafter. Among other battles, he participated in those of Blue Springs, Bull's Gap, Reams Station, Clinch Mountain, and many skirmishes, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. Returning home, he engaged as a salesman for eight years; was also a butcher, but later began farming, and now has 160 acres of fine farming land, upon which he has an excellent brick house and many improvements. His principal product is grain, and he markets it to Indianapolis. In politics he is a Republican, as was his father before him. As an excellent farmer, thorough business man, and loyal-hearted citizen, he has few equals, and his neighbors appreciate his many sterling virtues, which have made him what he is today, his success having been attained through his own efforts, intelligently directed.

CHARLES M. GRAVIS, M. D., formerly Medical Director of the Highland Hotel Sanitarium, at Martinsville, Ind., is one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Morgan county. He was born July 29, 1845, in Clermont county, Ohio, son of Sebastian and Catherine Minerva (Barker) Gravis, the former of whom was born in Erie, Pa., and the latter in Ohio.

Dr. Gravis is of German extraction, his grandfather, Peter Gravis, having been born in Germany very many years ago, and having come with his father and elder brothers to the United States. The father and two older brothers all became soldiers in the war of the Revolution, and all three were killed in the battle of Long Island, N. Y. Peter Gravis settled in Pennsylvania, and became a defender of his adopted country in the War of 1812. A sword which was presented to him on account of his bravery, by no less a person than the gallant Commodore Perry, is in the possession of Dr. Gravis and is highly prized. Peter Gravis lived to the age of eighty-seven years, and died in Erie, Pa., leaving a family of four sons and one daughter.

Sebastian Gravis, son of Peter and father of the Doctor, taught school for many years during the winter seasons and worked at bricklaying in the summers. It was a promising field for his line of work that brought him to Indianapolis in 1863, and there he followed contracting until within a few years of his death. The outbreak of the Civil war found him ready to give his services to his country, but they were declined on account of his age. Although he was not accepted, he contributed three sons to the cause, Dr. Charles M. entering the army at the age of seventeen years. The death of Mr. Gravis took place in February, 1893, when he had almost reached his eighty-sixth birthday. He was a great admirer of Andrew Jackson and adhered to the principles of Jacksonian Democracy. He was thrice married, his last wife being the mother of Dr. Charles M. She was the daughter of a prominent citizen of Williamsburg, Ohio, a lawyer by profession, who came of Scotch ancestry, and who died at his home in Ohio, in advanced years, the father of four children. Mrs. Gravis died in 1849, a victim of the scourge of cholera then devastating the country. Both she and husband belonged to the Methodist Church. Of their four children, two survive, namely: Dr. Charles M.; and Mary, widow of Henry C. Gray, now a resident of Indianapolis.

Dr. Charles M. Gravis was reared in Clermont county, Ohio, and although but a school boy, participated in the wave of loyal enthusiasm that swept over the country, in the early days of the Civil war. Two of his brothers, Thomas F. and Sebastian, Jr., became soldiers, and he was at length successful in being accepted, although but seventeen, in Company B, 89th O. V. I., and remained in the service a period of thirty-four months, until the close of the war. He suffered greatly from imprisonment, having been confined two months at Richmond, five months at Danville, and seven months at Andersonville. He, however, survived all this terrible exposure, and also the battles in which he was actively engaged, these being: Chickamauga, where he was captured on Snodgrass Hill; Tullahoma; Bentonville; Hoover's Gap and other smaller engagements.

After the war he returned to his father's home, in Indianapolis, and completed his apprenticeship to the bricklaying trade, and worked at the same during the summer seasons and attended school, giving all the time he could spare to the study of medicine during the summers. Prior to entering the army he was a student in the high school at Williamsburg, and was within one year of graduation when he enlisted as a soldier. In 1871 he graduated in medicine at the Indiana Medical College. In 1892 he supplemented this with a post-graduate course in New York City. After graduation he began practice at Indianapolis and through Marion county, until the spring of 1882, coming at that time to Martinsville, where he has remained ever since. Since 1893 he has been particularly interested in sanitarium work, and in May, 1899, became the medical director of the Highland Sanitarium, remaining its director almost seven years, or until February, 1906, when he resigned, and went to the Home Lawn Sanitarium as medical director and assistant manager. This he resigned October, 1907, and has since been in general practice at Martinsville. For five years he most acceptably filled the position of county coroner, in Morgan county; for three years was secretary of the county board of health; and for two years served as secretary of the Martinsville board of health. He is a member of the County and the State Medical societies. Fraternally he belongs to Blankenship Post, No. 77, G. A. R., of which he was commander one year, and he has been State medical director of the Indiana State department of the G. A. R. In politics he is a Republican.

On September 15, 1870, Dr. Gravis married Miss Sarah C. Smock, daughter of Isaac and Ann (Smock) Smock (very distantly related and descendants of Anneke Jans, the Hollander who left an immense estate in New York City), and six children were born to this union, two of whom still survive: Grace Marie, who married George W. Brown, and has three children, Raymond, Catherine and Madge; and Fred, a graduate of the high school and the Indiana Dental College, and now a dentist at Martinsville, who married Mary Lewis, and has a son, Lewis Milton. Dr. Charles M. Gravis and wife are members of the Christian Church, in which body he was a deacon four or five years until resignation of the office because of his sanitarium work, and he was also church clerk. The beautiful family home is a modern residence on the corner of Harrison and Graham streets, one of the handsomest abodes in the city. Dr. Gravis is the author of a small volume—"Reminiscences by Dr. Gravis of the Battle of Chickamauga, as Seen by a Private, and Prison Life of Andersonville." This little book is a part of the regimental history of the 89th Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

JOHN G. RIDGE, a well-known resident of Muncie, Ind., who is engaged extensively in contracting and building, took an active part in the war of the Rebellion. He was born Aug. 8, 1833, in Waynesville, Warren county, Ohio, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Ridge.

The mother died when our subject was but three weeks old, and as his father married again John G. was taken to rear by a man named Linton, and later, when six years old, went to live with a farmer, John Emely, who had a fine farm two and one-half miles from Waynesville. Here young Ridge continued to live until sixteen years of age, his schooling consisting of three-months terms in the winter, the school house being three miles away. When sixteen years old he returned to his father's home, and began to learn the blacksmith's trade which, however, he did not follow long, the occupation proving uncongenial. He then went to Franklin, Ohio, where he learned the carpenter's trade with his brother-in-law, Sheppard Buchanan, who had married his sister Sarah, and here he continued as an apprentice for three years and three months. He worked in Warren and Montgomery counties, then went to Crawfordsville, Ind., and in 1859 located in Muncie, where he worked at his trade, principally in building schools, until President Lincoln's first call for troops, April 18, 1861, when he enlisted as a private of Company C, 8th Ind. V. I., under Capt. Thomas J. Brady. He served until honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., in August of the same year, having served in the first battle of the war, Rich Mountain, where were killed 250 Confederates and forty-five Federals. Here Mr. Ridge saw the men buried in trenches, most of the Confederates being young students from the Southern colleges. The men, raw and unexperienced and unused to the hardships of army life, sickened quickly, and the finely-uniformed troops soon became a motley gathering of ragged, emaciated men. After his discharge Mr. Ridge returned to Muncie and re-engaged in contracting. On July 18, 1863, in Muncie, Ind., he enlisted a second time, becoming a private of Company B, 69th Ind. V. I., for one year or during the war, and was promoted to orderly sergeant one month later, and second lieutenant in September, 1863. He served at Vicksburg in 1864, his regiment being with the Department of the Gulf. At the battle of Richmond, Ky., he was taken prisoner, but was paroled three days after the fight. He had a furlough from September to November, and on the reorganization of his regiment he went to Memphis, Tenn., and participated in General Sherman's first attack on Vicksburg. He also took part in the battle of Arkansas Post, where 7,000 men were captured, then returned to Vicksburg and took part in many skirmishes, Mr. Ridge commanding the company, as the captain was ill. In 1864 Mr. Ridge enlisted for the third time, in Company E, 26th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged on account of the close of the war, at Vicksburg, Nov. 14, 1865. He took part in the battles of Spanish Fork and Fort Blakeley. At all times Mr. Ridge conducted himself with the greatest bravery. He was a faithful and cheerful soldier, looked up to and admired by his comrades, and thoroughly respected by his superior officers.

On Aug. 24, 1861, in Muncie, Mr. Ridge married Julia Hicks, who was born in Ohio, daughter of John Hicks. She died Feb. 9, 1865, in the faith of the Methodist Church. To this union was born one daughter, Jessie F. Mrs. Ridge died while her husband was in the army, and he was not notified of her decease until nine days after her burial. After the war Mr. Ridge returned to Muncie, and was married (second) in 1866, to Eliza J. Motes, born May 15, 1847, in Westmoreland county, Pa., daughter of John and Elizabeth Motes. One child was born to this union: Milton L., a decorator and painter, who resides at home.

Mr. Ridge is a well known carpenter and builder of Muncie, and in addition to having worked on numerous buildings in the city has built a business block for Samuel Martin on South Water street, another on the same street for Dr. Mitchell, the John Parry block on Eighth and East Main streets, and a double residence on West Main street. From 1866 to 1880 Mr. Ridge resided in Dunkirk, Jay county, Ind., and while there erected over two hundred buildings, among them churches, school houses and business blocks. In politics Mr. Ridge is a Republican, and voted for Abraham Lincoln, first term, and every Presidential candidate since that time. Mr. Ridge and his wife are members of the Universalist Church. He is a member of Williams Post, G. A. R., of which he was quartermaster for three years, and is also prominently connected with the Odd Fellows organization, belonging to Dunkirk Lodge, No. 306, the Encampment No. 120, has passed all of the chairs, including that of Noble Grand, and on two different occasions has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State. He was a member of the board of Street Commissioners of Muncie for three years, and also served as deputy assessor of the city for a like period. Although he had but few advantages in his youth, Mr. Ridge has become a substantial citizen, has many friends, and can be justly named as one of Muncie's representative men.

AMOS THORNBURGH, senior member of the Thornburgh Milling and Elevator Company, at Martinsville, Ind., has been a resident of Morgan county throughout the eighty years of his life, and has ever been counted one of its most active and useful citizens. Mr. Thornburgh was born Feb. 27, 1827, in Brown township, Morgan county, on a farm situated between Mooresville and Brooklyn, where his father, Benjamin Thornburgh, settled in 1822.

The Thornburgh family is of Scotch-Irish stock, and was founded in the United States by three brothers, one of whom settled in Tennessee, one in North Carolina and one in Ohio. The Tennessee settler was the ancestor of Amos Thornburgh, and he had a son, Amos, who was born in Tennessee and went to Kentucky as a pioneer, settling near Harrodsburg, in the Blue Grass region. In 1811 he moved to Washington county, Ind., where he made his home for many years, owning a farm near Salem. He soon became a prominent man of that section, receiving appointment as justice of the peace for Washington county April 18, 1814. Some time during the forties he removed to Clay county, Ill., where he died at an advanced age. He married Rachel Harbinson. His parents were Quakers.

Benjamin Thornburgh, father of Amos, was born in Kentucky, Sept. 25, 1797, and came to Indiana in pioneer days, the family settling at Salem in 1811. Removing to Morgan county in 1822, he took up eighty acres of land in Brown township, the patent for which bore the signature of John Quincy Adams. Soon he began to prosper and in the course of time added another eighty to the original, this patent being signed by Andrew Jackson. Mr. Thornburgh cleared the heavy timber from his land and continued to improve it during his active life, dying at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife was eighty years old when she died, in 1876. Benjamin Thornburgh married Susan Monical, a native of Virginia, and they had a family of fourteen children, five sons and nine daughters, five members still living, viz.: Peter F., of Martinsville; Rachel, widow of L. D. Moon, of Brooklyn, Ind.; Amos, of Martinsville, Ind.; Ada, widow of Daniel Woodward, of Waukesha, Wis.; and Mary, wife of W. H. Dryden, of Martinsville, Ind. Both parents were members of the M. E. Church, in which Mr. Thornburgh was an exhorter. He was one of the volunteers who pursued and overtook the Indians after the Pigeon Roost Massacre. The Redmen fled, however, when Col. DuVall ordered his men to form in line of battle.

Rev. Peter Monical, the maternal grandfather of Amos Thornburgh, was a native of Virginia, of German descent. He was a Methodist preacher. He married Miss Hannah Yates, who came of the same family as ex-Governor Yates of Illinois, her parents belonging to the celebrated "First Families of Virginia," and they reared a family of ten children. From Virginia Rev. Peter Monical moved to Kentucky, settling at Blue Lick, where he was engaged in making salt, at Lower Blue Lick, and also carried on farming until his removal to Washington county, Ind., in 1811. In 1822 he again moved, into Morgan county, Ind., settling at Lyons Mills, near Brooklyn, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying at the age of sixty-five years.

Amos Thornburgh has spent all his life in his native country. He enjoyed unusual educational advantages for the period of his boyhood, one of the teachers in the locality having been an educated Englishman, and to his instruction Mr. Thornburgh was indebted for a more thorough knowledge of books than was generally to be gained in the country schools. In his young manhood he taught for several winters, working on the farm during the summer season, and he continued to live on the homestead place until he was about fifty years old, when he removed to Martinsville. There for the past thirty years he has been actively engaged in the milling business, where now, in association with his son Benjamin, he conducts what is known as the Union Mills and Elevator, one of the important industrial establishments of the locality.

On April 10, 1854, Mr. Thornburgh was married to Caroline E. Doughty, daughter of John and Judith (Wilcox) Doughty, and four children were born to their union, viz.: James D., who died aged thirty-seven years; Benjamin E., who married Maud Stevens and has one daughter, Mary Myla; John, who died in infancy; and Albert, now of Dawson City, in the Klondyke, who married Mrs. Belle Osterhaut. Mrs. Caroline E. (Doughty) Thornburgh died Feb. 6, 1876, in her fiftieth year. She was a woman of education, a graduate of Troy Conference Academy, at West Poultney, Vt., where she was born and taught school until her marriage. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church.

Mr. Thornburgh's second marriage, on Oct. 3, 1877, was to Mrs. Amanda B. Wilson, a native of Newport, N. H., widow of W. W. Wilson and daughter of James and Lona (Prentice) Perham. Mrs. Thornburgh is connected, both by birth and marriage, with some of the foremost of the early settlers of Indianapolis. Her father, James Perham, a native of Maine, was a man of great energy and ability, and exerted considerable influence upon manufacturing interests in Indianapolis in the early days. It was he who owned, shipped and established in that city its first cotton factory, which he operated for several years. The Wests, men of wealth and enterprise, came to the capital in its infancy from Massachusetts and built woolen mills, which Mr. Perham managed in connection with his cotton mill for several years. His wife, Lona Prentice (originally spelled Prentiss), was born in Massachusetts and educated in Boston. She came of aristocratic stock, and her people were rather indignant when she married a poor Westerner, but they became reconciled in after years. Her brother was a wealthy and prominent resident of Boston, and she was related to many famous representatives of the name, among them Mr. George D. Prentice, founder of the Louisville Courier Journal, and Colonel Prentice of Shiloh fame. A very complete history of the family has been compiled and published.

W. W. Wilson, to whom Mrs. Thornburgh was first married, was a son of William Wilson, an early pioneer of Ripley and Morgan counties, Ind., and a grandson of Isaac Wilson, who built the first mill in Indianapolis. Isaac Wilson was a Revolutionary soldier. He was twice married, first to Katy Griner, who was the mother of William Wilson, and second to Sarah Neal, of Kentucky, who became the mother of four children, two of whom were: Lorenzo Dow, and Patsy Patterson.

Mr. Thornburgh owns a fine farm of 100 acres, part of which was included in the old homestead, but his home has long been in Martinsville. A fire which occurred during 1901 destroyed his residence in that place, but it has since been replaced by the handsome modern dwelling he now occupies. In politics

Mr. Thornburgh is identified with the Republican party, but beyond serving one term as supervisor in Brown township he has not accepted any office. For forty-eight years he has belonged to the I. O. O. F., and still adheres to the principles of this fraternity. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, and he is one of the trustees of the church property.

Mr. Thornburgh is statistical correspondent for the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and has been ever since the organization of that department. Few men in Morgan county are more generally known than he. His long connection with business and his interest in educational and religious movements, as well as his approval of many a measure for the public benefit, have all proved his sterling qualities and gained him the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

EZRA ILER is a respected citizen of Anderson, Ind., and a veteran of the great Civil war, and is of sturdy German stock.

John Iler, his grandfather, was a native of Germany, who came to America. He took part in the War of 1812, and was a participant in the battle of Bladensburg. He married Mary J. Fogle, in Maryland, and they both died near Woodsboro, that State, where Mr. Iler had followed distilling. They had children: Conrad, Jacob, Joseph, John, Julia and Mariah.

John Iler (2), son of John, was born Nov. 6, 1806, in Frederick county, Md., and there he received a common school education and followed shoemaking. When a young man he went to Ohio and married Elizabeth Bantz, born in Frederick county, Md., daughter of John and Elizabeth Bantz. John Bantz was a soldier in the War of 1812. He was a weaver by trade, and at an early day removed to Ohio as a pioneer, settling in Preble county, where he cleared up 140 acres of land from the heavy timber. Elizabeth, when a girl of fourteen years of age, was a witness of the battle of Bladensburg. John Iler and wife were members of the Lutheran Church. In his political opinions Mr. Iler was a staunch Democrat. He and his wife were typical Ohio pioneers, and were highly respected in their community, where Mr. Iler died aged sixty-six years, Mrs. Iler surviving him some time, and dying aged eighty-eight years. Their children were: Joshua, John, Ezra, Gideon and Henry.

Ezra Iler, son of John and Elizabeth, was born Jan. 23, 1836, on the old homestead in Preble county, Ohio. He was brought up on the homestead, and received the usual pioneer education, most of his book knowledge being acquired at home. In June, 1862, at the age of twenty-six years, he enlisted, in Cincinnati, Ohio, as a private in Capt. Koontz's Company G, 81st O. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. On June 20, 1879, Mr. Iler was married at Noblesville, to Adelia Kaufman, born Sept. 25, 1838, in Berks county, Pa., daughter of Valentine and Catherine (Wagner) Kaufman. Mrs. Iler was brought by her parents to Wayne county, Ind., in 1840. Valentine Kaufman was born in Berks county, Pa., of German descent, and settled as a pioneer in Wayne county, where he ran a potter's shop for manufacturing earthenware, which latter was his trade. He was a respected citizen and died on his farm in Wayne county, at a ripe old age. His children who lived to mature years were: Jacob, Joseph, Valentine, Sophia, Adelia, Hannah and Mary.

Ezra Iler and his wife, after marriage, settled on the farm in Wayne county, where they lived twelve years, afterward removing to Madison county, and buying land in LaFayette township. Here they remained fourteen years, and in 1890 located in Anderson, where Mr. Iler was engaged in the tin plate works for eight years, since which time he has been engaged in carpenter work. He learned this trade when he was young, when all of the timber had to be hewed out by hand, with a broad-ax, and he became an adept in hewing to the line. He has followed carpentry at different times all of his life, and in his day has built many barns in this section and throughout the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Iler are the parents of these children: Frank, Ada M. and Alice. They are all members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Iler belongs to Major May Post, G. A. R., Anderson. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., of Anderson, having joined that order at Centreville, Wayne county, over thirty years ago, and in which he has filled all the chairs. He has represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge of the State, of which he is a member. In his political opinions he is a stanch Jeffersonian Democrat, while on local issues he is independent of party ties.

Mr. Iler has always been an industrious man of reliable character. When his country needed his services as a soldier, he responded to the call promptly, and always served faithfully, efficiently and cheerfully, and it is safe to say that he has been as good a citizen in the day of peace as he was a defender of his country in the time of war. He is highly respected and esteemed throughout Madison county.

FRANKLIN HAUGH, of Pike township, Marion county, a man widely and favorably known, was born in Frederick county, Md., near Frederick City, son of Peter S. and Elizabeth (Krise) Haugh, both born in Frederick county, in 1791 and 1797, respectively.

Mr. Haugh's paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, and on coming to America at an early day, he settled in Maryland, where he died at an advanced age, while peacefully sitting in his chair.

Peter S. Haugh, the father, was first married to Mary Lynn, by whom he had two children: Henry, who served in the regular army for years; and one that died in its first year. Later Mr. Haugh was united in marriage with Elizabeth Krise, daughter of Henry Krise, born in Maryland, of German descent.

By trade a blacksmith, Peter S. Haugh came to Indiana in November, 1842, settling near Augusta, on the White river, on a farm known as Claypool and Crowsnest. In the spring of 1845, he removed to Indianapolis on account of sickness, the swamp lands being too much for the family. In that metropolis Peter Haugh found immediate employment at his trade, which he followed until 1849, when he once more moved to Augusta, and there carried on his trade, until he was seventy-two years of age, when he went to live with his excellent son, Franklin, who tenderly cared for both his aged parents. The only portion of the family estate Franklin Haugh received from his parents was the old family Bible which he cherishes above all else, and would not exchange it for the best farm in the country.

First a Democrat, later his principles made Peter Haugh a Republican, and he was highly esteemed by the leaders of both parties. Few men understood or loved horses better than he, and at one time he belonged to a dragoon company. He started to enlist in the War of 1812, but through some trouble relative to the captain, the company was not mustered in. Mr. Haugh refused a commission from the governor. All of his life Peter Haugh was a hard working man, but, being also generous and charitable, he left but little behind him, except his untarnished name and the memory of his cheery, kind-hearted, jovial manner, and excellent heart.

Franklin Haugh was married in 1872 to Mary Smelser, daughter of Peter and Phoebe (Brown) Smelser. She was born in Rush county, Ind., her father, who was born in Maryland, moving to Kentucky, and then to Rush county, Ind., where her birth occurred as before stated. Still later, in 1859, he removed to Marion county, settling near Augusta, and engaged in farming until his death in 1864. At that time he had 160 acres, but since his demise his widow has lived in Augusta, dividing her time between the homes of her son Samuel, and that of our subject, she being deeply beloved by all. Mr. Smelser was a Republican.

The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Haugh was Geb. Brown, a native of Virginia, who first moved to Tennessee, then to Wayne county, Ind., from there to Rush county, where he died in 1858. He was a farmer and blacksmith. His children were: Phoebe, John, George, Timothy, Samuel, Franklin, Mary, Alice, Josie and a child who died at the age of eleven years. The Browns were of German descent, while on the other side of the house the ancestors were Irish. Mrs. Smelser is a Hardshell Baptist, and a very devout and pious lady. Although Mr. and Mrs. Haugh have no children of their own, they have an adopted daughter, Josie Bracken, whom they deeply love.

Mr. Haugh has forty acres of land, nearly all of which is under the plow, although five acres are profitably set out in fruit, principally apples and pears. To earn this property he did teaming and work of a like nature in Augusta, and has earned all he owns by the hardest of work, and therefore prizes it all the more. In politics he has always been a Democrat, but will not hold office, having declined the office of justice of the peace, although elected. While not a member of the church, he is one of its supporters, and is much interested in its good work. He belongs to no lodge, and devotes himself to the improvement of his property and the development of the township.

HENRY SHIREMAN, a substantial farmer of Washington township, Morgan county, who resides at No. 160 North Jefferson street, Martinsville, was born Nov. 13, 1849, in Washington township, son of Maxville and Sarah (Cramer) Shireman, the former of whom were born near Lincolnton, N. C., and the latter in the State of New Jersey.

Michael Shireman, grandfather of Henry, was a native of North Carolina, of German ancestry, who migrated into Indiana in 1832, where he engaged in farming. His death was occasioned by a fall from a horse, when he was seventy years of age. He left a large family in Washington township, Morgan county.

Maxville Shireman made farming his occupation through life, clearing up a farm of 187½ acres of land, in Washington township, and there he reared his family. At the time of his death he owned a large estate, comprising 317½ acres, 187½ situated three-fourths of a mile southeast of Martinsville, and 130 in Jackson township. Mr. Shireman died at the age of seventy-two years. In 1833, before his marriage, he made a trip on horseback from Morgan county, Ind., to North Carolina and return. In religious belief, he was an Episcopalian. His wife, Sarah Cramer, was a daughter of Archibald Cramer, a native of New Jersey of Holland ancestry. Mr. Cramer came to Indiana in the early settlement of the State, and bought a farm situated three miles southeast of Martinsville, and there lived until the last ten years of his life, which were passed in Martinsville. He was the father of numerous children, and died at the age of eighty years. Mrs. Shireman died Nov. 3, 1905, in the faith of the M. E. Church. To Maxville and Sarah Shireman were born ten sons and three daughters, nine of whom survive: Henry; Archibald; Lewis; Andrew; James, Robert, Edward; Mahala, wife of Scott Maxwell; and Margaret. Emeline, now deceased, married Amos Hart.

Henry Shireman was reared in Washington township, and he owns a part of the farm which his grandfather Michael Shireman settled. To his original 160 acres, he has added forty-five, now having 205 acres in the one farm, and he owns also a tract of 132 acres in Jackson township. Mr. Shireman is one of the progressive and intelligent men of his locality, his early education being obtained in the district and high schools at Martinsville, fitting him for the profession of teaching, which he followed through six winters. His home was with his parents until at his majority he wished to begin farming for himself. For several years after marriage he operated rented land, and then he and his wife came into possession of his grandfather's old farm, which her father had bought, with the exception of twenty acres.

On Oct. 28, 1874, Mr. Shireman married Miss Margaret Bothwell, an old schoolmate, daughter of John and Martha (Hines) Bothwell, and five children were born to this union, namely: (1) John died in infancy. (2) Frederick, who served as deputy county treasurer with his father-in-law, Scott Kelley, then attended Hospital College, at Louisville, Ky., is now chief clerk of the "Seelbach Hotel" at Louisville, Ky. He married Norris Kelley, and after her death he married (second) Nancy Latta, a daughter of a well known physician and surgeon of Louisville. (3) Martha married Cortland M. Henderson, and resides in a pleasant home in Challis, Idaho, where he is county clerk, auditor and recorder of Custer county. (4) Sadie lives at home. (5) Harry died at the age of six months. Mr. and Mrs. Shireman are members of the Presbyterian Church in Martinsville. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party, and for four years was assessor of his township, and was postmaster at Martinsville for four years under the administration of President Cleveland. In addition to his farming interests in Indiana, he was concerned in zinc and lead mining in Missouri, and as he is naturally a mechanic he has also been a carpenter. Fraternally Mr. Shireman is an old and tried Odd Fellow, having been a member of the order for the past thirty years, and he belongs to the Encampment and Martinsville Lodge, No. 274.

Mrs. Shireman's parents were also early settlers in Morgan county, and her father owned about 1,000 acres of land. He lived to the age of eighty years, and the mother to the age of seventy. Of their three children who lived to maturity, David died Feb. 5, 1907; Martha is the wife of Harrison Thomas; and Margaret is Mrs. Henry Shireman. They are, most highly esteemed and take a prominent position among the township families,

JOHN C. KNIGHT (otherwise known as John King), a highly esteemed citizen of Anderson, Ind., who participated as a sailor in the U. S. service during the great Civil war, was born in Milton, County of Kent, England, Jan. 28, 1838, son of Charles and Sarah (Rossiter) Knight, the former of whom was a captain, owning his own coasting vessel.

John C. Knight received but little education, his father and two brothers having been lost at sea when he was but ten years old, and young Knight lived with his grandfather Rossiter. At the age of twelve years he was apprenticed as a boatman on the river Thames, and served a short time, then becoming cabin boy on a coasting vessel, on which he served until going as an ordinary seaman to India in the East India trade. He visited Cape Town, Ceylon, Mauritius and Java, and in about 1856-57 sailed from London to New Orleans as an able seaman. He left the vessel and shipped to New York, where he enlisted in the winter of 1857, or early spring of 1858, in the U. S. Navy, serving on the U. S. frigate "Niagara," Capt. Hudson, one year, this ship laying the first successful Atlantic cable. Cyrus Field was aboard the vessel and on the return to New York a great reception was tendered not only Mr. Field, but the crew of the ship, who were given the freedom of the city, being given free entrance to the famous Crystal Palace and Niblo's Gardens. Mr. Knight then enlisted in the Paraguay expedition which was sent out during the trouble with that country (serving on the U. S. steamer "Caledonia," Captain Case), when the U. S. revenue cutter "Water Witch" was fired on and one man killed. This caused great excitement and war was imminent, the expedition sailing from New York under Admiral Shubrick up the river Parana for 1,500 miles, when President Lopez came to terms. They returned to New York in 1859, and Mr. Knight enlisted for three years' service as an ordinary seaman on the U. S. frigate "Sabine," Capt. Adams, and was in Central America at the outbreak of the war, and ordered to return. On their stop at Pensacola, Fla., they found the Confederate flag flying and were not allowed to enter port unless under a flag of truce. This Captain Adams refused to do. They were then ordered to blockade Pensacola, being one of the first ships to receive such orders, and Mr. Knight was a volunteer under Lieutenant Slimmer for night patrol duty in Pensacola Bay, to watch the Confederates and prevent them surprising the fort. This was dangerous service, every man being heavily armed and the oars muffled. In June, 1861, an order came for the ship to report at Portsmouth, N. H., where they arrived July 4th, and eight days later Mr. Knight was paid off and honorably discharged. He then enlisted at Boston, Mass., in February, 1863, as a seaman for two years, unless sooner discharged, and served with the steamer, U. S. sloop of war, "San Jacinto," Captain Rockindorf, this being the famous warship that, under Captain Wilkes, took Mason and Slidell from the British steamer "Trent." Mr. Knight was promoted to be captain's coxswain. The "San Jacinto" proceeded under sealed orders to Hampton Roads, arriving there a few days after the famous battle between the "Merri-mac" and "Monitor," this being the first battle between iron-clads recorded in history. Mr. Knight, with others of the crew of the "San Jacinto," went on board of the "Monitor" and thoroughly examined it. After bombarding Sewell's Point and the capture of Norfolk from Hampton Roads the "San Jacinto" sailed for the West Indies to try to intercept the famous pirate "Alabama," and finally found her at the French Island of Martinique, but the wary "Alabama" escaped from the harbor during the night. They then proceeded to Key West where the "San Jacinto" acted as flag-ship for Admiral Farragut, but yellow fever breaking out, they sailed for Northern waters. Two men died on board, but on reaching a colder climate the fever died out. The "San Jacinto" was then stationed at Wilmington, N. C., on the blockade for some time, after which they sailed for Cuba, but soon thereafter she broke her propeller and proceeded to New York. Shortly afterward, while at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, Mr. Knight was seriously injured by falling from the hammock netting, was sent to the Brooklyn Marine Hospital and thence to the Chelsea Hospital, from which he was discharged in May, 1864. He re-enlisted in Cincinnati, in August, 1864, for three years or during the war, and was detailed for recruiting for gunboat service, being later transferred to the steamer "Lyon," at Cairo, and promoted to signal quartermaster. He was later sent to New Orleans where he was taken sick and placed in the hospital at Mound City, and was finally honorably discharged from the U. S. steamer "Red Rover," Aug. 12, 1865, having served seven years and proving himself an efficient and capable seaman. After the war he went to Newport, Ky., where he worked in an iron mill and foundry for fifteen years. There he married (first) Sarah Boden, born in England, daughter of Major William (of the 23d Ky. Inf.) and Jane (Bostic) Boden. Six children were born to this union: Charles, who died aged four years; Blanch, who married David Sheppard, of Cincinnati; Miriam, who married Edward Ferger, of Chattanooga; Jane, now Mrs. Oscar Jones, of Anderson; Altie, who died aged five years; and William, who resides in Anderson. Mrs. Knight died in 1898, and Mr. Knight was married (second) to Mrs. Stephen Funk (nee Flemming), daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Landry) Flemming.

Mr. Knight has lived in Anderson about seventeen years, and has held the position of weighmaster in rolling mills and plate manufacturing. He is a member of Major May Post, G. A. R., Anderson. In the I. O. O. F. he has passed all the chairs, including that of Noble Grand and has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State. He joined the order in Newport, Ky., and is an ancient Odd Fellow; and also belongs to the Knights of Honor. He is a member of the Christian Church, while his wife is a Presbyterian.

DAVID N. MINNICK, who for a number of years was a substantial agriculturist in Union township, Delaware county, Ind., and was a respected veteran of the Civil war, was born April 22, 1845, in Salem township, Delaware county, son of Andrew and Madeline (Cook) Minnick.

Andrew Minnick was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., and he located as a pioneer in Salem township, Delaware county, Ind., settling on a farm which he cleared from the woods, making a good home of eighty-one acres. His first home was of logs, but later he built one partly frame. He and his wife were great Bible readers and were highly respected in their vicinity. In politics Mr. Minnick was a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Minnick were the parents of the following children: George, born March 23, 1829, died in 1893; Viana, born Sept. 8, 1830, died Jan. 14, 1863; Tracie, born May 14, 1832, died April 14, 1863; Lynn, born Feb. 7, 1836; Mary Ann, born Nov. 4, 1837, died Jan. 18, 1857; Shrena, born Aug. 17, 1840, died Aug. 28, 1851; Uliah, born March 24, 1843; David N., born April 22, 1845; Uriah, born Jan. 2, 1848; and Peter, one of the older children, whose date of birth is not known. The father died Jan. 12, 1879, on his farm, and his wife Oct. 21, 1880.

David N. Minnick was reared in Salem township and received a common school education. At the age of seventeen years he enlisted at Indianapolis, Ind., and was injured in the left knee by a piece of shell in battle, which made him lame through life. He returned to Salem township after the war, and his death occurred March 11, 1905. He was a member of the G. A. R., in which he had held the office of Post Commander.

On Feb. 14, 1867, Mr. Minnick was married, in Daleville, to Lydia Ann Turner, born Oct. 26, 1844, near Urbana, Champaign county, Ohio, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ammon) Turner, and to this union were born: Milton D., born Dec. 27, 1874, a farmer in Salem township, married Blanch Funkhouser, and has two children—Helen Marie and Irene; Cora Bell, born April 26, 1877; Clara Ellen, born Jan. 4, 1879, married Arthur Moon, a farmer of Salem township; Ida Victoria, born Sept. 11, 1884, married John Jenkins, a farmer of Salem township, and has two children—Walter Leo and Crystal May; and Gertie May, born May 24, 1886.

After marriage Mr. Minnick and his wife settled in Salem township, and rented forty acres of land, on which they resided for seven years, at the end of which time they purchased the present home of eighty acres. This farm, although little improved, had a log house on it, and in this they resided until 1884, when Mr. Minnick built a frame house. He was a very industrious, hard-working man, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was a notary public for three years, and was one of the trustees of Saunders cemetery.

John Turner, father of Mrs. Minnick, was born in the Shenandoah Valley, in Virginia, son of Jacob Turner, whose other children were: William; Polly, who married Jacob Hipple; and Sally, who married a Shoup. John Turner was a farmer, and when young went to Ohio, where he married Elizabeth Ammon, born in the Shenandoah Valley, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Rhinehardt) Ammon, of German stock. Peter Ammon was an early settler in Champaign county, Ohio, where he cleared eighty acres. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and a member of the Lutheran Church. His children were: Katie, Isaac, William, John, Lydia, Mary Ann, Jacob, David and Elizabeth. After marriage John Turner and wife settled in Champaign county, Ohio, and moved in 1858 to Indiana, making the journey, which consumed a week, in two two-horse wagons, and they settled three and one-half miles north of Chesterfield, on eighty acres. After residing there four years they removed to Daleville, buying town property, and there the rest of their lives was spent, he passing away Aug. 12, 1865, aged sixty-two years, and his wife, in April, 1873, in Daleville. Although the greater portion of Mr. Turner's life was spent in agricultural pursuits, he also, after locating in Daleville, engaged in carpentering, and is said to have been a skilled mechanic. He and his wife were members of the Christian Church, and were highly esteemed people of their community.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Turner were born children as follows: William A.; Jacob; Lydia Ann; David; Elizabeth, who married Samuel Drennen, a soldier in the Civil war; Peter and Isaac. William A. and Jacob were both privates of Company B, 69th Ind. V. I., in the Civil war. William A. met his death by having his horse fall upon him, and he died several years later from the effects of this accident.

JAMES KENROY, late one of Anderson's highly esteemed citizens, was born Nov. 18, 1839, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Kenroy's parents dying when he was an infant, he was reared by strangers, and when ten years of age he became a student at Girard College, Philadelphia, being one of the first 200 pupils to be enrolled in this famous college. Here he remained for five years, and was then bound out to learn the carriage maker's trade until twenty-one years of age. In 1861, in Indianapolis, Ind., whither he had come some three months previously, Mr. Kenroy enlisted as a private in Company A, 11th Ind. V. I., Gen. Lew Wallace commanding. He was honorably discharged at Baltimore, Md., as first sergeant of Company A, July 26, 1865, having veteranized at New Iberia, La., in December, 1863, thus having a service of four years and twenty-four days. He was promoted to orderly sergeant for meritorious conduct, and took part in the battles of Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Vicksburg, Helena, Ark., and Fort Gibson. He was wounded in the thigh by a piece of shell, and was taken to Carthage, Mo., his wound healing very rapidly. He returned to camp, and was cared for by his comrades. After his service at Vicksburg, he went to New Orleans, and was present at the capture of 600 guerrillas at Lake Tasse, La., and was in several small battles and skirmishes at Hallville, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher Hill and Cedar Creek. He was always an active and faithful soldier. In his book of reminiscences Mr. Kenroy relates many interesting incidents, some of which are amusing, one of which is here given: At the battle of Shiloh, Mr. Kenroy's regiment was nearly surrounded, but the officer in command was near-sighted, and did not see the Confederates, although the soldiers kept calling to him that they were being surrounded, to which he paid no attention. Finally a boy named Dooley told the officer, who answered, "Well, if you all say so, there must be something in it. Let me put on my 'specs.'"

After the war Mr. Kenroy went to Philadelphia, where he remained until October, 1866, and at this time came to Indianapolis, and later to Anderson. In September, 1869, he married Jeanette Keely, born in Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 14, 1851, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Tarkington) Keely, the former born Feb. 20, 1812, in Westmoreland county, Pa., and the latter in Butler county, Ohio. After marriage Mr. Kenroy engaged in carriage painting and manufacturing in Anderson, where he continued until the time of his death in 1907, one of the city's highly respected men. He was a member of Major May Post, G. A. R., where he had been post commander, and for fifteen years had served as adjutant. He took interest in all Grand Army matters, frequently amusing his comrades with stories of army life. In political matters he was a Democrat.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kenroy: James Edwin, born June 14, 1870; Charles L., Oct. 10, 1875; Earl, March 6, 188— (who died aged seven years); and William C., Jan. 11, 1885.

Daniel Keely, father of Mrs. Kenroy, was a son of William Keely, who moved to Indiana in 1832, and settled in Shelby county. Daniel Keely was a pioneer of Indianapolis. He later went to Decatur county, Ind., where he died Jan. 5, 1892, aged seventy-nine years, ten months, fifteen days. He was married Feb. 20, 1834, in Shelby county, to Elizabeth Tarkington.

THOMAS WILLIAM JACKSON. Shelby county is a fertile section of Indiana especially fitted for farming purposes, and one of the men to take advantage of this fact and profit by it is Thomas William Jackson, of Addison township, who was born in that township, on the Jackson homestead, Jan. 3, 1848, son of William and Sarah (Richart) Jackson.

The paternal grandfather, Andrew Jackson, was born in Maryland in 1754. He was a soldier in the Revolution, and settled in Franklin county, Ind., in 1816, and died there. He was a son of Thomas Jackson, who in 1766 was killed in Maryland while planting corn. The maternal grandfather of Thomas W. Jackson, was Andrew Richart, who died in Kentucky. He married Phebe LeMaster, who after her husband's death came with her children and settled in Shelby county in 1824.

William Jackson, son of Andrew and father of Thomas William, was born in Clermont county, Ohio, Dec. 22, 1806, and removed with his parents to Franklin county, Ind., in 1816. In 1837 he settled in Addison township, Shelby county, clearing off and improving the farm now occupied by his son, Thomas W., and there he died Feb. 16, 1885, his latter days being spent in the enjoyment of the competency won by years of hard work and economy. For two terms he served the township as trustee, and he was a man who could trust and be trusted. Mr. Jackson was twice married, his first wife being Mary Stafford, and his second, Sarah Richart, who was born March 22, 1809, in Bath county, Ky., and both were excellent women.

Thomas William Jackson grew up on the old homestead, which has always been his home, and to which he is greatly attached. He was educated in the common schools, and for seven years was a successful school teacher, although he has always been engaged in farming.

On April 20, 1873, Mr. Jackson married Martha M., daughter of Harrison and Eliza (Henry) Harrell, of Harrison, Ohio. Six children have been born to this marriage: Emma J., Grace, Edna (wife of Fred Gordon), William, Miles and Thomas.

Mr. Jackson is a member of the Christian Church, and takes an active part in its good work, in addition to giving it his generous support. In politics he is a Democrat, and takes an important part in local affairs, having served as county commissioner from 1900 to 1904, in the latter year having been re-elected. For a year he has been justice of the peace, and is giving marked satisfaction to all who have occasion to call upon him in this office.

M. A. RUSH, M. D., is engaged in the practice of his profession at Anderson, Madison county, Indiana.

MASTEN DASHIELL, long a resident of Indianapolis, where he died May 17, 1903, was a veteran of the war for the Union and a pioneer of Marion county. He was brought to Indiana a few months before it became a State. He was born in Greene county, Ohio, May 30, 1816, son of Charles and Nancy Dashiell, the former born in Maryland, and the latter in Kentucky. They went to Greene county, Ohio, when young, and were married there in 1816, removing when their son Masten was four months old, to Indiana. They settled in Dearborn county, where the father cleared up a large farm in the wilderness. About 1855 he disposed of his possessions in that county and removed to Kankakee county, Ill., where he died in 1858. His widow later went to Indianola, Iowa, where she died at the home of her son, while on a visit. Masten Dashiell was the eldest of a family of sixteen children, eleven of whom grew to maturity, married and had families of their own. Five of the family are living at this writing, two sons and three daughters. Six of the sons served their country in her hour of peril, and donned the Union blue with stout hearts and strong arms.

Masten Dashiell was but four months old when his parents brought him into Indiana, so that practically his entire life was spent in this State, and he was reared to manhood in Dearborn county, where he married Leah Ann Bailey, a native of that county. Mr. Dashiell came to Marion county in 1836, and in this part of the State lived until his death. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, 3d Indiana Cavalry, and in that regiment he served a full term of three years, which expired about the time of the fall of Atlanta. Coming home, he re-enlisted, in the 16th Indiana Mounted Infantry, and served in that command until the close of the war. He took part in many bloody battles, and was at the battles of Shiloh (the second day); Corinth; Iuka; Stone River, where he was captured, being confined in Libby Prison five months before he was exchanged; Chickamauga, and in the battles around Atlanta that led up to the fall of that stronghold. Most of the period of his second enlistment was spent in Louisiana, with headquarters at New Orleans. After the war Mr. Dashiell lived in Indianapolis, and he died at the home of his youngest child, Mrs. Georgiana Hunter, at No. 318 Bright street, where he had made his home for twenty-three years.

The first wife of Mr. Dashiell died soon after the war, and he was married, in 1871, to Maria Herbert, who is still living, at the age of seventy-five. To the first union were born four children, Mahala, John, Malina and Hosea. To his second marriage came two children, Charles F. and Georgiana, the last named being Mrs. Hunter.

Mr. Dashiell belonged to George H. Chapman Post, No. 209, G. A. R. He cast his first Presidential vote for the Whig candidate, William Henry Harrison, and of later years was a Republican. In religious matters he was a devoted Methodist, and his honorable and upright life brought no blush to his churchly associations.

GUY SEATON, M. D., House Physician and Medical Director at the Colonial Sanitarium, at Martinsville, Ind., was born at Hall, Morgan county, Ind., Sept. 8, 1873, one of the four children of Dr. Grafton W. and Sarah E. (Wellman) Seaton, the other children being as follows: Harry A., of Indianapolis; Edna E., wife of G. G. Martin, postmaster at Cartersburg, Ind.; and Miss Nellie E., a resident of Clayton, Indiana.

Dr. Grafton W. Seaton was born at Hall, Ind., son of Allen R. Seaton, who was born in Jefferson county, Ky., in 1808. After teaching school in his younger days, Allen R. Seaton became a farmer, and in 1832 removed to Morgan county, Ind., where he died at the age of eighty-eight years. He and his wife were the parents of nine children, eight of whom attained mature years. The old farm which he bought in Morgan county has never passed out of the family.

Grafton W. Seaton was reared until the age of sixteen years on a farm in Gregg township, Morgan county, his time being divided between attendance at school and agricultural work. Although but a lad in years he possessed a man's patriotism, and entered the army ready for service in the Civil war, enlisting as a private in Company D, 117th Ind. V. I., but was discharged on account of illness, one year later. He then took up the study of medicine and spent one year at Rush Medical College, at Chicago, Ill., and later entered Louisville Medical College, from which he graduated in 1870. His early years of practice were passed at Hall, where he remained until 1887, when he removed to Cartersburg. Dr. Seaton practiced here until 1893, when he settled at his present home, Clayton, Ind. Dr. Seaton and wife are members of the Christian Church at Clayton. His fraternal connection is with the various Masonic bodies, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and also the G. A. R. Formerly he was identified with the Republican party, but his present attitude is favorable to the Prohibition party. Mrs. Sarah E. (Wellman) Seaton was a daughter of Capt. A. T. Wellman, a native of Kentucky, and one of the early settlers of Morgan county. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, and in the Civil war was the captain of Company A, 33d Ind. V. I. He resigned on account of ill health in January, 1863, and returning home raised Company D, 117th Ind. V. I., and served until June, 1864. After the close of the war he engaged for a time in farming in Morgan county. In the seventies he went to Illinois and engaged in farming near Neoga, but in 1898 he sold his farm and removed to Mattoon, Ill., where he still resides. Captain Wellman was twice married, three children being born to each union, and the survivors are two daughters of the first marriage and two sons of the second.

Dr. Guy Seaton was reared in the village of Hall, Morgan county, where he attended the common schools. Later he entered the high school at Plainfield, Ind., still later that at Danville, Ind., and graduated from the latter in 1890. Dr. Seaton then attended a business college at Indianapolis, and in the fall of 1895, he became a student in the Medical Department of the University of Indianapolis, graduating March 28, 1898. After a short practice with his father at Clayton, he located at Hall where he practiced until March, 1901. In the following May he came to Martinsville to become medical director of the well-known Barnard Sanitarium of this city, a position which he held with great ability until July 1, 1905, when he took a post-graduate course in New York City. In June, 1906, he became Medical Director of the Colonial Sanitarium. Dr. Seaton has patients from Maine to California who come to be benefited by the healing waters of this locality. The sanitarium under his judicious management has made wonderful records in the alleviation of rheumatism, stomach and kidney troubles and all kinds of skin diseases.

Dr. Seaton is identified with the Republican party. He is very popular in various fraternal organizations, belonging to the Masons (Martinsville Lodge), K. of P., the Elks, the Eagles, the Red Men, and the Sons of Veterans. His relations are most cordial with his brother practitioners, and he is a valued member of both the County and State Medical societies. He served as county coroner two terms, and is at present secretary of the County Board of Health of Morgan county.

AARON D. BOOTH, M. D., now a retired physician of Noblesville, Hamilton county, Ind., and one of the leading citizens of that place, is a native of the county, and both his paternal and maternal ancestors were among the pioneers of the State.

George Booth, the Doctor's grandfather, and a soldier in the Revolutionary war, was a pioneer in Guilford county, N. C., settling near Raleigh. He was a farmer and slave owner there. In an early day he migrated to Indiana, first locating in Parke county, and between 1842 and 1844 he moved to Hamilton county, settling in Wayne township. There he bought land and cleared up a farm upon which he passed the remainder of his life, dying at the advanced age of about ninety. His wife's maiden name was McNally.

Joseph Booth, son of George, was born in North Carolina in 1818, moved with his father to Parke county, Ind., and there married Hannah Huff, who was born in Parke county, Dec. 25, 1826, daughter of Aaron Huff. After his marriage Joseph Booth settled in Wayne township, Hamilton county, where he cleared up a farm of 320 acres, improving it with good buildings for that day. He became a substantial citizen and was one of the respected members of his community, being especially active in church affairs. He belonged to the U. B. Church, which he served as trustee, and after moving to Noblesville, in 1872, was one of the founders of the U. B. Church there. He lived to the age of over eighty, dying in March, 1900, in Noblesville, and his widow passed away June 1, 1903. They had the following named children: Aaron D., William, Priscilla, Eliza and Kate.

The Booths are of English stock, and there is a tradition in the family that they are of the same ancestry as Edwin Booth, the actor.

Aaron D. Booth was born on a farm in Wayne township, Hamilton county, and there received his early education in the district schools. Later he attended Hartsville College, and subsequently taught school before taking up the study of medicine, one term in Hamilton county and three terms in Bartholomew county. He attended the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, and upon his graduation, in 1874, he immediately settled in Noblesville and began active practice. He soon gained a large and lucrative patronage, and continued to engage in general practice until 1901, when he retired from professional duties on account of the pressure of business affairs. His outside interests had multiplied until he felt he could not do justice to both, and though he was one of the foremost practitioners of the city and vicinity he relinquished medicine entirely. He was a member of the Hamilton County Medical Society and of the Indiana State Medical Society, and ranked well among his professional brethren.

The Doctor is a representative citizen of Noblesville, well known for his straightforward character and progressive disposition, and he has taken a public-spirited interest in all improvements and advancement in his community. He has invested rather extensively in real estate, owning valuable property in Noblesville, including his own attractive home. His residence was built in 1873, and he has since erected ten other houses in the town. In addition he owns the old homestead, where his father first settled. The Doctor is a Republican in political faith, and fraternally holds membership in the Knights of Pythias at Noblesville.

On Nov. 21, 1876, in Noblesville, Dr. Booth was united in marriage with Miss Belle Evans, a native of that place, daughter of James L. and Sarah Ann (Murnan) Evans. Both of her parents belonged to families which have been settled in Indiana from pioneer times.

Jonathan Evans, grandfather of Mrs. Booth, was born Nov. 17, 1799, in Kentucky, son of Walter and Ursula Evans, both of whom died in Kentucky at the age of eighty years, the latter's death occurring Dec. 26, 1848. Jonathan Evans learned the trade of a cooper. He was a young man when he moved with his father to Kentucky, and settled in Fleming county. There he worked at his trade for some years, and in 1837 migrated with his family to Hancock county, Ind. He cleared a farm and prospered to such an extent that he acquired a substantial property, and became a prominent man in his community. He laid out the town of New Palestine on his farm, and after a number of years at farming became a dry goods merchant. In 1850 he moved to Hamilton county, Ind., and bought land adjoining the town of Noblesville on the north. It was well-improved then, and equipped with good buildings, but he made further improvements on the place during his ownership, and resided there until quite advanced in age, after which he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Emily S. Gray.

In Kentucky, on Oct. 3, 1822, Jonathan Evans married Susannah Barnett, born June 8, 1803, in Maysville, Ky., daughter of James and Sarah (Snodgrass) Barnett, pioneers of that State, the former born Feb. 4, 1777, died Feb. 27, 1860, and the latter born July 4, 1784, died July 20, 1871. To Jonathan and Susannah Evans were born: Sarah Ann, born Aug. 1, 1823, married March 15, 1845, J. H. Voss; James Lafayette, born March 27, 1825, is mentioned farther on; Walter N., born May 14, 1827, married Sept. 28, 1852, Nancy Potter; Mary Jane, born Feb. 18, 1829, married Levi Farley; Ursula Harriet, born Oct. 25, 1830, died unmarried May 10, 1847; Jonathan W., born Nov. 25, 1832, married Sept. 3, 1860, Almeda Nicholson, and died Dec. 20, 1878; John David, born April 19, 1835, a major in the Civil war, married Sept. 5, 1864, Sarah V. Brown, and died May 22, 1873, aged thirty-eight years, one month and three days; Orville H., born March 24, 1837, married June 22, 1860, Harriet E. Brown, a Vermont school teacher; Emily S., born April 28, 1841, married Oct. 17, 1865, Dr. John M. Gray, a surgeon of the Civil war, and long a successful practitioner in his native town, Noblesville, and she died Dec. 30, 1886; and Adolphus G., born Nov. 2, 1845, in New Palestine, Hancock county, Ind., married Sept. 4, 1870, Frances M. Becker, and died Oct. 9, 1887. Jonathan Evans died May 19, 1876, aged seventy-six years, six months and two days, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Emily S. Gray, and his wife long survived him, dying at the home of Mrs. Frances Evans, July 16, 1887. James L. Evans was a prominent member of the Christian Church and one of the active workers, serving many years as elder. For eight years he was a member of the United States Congress.

James Lafayette Evans, son of Jonathan and father of Mrs. Booth, was born Feb. (or March) 27, 1825, in Claryville, Campbell Co., Ky., and was in his thirteenth year when he came to Indiana with his parents. He received a common school education, and his early training included experience in farm work and as clerk in his father's dry goods store. He was only twenty when he married, and he subsequently lived at New Augusta, Marion county, Ind., for five years, carrying on a mercantile business. In February, 1850, he moved to Noblesville, where he was a pioneer merchant, engaging in the dry goods business for a few years. He then embarked in farming and stock dealing, and was also engaged in the grain business with his brother Walter, the brothers building a grist and flour mill in 1856; they also put up an elevator. Mr. Evans continued in this latter business until his death, and was a prosperous and substantial man, proving very reliable in all his transactions. He had natural business qualifications, which were productive of excellent results in his management of all his affairs, and he possessed a strength of character and determination which carried him through many difficulties.

Mr. Evans was active in all that pertained to the good of his community, and was one of the most esteemed citizens of his day. During the Civil war, he was a strong Union man and supported the cause with his means, also offering his services to the government. His brother, John D., served throughout the war in the 39th Ind. V. I. Mr. Evans was a Democrat in politics. He was one of the charter members of the Masonic lodge at Noblesville, joining as early as 1852.

On Feb. 27, 1845, Mr. Evans married, in Hancock county, Ind., Sarah Ann Murnan, who was born May 15, 1822, in Rush county, this State, daughter of William and Agnes (Cones) Murnan, and granddaughter of John and Jane (Adren) Murnan. Jane Adren was a native of Wales, and the Murnans were from Scotland, those who came to America being three months crossing the ocean on a sailing vessel. John Murnan was a pioneer farmer in Campbell county, Ky. His children were: Michael, William, George, John, James, Charles, Elizabeth and Sarah.

William Murnan was born on the home farm in Campbell county, Ky., and received such schooling as the educational institutions of that day afforded. At an early day he came to Connersville, Fayette county, Ind., when the Indians were still in that locality, and began to clear up a farm. But after living there about a year, he returned to his old home in Campbell county, Ky., because of his wife's fear of the savages, and there remained five years. He then went to Rush county, Ind., where he bought 320 acres of land, which tract was still in the woods, and which he proceeded to clear. In 1839 he moved to Hancock county, Ind., settling fourteen miles east of Indianapolis, and there he cleared up a fine farm, comprising 440 acres of land. He built a hewed log house, ceiled on the inside and weather-boarded on the outside, and all his buildings were especially good for that day. He had entered part of his land and bought the rest at second hand, and he met with unusual success in his agricultural work.

Mr. Murnan married, in Campbell county, Ky., Agnes Cones, who was born Dec. 1, 1791, daughter of Jacob and Jane (McCullough) Cones, the former a pioneer farmer of Campbell county. Both the Cones and the McCulloughs were of Scotch-Irish stock. Mrs. Murnan died Aug. 27, 1837, aged forty-five years, and after that Mr. Murnan broke up housekeeping and lived with his children, dying in Rush county, Ind., at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jane Rickner, on Dec. 21, 18—, at the age of eighty-one years. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Murnan, namely: John, Aug. 25, 1819, in Kentucky; Elizabeth, born September, 1817; Jane, born Dec. 22, 1820; and Sarah Ann, born May 15, 1822. In politics Mr. Murnan was a stanch Jeffersonian Democrat, and possessed strong convictions, moving to Indiana on account of his opposition to slavery.

James L. Evans and his wife were the parents of the following named children: Melinda J., born Dec. 12, 1845, who is now in Marion county, Ind.; Clarinda H., born October, 1848, also a resident of Marion county; and Belle, born Feb. 2, 1854, wife of Dr. A. D. Booth. The father of this family passed away in Noblesville, May 28, 1893, at the age of sixty-eight. Mrs. Evans, who still survives at the age of over eighty, is a woman of active mind and excellent memory, and is enjoying her declining years at the old homestead where so many happy days have been passed.

HON. ELISHA J. HOWLAND, an old and much respected farmer of Section 19, Center township, Marion county, was born in Saratoga county, N. Y., Nov. 30, 1826, son of Powell and Mahala (Thurber) Howland, both natives of New York. The American lineage of the family (which originated in Wales) is traced to John Howland, who as secretary to Governor Winthrop, came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620. John Howland married Elizabeth Tilley, daughter of John Tilley, both also passengers on the "Mayflower."

Elisha Howland, grandfather of Elisha J., was of New England birth. He left Rhode Island when a boy of seventeen with a kit of carpenter's tools, and went to Saratoga county, N. Y., where he built the first barn ever put together in that neighborhood by the aid of square and rule. After his marriage he made a trip down the Ohio, stopping at the present site of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he wanted to buy land, but his wife objected to going west among the Indians, and they continued to live in New York. For many years he was a large and successful grower of fruit in Saratoga county, N. Y., where he died at the age of eighty-seven. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. His wife, Rhoda Powell, bore him six children.

Powell Howland, son of Elisha, was born in York State, and was educated in Waterford, N. Y. In 1839 he came to Marion county, Ind., from Saratoga county, N. Y., locating in Center township, where he improved a farm of 364 acres, owning also 200 acres in Washington township, and seventy acres in Perry township. He was a farmer and surveyor, but gave most of his attention to fruit growing, testing and introducing new varieties. He was a close friend of Henry Ward Beecher, and both were active members of the Horticultural Society of Indiana, Mr. Beecher editing an horticultural paper. Mr. Howland had, probably, a more intimate knowledge of the different varieties of fruit than any other man west of the Allegheny mountains unless it was Dr. Warder, of Cincinnati, with whom he often consulted. While living in Saratoga county he was surveyor, justice of the peace, etc., and for several years in the early days of Marion county he served as county commissioner, and was at one time township trustee (of whom there were three at that time though the law has since been changed, and now there is only one to a township). He was president of the association which built the first gravel road in Marion county, and drew up the Articles of Association, said to be one of the most perfect instruments ever filed in the recorder's office. In his youth he had begun the study of law, but the illness of his father necessitated his return home to assume the management of the home farm. He possessed an analytical mind, and could express his ideas with great clearness—an excellent talker and reasoner. While living in New York he was colonel of the militia and a member of the artillery. His son, Elisha J., has an old stiff leather stock which his father wore.

Powell Howland was twice married. His first wife was Tamma Morris, daughter of Richard Morris, whose other children were: Richard, a capitalist of Philadelphia, where he built more than one hundred brick houses; Theodore, a farmer of Saratoga county, N. Y.; Amanda, who married and moved West; and Lucy, who married and lived in Saratoga county. Mrs. Howland died, and Mr. Howland married (second) Mahala Thurber, daughter of Lawson and Dorothea (Wood) Thurber, of Saratoga county. Six children were born of this union, of whom two died in infancy. Those reaching mature years were: Pamela, wife of Oliver Johnson; Elisha J.; Charles A., a farmer in Washington township, Marion county; and Martha Frances, who married Reson Hammond, a farmer of Washington township, and died in May, 1903. Powell Howland died in 1877, aged seventy-nine years, and his wife died in 1883, aged seventy-nine years. He was a Universalist in religious faith, and she a Methodist.

Lawson Thurber, father of Mrs. Mahala (Thurber) Howland, was a native of New York, and was descended from French, Swiss, Dutch and Scotch ancestors. He followed the occupation of farmer, and he died in his native State advanced in years. He was large and raw-boned, and was capable of a large amount of work. He married Dorothea Wood, of Saratoga county, N. Y., cousin to Ferdinand Wood, of New York City. Their children were: Clara; Mahala, who became the wife of Mr. Howland; Mary, who married (first) a Mr. Rice, and (second) a Mr. Preston (her son, Henry Preston, lives in Oakland, Cal.); Julia, who married a Mr. Doty, of Schenectady, N. Y.; Jane, who married Albert P. Blood, of Ballston-Spa, Saratoga county, N. Y.; Edward, of Saratoga, N. Y.; and Richard, who died at Palm Beach, Florida.

Elisha J. Howland, son of Powell, was not quite thirteen when, in 1839, he accompanied his parents to Marion county, since then continuously his home. His education was obtained in the district and city schools, and the Marion County Seminary. His early manhood was spent in general farming, and his later years in fruit growing. Remaining at home until he had reached his majority, he built a house for himself on a part of his father's homestead, which he still occupies. Recently he disposed of 150 acres, and now has eighteen acres which surround the old home.

In politics Mr. Howland is a Democrat, and he represented his town in the Indiana Legislature of 1883. For several years he was road supervisor and established the first gravel road in Marion county. This road, which passes his place, was the result of his energy and influence, and it extended from what is now St. Mary's and Central avenue to the Washington township line. Gen. Thomas A. Morris, of Indianapolis, asked Mr. Howland to go to a meeting at Broadripple to see if a road could not be built up Central avenue (then called the Broadripple road). Mr. Howland said he could get subscribers for a road that passed his house on the other side of the creek, but Gen. Morris thought not, and Mr. Howland began at once to investigate. Going first to his father, who drew up the Articles of Association, and at the same time subscribed $500, he then started among his neighbors, securing subscriptions as follows: Nelson Patterson, $300; William Wimpenny, $300; Peter Messersmith, $200; John Brown, $150; Thomas Johnson, $100; Robert Duncan, $200; and Mr. Howland himself, $300. He then took the articles of the association to the auditor's office, and he is convinced that this road is the first as the auditor said he knew of no law requiring him to file any such instrument. Mr. Howland cited the law, and the Articles were duly recorded. Many others signed after the recording of the Articles. The signers held a meeting and elected directors. Subsequently Mr. Howland was elected a director and took a contract to build one mile of the road—the first mile south of the Washington township line. The first directors were: George Bruce, Nelson Patterson, John Sutherland, Thomas A. Morris and Powell Howland (father of Elisha J.). The last named was elected president and served until his death. He was entitled to twenty votes because of the amount of his original subscription, and he had incorporated in the agreement that no one director or stockholder should be entitled to more than twenty votes, a safeguard to prevent monopoly.

On Jan. 15, 1851, Elisha J. Howland was married to Margaret E. Berry, daughter of Nineveh and Hannah (Pugh) Berry. To this union six children were born, of whom three are living: (1) Charles B., of Indianapolis, married Mary Wright, and has two children, Halford and Ethel. (2) Elizabeth, who became the wife of Frank P. Baker, of Indianapolis, and had one child, Roy, died in 1902. (3) James E., married Maud Jones, and lives in Indianapolis. (4) Margaret married Charles S. Wright, of Indianapolis, and had two children, Worth E. and Howland. She died in 1903. (5) Julia lives at home. (6) Alice died when three years old. Mr. and Mrs. Howland are members of the Lutheran Church.

Nineveh and Hannah (Pugh) Berry, parents of Mrs. Howland, were both born and bred in Indiana. Mr. Berry was first engaged as a merchant, and then as a farmer. When the nation called for volunteers for service in the Mexican war, he was one of the first to respond. He was very prominent in public affairs, holding at various times the offices of county recorder, county surveyor and county treasurer. His wife, Hannah Pugh, bore him three children, two of whom are deceased.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER MARS (deceased) was one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of Martinsville, Ind. He was born Nov. 4, 1826, on a farm six miles south of Indianapolis, son of David and Rachel (Mars) Mars, both of whom were natives of Virginia. Five children were born to these parents, three sons and two daughters, the only survivor of the family being a brother of Mr. Mars, John R. Mars, a resident of Nashville, Tennessee.

The Mars family is of Scotch-Irish extraction, and the grandfather of William A.

Mars, Alexander Mars, was a native of Virginia. In that State he married Nancy Steele, and they reared a large family. Mr. Mars was an agriculturist. He was an exhorter in the Methodist Church, to which religious body his family had belonged for several generations. Alexander Mars died in Virginia at the age of eighty-four years. His name appears as a member of the old State Militia.

David Mars, son of Alexander, was also born in Virginia, and came from there in 1822 as a pioneer to Marion county, Ind. Here he entered three tracts of land of eighty acres each, situated on the Three Notch road, six miles south of Indianapolis, all of which he cleared and improved. He and his wife were among the pioneer Methodists of the State, and his house was the home of the itinerant preachers and other religious workers. He donated the land and assisted in building a church upon his farm. After his children had grown to maturity and had become established in life for themselves, he retired to Franklin, and resided there until his death, in 1869, at the age of sixty-three years. For a short time he served in the War of 1812, and for two terms he was commissioner of Marion county, Ind. The mother of Mr. Mars was a daughter of John Mars, who was a native of Wythe county, Va. John Mars was a farmer by occupation. His name appears as one of the members of the old State Militia. Thus on both sides of the family William A. Mars came of fine old Virginia stock.

Mr. Mars was reared on the farm in Marion county, Ind., and was given the educational advantages afforded by the old subscription schools. Here he was sufficiently instructed to enable him to become a teacher, but after several terms he went to Indianapolis and accepted a clerical position, first with Alvord & Woodward, then with Benjamin Pottage, and later with E. J. Peck. Mr. Mars then started in business for himself, in 1849, opening a general store at Southport, where he remained three years, and then removed to Edinburg, and entered the employ of the Indianapolis & Louisville Railroad Company, as ticket and freight agent. In 1858 he removed to Franklin, and for two years conducted a stove and tin shop, removing his business then to Indianapolis, and conducting it there until 1862. On Aug. 18, 1862, Mr. Mars enlisted in the 70th Indiana Infantry, Gen. Harrison's regiment, for service in the Civil war, and served three years, being appointed by Col. Harrison as quarter master sergeant. He was honorably discharged June 8, 1865. In his capacity as quartermaster sergeant he issued all the clothing for the regiment. After the close of the war he returned to Franklin, and for three years engaged in clerking in a shoe store, leaving there to accept a position as postal clerk, and he continued in that capacity on the Big Four railroad for seventeen years, leaving the service in 1886. From 1869 his home was in Martinsville, and there he entered into a partnership with his son, William A., Jr., who had established a hardware business there three years previously. The business has prospered ever since and takes a leading position among the activities of Martinsville.

On Jan. 3, 1850, Mr. Mars was married in Oldham county, Ky., to Miss Caroline Hickman, daughter of Lawrence and Matilda (Ross) Hickman, and six children were born to this union, four sons and two daughters—Byron, Clarence, George, William A., Jr., Florence and Celestas. All of these died in infancy, with the exception of William A., Jr., the junior member of the hardware firm. He married Miss Fannie Simpson, and they have two children, Marguerite and Bruce. Mr. Mars was bereft of his estimable wife Jan. 13, 1894, the immediate cause of her death being paralysis. She had reached the age of sixty-six years, and she was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Mars passed away Aug. 25, 1903. For many years he was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and was one of the stewards therein. His political affiliation was with the Republican party. Fraternally he belonged to the Masonic order, and to Blankenship Post, G. A. R.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Aug. 31, 1850, son of Benjamin and Mary (Personette) Franklin, both natives of Ohio.

Joseph Franklin, his grandfather, was born in Ohio, but early came with his family to Henry county, Ind., where he made his home near Mechanicsburg. He was a farmer and died advanced in years, the father of a large family. His wife was a woman of strong character and extraordinary education for her day. She wielded a considerable influence on the community. A woman of fine appearance, she was a good example of the English style of beauty.

Joseph Personette, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Franklin, was born in Ohio, and was also an early settler in Henry county, Ind., where he followed farming. In early life he was a shoemaker, and made shoes for his neighbors some years. Very expert with tools, he did a great deal of mechanical work, and made coffins for the community. When he died he was upward of eighty years of age, and had reared a numerous family.

Benjamin Franklin, son of Joseph and father of the subject proper of this sketch, was a Christian (Disciple) minister, and was the founder of the American Christian Review, of Cincinnati, which was widely read and very influential, and which he edited up to the time of his death, a period of between thirty and forty years. Mr. Franklin was a great worker in the reformation and restoration movement, in which Thomas and Alexander Campbell were very prominent leaders. His widow, Mary (Personette), died in 1882, at the age of seventy-two years. Both were always active in church work, and he was well and favorably known throughout the United States as a prominent preacher of the Christian Church, and an able exponent of the doctrines peculiar to that body. A self-educated and self-made man, his learning, ability and piety were alike remarkable, and in the presentation of the primitive gospel he was a powerful preacher. Of his children—four sons and five daughters—six are still living: Joseph, pastor of the Christian Church at Bedford, Ind.; James, of Cambridge, Kans.; Sarah, wife of William B. Wright, of Anderson, Ind.; Isabella, wife of George W. Rice, of Pennsylvania; Benjamin; and Alexander Campbell, a railroad man at Muncie, Indiana.

Benjamin Franklin, son of Benjamin, is a direct descendant of Wilson Franklin, brother to the celebrated Benjamin Franklin. He was reared in Cincinnati, where he attended the city schools until he was fifteen years of age. He then accompanied his parents to Anderson, Ind., and when he had reached the age of eighteen he became a student in what was then the Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College. After spending three years in that institution he associated himself with the Russell Thresher Company, with which he remained for a short time, and in 1873 entered the recorder's office of Marion county, as deputy recorder, a position he filled efficiently for many years. In 1893-94-95 he was connected with the Odd Fellows Mutual Aid Association.

Benjamin Franklin was married March 27, 1872, to Eliza A. Adams, daughter of Alexander and Vileete (Cundiff) Adams. Her father died about 1892, at the age of eighty-four years. Among his direct ancestors was a brother of John Quincy Adams, the eminent statesman and patriot of a former age. The mother of Mrs. Franklin attained the age of nearly fourscore years and ten.

Mabel Franklin, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Franklin, married William P. Connor, and is the mother of two children: George Dewey, born on the day of the battle in Manila Bay, and named in honor of the hero of that occasion; and Lucia Francelia. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin are members of the Third Christian Church, of Indianapolis, in which he is a deacon and chairman of the finance committee. Mr. Franklin is an honored member of Philoxenian Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., and is grand trustee of the grand lodge of Indiana, having passed through all the chairs. He also belongs to the Royal Arcanum, and his wife, who is a member of the Daughters of Rebekah, is past representative of the Assembly. In politics Mr. Franklin is a Republican.

DR. J. W. FANCHER, one of the oldest and best known of the pioneer physicians of Sheridan, Ind., was born in Rush county, this State, Nov. 23, 1838, son of William and Elizabeth (Sims) Fancher.

The Fancher family is of French stock. John Fancher, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in France, the son of wealthy parents. He settled in New York State in an early day, and was engaged as a trader. He came in pioneer days to Indiana to invest in land, bringing with him some $40,000. He disappeared on the banks of the Wabash river at the crossing at Attica, and it is believed that he was waylaid, murdered and robbed, although his body was never found, nor was he ever heard of afterward. So far as is known, from him are descended all of the American Fanchers.

William Fancher, son of John, was born in New York, and came, when a young man, to Fountain county, Ind., and then as early as 1830 settled in Rush county. In about 1835 or 1836 he married Elizabeth Sims, daughter of John and Nancy Sims, of Scotch-Irish stock. John Sims was a shoemaker in North Carolina, and died advanced in years; his wife Nancy lived to be ninety-eight years old.

Dr. Fancher was reared on a farm and received but a limited education in the primitive log school house of the pioneer days. The Doctor became a skilled penman, and taught many writing schools in the early days, among his pupils being many young men and women who afterward became prominent in the State, among whom may be mentioned Judge Theodore P. Davis. The Doctor also studied at home, becoming very well-informed. He learned pump making and the business of carriage and house painting. In the fall of 1862, at LaFayette, Ind., he enlisted for three years or during the war, becoming a private in Company A, 86th Ind. V. I. He served until honorably discharged in June, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn., having served nearly three years. He took part in the battles of Perryville, Peach Tree Creek and LaVergne, Tenn. At the battle of Stone River he was shot in the left hand, being also wounded by a shell in the left ankle and knee cap. He was in the hospital at Louisville, and his knee stiffened so that he was unable to continue with his regiment, and was, accordingly, assigned to hospital duty, being made assistant hospital steward and assistant druggist, the last four months being under Major Fitz and Colonel Mundy, commander of the post. He then attempted to rejoin his regiment, but was seized with smallpox, and was confined in Smallpox Hospital, No. 11, Nashville, Tenn., and here his knee filled with purulent matter. The doctor recovered the use of his knee, however, and as assistant hospital steward served until the expiration of his term of service. In the hospital the Doctor learned a great deal about the use of medicine and the care of the sick. After the war he went to Boone county, Ind., where his father was living, and there he remained for a while.

Dr. Fancher married Matilda Shook, born in 1840, in Oxford, Ohio, daughter of John and Cynthia (Weston) Shook. The Shooks were of Pennsylvania-German stock, and Mrs. John Shook settled in Boone county, Ind., during the war. John Shook cleared up a farm in Butler county, Ohio, where he died before the Civil war, his sons assisting their mother to manage the farm in Indiana. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. John Shook were: Nancy, Martha, Matilda, George (a soldier who died in the Civil war), Levi and Elizabeth.

Dr. Fancher settled on a farm in Boone county, Ind., in the woods, three and one-half miles west of Sheridan. With the assistance of his worthy wife, who was a good manager, the Doctor succeeded in acquiring a medical library and in attending the Indiana Medical College, from which institution he was graduated in 1875, and at which he took a special course in 1879. He began the practice of his profession at Sheridan, and soon established a good practice. The Doctor is a subscriber to the leading medical journals, owns a good medical library and keeps well abreast of the times. In politics he is a Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Church, to which his wife belongs. Dr. Fancher is a self-made man, and owes the success he has gained entirely to his own efforts, and those of his good wife.

OLIVER HUNTER COTTINGHAM, a lifelong resident of Indiana, is a descendant of a line of Scotch-Irish ancestors, and represents a family that settled first in Delaware in Colonial days. He was born in Noblesville, Ind., Oct. 12, 1847, son of John D. and Hannah (Mull) Cottingham.

John D. Cottingham was born near Dover, Del., Dec. 31, 1805, and he received a good education for his day. He became a merchant, and decided to try his fortunes in the West, then just beginning to be more generally settled. He located in Hamilton county, Ind., one of the pioneers in Noblesville, and engaged in mercantile pursuits there for a number of years. Much of the profit of his enterprise he put into land, became the owner of several large farms, and laid out part of the town of Cicero on his land. Moving thither in 1849 or 1850, he was one of the first residents of the new town, was its leading merchant and continued in business there till his death, Feb. 10, 1875. In addition to his own private business he was active in public affairs, was one of the prominent men of his locality and served in 1842 as a justice of the peace. His docket is still preserved. In politics he was a Republican, and was proud to have had the privilege of voting for Abraham Lincoln.

In Noblesville, Mr. Cottingham was married to Hannah Mull, born in New Jersey June 4, 1815, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Mull, pioneer settlers near Shawtown. Hannah Mull had to walk the long distance through the woods to the court house at the county seat to get the deed to their land recorded. A family of seven children blessed the union of John D. and Hannah Cottingham, all born in Hamilton county, as follows: John W., Aug. 15, 1833; Hannah, Aug. 8, 1836; Emma, Sept. 25, 1838; Catherine, July 27, 1841; Calista, June 5, 1844; Oliver H., Oct. 12, 1847; and Ellen, Jan. 3, 1850. Mr. Cottingham reared his family in the Methodist faith, to which church he belonged. He was always active in its work, was a class leader and helped to found the first church of that denomination in Cicero. Mrs. Cottingham died some years before her husband, Feb. 2, 1866, at the age of fifty years and eight months.

Oliver H. Cottingham was born in Noblesville, Oct. 12, 1847, but was only about two years of age when his father removed to Cicero. There the boy grew up, attending the first school opened in the town, which was held in a little log school house. As he grew older he did farm work and clerked for his father, till the time came when he could enlist in the army. On May 11, 1864, when seventeen years of age, he enlisted in Cicero as a private in Company K, 138th Ind. V. I., for 100 days. He was sent to Tennessee on guard duty at Tullahoma, served four months and twenty days, and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Sept. 30, 1864. He returned to Cicero, and then re-enlisted March 7, 1865, in Company F, 155th Ind. V. I., for one year or during the war, and was honorably discharged Aug. 4, 1865, at Dover, Del., at the close of the war. He was always in active service, never in the hospital nor in prison, and was ever prompt and cheerful in the discharge of his duty.

On returning to Cicero again Mr. Cottingham made agriculture his calling, and has followed it to this day, being very successful in his operations. On Sept. 15, 1874, he was married in Cicero to Mrs. Margaret G. (Foland) Royer, widow of George Royer, a soldier in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Cottingham have had five children, viz.: Caroline, born April 16, 1875, who died in infancy; Calvin F., March 11, 1877; Ralston B., Nov. 3, 1879, who married Miss Milton Travioli, and is a glass blower at Terre Haute; Thomas H., April 16, 1882; and Mrs. Edward Gilbert, Dec. 20, 1884. Mr. Cottingham belongs to Post No. 207, G. A. R., at Cicero, and has held most of the offices in the Post. In politics he is a Republican. He stands high in the general esteem in Cicero, and is a much respected citizen.

Mrs. Cottingham, born March 24, 1844, in Madison county, Ind., is a daughter of Henry and Catherine (Richwine) Foland, and comes of Virginia ancestry on both sides. Henry Foland was of Dutch stock, while his wife was of German. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and on coming to Indiana, first settled in Henry county, then in Madison, where he cleared a farm from the woods. Later in life he moved to the vicinity of Carthage, Mo., and there died Feb. 1, 1872, aged seventy-five. His wife lived to the age of eighty-five years. They had four children, namely: William, who enlisted in Company B, 39th Ind. V. I., served three years in the Civil war, and died before the time of his discharge; Margaret G.; Melissa A.; and John. Margaret G. Foland was first married in Cicero, Sept. 16, 1860, to George Royer. One child was born to them, and then in 1862 Mr. Royer enlisted. He was with Sherman in his March to the Sea and suffered much from exposure. He lived to return home, however, and he and his wife moved to Carthage, Mo., with the Foland family. There Mr. Royer died from the effects of his army life, May 21, 1873. He left his widow with four children: Joel, born June 26, 1861; Sophronia C., May 9, 1866; Martha J., Aug. 31, 1868; and Clarence M., Oct. 1, 1871, the only one born in Missouri.

JOHN W. FEATHERSTON, a respected citizen of Anderson, Ind., and a veteran of the Civil war, has been engaged in farming in this section since 1873. He was born March 1, 1837, in Jefferson county, Ind., son of Charles D. and Louisa (Acres) Featherston.

Jeremiah Featherston, grandfather of John W., was a pioneer of Kentucky, and settled near Frankfort. In 1822 he located in Indiana, settling in Marion county, six miles south of Indianapolis, where he entered and bought 160 acres of land from the United States government. He afterward sold eighty acres of this land, and kept eighty acres himself, which he cleared up and converted into a good farm, and here he passed his remaining days. He died in 1864 or 1865, between the ages of seventy and eight years. He married Annie Green, and their children were: Charles D., John, William E., Byrle (who died young), Lucy, James, Robert, Sarah, Jeremiah, Mary and Nancy.

Charles D. Featherston was probably born in Kentucky and was a young man when his parents moved to Marion county, Ind. His life business was farming, but he worked on the old State house in Indianapolis, when it was being erected, during the summer time for two or three years. He married Louisa Acres, born in Indiana, of Irish parentage, daughter of Finley Acres, a native of Ireland. Mr. Featherston first settled on his father's farm, later removing to a rented farm near Indianapolis, where he lived about ten years, and then located in Hamilton county, where he lived on a farm near Noblesville. He died in Augusta, nine miles north of Indianapolis, aged about seventy years. He was a member of the Christian Church, and was an upright, straight-forward man, and had many friends. His first wife, Louisa (Acres) died, the mother of one son, John W., and Mr. Featherston took for his second wife, Narcissa Eudaly, by whom he had these children: Eliza J. and Nancy E. (twins); Jeremiah; Charles; Narcissa; Margaret; Maria; Elizabeth; William; Mary; Andrew; Fran; and Melissa and Lucinda (twins), who died aged fourteen and fifteen years, respectively.

John W. Featherston received but a meager education, attending the district school not more than two months. His mother died when he was about nine years old, and he was brought up by his grandparents, Jeremiah and Annie Green Featherston. He began work at a very early age, being reared a farmer, which occupation he has always followed. He married in Marion county, Oct. 18, 1857, Malinda Johnson, born in Jefferson county, Ind., July 17, 1841, daughter of Bartimus and Malinda (Ritchie) Johnson. Bartimus Johnson was a Kentuckian who settled in Bartholomew county at an early date, and moved to Marion county in 1856. He later removed to Johnson county, where he died aged about eighty years. His children were: Mitchell, John, Nancy, Mary, James, Charles, William, Dicy and Malinda. Of these James and Charles were soldiers in the Mexican war, and Mitchell, John and William in the Civil war. John was wounded at the battle of Perryville, Ky.

The father of these children was a local minister of the Missionary Baptist Church.

John W. Featherston and his wife, after marriage, settled in Marion county, where he farmed until the Civil war. He enlisted at Indianapolis, in September, 1864, as a private in Company B, 29th Ind. V. I., to serve one year or during the war. He served until the time had nearly expired when he was honorably discharged, the war having closed. He was a participant of the first battle of Franklin, three days' fight; the second battle of Nashville; Decatur, Ala., in many skirmishes, as well as taking part in many forced marches. He marched from Nov. 16, 1864, until Jan. 29, 1865, on Steedman's raid to re-enforce General Thomas, following Steedman until his troops were demoralized.

When Mr. Featherston enlisted he left his wife and three little children at home, and while away his little son, Charles, aged six years, died, and Mr. Featherston was unable to get home to see him. The child died from an attack of spotted fever, twenty-three children being claimed from the school little Charles was attending—his first term. After the war Mr. Featherston returned home, and worked for a time at ordinary labor, all of his savings having been swept away through the needs of his family when he was away. Later, having accumulated a little money he rented land in Marion county, in 1873 locating in Brown county, where he bought 160 acres of land in the timber, which land he cleared and improved into a good farm, setting out an orchard.

Mr. and Mrs. Featherston have had children as follows: Charles, James, Louisa, William, Albert, Calvin, Oscar and Rosetta. Mr. Featherston and his wife moved to Anderson in 1896, where they bought a pleasant residence property and there they now reside. Mrs. Featherston is a member of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and at one time served as road supervisor. He is an honored member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson, in which he has held the office of chaplain. He was vice-commander of his Post at Bean Blossom, Brown county. Mr. Featherston has always been an industrious, hard-working man, straight-forward and honest in his dealings with his fellow men, and he is regarded as one of Anderson's representative citizens. The present independent position in which he finds himself is entirely the result of his own efforts. Unlike many of the soldiers of the Civil war, Mr. Featherston's experiences in that struggle did not incapacitate him from hard, persistent work upon his return. On the other hand he probably at that time realized more fully than ever before the compensations of industry.

PROF. ALFRED HOUGHTON, for many years a popular and capable teacher of the piano and string and brass instruments, and the well known leader of the Houghton Military Band and Orchestra, Indianapolis, was born in London, England, Jan. 22, 1854, one of the three children of Alfred and Clara Houghton, the former born in the United States, and the latter in England.

Alfred Houghton was a lad of eight years when he went to live with his uncle, William Houghton, a sea captain, and with him he remained several years. In 1872 the young musician came to the United States and located in Buffalo, and after several years removed to Gallion, Ohio. In 1883 Prof. Houghton came to Indianapolis, and here he has made his home to the present time. His common-school education was acquired in London, but in this country he became a close student, and has gained much valuable information without the assistance of an instructor.

When Prof. Houghton was only five years old he began playing the piccolo, and later the violin. He followed along this line and gradually became familiar with other instruments, and finally a teacher of music, and this has been his profession these many years. Several bands have been taught by him, among them the Indianapolis Band, which is the band of the District Assembly, No. 106, K. of L.; and he was band master of the First Regiment, Uniform Rank, K. of P., and of the Indiana Legion, Second Regiment Infantry. His own band was known as Houghton's Military and Orchestra Band, and was composed of fraternity men of the different orders. The professor furnishes music for concerts, balls, parties, picnics, parades, funerals and other occasions where good music is desirable. Ill health has of late compelled him to give up some of his work, but music has been too much a part of his life for him to lay it aside for any great length of time, and it is safe to predict that he will return to it with added enthusiasm and love when his strength is restored.

Prof. Houghton was married Nov. 3, 1881, to Miss Alice May, daughter of Benjamin and Mary Jane (Ely) Aller, who were reared in Ohio. In the Aller family were three children, two of whom are yet living: Mrs. Houghton and Theron Webb Aller, of Chicago. Mrs. Houghton's mother died in the faith of the Baptist Church in 1877, at the age of forty-nine years, and her father died in August, 1901, at the age of eighty years. He served throughout the war of the Rebellion, twice re-enlisting. Prof. Houghton belongs to a number of social and fraternal societies, and is very popular in all. In politics he is a Democrat in principle, but aims to cast an independent vote on local issues.

SAMUEL KENNEDY, M. D., a leading practitioner of Shelbyville, Ind., and a man of great prominence in that community, was born in the city, March 16, 1867, son of Dr. Samuel A. and Eliza M. (Kennedy) Kennedy, and on both sides is of the fifth generation in descent from James Kennedy, a native of the North of Ireland, who came to America in 1743, and in connection with Lawyer Ross, of Lancaster county, Pa., bought a tract of land on the Antietam in Maryland, and established Rock Forge. This land was on the Antietam where the Monocacy Creek joins it, just above its mouth. In 1767 James Kennedy sold his business in Maryland, and being elated with the idea of a new country, removed to Pennsylvania, locating on the Susquehanna river, nine miles below Sunbury. Here he made a new purchase, which began a few miles above Thomsburg and terminated below the big island settled upon by Gov. William Dunn, before the treaty with the Indians. He remained there two years, or until the breaking out of the Indian war, when he went to New Jersey, and purchased a furnace on the Miskinickunk, where he lived several years, and then removed to Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Andrew Kennedy, son of James, was born in Maryland in 1764. He received his education at Allentown, Pa., and in 1781 was apprenticed to Mr. John Dunlap, of Philadelphia, to learn the printer's trade. With him he served his time, and afterward worked for him several years. Andrew Kennedy was married in 1789, by Bishop White, to Miss Mary Favers, who was born in Philadelphia in 1768. Her father came from Wales, and was a firm supporter of the American cause during the Revolution, and was killed at Yorktown. Her only brother, James Favers, volunteered on board the privateer commanded by Capt. Wilson, and was either killed in action or he died aboard the prison ship "Jersey." The mother of Mrs. Kennedy had a brother, Col. Wylie, who served in the Revolution, and was killed at what was known as Harmor's defeat, in the western country, while commanding the regulars. Thus all the male relatives of Mrs. Kennedy gave up their lives in the defense of their adopted country.

After working several years in New York and Philadelphia, Andrew Kennedy purchased a printing plant, and in April, 1792, in company with Rev. John Taylor, located at Sunbury, Pa., and established the Sunbury and Northumberland Gazette. Soon after, at the solicitation of Dr. Priestly, he removed to Northumberland, where he published the Doctor's works, although he continued to publish his paper until 1812, when he sold a half-interest to George Sweeney, who had served his apprenticeship with Mr. Kennedy. The partnership was dissolved in 1814, Mr. Sweeney going to Danville to establish the Watchman. The Gazette was one of the foremost Federal papers in the State of Pennsylvania; had a wide circulation; was edited with ability and strict regard for the truth. Mr. Kennedy would never permit anything to be inserted in this paper which would defame private character or assail it in any way whatever. In advocating his political principles he was often severe on his adversaries, but always absolutely truthful. In his private life he was affable, warm-hearted and honest in all his dealings with men. After Mr. Sweeney sold out in 1814, Mr. Kennedy conducted the Gazette by himself until 1817, when his health failed, and he retired to Sunbury, where his death occurred Jan. 12, 1819. He was buried with Masonic honors and was laid to rest in the Episcopal burying ground at Northumberland. Simon Cameron was the last apprentice to serve in the printing office of Mr. Kennedy.

John Kennedy, a brother of Andrew, served on board the "Hyderally," commanded by Com. Barney, at the capture of the "General Monk," after a hard fought battle in the war of the Revolution.

Six children were born to Andrew Kennedy and wife, all of whom are now deceased: John Y.; Andrew; Maria; Samuel; Edmund and Eliza.

John Y. Kennedy, son of Andrew and maternal grandfather of Samuel, was a surgeon in the War of 1812, was a man of much intellectual force and a very successful practitioner. He came to Shelby county, Ind., in 1828, and practiced for many years. He died at Acton, Ind., in 1882, aged ninety years.

Andrew Kennedy, the paternal grandfather of Dr. Samuel, was born in Northumberland county. He married Nancy McMullen, of Pennsylvania, who bore him twelve children.

Samuel A. Kennedy, fifth child of Andrew and Nancy, was born in Northumberland county, March 20, 1835, and in his native locality his youth was passed. He was educated in the common schools, and the Lewisburg Academy. In 1853, he came to Shelby county, Ind., and began the study of medicine in the office of his uncle Dr. John Y. Kennedy. Later he attended lectures at the Ohio Medical College, in the winters of 1854-55-56-57, being graduated March 1, 1857. Immediately thereafter he located in Fairland, Shelby county, later removing to Shelbyville, in 1859, where he was in active and successful practice of the profession until his death. He married Eliza M., daughter of Dr. John Y. Kennedy.

Samuel Kennedy, son of Dr. Samuel A., was reared at Shelbyville, and graduated from the high school of that city in 1885, and from Purdue University at Lafayette in 1888. He studied medicine with his father, attended one course of lectures at the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, and was graduated at the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis in 1891, and at once began the practice of his profession at Shelbyville, where he has been very successful.

Dr. Kennedy is a member of the Shelby County Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society, of which he served one term as vice-president in 1898, and he is a member of the American Medical Association. In politics he is a Republican.

JOHN J. SIMS, justice of the peace, retired farmer and respected citizen of Fortville, Vernon township, Hancock county, Ind., was born Jan. 8, 1836, in Meigs county, Ohio, son of John and Mary (Groves) Sims, and grandson of Morris Sims.

The family is of Scotch-Irish stock, and Morris Sims settled as a pioneer along the Shade river, in Meigs county, Ohio, at an early day. His children were: John, William, Morris, Oliver, Reese, Peggy, Tenie and Frank. Tradition says that the Sims family came to Ohio from Virginia, and that Morris Sims was a soldier in the Revolution and died in Meigs county, Ohio, where his wife also passed away.

John Sims, son of Morris and father of John J., probably born in Virginia, was a blacksmith and wagon maker by trade, and was a very handy man with tools, being able to make almost any article desired by his neighbors out of iron or wood, among a large variety of other articles, making spinning wheels and looms. He was married twenty miles above Cincinnati, to Mary Groves, born in Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania-Dutch stock, who, up to her thirteenth year could speak no English. After marriage Mr. Sims and his wife settled on the Shade river, in Meigs county, Ohio, where he owned 300 acres of land. His farm, which was mostly bottom lands, was very fertile, and this he cleared, making a good home for his family. His children were: Lucinda; William; Lewis; Mary Ann, who died aged eleven years; Emeline; Eliza; John J.; and Benjamin F., all of whom with the exception of Mary A. lived to grow to maturity, and all married and reared families except Benjamin F. John Sims moved from Meigs county, Ohio, to Tupper's Plains, where he bought a small farm and built a saw-mill, and sank a salt well, but did not succeed well with these enterprises. In politics he was a Democrat, and he was a strong Union man. He and his wife had been members of the Campbellite Church, but later they joined the United Brethren Church, in the faith of which they died, he in 1852, and his wife in her ninety-sixth year, at the home of her daughter, Eliza.

John J. Sims was reared in Meigs county, and received but a limited common school education. He has since, however, educated himself thoroughly through his own efforts. He was married in Circleville, Ohio, March 20, 1862, to Hannah Morgan, born April 5, 1841, in Pickaway county, Ohio, daughter of George W. and Harriet Morgan, and granddaughter of George Morgan, who was born in Virginia in 1770, of old Colonial stock of Scotch descent. George Morgan's wife was a native of Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan located in Pickaway county, in the days of its early settlement, and there he died at the age of eighty-eight, leaving the following children: Zachariah, Ann, Keturah, Daniel, Elizabeth, Sarah, William, George, John, Benjamin and David. He and his wife were members of the United Brethren Church. He was a hardy pioneer and did a great deal of land clearing, not only for himself, but also for others. His son, George W., father of Mrs. Sims, was born Aug. 12, 1814, in Pickaway county, and received absolutely no education, being just able to write his name. He was married May 30, 1840, to Harriet Pinorton, born in September, 1820. Later in life George W. Morgan moved to the line of Ross county, where he bought a small farm near Kingston, which he later sold, moving away from that locality. He died aged about seventy years. His children were: Hannah, Mary, Samantha, Sarah E., David and Edson. He was a good citizen, and was a man trusted by the people, acting as administrator of many estates. He was a class leader in the Methodist Church for many years, and also served as school director. His wife died in Pickaway county, Ohio, at the age of forty-nine years.

After marriage John J. Sims and his wife settled first in Pickaway county, Ohio, on a farm. Mr. Sims enlisted in the Civil war in 1861, in the 32d O. V. I., but on account of his mother's ill health he was released on the intercession of his friends and neighbors. When John Morgan made his famous raid in Ohio, Mr. Sims joined the pursuit, being out thirteen days. He was at the crossing of the Muskingum river, three miles below Zanesville, where they had a skirmish with the raiders. After this he enlisted in the Home Guards, Company B, 92d O. V. I., and this company was consolidated with Company E, 155th O. V. I., and ordered to Camp Dennison, and there by vote of the regiment went into active service at the front. He was mustered into the U. S. service in May, 1864, and his services took him into Virginia and North Carolina. After a 113-days experience as a soldier he was honorably discharged at Camp Dennison, Ohio, in August, 1864. He was in the Shenandoah Valley guarding supplies, and took part in many skirmishes, being a participant of the following battles: Cedar Creek, Martinsburg, Bunker Hill and City Point. During service in guarding provision trains on their way to Petersburg, they were repeatedly fired upon. At the battle of Petersburg, Mr. Sims was detailed with a number of other comrades to act as nurse. For eighteen days and nights he assisted in caring for the wounded, scarcely getting a bit of sleep, and working day and night to ease the awful suffering of the wounded men. Mr. Sims was never confined to the hospital. His brothers, Frank and Lewis, were three-year veterans.

After the war Mr. Sims returned to his home, in 1865 removing to Lawrence, Ind., where he lived one year before going to Anderson. There he engaged in getting out cooper's stuff, and resided in that place for over thirty years. He then removed to one mile north of Fortville, where he located on a farm of fifty and one-half acres. Two years later, in 1898, he sold his farm and located in Fortville. Mr. and Mrs. Sims are members of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Democrat, and also a Prohibitionist. He has been coroner of Madison county, and has been constable in both Ohio and Indiana. He is a man of excellent moral character and stands high in the opinion of the people. He is a member of Sol. D. Kempton Post, No. 228, G. A. R., of Fortville, in which he has held the office of commander.

To Mr. and Mrs. John J. Sims the following children have been born: Walter M., born Jan. 1, 1863, married Nora Groves, and they have one son, George M.; Frank E., born Feb. 28, 1864, died aged two years and six months; Clara, born Sept. 7, 1866, married Preston Brown, of Anderson, Ind., and they have an adopted son, George M.; Charles, born Oct. 27, 1868, married Rosa Carter, and they are now living in Lewisville, Ind.; John M., born Oct. 1, 1871, married Doria Bowen, and they lived in Muncie, Ind., where he died Nov. 14, 1896; Gertrude C., born Dec. 20, 1873, married Douglas Armstrong, of Donnelly, Minn., and has five children, Lyle, Besie, Arnold, Webber and Florence; Mary E., born May 9, 1878, married Charles Welchel, of Fortville, and has had one son, Everett M.; Thomas F. was born Dec. 11, 1880; Ernest E. was born Aug. 5, 1884.

RUFUS W. TERHUNE, M. D., a prominent physician, coroner and an esteemed citizen of Whiteland, Johnson county, was born in Samaria, that county, Oct. 21, 1866, son of Thomas and Caroline (Vories) Terhune, both natives of Johnson county.

Dr. Terhune comes of notable ancestry. On the paternal side, his forefathers were French Huguenots, who fled from France to Holland in 1685, and thence to America, where they peopled the rich lands of New Jersey, and founded and promoted many of the industries of that State.

William Terhune, the great-great-grandfather of Dr. Terhune, was born in New Jersey in 1756, became a soldier in the Continental army under Gen. Washington, and endured the privations at Valley Forge.

Garrett Terhune, son of William, was born in New Jersey in 1791, and was taken to Kentucky by his father in 1793. In 1830 he came to Indiana, bought land in the vicinity of Franklin, and died near Trafalgar, in 1875, aged eighty-four years.

James Terhune, son of Garrett, and grandfather of Dr. Terhune, was born in Mercer county, Ky., and came to Indiana in 1830, where he grew to manhood and followed farming in Johnson county. His wife was Eusebia Nay, and they had seven children. He died Jan. 21, 1892, in Trafalgar, aged seventy-one years.

Thomas Terhune, son of James and father of Dr. Terhune, was for thirty years a well-known educator, at the same time a farmer, in Hensley township. He married Caroline Vories, who died July 29, 1896, aged about fifty-two years. She was a consistent member of the Christian Church, a lovable, estimable woman. Mr. Terhune favors the tenets of the Baptist Church, although he has never identified himself with it. His home is with his son, the Doctor, at Whiteland. The two children born to Mr. Terhune and wife were: Dr. Rufus W.; and Miss Violet.

On the maternal side of the family, the great-great-grandfather was Francis Vories, who was of Dutch descent, and was born in Pennsylvania in 1763. He moved to Kentucky in 1780, and died there in 1848. His son John was born in Shelby county, Ky., in 1797, and emigrated to Indiana in 1830, locating in Hensley township, Johnson county, and there he died in 1880, in his eighty-fourth year. Grandfather Hervey Vories, son of John, was born in Henry county, Ky., and moved to Indiana in 1830, locating four miles southwest of Trafalgar, in Johnson county. There he engaged in farming and lived in the same place for seventy years, still making it his home. For many years he has been one of the most highly esteemed men of his locality, serving his township as trustee, and in many other offices. His wife was Alazannah Carter, and they had a family of eight children.

Dr. Rufus W. Terhune was reared on the home farm in Hensley township, and acquired his education in the district schools, graduating from the Trafalgar high school in 1884. The succeeding six years were spent as a teacher, his success in that line being such that if his taste had not led him to the science of medicine, he would probably have taken a very prominent place in the other profession. Ambitious, however, to obtain a medical education, he spent his vacations and employed his spare moments in medical study, and thus prepared himself for entrance to the Kentucky School of Medicine, at Louisville, which institution he entered in 1889, graduating in 1891. Since February, 1892, he has been a resident of Whiteland, where he owns an attractive home and adjoining office. As a physician, he has gained the confidence of the community, while as a citizen he fulfills every requirement.

On June 21, 1892, Dr. Terhune was united in marriage with Mrs. Lena E. Doran, widow of John T. Doran, and daughter of Bryant R. Nall. She died Oct. 15, 1898, aged thirty-six years. No children were born to this marriage, but the two sons of her former union were: Russell and John T. Doran. She was a lady of beautiful character and many Christian virtues. In her early youth she joined the Methodist Church, but later, both she and Dr. Terhune united with the Presbyterian Church in Whiteland.

Dr. Terhune has taken an active part in politics and supports the Democratic party. At present he is serving as county coroner. Fraternally he is connected with the Improved Order of Red Men and the Modern Woodmen of America. In medical circles he is in fellowship with the State and county medical societies. His skill as a physician, his character as a man, and his many charitable and benevolent acts, have made him a very highly regarded resident of this prosperous town.

ALBERT B. TAYLOR, one of the leading men of Pendleton, Ind., who is well-known in business circles throughout Madison county, was born Aug. 28, 1853, in Pendleton, son of Andrew B. Taylor.

Probably there is no family in Madison county more widely known or more thoroughly respected than that of Taylor, and a most worthy member of this family was Andrew B. Taylor, who later became so thoroughly identified with many of the successful business enterprises of this section. Coming on foot all the way from West Virginia he lived to see his signature honored all over the State, representing as it did large financial interests as well as sterling integrity. He was one of the founders of the present village of Pendleton, where he established the large milling business which has proved one of its great industries; founded a banking business and built the first bank; established one of the earliest tailor shops and was the first manufacturer of fine clothing here. He was the builder of the first large business block, which was erected at a cost of $14,000. For many years he was at the head of the great milling and elevator business of Andrew B. Taylor & Sons, was president of a company which owned the Huntsville mills and what is known as the Lower Mills. Personally Andrew B. Taylor was a man to attract attention in any congregation, standing six feet tall, straight as an arrow and weighing over 200 pounds. After the organization of the firm of Andrew B. Taylor & Sons Mr. Taylor continued actively in the business for five years longer. His death occurred in 1880.

Albert B. Taylor was reared at Pendleton, and after completing his education in the Pendleton high school, he went into business with his father and his two brothers, Jesse B. and Ulysses Grant Taylor, under the firm name of Andrew B. Taylor & Sons. The company was organized as a milling business, but also owned grain elevators and dealt in stock. This firm became one of the very large enterprises of the town. Albert B. Taylor was but twenty years old when he became a member of the firm, and he had a fine business training. In 1895 he became interested with other capitalists in founding the Pendleton Window Glass Company, which was incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, a large part of which stock Mr. Taylor owned. This was an outgrowth of the discovery of natural gas at Pendleton. There was no reason why this enterprise should not have succeeded at first, except that the initial promoters and managers were not practical glass men. The result was that the Pendleton stockholders were obliged to take charge of the business, and it was re-organized as the Pendleton Window Glass Works, with B. F.

Ammon as president. Shortly after the re-organization Mr. Taylor became president, and under his excellent management the business has been entirely successful. The stock of the company is now at par, and the demand for the glass manufactured is constantly growing.

On Jan. 1, 1880, Mr. Taylor was married to Hattie G. Gregg, at Franklin, Ohio, a member of an old Ohio family of that name. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have three children: Laverne, Alvion and Zella. In politics Mr. Taylor is a Republican, but takes no very active interest in public affairs. For the past thirty years he has been a member of the I. O. O. F., belonging to Lodge No. 88, Pendleton, in which he has passed all the chairs, including that of noble grand, and has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State.

JAMES C. JORDAN, a respected business man of Fortville, Hancock county, a survivor of the great Civil War, and an esteemed citizen, was born Jan. 16, 1841, in Green township, Madison county, Ind., son of Addison and Sarah (Grimes) Jordan.

Addison Jordan was born in Virginia and was married there to Sarah Grimes and came to Madison county, Ind., in 1836. He bought eighty acres of land in the woods, built a log house and cleared his land. Game was very plentiful and he became a good hunter, killing many deer and wild turkeys. He had six children, of whom James C. and Mary are mentioned. The mother died when James C. was about five years old, in 1846, and the father about two years later.

James C. Jordan obtained but a limited education, attending school only nine months, in a log school house where slabs were used for benches. He was reared on his father's farm and was twenty years of age when the clouds of Civil War broke over the country. He offered his services, enlisting in April, 1861, as a private in the 12th Ind. V. I., but on account of the quota being full, this regiment was held with the 16th regiment for State service until July 23, 1861. It was accepted by the State May 5, 1861, and on July 23d was transferred to the U. S. service. Mr. Jordan served one year, and re-enlisted Aug. 9, 1862, as a private of the same organization, to serve three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., June 8, 1865, this making his service nearly four years. He participated in the following battles: Richmond, Ky.; Vicksburg, Miss.;

Jackson, Miss.; Missionary Ridge; Resaca; Dallas; New Hope Church, where Mr. Jordan's head was grazed by a bullet; Kenesaw Mountain, when his regiment was the first to be engaged; Nickajack Creek; Atlanta, July 20, 21, 22 and 28; and Jonesboro. During the great Atlanta campaign, the Union troops were under fire four months. Then came these battles: Savannah, Griswoldville, Columbia, Bentonville and Raleigh. The 12th Indiana lost in killed and wounded in the campaign about Atlanta, 240 brave men, the total enlistment being 1,300. Mr. Jordan was neither wounded nor made a prisoner although he narrowly escaped capture by Kirby Smith's men at the battle of Richmond, Ky., where the greater part of his regiment was captured, but later paroled. He was sick in a hospital with trouble with his lungs for a time, but spent but a short time out of active service. He took part in all the marches, battles and skirmishes of his regiment, and was proved to be capable, loyal and prompt in the discharge of his duties. At Vicksburg he was detailed as a nurse for two months, but during this time his regiment was not engaged actively. He had the pleasure of taking part in the Grand Review at Washington, where the gallant 12th Indiana led the march.

Mr. Jordan was married July 28, 1865, in Fortville, to Sarah A. Van Zant, born May 26, 1838, in Hamilton county Ind., daughter of John and Hannah (Elston) Van Zant. The Van Zants are of Dutch ancestry, the early members of the family in America settling in New Jersey, where John Van Zant was born. His father, Isaac Van Zant, was an early settler in Clermont county, Ohio. His first wife was Amy Savage, and the children of that union were: Elbert; William; Nancy, who married William Ammerman, a soldier of the war of 1812; Rachel, who married a Mr. Bodine; and Polly, who married George Hoagland. Isaac Van Zant married (second) Elizabeth Rulifson, of German descent, and their children were: John and Sallie Ann. Isaac Van Zant was the pioneer of the family in Indiana, and he settled about 1821 in Franklin county. John Van Zant, father of Mrs. Jordan, born Oct. 12, 1812, was married in December, 1832, to Hannah Elston, born in Clermont county, Ohio, Aug. 12, 1811, daughter of Eli and Mary (Payne) Elson. One John Payne was shot by a Tory while performing his duty as a soldier in the Revolutionary war from New Jersey. Eli Elston belonged also to one of the old Colonial families of New Jersey of Holland descent. They moved to Clermont county in 1802, where he subsequently cleared a farm from the woods. His children were as follows: Isaac, a soldier of the war of 1812; Fannie; John; William, a soldier of the war of 1812; Huldah; Eli, who died in Rush county, Ind.; Moses; Ralph; Truman; Mary F. and Hannah. The last named, the mother of Mrs. Jordan, lived to near the century mark, retaining her faculties to the last. Eli Elston died in Clermont county, Ohio, aged about fifty years.

John Van Zant, father of Mrs. Jordan, moved to Hamilton county, Ind., in 1835, and settled in the woods on a tract of 109 acres, where he built a log house and partly cleared his farm. Later he traded his land for a tract of eighty acres on Mud Creek, where he lived until 1838, when he removed to Sugar Creek. There he bought a grist and saw mill, and operated them for one and a half years, and then traded for a farm near Germantown, Ind. Later he moved to land along the Yellow river, but finally settled in Hamilton county on a tract of eighty acres lying in Hamilton and Hancock counties. Here Mr. Van Zant developed a good farm and here he died aged fifty-one years. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious belief a Methodist. He was past master of the Masonic lodge at Germantown. Mr. and Mrs. Van Zant's children were: Eli, Isaac, Sarah, Corydon, Ralph, Tilghman, Gilbert, and Woodie.

After the close of the Civil war Mr. Jordan followed farming a short time, and then settled in Fortville where he has been engaged at different occupations. At one time he was largely interested in the commission business, buying eggs and poultry, operated a farm of 160 acres in Madison county for three years, engaged in a drug business at Fortville for six years, and then embarked in the real estate business there. He is now connected with the rural mail service, and is a capable and efficient public official. He owns one of the best homes at Fortville, and is very pleasantly located.

Mrs. Jordan died the mother of children as follows: Fannie B.; Clara H., who married Louis Sutton, a conductor on the Big Four Railroad; Emma N., who is in the insurance business in New York City, a line she formerly handled in Chicago; and Eva E. In his political principles Mr. Jordan is a staunch Republican. He is a member of Sol. D. Kempton Post, G. A. R., and has held the office of commander for two terms. He is a member of the I. O. R. M., of Fortville, and has passed the chairs, including sachen and prophet. For eighteen months he served as marshal of Fortville. He is one of the best known and most highly regarded citizens of this place.

JOHN T. RASH, who entered into rest April 14, 1906, was a native of Hancock county, born Sept. 9, 1839, son of John K. and Margaret (Fuqua) Rash. On both sides of the family he came of old Colonial Virginia stock.

The maternal grandfather, Thomas Fuqua, was of a Virginia family, who were among the pioneers in Kentucky, and he became a farmer and slave owner there. In 1833 he moved with his family to Indiana where he settled on a farm in Sugar Creek, Hancock county, and cleared 160 acres of wooded land. He added to this till he had 300 acres, all improved and with buildings that were unusually good for his day. His children were: William, who remained in Kentucky; John; Perry; Lawson; James; Richard; and Margaret, Mrs. John K. Rash, who was born in Bourbon county, Ky., Jan. 11, 1819. The first Mrs. Fuqua died after the family removed to Indiana, and Mr. Fuqua afterward married her sister, Mrs. Hopper, who was a widow with seven children. In 1865 he left his Indiana home and went to Missouri to spend his last years in the home of his son James, where he died aged ninety years. He was a member of the Christian Church.

In the paternal line the grandfather of John T. Rash was Thomas, a soldier in the war of 1812, and a Virginia pioneer in Bourbon county, Ky. Of a slave holding family he did not own any himself, but employed a few negroes to help in clearing and improving the large farm he acquired in Kentucky. He died there, leaving five children, Morris, William, John K., Susan and Nancy.

John K. Rash was born in Bourbon county, Feb. 22, 1813. After his marriage to Margaret Fuqua the young couple lived with her father, and when very soon after, in 1833, he moved to Indiana, they accompanied him. Mr. Rash also entered land in Hancock county, choosing eighty acres in the woods about two miles east of Fortville. He improved this and added to it until he was one of the large and well-to-do land owners of the section. When his active years were past, he retired to Fortville, bought property there and lived quietly till his death in May, 1901, at the age of eighty-nine. His wife had died at the age of seventy-six, after their removal to Fortville. Both were members of the Christian Church, which Mr. Rash had helped to found in Fortville, and in which he was an elder for many years. Their children were as follows: Elizabeth, who married Jacob Shirin, a private in an Indiana infantry regiment; Mary, who married George Bowman, of the 10th I. V. I.; John T.; William; Susan, who married David T. Winn, of the 12th I. V. I.; Lawson; Benjamin; Nancy and Alfred.

John T. Rash grew up in Hancock county in its pioneer days and received his education in the old school house first built in that region. When twenty-three years of age he enlisted July 19, 1862, for three years in Company G, 12th Ind. V. I., and served till he was honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., June 8, 1865, just before his term expired. He was never wounded, never in hospital, though ill in camp, and was a prisoner for only six days. With six companions he was well fed and cared for and released soon on parole. Except at the battle of Richmond, Ky., where he was detailed to drive a team, he was in all the campaigns and marches of his company, taking part in the battles of Missionary Ridge; Resaca; Big Shanty; New Hope Church; Atlanta, from July 2 to 28, when Gen. McPherson was killed the first day; Jonesboro; Bentonville; and Columbia. During the Atlanta campaign the Union troops were under for four months. Mr. Rash was in the great March to the Sea, went through the two Carolinas and was in Raleigh when the war closed. The regiment then hastened on to Washington, arriving so late that they had to march in the Grand Review with all their camp accoutrements hung to them.

Returning from the war, Mr. Rash worked on his father's farm near Fortville, till 1872, when he bought eighty acres adjoining and lived there till 1889. He then moved into Fortville, though retaining his farm, and made his home in that town, in a pleasant residence. He and his wife were members of the Christian Church, and Mr. Rash served for a period of eighteen years as elder. In politics a Democrat, he was for fifteen years assessor of Vernon township, discharging his duties with great ability. He was a member of Sol D. Kempton Post, G. A. R., and had been quartermaster. Mr. Rash was well known in his locality, and was regarded by every one with the highest respect.

Mr. Rash was twice married. On Jan. 13, 1861, he married Miss Verlinda Cook, who was born on a farm in Vernon township in 1837, the daughter of Jesse and Nancy Cook. Her father was of Virginia stock, but settled in Hancock county, in early days. He owned and cleared a farm there of eighty acres and made it his permanent home, where both he and his wife died, advanced in age. They had five children, William, Verlinda, Jane, Lurinda and Amanda. Mrs. Rash died April 27, 1867, leaving no offspring. On May 9, 1868, Mr. Rash married Sarah, daughter of Ephraim and Barbara (Hudson) Clark. She was born in Vernon township, Oct. 26, 1839. Four children were born to this union: (1) Jasper, Feb. 4, 1869, who died Oct. 8, 1872; (2) Walter G., July 14, 1871, deceased Aug. 24, 1872; (3) Arthur T., Oct. 26, 1873, residing on the Rash homestead, who married and has three children, Ray, Louie and Hiram; and (4) John T., July 10, 1876. The last named was educated at Danville, Ind., and in the Terre Haute Normal School, and is now a teacher in the Fortville public schools; he married Miss Robie Crosley.

The Clark family to which Mrs. Rash belongs, occupied a farm adjoining the Rash property. Her paternal grandfather, Ephraim Clark, Sr., represented an old Virginia family and settled in Kentucky in an early day. From there he moved to Wayne county, Ind., as a pioneer and cleared up a farm of some 400 acres. There he died at the age of seventy-five. His son Ephraim, by his wife Sarah, was born after the removal to Indiana. He became a farmer in Hancock county, where he settled in 1833. He married Miss Barbara Hudson, and they had a large family, Sarah, Elizabeth, Lavina, Henderson, Sanford, Monroe, Benjamin, Joseph, Martha, John and Lee. Mr. Clark was a Democrat in his political views. He died Nov. 15, 1867, aged about fifty-four years, and his wife passed away Sept. 28, 1873.

ROGER PARRY has the distinction of being Grand Tyler of the Grand Lodge of Free & Accepted Masons in the State of Indiana. A good, square, honest Welsh face makes a pleasing picture, even though the bloom of youth has vanished and been replaced by the strong lines of manhood and the whitening crown which bespeaks the lapse of years. Very many of our readers will readily recognize the written portraiture, for Mr. Parry has kindly met them at the door of the Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter, Grand Council and Grand Commandery of Indiana since 1889, and it is hoped he may be there for many years to come.

Roger Parry was born Dec. 21, 1829, near Holywell, Flintshire, Wales, being the seventh son of Thomas and Ann (Mather) Parry, the former of whom was a son of John Parry, a farmer, while the latter was a daughter of John Mather, a paper-maker by vocation. The children of Thomas and Ann Parry were as follows: Jane, who died at the age of eighteen years; John, a blacksmith, now deceased; Mary, the wife of J. Davis; Thomas, who was for many years a blacksmith, but who is now engaged in farming; Ann, the wife of J. Edwards; Edward, who was a blacksmith, who died in America; Roger; Richard, who is a blacksmith, still residing in Wales; Robert, who is there engaged in farming and in the lumber business; and William, a blacksmith by trade and now a sergeant on the police force. Thomas Parry, the father, like many other members of the family in various generations, was a paper-maker by vocation, and was a man honored for his sterling character, having been a consistent member of the Established Church of England, while his wife held membership in the Wesleyan Church. Both passed their entire lives in their native land.

Roger Parry enjoyed the privileges of the common schools until he had attained the age of thirteen years, when he became an apprentice to his brother to learn the blacksmith trade, being thus engaged for a period of five years, at the expiration of which he went to the city of Liverpool, where he was employed at his trade for four years, after which, in the spring of 1849, he emigrated to America. After a tempestuous voyage of seven weeks he landed in New Orleans, on the 8th of April. He thence came up the Mississippi river to Madison, Ind., reaching his destination on the first day of May. There he was engaged in the work of his trade until September, 1852, when he removed to Indianapolis, where he shortly afterward entered the employ of the Indianapolis & Terre Haute Railroad, being the first blacksmith engaged in the service of this company in Indianapolis. As work increased, other blacksmiths were employed and the shops were enlarged, and Mr. Parry, as a skilled and faithful artisan, was naturally promoted to the position of foreman of the shops and also of repairs and tracks, while he also served as car inspector. He was also placed in charge of all wrecks that might occur between Indianapolis and Greencastle. This very responsible position he held continuously for forty-four years, at the expiration of which, in 1896, he voluntarily resigned the place and retired from the laborious work he had so long and faithfully performed.

Mr. Parry's service with this corporation, more generally known as the Vandalia line, presents a most remarkable record. During the long period of forty-four years he never had a leave of absence for more than three days at one time, and never took more than three days off for pleasure. By his frugality he was enabled to place money at interest from time to time, and by this means he has made ample provision for his remaining years, even if far prolonged.

While residing in Madison, Ind., Mr. Parry was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Tibbs, an English lady who came to that place in 1849, and two children were born to them, a son who died in infancy, and a daughter, who is his present housekeeper. Mrs. Parry died in May, 1875, and was lovingly laid to rest by Queen Esther Chapter, No. 3, O. E. S., of which she was a valued member.

Mr. Parry was made a Mason in Marion Lodge, No. 35, in Indianapolis, being initiated on April 27, 1859; passed May 21, and raised June 18. After serving as senior deacon and senior warden he was elected worshipful master in 1863, and by successive re-elections was continued in this office until 1867, while after an interval of a score of years he was again elected to the same office in this lodge, serving as worshipful master for the years 1886, 1887 and 1889, while the records of the lodge show that during his tenure of this honorable position he presided at the initiation of eighty-nine candidates. He was made a Royal Arch Mason in Indianapolis Chapter, No. 5, receiving all the capilar degrees during the months of August and September, 1859. Passing several chairs, he became high priest of the chapter on Dec. 5, 1867, and was continued in the office for three years. He has since been nine times elected to preside over the chapter, making a total of twelve years' service as high priest, and the records credit him with having made seventy-six Royal Arch Masons. He received the order of high priesthood in 1868. On Dec. 12, 1859, he received the degrees of Royal and Select Master, in Indianapolis Council, No. 2, and in 1869 he was first elected illustrious master, in which office, by subsequent elections, he has served for a total of twelve years, while the records show that he has made seventy-two Royal and Select Masters. On April 16, 1864, Mr. Parry was knighted in Raper Commandery, No. 1, of which he became eminent commander in 1868, serving for four years, during which time he created thirty-nine Sir Knights. He was advanced to the thirty-second degree May 30, 1867. He succeeded Brother William M. Balck, deceased, as Grand Tyler of the Grand Lodge, Grand Guard of the Grand Chapter, Grand Council and Grand Commandery, in 1889, and has stood faithfully at the doors of these grand bodies since that time to the present, and it is certain that while he lives and still desires to remain at these posts there will be no change. Mr. Parry is a correct ritualist in all bodies of the York Rite, and renders his work in an impressive manner, his earnestness and sincerity, prompted by his great love for Masonry, never failing to make a proper impression on candidates. His faithful attendance at meetings and his deep interest in the success of all the bodies to which he belongs, make him a most useful member, and it is not strange that he has so often been placed in the East in the different Masonic bodies. His whole life, as a citizen and as a Mason, presents such an instance of strict and conscientious observance of duty as is rarely to be noted in the history of an individual.

WILLIAM N. SWAIN. Among the well known and highly respected citizens of Muncie, Ind., may be mentioned Mr. William N. Swain, former sheriff of Delaware county, who was born Aug. 22, 1844, on a farm near Cincinnati, Ohio, son of Lemuel and Elizabeth (Hufford) Swain.

Lemuel Swain was born in Lynchburg, Va., and descended from old English stock. He became a pork merchant in Nashville, Tenn., and removed to Camden, Ohio, at an early day to take charge of a pork packing establishment. His first wife was Nancy Watts, who, tradition says, was of the same family as the noted English hymn writer. The children of the first marriage were:

Jerusha R.; Eliza; Sarah M., who married Simon Finchbaugh; and Rev. John L., a presiding elder of the M. E. Church at Germantown, Ohio. Mr. Swain was married (second) to Elizabeth Hufford, and to them were born: William N.; Lurton D.; Isaac and Edmund Watts. Mr. Swain died in West Covington, Ky., and his second wife in Camden, Ohio, in the faith of the Christian Church.

William N. Swain attended school but five months. His mother having died when he was five years old, he went to live with a farmer named Bailey, near Eaton, Ohio, with whom he continued for eleven years. He enlisted near Eaton, Sept. 10, 1861, as a drummer boy of Company E, 22nd O. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged by reason of surgeon's certificate of disability, at Cairo, in December, 1863. His services were in the Army of the West, at Benton Barracks, his enlistment having really been in Col. Thomas Morton's Western Sharpshooters. He was sent from Cincinnati to St. Louis, and at Benton barracks seven companies of Ohio troops were mustered into the 13th Missouri, under Col. Crafts J. Wright, of Cincinnati. They had not been assigned to any special regiment, and Colonel Morton was sick with typhoid fever. Mr. Swain found himself mustered in as a drummer boy in Company E, 13th Mo. V. I., and with this regiment he served until the fall of 1861. In the spring of 1862, after Shiloh, his company was consolidated with the 22nd Ohio, into the 70th Ohio, the regiment being given the name of the 22nd Ohio. Mr. Swain served as a drummer for less than one year, after which he was made a private and shouldered a musket at the battle of Fort Henry, Tenn., through all of the engagements around Fort Donelson where he was three days under fire. His regiment then went down the Mississippi and was at Nashville, Tenn., then coming back to Clarksville, Tenn., where Mr. Swain did provost duty. The regiment next went to Pittsburg Landing, arriving one week before the famous battle there. They went into this battle between four and five o'clock Sunday morning, and the Confederates retreated between eleven and twelve o'clock Monday forenoon, his regiment being a little to the center of the right wing, and his company losing seven men. He was with his regiment in taking possession of Corinth after the retreat of the Confederates, and there his company remained until Sept. 1st, taking part in the battle at that place. Becoming disabled, Mr. Swain was in the hospital at Milan City, Ill., for about six months, and about three months at Corinth, where he was honorably discharged. He was very sick, being delirious most of the time, and at one time it was feared that his life could not be saved.

After the war, in which he had served so gallantly, Mr. Swain returned to Ohio and engaged in farm work for one summer, some years being spent in Eaton in a flax mill, part of the time as foreman and part as stationary engineer. He was also baggage master at Eaton for the Panhandle railroad, later engaging with J. L. Quinn & Company, for whom, for eleven years, he was salesman of wholesale tobacco, grain, farm implements and heavy machinery. Mr. Swain believes that he visited every farm in Preble county. He then became superintendent of the Preble County Infirmary for five years, then went to Richmond, where he was engaged in the hotel business for one year, spent a short time at Covington, Ky., and in 1882 came to Muncie and engaged in the hotel business, as a clerk in the "Tremont House" for about three months. He then spent fourteen years with the "Kirby House," after which he became manager of the Delaware County Jail for three years, when he became a candidate for sheriff on the Republican ticket but was defeated at the primaries. He then engaged in a general business, and was appointed deputy under Sheriff Thomas W. Starr, serving in that position nearly four years, after which he was appointed sheriff for four months to fill out an unexpired term. In 1899 Mr. Swain was elected sheriff, at the end of his first term succeeding himself in that office, serving faithfully and to the satisfaction of all. He was an able, just official, and public-spirited in and out of office or cut has done his share to build up and make better conditions in Muncie, as well as throughout the county.

Formerly Mr. Swain was a member of the G. A. R. Post of Portland, Ind., and he now belongs to Williams Post, Muncie. He is fraternally connected with the Knights of Honor; the I. O. O. F., in which he has passed the chairs, and has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State; the Red Men No. 145, Muncie, which he has represented at the Grand Lodge, also holding the office of Sachem; and is also connected with the Masonic fraternity as a Knight Templar, at Muncie.

Mr. Swain was married (first) to Ellen Vest, by whom he had one son, Charles W., of Anderson. His second marriage was to Mrs. Lyde (Daughtertry) Keeney.

WILLIAM HENRY OVERBEY, who is carrying on agricultural operations on his sixty-acre tract at Fishers Switch, Hamilton county, is an esteemed resident of that locality and a survivor of the great Civil war. He was born in Delaware township, Hamilton county, Feb. 26, 1840, son of William H. and Rhoda C. (Williams) Overbey, and grandson of Henry Overbey, who, says tradition, was captured by the Indians and scalped, but escaped after being left for dead.

William Harrison Overbey was born near Maysville, Ky., and came as a young man to Indiana with his brothers, James and Beverly, entering land in Delaware township, Hamilton county, in 1834 the deed being signed by Andrew Jackson, as is also one bearing the date 1835. In addition to this tract, which consisted of eighty acres, he purchased land until he owned in all 195 acres, which originally was covered with heavy timber. Mr. Overbey built a small log cabin, and shortly thereafter married in Delaware township, Rhoda C. Williams, born in Bracken county, Ky., daughter of Abraham and Susan (West) Williams. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Overbey located on the farm, where he built a good frame residence, and here he was just beginning to enjoy the fruits of his hard labor, when in January, 1847, his death occurred, when in his thirty-sixth year. His wife died May 6, 1877, in the faith of the Baptist Church, of which he was also a member, and their children were: William Henry, John P. and Susan Mary.

William Henry Overbey was reared among the pioneers, and his education was secured in the early log schoolhouses of his native locality. He was employed in work on his father's farm at the time of his enlistment, Sept. 12, 1862, at Indianapolis, Ind., as a private of Company I, 26th Ind. V. I., Capt. Henry H. Wheatley, for three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged at Jackson, Miss., Sept. 6, 1865, his services having been in Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas. He was a participant in the battles of Prairie Grove, Ark., Dec. 7, 1862, and several skirmishes in Kentucky; the sieges of Vicksburg, Miss., and Mobile, Ala.; and other skirmishes too numerous to mention. He was wounded in the calf of the leg at Prairie Grove, and was confined to the hospital for five months at Fayetteville, Ark., and Springfield, Mo. and convalescent in the hospital at New Orleans. On partial recovery he rejoined his regiment, although very lame. Always faithful and cheerful, Mr. Overbey was an excellent soldier, and with the exception of the time that he was in the hospital was with his regiment in every engagement, skirmish, march or foraging expedition.

After the war Mr. Overbey returned to Indiana, and, locating on the home farm built a hewed log cabin. On Nov. 19, 1867, in Delaware township, he was married to Annie Price, born in Bracken county, Ky., Oct. 19, 1844, daughter of James K. and Elizabeth (Baldwin) Price. James K. Price was born in Maryland, near Chesapeake Bay, Jan. 30, 1802, son of William and Jemima (Williams) Price. James K. Price operated a farm in Kentucky, about forty miles from Cincinnati, Ohio, and was also a river man, making frequent trips in his boat to New Orleans. In 1854 he removed with his family to Marion county, and later to Hamilton county, Ind., where he died in October, 1875, his wife passing away in September, 1873. Their children were: Margaret, Jeremiah, Francis, Samuel, Zeralda, Eliza and Annie, all born and reared in Bracken county, Kentucky.

Mr. Overbey, after marriage, settled on the farm which his father had cleared from the timber, and there he resided until 1894, when he located on his present sixty-acre farm, although he still owns twenty-four acres of the old homestead. He is a member of the G. A. R. at Fisher's Switch, and a Republican in politics. He and his wife are members of the Friends Church, of which he is a trustee. Mr. and Mrs. Overbey have had children as follows: (1) James married Belle Gresh, daughter of Henry Gresh, postmaster and merchant at Broad Ripple, and they have had children: Bernice, Imo, Ruth, Dorothy, Denzel and James. (2) Zerelda married Charles Roberts, an iron moulder of Madison county, and had five children: Grace, Hugh and Herbert (twins), Virgil and Charlotte. (3) Francis Eugene married Pearl Eskew, daughter of Alexandria Eskew, a farmer of Marion county, and has children: Neva, Francis and Lillian. (4) Elizabeth Maude married John W. Tate, son of Alexandria Tate, a farmer of Marion county, and has three children: Henry E., Ferold W. and Clifford C. (5) Beatrix A. C. married Dr. Vinton G. Black, son of George H. Black, a farmer of Hamilton county, and has two children, Victor and Junius O. (6) Carl H., a veteran of the Spanish-American war, is a carpenter and still resides at home unmarried.

WILLIAM H. TRAUB, residing at his attractive home at No. 1935 West Vermont street, Indianapolis, is a man of large enterprises, who has achieved success in two special fields of labor—small gardening and the real estate business.

Mr. Traub comes of sturdy German stock. His paternal grandparents were hard working, honest people, who for the most part passed their lives in Germany. Of their children, five came to this country: Israel; Conrad; Jacob, who is mentioned below; Molly, who married a Mr. Webber and resides on Noble street, Indianapolis; and Margaret, who married the Rev. Settlemier.

Jacob Traub, father of William H., was born in Wurtemberg, Germany. He early acquired habits of industry and self-reliance of much value to him in later years. A love of freedom and a desire to improve his prospects in life decided him as a young man to come to America. After a tedious and perilous ocean voyage lasting seventy-one days on board a sailing vessel, he landed in Philadelphia. A moneyless stranger, but possessed of energy and determination, he soon secured work as a shoemaker, and, giving good satisfaction, retained his position for a long time. Cheap living and steady work enabled him to save money, and after some years he made a visit to his native land. After his return to Philadelphia he embarked in the boot and shoe business upon a larger scale than ever, and deriving from it a good income continued it for some time. About this period Mr. Traub married Frederika Stroble, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany. She had a brother and a sister who came to this country: John, died leaving two children; Mary, who never married, made her home with her sister, Mrs. Traub (she is now deceased). Mrs. Traub died in January, 1901, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. Eight children, seven of whom are now living, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Traub: John, who is now engaged in farming; William H., who is mentioned below; Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Phipps (both he and she are now deceased); Carrie, who married a Mr. Workman; George, who is a prominent druggist in Indianapolis; Alfred; Maggie, who married Dan Fatoot; and Charles, also a druggist in Indianapolis.

The rapid growth of the Middle West decided Mr. Traub soon after marriage to seek that region, and, moving to Louisville, Ky., he there remained for a short period. Later, however, finding a better business opening in Charlestown, Ind., he moved to that place and began the manufacture of boots and shoes. Giving employment to a large number of working people, he carried on a flourishing business, and turned out a highly satisfactory grade of goods. In addition to this branch of business he also opened a large store in the place where he retailed boots and shoes for many years, becoming in time one of the wealthy citizens of the place. While still engaged in business in Charlestown, foreseeing the growth of a large city at Indianapolis, he purchased about thirty-five acres of partly improved land there on what is now West Washington street, east of the Asylum, and in 1847 he moved to that city. After a short residence in the place, while making his log cabin habitable, he settled upon his land and there engaged in gardening, at which he proved remarkably successful. Gradually he cut off the heavier timber, which encumbered part of the tract—marketing it for stove wood—and in time opened all his land to his industry. A man of energy, he found a good market for his products in the eastern cities, and yearly sent large quantities of vegetables there, upon which he made good profits. In time he sold a portion of his land to his son William, and later the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railroad claimed the right of way there. The rest has since been laid out in streets and city lots, and much of it is now occupied by pleasant residences. In addition to gardening Mr. Traub worked for some time at his trade evenings, making shoes for the early settlers of Indianapolis. As fast as he made money he improved his land, and a splendid two-story brick residence, surrounded by well trimmed fruit and shade trees, stands as a monument to his industry. He became in time one of the wealthy citizens of the place. His death occurred in June, 1881, when in his seventy-second year.

Mr. Traub was a strong man physically and intellectually, and one by nature well fitted for large achievements. Public spirited, he was especially active in everything pertaining to the city's welfare, and was one of the prime movers in securing the erection of the iron bridge across the White River, collecting subscriptions to the amount of ten thousand dollars for the purpose. As an acknowledgment of his services he was given the honor of being the first person to drive across the bridge after its completion. In religious work he had also been active, and as a substantial member of the Methodist Episcopal Church had erected two churches for that denomination on Prospect street. Straightforward, honest and convincing, he exerted a strong influence for good wherever he was known. He was a man of brilliant intellect, fertile in resources, and when on his first trip to America, while the crew were nearly famishing for water, he devised a means of catching rain water in sails, much to the gratification and relief of his friends. The same practical common sense came to his aid in many another hard place in life, and was one of the strong promoters of his rare success in life.

William H. Traub was born at Charlestown, Clark county, Ind., July 2, 1843, and was only about four years old when his parents moved to Indianapolis. In the public schools of that locality he procured a good common school education, and while still a boy began assisting his father at gardening. A taste for the work and inherent ability in that line led him to continue on the home place until he was twenty-two years old, and during the last year of his stay there he received regular man's wages. About this period he married Joanna Hardin, who was born on her father's farm in Marion county, Ind., Aug. 17, 1847, and of this union there have been two children: Henrietta, who married H. L. Shafer, of Pittsburg, a salesman for Kingan & Co.; and Emma F., who married J. Brewer, and resides in Indianapolis.

After marriage Mr. Traub settled upon a tract of land near the family homestead and entered into partnership with his father in the gardening business, shipping products of all kinds to eastern markets. Encouraged by results he later rented a large garden and fruit farm near by, where, branching out extensively in his industry, he continued for five years. Having in the meantime purchased ten acres of his father's garden farm, at the end of this period he returned to the place near the old homestead, and again engaged in gardening, carrying on both his ten-acre tract and an adjoining garden farm, which he rented of Dr. Alton. Energetic and successful in pushing his affairs, he never lacked for a market for his goods, and yearly derived a large income from his business. As fast as he has made money he has improved his land, and has invested his savings to good advantage. In 1876 he erected upon his land an attractive two-story residence, where he has since made his home. He has beautified his grounds with fruit trees, ornamental shrubs and rare plants, and now has one of the pleasantest places in the vicinity. About 1884 he began turning his attention to the real estate business, plating his old garden, which is now known as the W. H. Traub Addition. Here he at once erected attractive residences, which he has long rented to good advantage. Making well out of his business he has continued it steadily, and in addition to renting houses he has engaged in buying and selling lots, houses, etc. A wise financier and a careful manager, he is one of the prosperous citizens of Indianapolis, owning twenty-two houses and two business blocks—the latter being located on the east side of the river—all of which he rents to good advantage.

Mr. Traub is essentially a business man, and one who commands the confidence of all. During the Civil war he received a government appointment to ship live stock from Louisville, Ky., to southern points, a business which he conducted very satisfactorily. He is a man of broad views, well informed upon all topics. In politics he affiliated with the Democrats until the Benjamin Harrison campaign, since which time he has cast his vote with the Republicans. He is interested in all good works, and his wife is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Isaac Hardin, grandfather of Mrs. Traub, passed his early life in New Jersey. At an early date, impressed with the excellent agricultural resources of the Middle West, he came to Marion county, Ind., and took up large tracts of land, which he improved and made into an excellent farm for himself. He passed his last days in that section and died there. By his marriage there were seven children: James T., mentioned below; Martha, who married Peter Stout; Americus, who married John Swofford; Elliott, who is now deceased; Letha, who married M. Miller; Cannon, who has never married and resides at Greenfield; and Sarah, who married a Mr. Faucett. The father of these was a typical pioneer and endured all the hardships which fall to the lot of settlers in a new region. He prospered and became one of the solid men of the county.

James T. Hardin, father of Mrs. Traub, was born in Marion county, and from boyhood battled with pioneer life. In early life he came into possession of a large tract of land, where, upon reaching manhood, he settled and made a home for himself. Later he sold this place and purchased a more desirable farm near the city of Indianapolis. This he improved and added to its area until he in time became possessed of one of the largest and most valuable farms in his locality. He made a specialty of stock raising, and being gifted in applying successfully the latest scientific methods to his farming, won a leading place among agriculturalists. He died on his farm in 1892. He married Frances Stout, whose people were among the early settlers of Marion county, and who were prominent in their day. She has, since the death of her first husband, married William Gladden, and they now reside in California. To Mr. and Mrs. Hardin were born ten children: Joanna, who is mentioned above; Monroe, deceased; George, a prominent agriculturist of Marion county; Charles, who follows farming in Hendricks county; Laura, who died unmarried; Indiana, who married William Carter; Cora, the wife of Alonzo Dunn; Ella, who married A. Smith; Joseph; and Lewis. Mr. Hardin was a man of influence in his community and as a Democrat was active in local politics. He and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

REV. WILLIAM JOHN HENRY BOETCKER, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, at present devoting himself to educational work among working men at Shelbyville, Ind., was born in Altona (Elbe), Germany, July 17, 1873, son of William M. E. and Wilhelmine (Christlieb) Boetcker. His education was acquired in the German Gymnasium, Royal Christianeum, in Altona; the Theological Seminary, Brecklum, Germany; the Chicago Theological Seminary; the Theological Seminary at Bloomfield, N. J.; and he took a post-graduate course at the New York University. During his student days in Germany he was supported by Count Waldersee, who also supplied him with the funds necessary to get to this country. The Rev. Mr. Boetcker has shown himself worthy the profession he adopted, and his efforts in the Master's cause have brought forth good fruit.

He was married, Nov. 6, 1899, to Anna Emilie Albrecht, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Albrecht, and three children have blessed this union, namely: Lydia Wilhelmine Helene, Marie Margaretha Sophia and Wilhelmine Margaretha.

Mr. Boetcker has wielded his pen to advantage, and is the author of several books. His first work, "Raetselshatz" (German), a book of 500 pages, was published when he was but sixteen years old. He has also published a "Sermon and Text Register," and recently he has gotten out numerous little books, under the title "Mental Antidote," written under the nom de plume "T. I. A. Nutshell," taken from the motto "Truth in a Nutshell." He is a member of the Royal Arcanum, K. O. T. M., T. B. H. and N. U.

JESSE MARTIN, pharmacist and proprietor of a drug business in Paragon, Ind., comes of old pioneer stock of the State. He was born Oct. 29, 1855, in Tippecanoe county, Ind., near Romney, son of Mitchell and Abby (Burroughs) Martin, natives of Ohio, who were the parents of eleven children, three sons and eight daughters. Of these eleven children, seven are still living, as follows: Jarvis, a resident of White county, Ind., near Brookston; Kate, wife of W. P. Howerton, of Judyville, Ind.; Hannah, wife of Dr. Figg, of Spencer, Ind.; Sarah, wife of Jerry Redding, of Brookston, Ind.; Jesse; Hattie, wife of Whitcomb Talbott, of near Buffalo, Ind.; and Clara, wife of Thomas Hedrick, of Monticello, Indiana.

Mitchell Martin was an early pioneer from Ohio to Tippecanoe county, Ind., and lived there many years engaged in farming, and then moved to White county, where he purchased 300 acres of land, near Brookston, and there he died in 1879, aged sixty-three years. His wife, Abby Burroughs, survived until Dec. 23, 1901, when she, too, passed away at the age of seventy-eight years. They were devout members of the Christian Church. Mrs. Martin was a daughter of Job Burroughs, a native of Ohio and an early settler in Tippecanoe county, Ind., where, at death, he left a numerous family.

Jesse Martin was reared in White county, Ind., from the age of eight years, and attended the district and high schools at Brooks-ton, where, at the age of twenty-three, he began clerking in a drug store, and has been interested in the same line ever since. In January, 1881, he embarked in the business for himself, at Brookston, where he continued for three years, and then moved to Spencer, and there was in the employ of Dr. Wiles for eight months, returning then for the two following years to operate the home farm for his mother. Later, after clerking for a time for Dr. Figg in Spencer, he bought a store at Eminence, Ind., and remained there for ten years. In March, 1901, he came to Paragon and erected a residence and a store building, and established himself in the drug business.

On Feb. 24, 1879, Mr. Martin was united in marriage with Miss Viola J. Warren, daughter of Calvin Wilson and Jerusha (Littell) Warren. They both are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Martin belongs to Morgan Lodge, No. 431, Knights of Pythias, while in politics he is identified with the Republican party.

The family of Mrs. Martin, in both paternal and maternal lines, belongs to the early pioneers of the State. Her paternal grandfather was Zachariah Langston Warren, a native of Kentucky, who came as a pioneer to Indiana and conducted a dry-goods store at Orleans. Later, with his second wife, he removed to Missouri, where he died at a very great age. By his first marriage he had seven sons and one daughter, and by his second one daughter, all now deceased. Calvin Wilson Warren, the father, was born in Kentucky and came at an early day to Indiana, settling in Morgan county. The father died in 1861, aged twenty-nine years. One of his sisters became the wife of Alfred Parrish, and they had three children who are residents of Orleans, Ind. The mother of Mrs. Martin, Jerusha Littell, was born near Gosport, Ind., and still survives and resides at Paragon. She married (second) Christopher Smith, a native of England, who died in 1890, in Clark county. Of the three children of her first marriage, Mrs. Martin is the only survivor. The father of Mrs. Smith was Abraham Littell, son of Absalom Littell, who was born in Pennsylvania and was a pioneer in Clark county, Ind., where he died in old age. Abraham Littell had two brothers, Absalom and Thompson, who were pioneer preachers in the Christian Church, in Indiana. Abraham Littell, the grandfather of Mrs. Martin, was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Indiana with his parents and six other children. Later he moved into Owen county where he carried on farming and blacksmithing, and also ran a mill on Indian Creek, where he sawed lumber and floated it down to New Orleans on flat boats. He died in Morgan county in 1862, aged seventy-five years. His wife, Elizabeth Buskirk, was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Michael and Jerusha (Littell) Buskirk, and her brother John was a Revolutionary War soldier. Mrs. Smith was the last survivor of eleven children, and she died about four years ago.

IRWIN HIBBS, M. D. An experienced and skilled physician and surgeon, of Martinsville, Ind., is Dr. Irwin Hibbs, whose professional life covers a period of more than fifty eventful years. The efforts of the greater part of this time have been devoted to the State of Indiana, in which he has gained eminence and accumulated ample means.

Dr. Hibbs comes of Scotch-English ancestry. Joseph Hibbs, his paternal grandfather, came to America from Scotland, and settled in Virginia, where he died in advanced years, leaving a family of five sons and two daughters. The maternal grandfather, Thomas Linthacum, was a native of Maryland, of English descent, a farmer by occupation, and a soldier in the Revolutionary War. His death occurred in the State of Kentucky, when he was aged ninety-seven years, and the father of a large family.

Dr. Hibbs was born in Nelson county, Ky., July 29, 1828, son of William and Ann (Linthacum) Hibbs, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, and a farmer by occupation during his earlier years, but at the time of his death, in August, 1830, at the age of forty-two years, he was operating a saw-mill at Bardstown, Ky. His first marriage resulted in the birth of two sons and two daughters. His second marriage was to Ann Linthacum, and the children of this union were: Jeanette, widow of Thomas Tucker, of Nineveh township, Johnson county, Ind.; and Dr. Irwin.

Mrs. Ann (Linthacum) Hibbs survived her first husband many years. Later she married George Miller, who, like Mr. Hibbs, had been a soldier in the War of 1812. To this union five children were born as follows: James, of Kirksville, Mo.; William, of Missouri near the Iowa line; Elizabeth, the widow of Ambrose Hibbs; and two deceased. In her early youth Dr. Hibbs' mother was of frail constitution, her friends fearing an early death from tuberculosis, but she lived to see almost all of her girlhood companions pass away, and if a terrible accident had not brought about her death, in all probability she would have rounded out the century. She was one of the victims of the terrible tornado and cyclone which devastated Kirksville, Mo., in April, 1897. She was at that time within two days of ninety-seven years. Both she and husband had been consistent members of the Baptist Church, but after her second marriage she identified herself with the Christian Church, in which faith she died.

Dr. Irwin Hibbs was reared in Nineveh township from the age of five years, and worked through boyhood on the farm, receiving the schooling afforded at the time in the local subscription schools, and attended the graded school at Nineveh, Ind. His early inclinations toward the science of medicine led to the beginning of the study as soon as he reached his eighteenth year, and he was one of the graduates of the Kentucky Medical School in Louisville, in 1849. Soon after, Dr. Hibbs settled for practice at Edinburg, Ind., where he continued three years, and then moved to Nashville, Ind., and removed from there, April 1, 1860, to Greenwood, Ind., finding there a satisfactory practice for the succeeding six years. In February, 1866, he located at Decatur, Ill., but seven years later, in March, 1873, he returned to his old friends and patients at Edinburg. Since September, 1900, he has been one of the valued and highly esteemed practitioners and citizens of Martinsville.

On Jan. 1, 1854, Dr. Hibbs was married to Miss Melvina Hart, daughter of Dr. John R. and Elizabeth (McDonald) Hart, the former of whom was born in Virginia, son of Patrick Hart, a native of Ireland, who came to the American Colonies in 1774, while the latter was a native of Ohio, and she was of pioneer Methodist parentage, who migrated from Maryland, in the early Colonial days. Dr. and Mrs. Hart had a family of five sons and three daughters, the survivors being, Mrs. Dr. Hibbs; and Ann, wife of Henry S. Runyan, of Indianapolis. The six children born to Dr. Hibbs and wife were: John W., who resides in Indianapolis, married Elizabeth Anna Wengerter, and they have had children, Merlin Walter, Harry A. (deceased), Lillie L. and

J. Irwin; Elizabeth Ann died at the age of six years; James I., for fourteen years a minister in the Methodist Church, has since practiced medicine at Indianapolis, Ind.; Vallandigham died at the age of three years; Clarence E., a graduate of De Pauw University, resides at Pomona, Cal., where he is a mail carrier, and he married Estella Hills, of Pomona, and has one child, Truman; Elmer E., born Nov. 2, 1871, residing at Danville, Ill., married Alice Long, of Danville, and has two children, Russell L. and Leo.

Since the age of thirteen years, Dr. Hibbs has been a member of the Christian Church, while Mrs. Hibbs belongs to the Roberts Park M. E. Church of Indianapolis. In politics he has been a life-long Democrat. Dr. Hibbs is connected with the Masonic order and is one of the charter members of Nineveh Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and a much valued member of both the Johnson County and Indiana State Medical Societies.

Despite his seventy-nine years, Dr. Hibbs is still vigorous of mind and body. During the early years of his practice, he saw hard service, hastening to the call of pain and sickness, in all kinds of weather, over hills and through valleys where the highways were often dangerous, sometimes having to almost make a road for himself. In those early times no profession was so wearing as that of the physician, while no sight was more welcome to the lonely farmhouses and woodland cottages than was the "sulky" of the good doctor, whose cheery words and deft hands did as much to cure as his pills and potions. Dr. Hibbs has many pleasant recollections of his past, and in advanced years can feel that he has borne a very useful part in the great economy of life, faithfully following his noble profession. In Martinsville he still continues in practice, loath to turn aside those who seek his aid, and they are many, his name being a prominent one in the profession.

WILLIAM J. KNOX, a most highly esteemed citizen of Martinsville, Ind., where he has made his home since 1899, was born Feb. 23, 1832, in Clinton county, Ohio, son of Isaac and Katherine (Brunnemer) Knox, to whom a family of seven children was born, the five still surviving being: William J.; Elisha C., of Johnson county, Ind.; Sophronia, widow of George Bloom, of Greenwood, Ind.; Rebecca C., wife of Henry Greenwood, of Morgan county; and Sarah D., wife of Jasper Kidwell, of Morgan county.

Elisha Knox, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia, of Scotch ancestry, born Oct. 27, 1779. He was a farmer and a Methodist preacher, one of that band of faithful Christian workers who contributed so largely to the betterment of the early settlers. On June 3, 1801, he married Agnes Parker, and they reared a large family, one daughter, Comfort D., surviving until Sept. 9, 1892, when she died at Jonesboro, Ind. Another daughter still survives, Mary W., the wife of Robert Wiley, of Jonesboro, who is in her eighty-fourth year. The great-grandfather of William J. Knox, also named Elisha Knox, was a native of Virginia, and died in advanced age, Aug. 6, 1828.

On the maternal side, the ancestry came from Germany, although Conrad Brunnemer, the grandfather, was born in Virginia. He was a son of Anthony, who was a son of Peter, who was born in Baden, Germany. Conrad Brunnemer took part in the War of 1812, and later came west and settled in White River township, Johnson county, Ind., where he entered land from the government, and died at an old age. He married (first) a Miss Dressler, and they had two children born to them. His second marriage was to a Miss Hartman, and they had two sons and four daughters. One of the latter, Mrs. Christina Persinger, lived to be ninety-two years of age.

Isaac Knox, father of William J., came to Indiana in the fall of 1832, and settled in Johnson county, where he entered government land and lived for seven years. One winter was spent back in Virginia, but in the spring succeeding, Mr. Knox returned to Indiana, settling in Morgan county, in Harrison township, his new home being just across the line from his former one in Johnson county. This farm Mr. Knox improved and lived upon until 1862, when he removed to Clay township, near Brooklyn, buying there a small farm of forty acres, and here he died in 1870, aged sixty-six years. Mr. Knox was a man of exemplary character, and for twenty-five years was a class leader in the Methodist Church. His widow survived him many years, dying at the age of eighty. She had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church since girlhood.

William J. Knox was reared in both Johnson and Morgan counties and, although called upon to do much hard work on the farm, he had the advantages of a good home and the counsels of a pious father and mother. In those days, as now, industry was a necessary adjunct to success, and until he married, he gave his assistance to his father in clearing up the pioneer farm. His education was the best that could be secured in the local subscription schools. Until the outbreak of the Rebellion, he continued to farm, but when the call came for defenders of his country, Mr. Knox was one of the early volunteers in 1861. He enrolled his name in Company C, 33d Ind. V. I., Capt. Charles Day, commanding, entering as a private and after a service of three years, returning home a sergeant. Sergeant Knox met with many of the hardships of war during his term. At the battle of London, Ky., he was wounded in the hip, and while on his way returning to his regiment, after the expiration of his furlough, he was captured with a number of his comrades, by the advance guard of 2,500 of Gen. Kirby Smith's men. With the others he was paroled and sent home, remaining until he was exchanged, when he immediately rejoined his regiment, at Danville, Ky. Later he was recaptured, at Thompson's Station, and was then incarcerated for thirty days in Libby Prison. His exchange took place at City Point, Va. Sergeant Knox took part in many of the leading battles of the Civil War, and on all occasions proved himself a brave and gallant soldier. His list of battles includes Kingston, Dallas Woods, New Hope Church, Culp's Farm, Peach Tree Creek, the siege of Atlanta, and he was mustered out in the latter city. This list does not include a great number of smaller engagements.

After the war, Mr. Knox returned to farming and later engaged in teaching music and selling organs and pianos. In 1873 he moved to Indianapolis and lived in that city for ten years, and then bought a farm of 150 acres near Brooklyn, which he still owns and upon which he lived until 1899, with the exception of two years spent in Bloomington, where he resided in order to give his daughters educational advantages. Since 1899 the family has resided in Martinsville, where Mr. Knox bought a home and made of it a beautiful modern residence.

On June 8, 1854, Mr. Knox was married to Miss Martha M. Bromwell, and nine children have been born to this union, namely: Melville C., who lives in Indianapolis, married Clara Johnson, and they have children, Ray and Irene; Elzora L. married J. M. Julian, of Indianapolis, and has one son, James; Wilbur N. died aged three years, ten months; Addie M. died aged seven months; Ada Belle married John F. Richardson of Martinsville, and they have children, William Knox and Atwood Richardson; Miss Arda S. is a graduate of the State University at Bloomington, and is now principal of the Bedford high school; Rosa K. married Carl Minton, an attorney at Martinsville, and they have one son, Ralph; Charlotte B. married Harlan P. Perill, a naval lieutenant; and Meda G.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Knox are active members of the Methodist Church in which he is local preacher and steward. In 1900 he was sent as a delegate to the General Conference at Chicago. In politics he is a Republican, and in fraternal connection a member of the G. A. R.

The parents of Mrs. Knox were early settlers in this part of Indiana. Her father, Rev. Jacob L. Bromwell, was a son of Jeremiah Bromwell, a native of Maryland. Rev. Jacob L. was born on the eastern shore in 1792, and was reared in Baltimore. He served in the War of 1812, and was a mechanic by trade. He was twice married, no record being at hand concerning his first union. Later he became a faithful minister of the Methodist Church and it was while traveling his Virginia circuit that he met Charlotte Brunner, born in 1810, daughter of John Brunner, who was a native of Virginia. John Brunner married Christina Kisling and they moved to Indiana in 1832. Rev. Jacob L. Bromwell and wife had seven children, as follows: Elizabeth, who died March 12, 1900; John B., who died between Christmas and New Year's Day, in 1864; one that died in infancy; Martha M., Mrs. Knox; Jeremiah F., of near Kansas City, Kans.; Susan, wife of Henry Wright, of Harrison township; and Melissa, wife of Isaac Freeman, of Rex, Ohio. During his residence in Virginia the Rev. Mr. Bromwell traveled a circuit over the mountains which sometimes were so steep as to compel him to dismount and have his faithful horse pilot the way while he held to its tail. He was very popular with the mountaineers, and probably solemnized more marriages than did any other minister of his day. Mr. Bromwell and wife were early settlers in Harrison township, Morgan county, where he took up government land and reared his family. His death took place in Waverly, to which village he had retired after leaving his farm. After about seventy-eight useful years he passed away, March 9, 1871, his widow surviving him only until November, 1872, when she died aged sixty-three years and eight days.

MADISON H. HARRELL, M. D., one of the leading physicians and representatives of Noblesville, is a strenuous supporter of the homeopathic school of medicine, and his ability and skill in the healing of wounds has been widely recognized in Shelby county. He was born in that county, Dec. 27, 1866, son of Judge Wick and Loudema (Drake) Harrell.

The Harrells are of English origin and are one of the old Colonial families of Virginia. Rev. Benjamin Harrell, the grandfather of Dr. Madison, was born in that State, and remained there until after his marriage, but about 1816 he joined the pioneers who were beginning to settle Indiana, and made his home in that section which he afterward helped to organize into Shelby county. He settled on a tract of forest land, where he cleared up a fine farm of 200 acres, and put up buildings which were remarkably good ones for that day. He was a minister in what was known as the New Light Church, and in the early days went through the region round about his home preaching in many places. His wife bore him the following children: William H.; Greenville L.; Henderson Sidney; a son, who died young; and Judge Wick. Rev. Benjamin Harrell lived to be seventy-six years old, passing away on his farm. He was a man of great force of character and a well known pioneer.

Judge Wick Harrell was born in Shelby county, July 25, 1840, and attended the public schools of that place. He chose farming as his occupation and was very successful in it, farming on the old homestead and caring for his parents in their old age. He still owns the old place, which is one of the finest farms in the State, and has added thereto 160 acres adjoining. He also owns considerable valuable residence property and other real estate in Greenfield, Hancock county. He is now living in Greenfield, retired from active business interests, and is quite prominent in politics. He is a strong Democrat, but very independent in his views. In Shelby county, he served as county commissioner for six years, and is now a member of the board of education of Greenfield, where he does everything in his power to promote the cause of good schools. While in his early life Mr. Harrell was a member of the New Light Church, for some years past he has been connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and therein continues his life-long activity in church work. He is not only a liberal supporter in a financial way, but is a licensed exhorter, class leader and trustee.

Mr. Harrell has been married three times. His first wife, Miss Loudema Drake, was born in Virginia, a member of one of the old families of that State. To this union were born: William H., George B., Madison H., William T., Charles, Elizabeth, Lide and Jennie. Mrs. Harrell died at the age of thirty-seven, and Mr. Harrell married (second) Miss Josephine Day, who lived but two years. His third wife was Miss Mary Jenkins, and they have a daughter and a son, Vernice and Esta.

Dr. Madison H. Harrell grew to manhood on the farm in Shelby county. He was given a good common school education and then sent for further study to the Acton Normal School in Marion county, from which institution he was graduated in 1887. The next five years were spent teaching in his home township, and then the young man entered upon his professional training at the Hahnemann Medical College, at St. Louis. He received his degree in 1900, and returning to Indiana, at once established himself at Noblesville, where he has been unusually fortunate in rapidly building up a large practice. He keeps well abreast of the times in recent scientific medical discoveries, takes a number of the leading medical periodicals, and is continually adding to his already excellent professional library. Dr. Harrell is a popular member of the American Homeopathic Association and the Indiana State Medical Association. He is connected with a number of fraternal organizations as medical examiner, among them the I. O. O. F., Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of the Maccabees, Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Royal Neighbors. In politics he is a strong Jeffersonian Democrat, and in religion is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. Dr. Harrell is a man of the best standing in Hamilton county, has always maintained a high standard of both professional and personal conduct, and has many warm friends.

On Feb. 15, 1888, in Shelby county, Dr. Harrell was united in marriage with Miss Theodosia Huffman, and they became the parents of two children, Augusta M. and Ora L.

Mrs. Harrell passed away Jan. 19, 1897. In 1906 Dr. Harrell married (second) Margaret P. Presser, a prominent school teacher of Noblesville, Indiana.

JACOB P. ELLIS, a well-known retired contractor and patriotic citizen of Anderson, Ind., was born in Anderson township, Madison county, May 7, 1835, son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Wright) Ellis.

Both the Wright and Ellis families were old Colonial settlers of East Tennessee, the former from England and the latter from Wales. The families are of Quaker stock, and several members of each have been Quaker preachers. Thomas Ellis, the father of Jacob P., settled in Anderson township in 1833, with his wife and three children: Nancy Ann, Jesse W., and Ellis (who served in the 1st Colored regiment, in the Civil war). The remaining children of this family were: Sarah Jane, Jemima, Thomas and Jacob P. Mr. Ellis' first wife died, and he married (second) Elizabeth McCoy, by whom he had children: Rhoda Ellen, Robert G. and William R., the last named dying young. Mr. Ellis settled on what is now called Fall Creek Pike, three and one-half miles from Anderson, where he entered eighty acres and cleared a farm. In 1858 he settled in Marion county, Ind., where he died.

Jacob P. Ellis received a common school education, attending three months during the winter for several years. He was reared a farmer, and he also learned the carpenter's trade, serving a four-years' apprenticeship, after he was twenty-one years old. He was married June 18, 1861, in Anderson, Ind., to Maria C. Longaker, born Dec. 29, 1835, in Anderson township, Madison county, daughter of Anderson and Susan (Hobaugh) Longaker. The Longakers were from Tennessee and the Hobaughs from Pennsylvania, being of German stock. Anderson Longaker settled in Anderson township, where he entered his land, made a good farm, and died in middle life. Mr. Longaker was twice married, having by his first wife one child, Elizabeth. His second wife was Susan, daughter of Philip Hobaugh, whose brother was a soldier of the war of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis had six children: Thomas, Georgia, Anna, Myrtle, John and Robert. Mrs. Ellis died March 2, 1907, leaving many friends to mourn her loss.

Jacob P. Ellis enlisted in Anderson, in December, 1863, as a private of Company B, 130th Ind. V. I., to serve three years, or during the war. He was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., the war having closed Sept. 13, 1865. The battles participated in by him were: Resaca, Ga.; Rocky Face Ridge, Tunnel Hill, Buzzard's Roost, and Kenesaw Mountain. In the latter battle, in June, 1864, Mr. Ellis was shot in the left lung, was in the field hospital for a time and was then sent to Knoxville, Tenn., reaching there late in the evening of July 1st. He had made the journey via Cumberland to Big Shanty, Ga., in ambulances, there to be transferred to a box car, three days being consumed on the trip, during which time the wound had received no attention, after its first dressing by T. N. Jones, M. D., U. S. army surgeon. A friend, in signing the application for a pension, said that he could hear the air coming from the wound like the hissing of a goose. Mr. Ellis was in the hospital at Knoxville from July 1st to February 1st of the following year, a term of seven months, and then returned to duty at Fortress Monroe, Va., but being attacked by a hemorrhage he was confined in the Hampton hospital for two months, at the end of this time rejoining his regiment at Greensboro, N. C., where he reported for duty. He was detailed to the hospital for Confederate soldiers at Charlotte, N. C., where he took charge of the wounded for about two months, the hospital at this time being discontinued. He was sent home, having been promoted to corporal for meritorious services. Mr. Ellis was a brave and active soldier and served his country gallantly and faithfully. He was examined in 1901, on his own account, with the X rays in Indianapolis, and the minie ball could be distinctly seen in the photograph.

After the war Mr. Ellis resumed his trade of carpenter and then engaged in contract building. He erected the residences of John R. Page, Albert Buck, the "Kauffman House," and many others. While a foreman he drove the last nail in the "Doxey House." He also built the old Odd Fellows' Hall, and did much outside work, building many fine houses in the country. He built a pleasant residence for himself in 1891, where he still resides, having retired from active work.

Mr. Ellis was general manager for the People's Gas Works for nine years, serving also in the capacity of superintendent. He has been a member of the Odd Fellows since 1860, and has passed all the chairs, including the Subordinate Lodge and Encampment. He is one of the charter members of Major May Post, G. A. R., Anderson, in which he has taken an active interest and held a number of offices. He and his wife are both members of the First Methodist Church, and are now among the oldest members living. He is an original Republican, having voted for John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln. Mrs. Ellis was a pioneer teacher, and taught school in Anderson township in 1852, and among her former pupils may be mentioned Quincy Van Winkle, general superintendent of the Big Four railroad, and Wilson Cory, a prominent business man. John J. Ellis, the son of our subject, inherited his father's soldierly qualities and was a soldier in the Spanish-American war, serving with Company L, 160th U. S. V., as quartermaster, and seeing service in Cuba.

JOHN EDWARD FORSYTHE, formerly a prominent real estate dealer and insurance agent of Franklin, Ind., but now in the loan business at Kansas City, Mo., was born Jan. 21, 1866, in Flora, Ill., son of David P. and Mary L. (Logan) Forsythe, natives of Indiana and Kentucky.

David Forsythe, grandfather of John Edward, removed from Kentucky to Johnson county, Ind., and settled in Nineveh township, where he took up government land, dying there in 1869, aged eighty-seven years. He was twice married and was the father of a large family. John Logan, maternal grandfather of John E. Forsythe, was a native of Ireland, but came to America, settling first in Kentucky. He came to Indiana at an early day, locating in Johnson county, first in Nineveh and later in Union township, and in the latter place he died when eighty-four years of age. In his early manhood, he was a plasterer, and always engaged in farming. During the War of 1812, he served as a soldier. His family consisted of four daughters and two sons.

David P. Forsythe has always been engaged in farming, and resided in Johnson county, where he was born, in Nineveh township in 1828. His marriage was celebrated at old Bethel Church, and on March 5, 1901, he and his wife had the pleasure of celebrating their golden anniversary, which occasion gave opportunity for pleasant greetings and congratulations. Mrs. Forsythe is a member of the Methodist Church, and while Mr. Forsythe is not connected with any denomination, he is a firm believer in Christianity. Ten children have been born to them, four sons and six daughters: Sarah, wife of W. D. Terhune, of Hensley township, now deceased; David T., deceased; Martha Ann, wife of A. C. Deer, of Union township; Flora, wife of J. F. Chambers, of Hendricks county; Oscar D., of Odin, Ind.; Josie, wife of N. F. Houston, of Topeka, Kans.; John E., of Kansas City, Mo.; Maggie, wife of W. M. Deer, of Union township; Ernest E., of Washington, Ind.; Gussie, wife of J. H. Deer, of Morgantown, Indiana.

John E. Forsythe was reared on his father's farm in Johnson county, attending the district school and the high school of Nineveh, from which he was graduated. Remaining at home until he attained his majority, he went West and entered the employ of the Rock Island Railroad Company, at Herington, Kans., becoming train baggageman and messenger, serving in that capacity for six years, running from Kansas City to Colorado Springs. At that time he was appointed cashier for the United States Express Company at Colorado Springs, but was afterward transferred to Kansas City, where he remained until July, 1901, when he returned to Franklin, Ind., and embarked in the real estate and insurance business.

On Jan. 11, 1894, Mr. Forsythe married Miss Margaret Charlton, daughter of Judge John Charlton of Lawrence, Kans., and Martha (Curtis) Charlton. One son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Forsythe, Edwin Charlton Forsythe. They are both members of the Christian Church, in which they are both active workers. Fraternally Mr. Forsythe is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Democrat, and is loyal in the support of his party's candidates. Mr. and Mrs. Forsythe now reside in a pleasant home on East Sixth street, Kansas City, Mo., where they dispense a warm hospitality to their many friends.

The parents of Mrs. Forsythe were born in England, whence Mr. Charlton came to America when but eighteen years of age, while his wife was brought here when only three years old. Both grew to maturity in the State of New York. Mr. Charlton was a carpet weaver by trade, which calling he pursued when a young man, but later he located at Princeton, Ill., and for a few years engaged in the drug business. He then moved to Lawrence, Kans., and embarked in the insurance business, becoming very successful in that line. While there he served as justice of the peace for ten years, and it was there that he died, Feb. 27, 1899, aged seventy-two years. His wife still survives, and both were identified with the Congregational Church for a number of years. From the time he was twenty-one year of age Judge Charlton was a member of the Order of Odd Fellows, and took an active part in its workings, he being a Past Grand Master and Past Grand Representative of the State of Kansas. In addition he stood very high in the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar. A man of attainments himself, he took a deep interest in educational matters, and served as president of the school board for several years. Nine children were born to Judge and Mrs. Charlton, three sons and six daughters, six of whom are now living: Emma J.; Mary, wife of I. D. Stewart, of San Diego, Cal.; Ada, wife of E. B. Good, of Topeka, Kans.; Katie, wife of T. B. Ewing, of Decatur, Ill.; Edward, of Lawrence, Kans.; Margaret, wife of John E. Forsythe.

Joseph Charlton, the father of Judge Charlton, was a native of England and a minister in the Independent Church in England, who came to America and resided for some years in New York and Philadelphia, but died in Topeka, Kans., at the age of eighty-four years. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Forsythe, Daniel Curtis, was a native of England, and he also came to America, settling in the East; he was twice married.

JOHN A. HALL, postmaster at Cicero, Hamilton county, Ind., has spent all his life in that region, having been born in Jackson township, that county, one and a half miles northwest of Cicero.

This branch of the Hall family is of Scotch-Irish stock, and the tradition is that three brothers came from England to America and settled in Virginia in Colonial times. Edward Hall, grandfather of John A. Hall, was born near Pittsburg, Pa., where his father was a pioneer, and he himself became a pioneer of Hamilton county, Ind., in 1836, making the journey thither with horses and wagons. He settled one and a half miles northwest of Cicero, in the thick woods on Little Cicero creek, where he was one of the first settlers. He built a log house and purchased land until he finally owned over 400 acres, clearing a fine farm and becoming one of the most substantial citizens of the region. He was a highly respected man and trusted by his neighbors, and he served as one of the commissioners of Hamilton county. He was an old-line Whig originally, becoming a Republican on the organization of the new party and supporting John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln. During the war of 1812 he served sixty days at Fort Wayne, Ind. Mr. Hall died on his farm when about eighty years old, and his wife died at the age of eighty years. He was a member of the Christian Church, and one of the founders of the church in his neighborhood. His children were: William, Bailey, Carey, Ellis, Perry, Elizabeth, Nancy, Hannah and Nellie.

Carey Hall, father of John A. Hall, was born in Fayette county, Ind., where his father first settled on coming to this State, living there eight years before he came to Hamilton county. He received a rather limited education in the vicinity of his boyhood home, attending the first log schoolhouse built at Cicero, and fitted with puncheon floor and benches like the average schoolhouse of the day. He was reared among pioneer conditions, and was brought up to farming, after marriage living on part of the estate entered by Edward Hall until he retired, about twelve years ago. He owns 130 acres of good land. Mr. Hall married Mary Sourwine, who was born in Rockingham county, Va., daughter of John and Elizabeth (Bowman) Sourwine, both of whom were of Virginia Dutch stock. John Sourwine moved from Virginia to Wayne county, Ind., in pioneer days, settling at Centerville. He was a cabinetmaker by trade, but he finally moved to Cicero and settled on a farm adjoining that of Edward Hall, the Redman place. He had eighty acres, buying more until he owned 160, which he cleared, making a good home. He was an old-line Whig in politics, and a Lutheran in religion. His children, Mary (Mrs. Hall) and William, lived to maturity. To Mr. and Mrs. Hall were born two children, John A. and Edith, the latter marrying Marcus Bauchert. Mr. Hall is a member of the Christian Church, and he was originally an old-line Whig in political opinion, later becoming a Republican.

John A. Hall was born Dec. 1, 1856, in the old log house on the farm. His father built a frame dwelling in 1864. He received a district school education, attending the local schools until he was eighteen, after which he took a course at a commercial college. He worked on a farm for years, after his marriage settling on the Sourwine farm, where he continued to live until August, 1889. Besides receiving a thorough training to farm work, he had learned the carpenter's trade at home, and did considerable work in that line. In May, 1889, Mr. Hall received the appointment of postmaster of Cicero, under President Harrison, and he moved to the town in that year, holding the office for four years. For two years afterward he was in the carpentry business, until he received severe injuries by being thrown from a bridge, his back being so badly hurt that it was two years before he was able to resume his ordinary life. He has never fully recovered. In 1897 he was again appointed to the postmastership, under President McKinley, and he has been retained in the position ever since, by re-appointment from Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt. Mr. Hall has seen conditions vastly improved since first he took the office. He himself has been active in introducing the rural free delivery system in his district, and mainly through his efforts three rural routes have been established from Cicero. Mr. Hall is a public-spirited and straightforward man, and he has proved an excellent and efficient incumbent of the position which he has held for so many years.

On Dec. 25, 1877, Mr. Hall was married, three miles northwest of Cicero, to Virginia E. Tucker, who was born Dec. 1, 1858, in Clinton county, Ind., daughter of Robert and Mary A. C. (Drum) Tucker. Mr. Hall in fraternal matters affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, being one of the seventeen charter members who on Oct. 6, 1887, organized Goodwill Lodge, No. 175, Knights of Pythias, at Cicero, Ind., in which he has held many offices including those of chancellor commander, and he was a representative of his lodge to the Grand Lodge held in Indianapolis, Ind., in October, 1903, that body voting to build the magnificent castle hall in Indianapolis, which now stands and will stand for generations to come a monument to Pythianism in Indiana. Mr. Hall was at one time captain of a company of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, serving three years in that capacity, after which he was placed on the Colonel's staff of the First Ind. Reg. U. R. K. of P., serving as regimental chaplain for two years, was promoted to the rank of Major and is now serving as an aid on Brig. Gen.

Merrill E. Wilson's staff. He is a Republican in political sentiment.

TUCKER. The Tucker family to which Mrs. Hall belongs, is of Irish descent. Robert Tucker, her father, was a native of Kentucky, born Dec. 22, 1803. He was an early settler in Indianapolis, when that thriving city was but a small village. He was a cabinet maker by trade. On April 19, 1835, he was married in Indianapolis to Elizabeth C. Reed, who died Aug. 16, 1848. To this union were born: Archibald C. R., Corydon A., Caroline L., Albert R. and Alice A. On Dec. 24, 1850, Robert Tucker married (second) Mary A. C. Drum, of Indianapolis, Ind. After this marriage Mr. Tucker purchased a farm about three miles northeast of Colfax, Ind., whither he moved with his family, retiring from his trade as a cabinet maker. To this second marriage were born three children: George Vinton, Robert Luther and Virginia Eve. Mrs. Mary A. C. (Drum) Tucker died Feb. 11, 1859. On Oct. 23, 1860, Mr. Tucker was again united in marriage, his third wife being Mariah Matthews, of Clinton county, Ind., who survived him. He died Aug. 17, 1872, on his farm in Clinton county. The only living child of the second marriage, Virginia Eve, was but thirteen years old at the time of her father's death. Being without father or mother she made her home with her half-sister by the first marriage of her father, three miles northwest of Cicero, Ind., until her marriage to John A. Hall, as above stated.

WACHTELL. The Wachtell family, originally from Germany, where the name, spelled Vactel, is a very numerous one, is one of the old and honored families of this country, and members thereof have been prominent in every walk of life. Theodore Wachtel, one of the world's greatest tenors, who was a member of this family, was born March 10, 1823, in Hamburg, Germany, and died in Berlin, Nov. 14, 1893. His first important appearance outside of his own country occurred in London in 1862, after which he made many successful tours. He first appeared in the United States at the New York Stadt theatre in 1871, and again in 1875. He possessed a voice of remarkable volume and range, which owing to the perfection of the methods of his training permitted the most exacting demands made upon it.

By those best informed on the subject it is believed that the founder of the Wachtell family came to America in early Colonial times, and first settled in Pennsylvania. Jonathan Wachtell, the first of the name of whom we have an authentic record, was born March 5, 1797, in Pennsylvania, the son of a farmer, and it is known that in this family there were two sons and several daughters who married. Jonathan Wachtell was first an agriculturist, and settled on land near Hagerstown, Md. He married Jan. 10, 1826, in that State, Permelia Baxter, born in Maryland, Sept. 29, 1805, and here they resided for several years. Between 1833 and 1835 Jonathan Wachtell removed to Ohio with his family, which then consisted of his wife and four children. His daughter, Elizabeth, now Mrs. Walling, remembers that when she was a little girl she heard her mother say that "Jonathan was not satisfied with farming in Maryland, and thought that money grew on the trees in Ohio, but found no more there than in Maryland." Mrs. Walling does not remember the journey to Ohio, as she was born in 1832, in Maryland, her brother Henry being born in July, 1835, in Ohio, but her mother afterward told her "she cried when a stop was made and wanted to ride further." The journey was made with horses and wagons, the family being six weeks on the way. Mr. Wachtell bought a partly improved farm near Springfield, Ohio, to which city Mrs. Walling remembers being taken for treatment during sickness when a child. When she was seven years old, in 1839, the family removed to Muncie, the journey being made with a two-horse wagon and stops being made at the homes of the settlers on the way. On arrival in Muncie the family settled temporarily in a log house on Washington street, near High, in which they lived but a few days, Mr. Wachtell buying a new brick, one-story house on Main and Cherry streets, which was erected by Minus Turner in 1836, and a photograph of which is still preserved. Here Mr. Wachtell resided until his death, March 18, 1850. Jonathan Wachtell was a chair manufacturer in Muncie for some years and became a substantial citizen, investing his means in real estate in Muncie, among his properties being ten acres of land on the southwest side of the old town of Muncie which is now within the corporation. He also owned the lot on Main street where the Merchant's Bank now stands. He was one of the organizers of the Presbyterian Church in Muncie and one of its first deacons, holding that office many years. In political opinions he was an old-fashioned Jeffersonian Democrat. He was a man of high character and much respected as a citizen of the city. He was one of the pioneers and early manufacturers of the old town, was a very reliable man and reared an excellent family. He died March 18, 1850, aged fifty-three years, thirteen days; and his wife died Jan. 17, 1892, aged eighty-six years, three months, nineteen days. The following are correct records from the family Bible:

To Jonathan Wachtell and his wife, Permelia Baxter, were born the following children: Eveline, born Oct. 29, 1826; John Adam, May 16, 1828; Andrew Jackson, Feb. 27, 1830; Elizabeth, Feb. 27, 1832, in Maryland; Henry, born July 10, 1835, in Ohio, died Oct. 3, 1866, aged thirty-one years, two months, twenty-three days; Calvin, Dec. 1, 1837, near Springfield, Ohio. Eveline Wachtell married William Barnes, Jan. 6, 1842, and died March 1, 1903, aged seventy-six years, four months; Elizabeth J. married Joseph Walling, Sept. 19, 1848; John A. married Nov. 7, 1848, Chalista A. Sayre; and Andrew Jackson married Eliza M. Neely, Nov. 10, 1856, and died May 11, 1905, aged seventy-five years, two months, thirteen days.

The Christian name of the father of Permelia Baxter is not known to this branch of the family, but his wife is remembered by Mrs. Joseph Walling to have been Jane Kelley. Permelia Baxter had three brothers and one sister: James, George, Samuel and Harriet, the latter of whom married a Mr. Peterman. Samuel Baxter settled in Lima, Ohio, and is now deceased, his sons being: Alfred and Dr. Samuel, the latter a prominent physician of Lima. The surname Baxter is from Baxter, Middle English; Bakster, Anglo-Saxon; Baecestre, baker. Among the Baxters of distinction were Andrew Baxter, born at Aberdeen, Scotland, 1686, died at Whittingham, near Edinburgh, April 23, 1750, a Scotch metaphysician; Richard Baxter, born at Bowton, Shropshire, England, Nov. 12, 1615, died in London, Dec. 8, 1691, a noted English non-conformist divine, who in 1645 became chaplain of Cromwell's army. He was the author of several well-known religious works, among which was the famous "The Saint's Everlasting Rest." Allibone in his "Dictionary of Authors," gives fifteen of the name; the name has been given to five postoffices in the United States, and six Baxters had graduated from Harvard College by 1815. The Baxters are a numerous and powerful family in the United States, whither they came on the foundation of the New England Colonies, as well as the Maryland Colony and those of Virginia and Carolina. The earliest record is of Gregory Baxter, who settled in Roxbury, Mass., 1630, from whom a prominent family descends. Another line descends from Daniel Baxter, of Salem, Mass., 1639.

Richard Baxter was a settler at Hingham, Mass., in 1638, and the records of the Newberry Library, Chicago, show that ten Baxters had settled in New England prior to 1675. The founder of the Maryland branch of the family, A. Baxter, fled from Ireland to Maryland for safety, having participated in a Rebellion there. His wife, with her son Arthur, followed him later. Rev. Richard Baxter, author of "Baxter's Call," was of this family. The founder of the North Carolina branch was William Baxter, of Ireland, who emigrated in 1789. Nathan Baxter, of Delaware county, N. Y., was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, as was Elihu Baxter. Charles Baxter, born in New York City in 1813, was a soldier in the Mexican war. Baxter street, New York City, was named for him. George H. Baxter, born in 1771, who died in 1841, was the eighth president of Hampton and Sidney College, Virginia.

Calvin S. Wachtell, one of the respected citizens and substantial business men of Muncie, was born Dec. 1, 1837, in Springfield, Ohio, and was but two years old when he was brought by his parents to Muncie. He attended the common schools until he reached his twelfth year, and his father dying, when thirteen he became a clerk in the store of his brother John. He remained with his brother until he was about twenty years old, and then learned the harness maker's trade in Muncie, which he followed until 1874, one year of which time, in 1862, he worked in Chicago, making harness for the United States Government. He was married May 6, 1862, in Muncie, to Susan L. Anderson, daughter of William Wallace and Jannetta S. (Murray) Anderson, and to this union there was born one son, Frank L., July 5, 1863. Frank L. Wachtell was educated in the high school at Muncie, from which he was graduated and then took a business course in a commercial college in the city, later becoming a bookkeeper in the mercantile establishment of Charles Winters at Hartford City, Ind. For many years, however, he has been connected with his father in business. He married Leonora Deitch of Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of Col. Philip and Jane (Johnson) Deitch, the former an officer in the Civil war, and for many years chief of police of Cincinnati.

Calvin S. Wachtell was elected city clerk of Muncie in 1874, and held this office until 1886. In 1879 he engaged in the harness business in company with Cyrus Tyner, under the firm name of Wachtell & Tyner, and two years later bought out his partner's interest, taking his son, Frank L., into the firm. This firm has prospered greatly, and some years since established a general business, now conducting a regular department store. Mr. Calvin S. Wachtell has invested largely in real estate, building a pleasant residence of modern style of architecture on Washington street, and the business block where his enterprise is located. He has also built and owns twenty dwellings in Muncie, and has done his share in the building up of the city. In political faith he is a staunch Republican, casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and for every Republican candidate for the Presidency since that time. He was one of the founders of the People's Bank, in which he is a large stockholder, and some years ago was largely interested in zinc mines in Southwest Missouri, being president of the Big Circle Mine Company, which was a very successful enterprise. Fraternally Mr. Wachtell is connected with the I. O. O. F.

William Wallace Anderson, father of Mrs. Wachtell, was a farmer of Augusta county, Va., owning a farm which he sold for $4,000. This farm had been originally settled by his father, and the old two-story brick house, built by the latter and in which he died, still stands. Mrs. Wachtell left the old home when she was between seven and eight years old. Her grandmother Anderson was then living with her son, George Anderson, but came with her son William W. to Indiana. George Anderson was a slaveholder, but William W. did not believe in that institution. The journey to Indiana was made in a big, covered Conestoga wagon, drawn by three horses, while the family rode in a one-horse carriage, although when tired the children would change to the wagon. The bedding and cooking utensils, carpets, etc., were carried in the wagon, and at night the family camped by the roadside, or, when the friendly hospitality of the settlers was received, in some shelter. They crossed the Ohio river near the mouth of the Miami on a ferry boat, and made their way in a leisurely manner to Indiana. The following records are from the family Bible of William Wallace Anderson, and are correct:

* William Wallace Anderson, born Feb. 21, 1813, in Augusta county, Va., five miles from Staunton; Jannetta S. (Murray) Anderson, wife of William Wallace, was born June 12, 1816; Esther Frances Anderson, born July 16, 1837; Susan L., born Feb. 14, 1840; Alexander H., born March 14, 1842; Dorcas V., born June 19, 1844; and Martha Ann W., born in 1848. William Wallace Anderson and Jannetta S. Murray were married April 21, 1836. William Wallace Anderson died March 4, 1848, aged thirty-five years, twelve days; Esther Frances Anderson, daughter of William W., died Sept. 27, 1856, aged nineteen years, two months, eleven days; Jannetta S. (Murray) Anderson died May 25, 1876, in Muncie.

HENRY STIVER. In considering the subject of this sketch we find a respected citizen and a substantial farmer who is, also, a survivor of the dangers and hardships of the great Civil war. Mr. Stiver was born in 1840, at Steubenville, Jefferson county, Ohio, son of William and Margaret (Oran) Stiver.

William Stiver was born in Pennsylvania, coming from an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. The Orans were of Scotch stock, and the mother was born near Steubenville, Ohio, where her father was a farmer. William Stiver worked at his trade of carpenter for a number of years, a hard-working, industrious man. He was a worthy member of the German Lutheran Church. He was twice married, and his children were of the first union, as follows: Lizzie, who died young; Jennie, who married and moved to Springfield, Ill., about 1864, and later visited Europe with her husband, all subsequent knowledge of her being lost; Henry; and Frank. The mother of these children died about 1844. Mr. Stiver lived to be about seventy-five years of age, dying near Dayton, Ohio.

Henry Stiver lost his mother when he was a child of four years and was reared by Joseph Jones, a farmer living near Bloomingdale, Jefferson county, Ohio, with whom he remained until he enlisted for service in the Civil war. He had few educational advantages, his portion being hard work on the farm from the time his strength permitted. On Sept. 19, 1861, he enlisted, and was enrolled Oct. 7, 1861, in Steubenville, for three years or during the war, as a private in Company H, Capt. Benj. L. Prentice, 1st O. V. I., and he served until honorably discharged at Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 28, 1865. Mr. Stiver participated in the following battles: Shiloh; luka Springs; Stone River; Liberty Gap; Lavergne, Tenn.; and Chickamauga, where Sept. 19, 1863, he was taken prisoner with many of his companions, being taken to Belle Isle, the infamous annex to the doubly infamous Libby Prison, where the private soldiers were confined. Belle Isle was a desolate sand bar in the James river, and that winter the river froze from bank to bank. As Mr. Stiver had been captured in battle, he had neither blanket nor overcoat, and the Confederate authorities furnished no kind of shelter for the privates on Belle Isle. Libby Prison, which originally was an old tobacco warehouse, bad as it was, was far better as a prison, as it gave shelter from the cold. There was no wood on the island to make fires, and the prisoners suffered terribly from the cold and exposure. Many of these poor soldier boys had come from indifferent homes but there was not one who did not look longingly back to the comparative comforts they had left behind them when they offered to serve their country in her hour of need. The rations were very poor, and totally inadequate, consisting of a quarter pint, sometimes a whole pint, of black-eyed pea soup in which maggots and black bugs floated, the peas having been old and musty. This, with a small piece of the commonest kind of rusty pork, was the whole bill of fare and quite often the pork was absent. Afterward, Mr. Stiver was taken to the Smith building, a brick tobacco warehouse opposite Libby Prison, which was owned by a man named Smith. This man was secretly friendly to the Union soldiers and he gave the men quite a deal of tobacco, and thus alleviated their distress a little. Mr. Stiver remained here until he was taken to Danville. The Danville prison was also an old tobacco warehouse and here as before, no accommodations were provided for the poor prisoners. They slept on the floor as best they could. From Danville Mr. Stiver was taken to the prison pen at Andersonville, Ga., and was confined there until he, with others, was taken to Charleston, S. C., and there placed in the penitentiary as hostages, the aim being to prevent Gen. Gilmore bombarding the city. This did not save the city, however, but the Union generals were very careful in throwing their shells, to avoid the places where they knew Federal prisoners were held. Mr. Stiver was next taken to the encampment on the Charleston race course, and three weeks later was taken to the stockade prison at Florence, S. C. He was finally exchanged at Charleston, Oct. 9, 1864.

In recalling these horrible experiences, Mr. Stiver finds Andersonville prison to have been the very worst. He suffered here through the hot summer of 1864, having no shelter from the fierce sun except a mud hut he and several of his companions built. Their clothing hung in rags and tatters, and he was bare-headed and shoeless. He had also contracted scurvy from the poor diet from which he suffered horribly, finding relief only by burying his legs in the sand. No medicine was issued by the Confederates, but the sand cure proved a good method of treatment. It is a pitiful thought for the present generation to recall the condition of the nation's defenders, sick, weak and starved. Such was the state of Mr. Stiver, when, a mere skeleton, he was finally exchanged. In addition to his prison sufferings, he was twice wounded, once by being shot in the right side of his head so that his skull was depressed, at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, and again he was struck by a piece of exploding shell, on his right arm. Notwithstanding these injuries he did not go into the hospital, but bravely and faithfully took part in every march and battle of his regiment until captured. His record is one of which he has just cause to be proud, for it reflects honor upon him as a soldier and as a man.

From this terrible experience Mr. Stiver has never fully recovered. For nearly a year after his return he was not able to work at all. He returned to the Jones homestead after his discharge and assisted as best he could until September, 1869, when he came to Indianapolis. He lived at a hotel for one year with friends, working for his board, but on March 13, 1870, he began to work for Isaiah Applegate, a farmer of Broad Ripple, Ind., when prosperity shone upon him, and here he remained six years.

On June 12, 1876, Mr. Stiver married Marietta Applegate, who was born Jan. 13, 1857, in Hamilton county, Ind., daughter of Isaiah and Charlotte (Esery) Applegate, Isaiah Applegate was born Nov. 11, 1836, at Urbana, Ohio, son of Ebenezer and Rachel (Richardson) Applegate. Ebenezer Applegate was born in New Jersey, but went while young to Urbana, Ohio, where he married Rachel Richardson. He then moved to Hamilton county, Ind., where he cleared up a large farm and became a substantial farmer, dying an aged man. His children were: Isaiah, Darius, James, Jefferson, Sarah, Ellen, Martha, Mary Jane and Delila. He was a worthy member of the M. E. Church and was a citizen in good standing. Isaiah Applegate, father of Mrs. Stiver, was a boy when he came with his parents to Indiana, and for his day, became a well educated man. He was married at Allisonville, Marion county, to Charlotte Esery, born Dec. 27, 1835, in Allisonville, daughter of John and Sophia (Mickley) Esery. John Esery was a farmer from North Carolina who came to Indianapolis as one of the pioneer settlers on Pogue's Run. He was a school teacher and taught many years in Marion county. After marriage, Isaiah Applegate and wife settled on a part of the old Applegate homestead, and he cleared up eighty acres which his father gave him, bought more land and later moved to an adjoining farm and still later to a farm near Carmel in Hamilton county. This farm of 160 acres he operated for a number of years, and then sold it and bought 130 acres in Hamilton county, east of Noblesville. He died in 1902, at Allisonville, near where he was married. His children were: Amanda, Marietta, Evaline, Victoria, Noah, Maggie and Walter. Mrs. Applegate died aged sixty-four years, at Noblesville, Oct. 8, 1899. The Applegates were Scotch with a French admixture. Mr. and Mrs. Applegate were most worthy members of the M. E. Church, in which he was an exhorter, always taking an active interest in church matters. In politics he was a Democrat, and was a member for a long period of the Masonic lodge at Carmel, in which he served as chaplain.

After their marriage, Henry Stiver and wife settled on the Applegate farm near Carmel, where they lived two years. They subsequently rented other farms, living for ten years on the Trippito farm in Fall Creek township, which consisted of 300 acres. In 1904 they moved to their present farm in the vicinity of McCordsville, where they have everything very comfortable around them. In spite of the many hardships and injuries that Mr. Stiver received during his Civil war experience, he has always been a good farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Stiver have had these children born to them: Jennie, who married Henry Fisher, a farmer near Noblesville, and has one child, Ruth; Golda, who married Nola Day, and lives on the home farm; Minnie, who married John Combs, a farmer near Oaklandon; Maud, who married Edgar Van Zant, a telegraph operator at McCordsville; and Emma.

Mr. Stiver belongs to Burnt Hickory Post, G. A. R., at Fisher's Switch, Ind., of which he is past commander. He is also a member of the K. of P. at Carmel. In politics he is an independent, voting for the man he thinks best fitted for office. Both he and wife are consistent members of the M. E. Church. He is an industrious, straightforward citizen, a man known to be reliable in all his dealings.

THOMAS F. HOLADAY, M. D., one of the leading physicians of Monrovia, Morgan county, Ind., and a man widely and favorably known in his portion of the State, was born in Clinton county, Ohio, Jan. 27, 1835, son of Robert and Hannah (Andrew) Holaday, the former born in Ohio, and the latter in Guilford county, North Carolina.

(I) John Holaday, grandfather of Thomas F., was born in North Carolina, but moved West to Ohio in early life, settling in Clinton county. By working hard and devoting himself earnestly to his business, he became quite successful, and he lived in Clinton county until his death.

(II) Robert Holaday, son of John, and father of Thomas F., was born in Ohio, where he lived and died. He and his wife were members of the Society of Friends, and were very active in promoting the work of their denomination. A family of twelve children were born to them, of whom Thomas F. is the eldest. Ten of them lived to maturity, and have families of their own.

(III) After receiving a common school education, Dr. Holaday, deciding to become a physician, entered the medical college at Cincinnati, and there studied during 1859 and 1860. For a short time he practiced, then returned to college, from which he was graduated in 1864. The following four years were spent in practicing, when he entered Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia. In 1860 Dr. Holaday located at Westboro, Ohio, and remained there nine years, and from there he went to Pittsfield, Ill., but after three years, in the spring of 1872, he came to Monrovia, where he practiced until 1892. At that time he went to Mooresville, Ind., there remaining until 1902, when he returned to Monrovia, and has since remained. His practice is a very large one and he makes a specialty of eczema, and his fame has so spread, that he has numerous cases from Indianapolis.

On Nov. 15, 1877, Dr. Holaday was united in marriage with Sally A. Johnson, born in Morgan county, daughter of Thomas A. and Elizabeth Johnson, both of North Carolina, who came to Indiana at a very early day in its settlement. Four children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Holaday: Ethel married Charles A. Kenley, a railroad conductor in California; Edna married Vernon D. Macey, a farmer of Morgan county; Laura married Harvey Hutton, and resides at Indianapolis, where he is in the employ of a railroad; Chester A. is a clerk for Lefler's wholesale hats. All the family have been well educated.

The Doctor and his family are Quakers and most excellent people. He is a Republican, but has never sought public office. They are highly respected in the community, where they have many friends.

JOHN W. TRUITT is a member of a pioneer family of Liberty township, Delaware county, which has been settled in this section for many years, his grandfather, James Truitt, having come hither in the early days, probably from Pennsylvania. The Truitts are of old Pennsylvania Dutch stock.

James Truitt was a farmer by occupation, and he settled in Liberty township along the White river, one and a half miles west of Smithfield, clearing a tract of 200 acres. His first buildings were of logs, and later, as he prospered, he erected a two-story frame house—the first one in that section, and it is still standing. Mr. Truitt made a comfortable home for his family and developed a good farm from its primitive state, and in his later years, about 1853, he retired from active labors, removing to Muncie. He died at the age of about seventy, on the farm, where his son Jesse was living at the time. He was a large, strong man, a typical product of pioneer times, physically active and possessed of rugged intelligence. He was liberal in his religious views, and in politics an old-line Whig, and later a Republican, taking considerable interest in the affairs of his day. He was elected councilman. James Truitt was twice married, and by the first union had the following named children: Milton, Joseph, Jesse, Fannie, and a daughter who married and settled in Indianapolis. To the second marriage was born James C., who settled one and a half miles west of Smithfield.

Milton Truitt, son of James and father of John W., was born on the old farm on the White river. He received such education as the common schools of the period afforded, attending the old log school-house in the neighborhood, and later learned the blacksmith's trade, though farming was his principal occupation throughout life. He was married in Liberty township to Louise Smith, who was born in the neighborhood in 1832, daughter of John and Harriet (Preston) Smith, the former a native of Vermont. The young couple settled on the farm now occupied by their son, John W. Truitt, in about 1850, Mr. Truitt buying 160 acres, mostly in the timber, and they made their home in a log house, which he weather-boarded and plastered. In time he was able to put up a frame house. He worked steadily at clearing and improving his farm, and also bought more land, acquiring in all 260 acres, all as a result of well-directed industry and intelligent management of his interests. He was a respected, substantial citizen, and reared his family well. Mr. and Mrs. Truitt had four sons born to them, namely: John W., James M., Jesse D. and Haskell M. They were members of the Methodist Church, though Mr. Truitt did not feel himself bound by creed, and in politics he was a Republican, supporting Lincoln for the Presidency. He belonged to the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Selma.

John W. Truitt was born Aug. 2, 1851, on the farm where he now lives, in the old hewed log house first occupied by his parents upon their settlement there. He attended school in a frame building which formerly stood in the driveway on his present residence, pursuing his studies for three months in the winter time and working on the farm in summer. When eleven years old he went to the district school in Selma, and later, when he was eighteen, attended a select school at that place. He continued to live at home until he was twenty-one, at which time he married, for two years after which event he and his young wife lived in the old log house in which he was born. Then they moved to the frame house on the farm adjoining, remaining there until they went to California in 1875. Mr. Truitt engaged in farming in that State, having a large ranch, upon which he lived for two years. At the end of that time he moved to Sedalia, Mo., where he began a connection with railroad work which continued for over twenty years. He was baggagemaster at Sedalia for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company, was afterward freight conductor for this company one year, and then went to Denison, Texas, where he was also conductor on a freight train for a year. His next move was to Marshall, Texas. In 1881 he became a passenger conductor on the Texas, Pacific, New Orleans & Louisiana road, and held that position about eight years, after which he was stationed at Little Rock, Ark., as trainmaster on the Iron Mountain road, for three years. Following that experience he became a passenger conductor on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad, between Parsons, Kans., and Denison, Texas, for about nine years. In 1899 he returned to the old Truitt homestead, where he has since remained. His mother had died in 1898, and he undertook the settlement of the estate, buying out the other heirs in the property, which now comprises 260 acres of excellent land. He has since devoted himself to the cultivation and development of the property. Oil was struck on his land in 1903, and five wells have been driven, two of which are in active operation. Mr. Truitt is a practical business man, and though so many years of his life have been passed away from the farm he seems to have retained his knowledge of matters agricultural to a degree that enables him to make a decided success of his work. He built his present residence in 1899.

On Sept. 17, 1872, Mr. Truitt married Martha Ellen Moore, who was born April 28, 1853, two miles north of Selma, daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Thorp) Moore, and to this union has come one child, Louisa, born Nov. 7, 1889, in New Orleans, La. She is attending the St. Francis Sisters School at Oldenburg, Ind. Mr. Truitt is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having gone through the York Rite at Parsons, Kans., and the Scottish Rite at Topeka, Kans. He is a Republican in political sentiment.

Samuel Moore, father of Mrs. Truitt, was born in Xenia, Ohio, son of James Moore, who died in that State. He was twice married, the first time in Ohio, to Martha Winters, by whom he had five children, viz.: Nancy, James, William, Elizabeth, and one that died in infancy. There were also five children by his second union to Nancy Thorp, two of these dying in infancy, and Marrietta at the age of eight years. The others were: Jemima and Martha Ellen (Mrs. Truitt). The Thorp family, to which Mrs. Nancy (Thorp) Moore belonged, was from Virginia.

When Samuel Moore settled in Delaware county, Ind., he built a log house for his family, afterward erecting a substantial two-story frame dwelling. He cleared a farm of 160 acres from the woods, and spent most of his active years in its improvement, in 1861 moving to Selma, where he engaged in business. He died there in 1870, his wife's death occurring the same year, some six months later. Mr. Moore was first an old-school Presbyterian in religion, and later a member of the Methodist Church. He had two sons in the Civil war, James and William, both members of Indiana infantry regiments, the former dying in hospital while in the service.

JOHN W. COLLINS, one of the respected citizens of Cicero, Ind., and an honored veteran of the Civil war, was born near Union, Randolph county, N. C., April 4, 1845, son of William and Louisa (Winters) Collins.

The Collinses are of Irish stock. John Collins, grandfather of John W., was a farmer in North Carolina, and there both he and his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Jackson, died.

William Collins, son of John and father of John W., was born in North Carolina, probably in Orange county, Feb. 28, 1809. There he married Louisa Winters, born in North Carolina, daughter of Solomon and Nancy (Hill) Winters, the former of Scotch stock and a soldier in the war of 1812, after which he located in Indiana and died in Rush county. William Collins came from Randolph county, N. C., to Indiana in 1856, and settled near Deming, removing later to Rush county, and thence to Hamilton county, settling in Carmel, where he died, aged eighty-five years. His widow, now aged eighty-six, still survives. Their children were: Wiley, P. M., John W., Mary J., James M., Harriet D. and Jesse W.

John W. Collins was reared a farmer. He came with his parents, when eleven years old, to Washington township, Hamilton county, where he attended the district schools. In the spring of 1862 he went to Rush county to work for his uncle, Riley Winters, and he enlisted in July, 1862, near Manilla, as a private of Company C, 16th Ind. V. I., serving with that regiment until the close of the war, and taking part in many engagements. Mr. Collins participated in the battle of Richmond, Ky., which was fought within two weeks of his leaving Indianapolis. Here the Federal troops were defeated, and a large number of them, Mr. Collins included, were captured. He was paroled with the others in a few days, as the Confederates could not feed their prisoners. Later he was exchanged and rejoined his regiment. He was on an expedition called the "Castor Oil" expedition, along the Mississippi river to Memphis, and was in an engagement at Chickasaw Bluffs, near Vicksburg. He then went with his regiment to Arkansas Post, which they captured Jan. 11, 1863. In this battle Mr. Collins was struck in the right hip with a piece of shell, which imbedded itself in the hip. This injury necessitated his absence from duty for a time, but he remained with his regiment, and would not go to the hospital. Until the spring of 1863, Mr. Collins' regiment remained at Young's Point, then going to Grand Gulf and Kane Creek. No serious fighting was encountered until Champion Hill, which was a hard fought battle, the struggle lasting from about 9 o'clock in the morning until dark. The next day they fought at Black River Bridge, and then moved on to Vicksburg, arriving in time to assist in driving the Confederates back in their fortifications, May 19, 1863. Here Mr. Collins was struck by a spent ball on the left leg. On the 22d of May he rejoined his regiment, and participated in the engagement of that day, in which action he was wounded in the right shoulder by a Confederate officer who fired at him with a revolver. He was in the regiment hospital to get this wound cared for, but would not remain long, rejoining his company after a short period. He served through the siege of Vicksburg, participating in its surrender. He was then with his regiment at the battle of Jackson, Miss., July 4, 1863, and went down the Mississippi river to New Orleans, where the regiment was mounted. The regiment served as cavalry on several scouting expeditions in Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas. Mr. Collins then took part in the Red river campaign from beginning to end, taking part in twenty-six fights, among them being Pleasant Hill, Mansfield and Alexandria. The regiment then returned to New Orleans, where they remained some time, and were then transferred to southwest Louisiana, where they remained on duty until the close of the war.

After the war, Mr. Collins returned to Indiana, settling in Carmel. In 1897 he bought land at the edge of Carmel, but later sold it and bought forty acres five miles northwest of Noblesville, where he lived a short time. He then bought property near Cicero, where he has a pleasant home.

In the fall of 1865 Mr. John W. Collins was married to Martha J. Stephens, born in Tennessee, daughter of John and Hannah (Keys) Stephens. To Mr. and Mrs. Collins were born these children: Adella Leona married Jesse Fields, a farmer of Deming, and has children, Dessie, Mattie, Bernice, Dennis, Fred and Carrie; Nora married Henry Leonard, a farmer, and has three children, Alma, Marie and Edna; Martha Luella married Samuel Macey, a farmer of Marion county, and they have one son, Curtis; and William D., a farmer, married Fannie Becker, and has two children, Gertrude and Ozoro. After his marriage Mr. Collins settled on land near Sheridan, in Boone county, where he remained two years. He then removed to Iowa and lived in Hardin and Marshall counties. His wife died in Mills county, Iowa, in 1878. He married (second), Sept. 2, 1880, near Carmel, in Hamilton county, Ind., Mary J. Hiatt, born Jan. 3, 1849, daughter of William and Mary (Moon) Hiatt. Mr. and Mrs. Collins have had one child, Zella M., born April 16, 1882, who married Charles Macey, of Marion county, and has a son, Russell R. Mrs. Collins is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps. Mr. Collins is connected with the G. A. R. of Cicero, in which he is junior vice-commander. He is also connected with the Masons of Cicero.

HIATT. The Hiatts were of English stock, and early settlers of North Carolina. Stephen Hiatt was a farmer in Randolph county, N. C., and came as an early settler to Indiana, finally settling near Carmel, where he bought land and cleared it from the woods. He had a good farm of eighty acres, and there his wife, Rachel, died aged eighty-nine years. Stephen Hiatt and wife had children as follows: John, Elizabeth, Eliel, Christopher (who died young), Solomon, William, Jemima and Rebecca. The Hiatts had been Quakers for several generations.

William Hiatt was born in Randolph county, N. C., Feb. 22, 1813, son of Stephen, and was but a boy when his father moved to Indiana. He had a common school education, and was reared to farming. At Westfield he married Mary Moon, born in North Carolina, Sept. 20, 1810, daughter of Simon and Hannah (Stout) Moon, the former a pioneer farmer and Quaker in Hamilton county, Ind. William Hiatt settled on land that he entered northeast of Westfield, and this he cleared up, sold and then moved to Montgomery county, later going to Tippecanoe county, and finally in 1863 to Hamilton county on land west of Carmel. He died April 25, 1901, and his son John died at Westfield the same day. His wife had passed away July 4, 1862. Their children were: Sabina, Elizabeth, William, John and Mary J. They were all reared in the Friends' faith. In politics Mr. Hiatt was a Republican and Prohibitionist, and he was a hard-working and highly esteemed man in his community.

GEORGE H. PALMER, a leading and representative citizen of Sheridan, Hamilton county, Ind., who is extensively engaged in the lumber business, was born Dec. 2, 1859, in Switzerland county, Ind., son of Osmer and Susan (Davis) Palmer.

George Palmer, grandfather of George H., who was a pioneer of Switzerland county, cleared a farm from the woods and became a substantial citizen and leading agriculturalist of his section. He married Phoebe Jones, and to them were born these children: Thomas, Osmer, Emma, Harvey and Alvira. George Palmer lived to be ninety-six years of age, dying in February, 1901, and his widow survived him two days, being ninety-two years old at the time of her death. Osmer K. Palmer was born Oct. 25, 1831, near Patriot, Switzerland county, and received a common school education, being reared to the life of a farmer. He married in Switzerland county, Susan Davis, born near Big Bone Spring, Boone county, Ky., daughter of Henderson and Elizabeth (Mason) Davis. Osmer Palmer first settled in Switzerland county, where he remained ten years, then removing to Jennings county, Ind., where he purchased and improved a farm of eighty acres, on which the rest of his life was spent, his death occurring Feb. 28, 1876. In politics he was a Republican. He and his wife had these children: Osmer K., Fannie, Florence, Ernestine and George H.

George H. Palmer received a common school education, and was reared on his father's farm. When a young man he engaged as a traveling salesman for different concerns, and in 1883 embarked in the lumber business in company with W. H. Guirl, remaining at Fishersburg, Ind., for three months. In July, 1883, he came to Sheridan, where he purchased an interest in the business of A. M. Jenkins, the firm continuing until 1888, when it was dissolved and Mr. Palmer took over the business on his own account. The old firm built a saw mill, and in 1890 Mr. Palmer erected a planing mill, he now carrying a large stock of hard and soft lumber, sash, doors and blinds, builders' hardware, paints, oils, colors, etc., and his business averaging $100,000 per annum. He also carries a large stock of red cedar posts from North Carolina. He is considered one of the enterprising business men of Sheridan, and has an honestly earned reputation for integrity.

On April 30, 1889, Mr. Palmer was married, in Sheridan, to Maude Jackson, born in Hamilton County, Ind., daughter of Joel P. and Eunice (Davis) Jackson. Joel P. Jackson was born in Albion county, and removed prior to the Civil war to Hamilton county, settling on a farm. He married Eunice Davis, born in Hamilton county, Ind., Jan. 18, 1833. After marriage they settled on her father's farm, where they resided two years, then lived for fourteen years two miles east of Westfield, and later removed to Sheridan, where Mr. Jackson engaged in business, and where he died Dec. 5, 1902. He was a man of kindly disposition. He was a strong Abolitionist, and at one time was mobbed, with others, while trying to secure a house in which Fred Douglass was to speak. He was a Republican in politics, casting his vote for Lincoln, and was assessor of his township for three terms. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Fraternally he was connected with the Modern Woodmen and the Knights of Honor. His children were: Lucretia, born in Hamilton county, July 20, 1851; Lucretia (2), who died at the age of twenty-one years; Viola A., born Sept. 11, 1853; Charles M., born June 25, 1857; Julius A., born July 14, 1863; John Franklin, born Aug. 3, 1867; and Lulu Maude, born May 26, 1872.

Henderson Davis, the maternal grandfather of George H. Palmer, was born in 1806, in Maryland, son of Elkana and Susan (Johnson) Davis. Elkana Davis was a teacher, and died in 1806, when his son, Henderson, was but three months old. After the death of her husband Mrs. Davis went to her father's farm in Boone county, Ky., where young Henderson Davis was reared to manhood, receiving but limited educational advantages. He was married in Boone county, Ky., to Elizabeth Mason, born in Boone county, daughter of John and Nancy (Jack) Mason. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Davis settled on the Johnson farm, but later purchased a place on the Orion, in Boone county, upon which, however, they did not settle, removing instead to the village of Hamilton where Mr. Davis conducted a hotel. The children of Henderson and Elizabeth (Mason) Davis were: Nancy, Elkana, Susan, Mary, Lucinda, Elizabeth, Elwood and Samuel. Mr. Davis was an old-line Whig, and was a highly esteemed citizen of his day, and at his death, in his fiftieth year, he left many warm friends. His wife was about eighty years of age at the time of her death.

ELMER E. KELSO, M. D. The town of Eminence, Adams township, Morgan County, Ind., is rapidly growing into a place of prominence, and numbers among its residents men of ability and research in their several professions. Such a one is Dr. Elmer E. Kelso, who was born in Morgan county, Ind., June 30, 1863, son of John J. and Harriet (Anderson) Kelso, and grandson of Alexander Kelso.

(I) Alexander Kelso was born in Tennessee, and came of Scotch descent, the Kelso family originating in the town of that name in Scotland. By trade he was a bootmaker, but later in life—late in the twenties—he came to Indiana and located at Morgantown, Morgan county, where he took up 900 acres of land, and clearing off his property, lived there until his death.

(II) John J. Kelso, born in Indiana, became a merchant and farmer at Morgantown, and was a successful man, residing at Morgantown until his death which took place in 1891. His widow survives, and makes her home with her son Elmer E. In religious views, John J. Kelso was a Methodist, while in political faith he was a Republican. The mother is a Baptist. Nine children were born to John J. and Harriet Kelso, of whom Elmer E. is fifth in the order of birth. All grew to maturity, receiving a good education, but four are now deceased.

(III) Dr. Elmer E. Kelso, after completing a common school education, in 1889, went to the Indianapolis Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1891. He then came to Eminence, where he has since resided. In 1895, he took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Post-Graduate College, and in 1898, took a post-graduate course at the Polyclinic Post-Graduate College of New York City. He carries on a general practice, and takes a great interest in his work, keeping fully abreast of modern research. His residence is separate from his office.

On Sept. 24, 1891, Dr. Kelso was married to Eva Hunt, of Johnson county, Ind., daughter of James G. Hunt, a farmer. Dr. Kelso is a thoroughly self-made man, having worked his way through college, and his success is the result of his own efforts. In politics he is a Democrat. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and Red Men, and he is very popular socially as well as professionally. Mrs. Kelso is a Methodist, and popular in her church, towards the support of which Dr. Kelso is a liberal contributor.

FRANCIS WILBY ANDERTON, one of the reliable citizens of Muncie, Ind., and a survivor of the Civil war, was born April 28, 1830, in Schenectady, N. Y., son of James and Frances (Wilby) Anderton.

James Anderton, who was born in Lancashire, England, had two brothers, Francis and John, and two sisters, whose names are not recalled, who kept an inn in Lancashire. Francis was an officer in the English army, serving under Wellington at the battle of Waterloo (his pair of flint pistols have been preserved by Francis W. Anderton), and while he was in England in 1845, he purchased commissions for his two sons.

James Anderton, eldest son of his father, learned the business of manufacturing cloth in England. He came to America when a young man, and in New York married Frances Wilby, born in Yorkshire, England, in 1800, daughter of Francis Wilby, who came from the mother country and settled in New York City. He was a wealthy wool manufacturer in Yorkshire, and came to America when his daughter was a young lady. On reaching the dock at New York City, he slipped and fell, injuring himself so severely that he died in a short time. One of his sons, Francis, became an extensive cloth manufacturer and was in partnership with Francis Anderton at Blockly, Mass., and Manayunk, Pa. In 1832 James Anderton made a trip on horseback from Philadelphia to Dayton, Ohio, on his way to Richmond, Ind., and on leaving his hotel at Dayton, on a Sunday morning, to continue his journey, was stopped and turned back for traveling on the Sabbath day. After this journey he returned to Philadelphia, but in about 1835 returned to the West and bought a mill for the manufacture of woolen cloth, in company with another man, this firm, however, meeting with disaster. Mr. Anderton went next to Connersville, Ind., where he remained a short time and then went to Cincinnati, and in 1838 to Dayton, opening a dyeing and scouring establishment, which he conducted for many years with much success. He was one of the pioneers of Dayton. His children were: Francis Wilby, born April 28, 1830; James, in 1832; John, in 1834; William, in 1836, and Charles, the present treasurer of Montgomery county, Ohio, where he was sheriff for four years.

James Anderton was a Mason, and his apron is yet preserved by his son, Francis Wilby. He and his wife were members of the Episcopal Church, he being one of the founders of the first church of that denomination in Dayton. Mr. Anderton was the heir to large estates in England, as the eldest son of his father, this being the old home of the Andertons, located in Lancashire. About 1845 Mr. Anderton returned to England, and was absent about one year, his first attempt being frustrated by shipwreck. He had proof of his claim to his father's estate in the shape of letters from such distinguished men in America as Daniel Webster, Henry Clay and John Quincy Adams, being endorsed by men of wealth in Philadelphia and Dayton. His claim was so good that he was offered a large amount for it, but refused. Shortly after his return to America he died, and his papers were destroyed by his wife, who decided that the family had been caused enough trouble by the matter already. Mr. Anderton died in Dayton, Ohio, Oct. 19, 1849, his wife attaining the remarkable age of ninety-four years, and passing away in Dayton in 1894.

Francis Wilby Anderton was eight years of age when his father removed to Dayton, and he attended the public schools and worked with his father in the business. Later he was apprenticed to the printing firm of Wilson & McCracken of the old Dayton Transcript, for three years, and remained until the firm dissolved, and afterward was with Mr. Wilson. He then went to Cincinnati and worked for the old Cincinnati Chronicle, but returned to Mr. Wilson's employ, continuing with him some time. He attempted to enlist in the Mexican war, but on account of the solicitation of his mother and the advice of old Commodore Schenk, he did not go. About this time he joined the Junior Artillery, Dayton, and later was a member of the Dayton Light Guards, Colonel King's company, until the Civil war. This famous command furnished many soldiers for the Civil war, including Col. King, who was killed in battle. On Feb. 6, 1850, in Dayton, Mr. Anderton married Mary E. Casterline, born Feb. 7, 1830, in Springdale, near Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of Silas and Mary (Miller) Casterline. In the winter of 1855 Mr. Anderton located in Indianapolis, Ind., and worked in the printing office of the old Sentinel, and later, with Frederick Emerick, Martin Schrick and Charles Crowler, established the Daily City Item, which he assisted in conducting seven months. At this time he sold out and engaged in the fruit and oyster business, wholesale and retail, after which he engaged with the United Brethren Publishing House, of Dayton, of about two years. Later he embarked in the fruit and oyster business.

In August, 1862, Mr. Anderton enlisted, and was commissioned first lieutenant of Company I, 11th Ohio V. I., by Governor Todd. He contracted rheumatism on the march from Somerville to Loop Creek, W. Va., on the way to Nashville, Tenn., in December. It was a very wet season, and continual sleeping on the ground and being exposed to the rain caused rheumatism. Later he became ill and was disabled and unfit for military service, being sent to Nashville, although he did not go to the hospital. He remained in that city for about one month under medical attendance, and at the request of his colonel he was excused from further military duty in March, 1863. His service was in West Virginia and Tennessee, and while a soldier he did his full duty, being brave and faithful.

After his discharge Mr. Anderton returned to Dayton and engaged in the fruit business, but in 1875 he located in Muncie, where until 1905 he was engaged in a flourishing restaurant business. Mr. Anderton is a member of the Blue Lodge, Masons, of Dayton, which he joined in 1870, is a member of the Council and Chapter of Dayton and of the K. T. Commandery, of Muncie. He was connected with the I. O. O. F., Dayton, which he joined in 1851, and in which he has passed all of the chairs. He joined the Red Men in Dayton in 1855, and has passed all the chairs and represented his lodge in the Council of the United States. He is now a member of De Ember Tribe, Muncie. In politics Mr. Anderton is a Republican, voted for Wierfield Scott in 1852 for President and later for John C. Fremont. He and his wife had one daughter, Laura W., who married Watts Thomas, and resides in Muncie.

Silas Casterline, father of Mrs. Anderton, was of Scotch stock, was born in New Jersey, and was early left an orphan. He went to Springdale, near Cincinnati, Ohio, with his uncle, Riddle, a wealthy man. Silas Casterline became a brickmaker by trade and was a substantial citizen and he lived to an advanced age. He and his wife had one son, William, in the Civil war, who was accidentally killed while purchasing a revolver in Cincinnati. Mrs. Anderton's mother married three times. After Mr. Casterline's death she became the wife of Peter Durdle, and they had a family of four children; Jeremiah, one who died in infancy; Joseph, a soldier in an Ohio regiment during the Civil war, who died from the effects of army life; and Mary. Mrs. Durdle was married the third time to Calvin Francisco, and to this union were born William and Harriet. Mrs. Francisco died in Winchester, Ohio, at the age of seventy-six years.

Mrs. Anderton was reared by her grandfather, James Miller, a well-to-do farmer near Yellow Springs, Ohio, and his wife, Elizabeth Miller. James Miller was born in Pennsylvania, of Irish stock, his grandfather having come from the Emerald Isle. He served in the war of 1812, and was the father of Harriet, Elizabeth, William, Mary, Sarah, Jane and Philena.

DR. WILLIAM BRADEN GRAHAM, one of the oldest physicians and surgeons of Noblesville, Ind., where he settled in 1865, and who gave his professional services to his country during the great Civil war, was born in North Hope, Butler county, Pa., Oct. 22, 1835, son of William M. and Amanda H. (Kerr) Graham.

The Grahams were of Scotch descent, but Edward Graham, the great-grandfather of Dr. William B., came from the North of Ireland to Pennsylvania, where he married Mary Sloan.

William Graham, son of Edward and Mary, settled on a farm in Butler county, Pa., which farm is still in the possession of the family. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife, Jane McIlvain, also of Scotch stock, bore him the following children: Thomas, born in 1810, became a Methodist preacher at Pittsburg, Pa., married Nancy Jack, and died at the age of seventy-five years; Mary, born in 1812, married Robert Smith, a farmer of Butler county, and they moved to Iowa, where she died; William M., born in 1814; Robert, born in 1816, became a lawyer and died at Lake Providence, La., about 1853; and Edward, born in 1818, was first a tailor, later an attorney, finally becoming, in 1860, judge of the Circuit Court, and died from the effects of an accident in DeWitt, Clinton county, Iowa.

William M. Graham was born in North Hope on the farm which was cleared from the woods by his father. He received a common school education, and remained on the home farm, which consisted of 120 acres, throughout his active life. Some time before his death he retired and lived in North Hope until called away in 1888, in his seventy-fourth year. He was a member of the Methodist Church, a class leader, and for thirty years led the singing, and he was greatly respected by all who knew him. He was a justice of the peace for thirty years, and a member of the State Legislature for two terms, at the time of the beginning of the Civil war, and at an extra session called about that time by Governor Curtin. At the age of twenty, Mr. Graham married, in Butler county, Amanda Hubbard Kerr, born in 1815, in that county, daughter of Joseph Kerr, a farmer who died in middle life, and whose wife was a Hubbard. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kerr were: James, John, Zachariah, Parks, Joseph, Harvey, Eliza, Lucy and Amanda H. To Mr. and Mrs. Graham were born the following children: William Braden; Jane; Ann Eliza; Mary; Erastus, who died aged three years; Joseph K., who died aged forty years; and Robert, an attorney at Cripple Creek, Colo. Mr. Graham was married a second time, but there were no children by the last marriage.

Dr. William Braden Graham received his education by attendance at the district schools and, for two terms, at the high school at West Sunbury, Butler county (1855-56). In the fall of 1856 he located in Marion county, Ind., near Bridgeport, and there studied medicine with Dr. Joseph Kerr for four months, later locating in Broad Ripple, where he studied with his uncle, Dr. Harvey Kerr, during vacations, for four years. The winter of 1857-

58 he studied in the Medical Department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and then entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, whence he was graduated in 1861. Going to Clarksville, Hamilton county, Ind., he at once began the practice of his profession, remaining one and one-half years, when he was commissioned assistant surgeon of the 101st Ind. V. I., Feb. 18, 1863. He was promoted to and commissioned surgeon with the rank of major, of the same regiment, Jan. 1, 1864, and he served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged at Indianapolis June 24, 1865. He served in the field hospital, and in every battle and skirmish in which his regiment took part, until captured at Chickamauga, among the battles being Resaca, Jonesboro, Atlanta and Kingston. He was captured at Chickamauga with other physicians and 10,000 wounded, in the general hospital for the entire army, located at Crawfish Springs, Ga. The following is a copy of Dr. Graham's parole, his capture following a chance to escape which he refused to take as he knew the wounded would need his care: "Sept. 22, 1863. I, W. B. Graham, assistant surgeon of the United States army, captured at the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 20, 1863, solemnly swear: I will not bear arms against or give any information detrimental to the government of the Confederate States in any service whatever, until exchanged as a prisoner of war, and as I am only paroled to attend the sick and wounded prisoners, from the United States army, as soon as I am relieved from that duty, I will report to the commandant of the post at Atlanta, Ga., this to cease and be void when the cartel of exchange is observed toward Confederate surgeons. Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Crawfish Springs, Sept. 26, 1863. Signed: Alex McKinstry, Col. and Prov. Mar. Gen. of Georgia, and W. B. Graham, assistant surgeon 101st Regiment Indiana Volunteers."

Dr. Graham's parole was given him with permission to care for Union wounded. He reported at the expiration of twelve days at Ringgold, Ga., to Confederate forces, and was taken to Atlanta, thence to Richmond, as a prisoner of war, and was incarcerated in Libby prison until Nov. 24, 1863, when he was taken to Fortress Monroe and sent to Annapolis, Md., being given twenty days to report to his regiment. Libby prison, at that time, contained 1,000 Union officers. It was divided into nine rooms, 40 x 100 feet, and each had no accommodations whatever. The meager rations, served once a day, were mouldy and worm infested, and consisted of corn bread, rice soup, and once in a while a piece of beef or pork. The Doctor having a strong constitution kept his health well, but many a poor fellow died.

After the war Dr. Graham returned to Indiana and settled in Noblesville in 1865, where he began the practice of medicine, a calling he has since carried on successfully. On July 25, 1865, in Noblesville, he married Clara P. Darrow, who was born Dec. 17, 1842, in Noblesville, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Passwater) Darrow. To this union have been born the following children, all of whom are well educated: Alice, who married Charles J. Smith, a shoe salesman at Noblesville, and has a son, Graham Braden; Edith, who is studying music in Berlin, Germany; William Darrow, D. D. S.; Robert K., who married Minnie Banchert, and is with the Noblesville Milling Company; Mary, at home; and Donald, attending the University of Illinois.

Doctor and Mrs. Graham are members of the Methodist Church, in which he is steward and a trustee. He is a member of the Royal Arch Masons and of the I. O. O. F., in which latter he has passed all of the chairs, including Noble Grand. In politics he is a Republican, and his first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln in 1864, but while he has been active in politics, he has never aspired for office. He is one of the few surgeons who participated in the Civil war who are still practicing, and he is pension examiner for the United States Government. He has achieved success in his profession, and is well and favorably known among the medical men of Indiana.

JAMES DARROW, father of Mrs. Graham, was born in Kentucky, son of William and Peggie (Sadler) Darrow, who were married in Delaware, and who moved to Indiana, and settled in Hamilton county in the woods about five miles east of Noblesville. He cleared up a farm there, and died leaving children: James, Jane, William, Isaac and John. James Darrow was but a boy when he came with his parents to Indiana, where he received a pioneer education. In Hamilton county, Ind., at the age of twenty, he married Elizabeth Passwater, daughter of Robert and Rachel (Webb) Passwater, the former of whom was one of the pioneers who bought land direct from the Indians. Mr. Darrow settled for a time in the home neighborhood, and then became keeper of the Hamilton County Farm, a position he held at the time of his death—the result of typhoid fever. Both Mr. and Mrs. Darrow were active in the Methodist Church, and he was the choir leader at the time of his death. Their children were: Clara P., Amanda Melvina, Allen Marsee (who died in his fiftieth year) and Elizabeth Ann.

ELI PHILLIPS, a representative agriculturist of Tipton, Ind., who is a member of the old English Colonial family of Phillips, was a member of the Union army during the Civil war, in which great struggle he bore a prominent part. Mr. Phillips was born Nov. 25, 1839, in Washington county, Pa., son of Isaac and Mary (Wilkins) Phillips, the latter of German stock.

Isaac Phillips was a son of Henry Phillips. He married Mary Wilkins, daughter of George Wilkins, and to them were born thirteen children, all of whom grew to maturity except one: Henry, Elizabeth, George W., Sarah, Rebecca, Mary and Alice (twins), Eli, Matilda, Ruth, Martha and Jane. Isaac Phillips removed to Indiana in 1842, and settled on rented land in Franklin county, where he died aged eighty years, his wife passing away about the same time, both in the faith of the Christian Church. Mr. Phillips was a Republican in politics, and a staunch Union man, two of his sons, Eli and George W., being in the Civil war. The latter, who as a member of the 18th Indiana and later the 123d Indiana participated in a number of battles, returned home safely, and is now a resident of Rush county.

Eli Phillips was three years old when brought by his parents to Franklin county, Ind., and was reared on the farm, until fifteen years of age, attending school about two months each winter in the old pioneer schoolhouse, learning to read and write. At the age of nineteen years, in Buena Vista, Franklin county, he enlisted in the Union army, being enrolled Aug. 23, 1861, as a private of Company B, 37th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and veteranized Jan. 29, 1864, under Capt. P. M. Goodwin, serving until honorably discharged, July 24, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., the war having closed. His service was in Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Maryland, and among his battles were: Stone River, Tenn., Dec. 31, 1862; Tullahoma, Tenn., June 27, 1863; Dug Gap, Sept. 11, 1863; Chickamauga, Sept. 19 and 20, 1863; Missionary Ridge, Nov. 27, 1863; Tunnel Hill, Ga., May 8, 1864; Buzzard's Roost, May 9, 1864; Resaca, Ga., May 14, 1864; Dallas, Ga., May 27, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, June 22, 1864; Peach Tree Creek, Ga., July 21, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., July 27, 1864; Jonesboro, Ga., Sept. 1, 1864; Savannah, Ga., Dec. 21, 1864; Aversyboro, N. C., March 16, 1865; and Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865. He was in the great Atlanta campaign, when the Union troops were under fire for four months, his regiment being under fire for seventeen days and nights without being out of the line of battle. He was on Sherman's great March to the Sea and the march to Washington, but could not participate in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C.; as he had no shoes, so marched up Pennsylvania avenue on the sidewalk barefooted. He was never wounded, was never sick in the hospital, nor was he a prisoner, but was an ever faithful soldier, performing his duties efficiently and cheerfully. Few men who participated in the great struggle with the Union army can boast of having participated in so many of the large battles, marches and smaller engagements as can Mr. Phillips, and his long and full record speaks for itself and should go down through the generations as an example of patriotism.

After the war Mr. Phillips returned to Indiana, and was married in Franklin county, Sept. 21, 1866, to Sarah E. Evans, born in that county in January, 1843, daughter of James and Lydia (Weston) Evans, and granddaughter of William and Sarah Evans. James Evans was born in January, 1816, and was a farmer of Franklin county, where he owned 160 acres of good land, and where he died May 27, 1885, his wife passing away Sept. 8, 1894. He was an elder in the Christian Church for twenty years, being one of the founders of that church in his community. His children were: Francis M., born Jan. 23, 1841; Sarah Emeline, January, 1843; Mary Ann, Dec. 9, 1845; Susan, April 9, 1848; Joseph William, May 20, 1849; Nancy A., March 15, 1852; Deborah Jane, Aug. 28, 1855; Rachel Emily, March 17, 185—; and Stephen, Nov. 17, 1860. Francis M. Evans was a member of Company F, 18th Ind. V. I., holding the rank of corporal, and was in a number of battles and died at Syracuse, Mo., of typhoid fever.

After his marriage Eli Phillips settled on land in Indiana, and six years later removed to Decatur where he carried on farming, also engaging at carpenter work, a trade that he had partly learned prior to the outbreak of the war. In about 1885 he located in Tipton, on his present place, which had little cleared. Here Mr. Phillips has made a fine home, erecting a handsome residence, and good substantial barns and outbuildings, presenting a much different appearance to what it was when he first located, it then resembling a sugar camp more than anything else. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips are members of the Christian Church. In politics he is a Republican, his first vote being cast for Grant, and he is a member of the G. A. R., at Tipton.

To Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were born these children: Deborah Jane, born Aug. 9, 1867, married W. T. Boring, a farmer of Nevada township, Tipton county, Ind., and they have two children, Leroy and Jesse; Henrietta, born March 14, 1874, married Ashley W. Shaw, a farmer, and they have seven children, John E., Mabel Fay, Myrtle, George Dewey, Mollie, Clarissa and Bonnie; and Lydia Ann, born March 20, 1877, married George W. Boring, a farmer of Nevada township, Tipton county, and they have three children, Della, Rachel and Edith. The three children of Eli Phillips were born in Franklin county, Indiana.

NATHAN NEY SPENCE, a well-known lawyer of Muncie, Ind., and a veteran of the Civil war, was born in Sussex county, Del., May 10, 1837, son of Isaac and Ellen (Reede) Spence.

The Spence family was identified with the Colony of Delaware from the earliest days of that settlement, when one John Spence came thither from England. According to a tradition cited by Peter T. Spence, of La Fontaine, Wabash county, Ind., who is one of the oldest members of the family, now aged eighty-seven years, there were three brothers who came over together, John, James and Abel. They all settled in Delaware, and their descendants in various parts of the State were numerous. The name of John Spence's wife is not known, but she bore him five children, viz.: Nathan; Enoch; Tamsy, who married Philip Bosman, and settled in Delaware county, Ind., on a farm and lived to be eighty-five; Louie, who married a Hollis, and remained in Delaware; and one whose name is forgotten. It is believed that John Spence was a soldier in the Revolution.

Nathan Spence was born about 1769, in Sussex county, the northernmost division of Delaware. He was a farmer and owned a large tract of land in that State, and it is believed he was also a slave-holder, but that he freed his slaves. There is good reason to assume that he was a lieutenant in the army, and saw service in the war of 1812. His wife was Elizabeth Morris, a native of Sussex county. They had four children: John, Isaac, Sarah Ann and Deborah. Nathan Spence died in 1829.

Isaac Spence, born in March, 1815, in Sussex county, became a farmer like his father. He received in his youth a very limited education, but learned to read and write. About 1836 he married and a year later, in August, removed to Lancaster county, Ohio, but after six months left that region for Ross county. Six months afterward he moved from there, to Indiana, arriving in Delaware county, Oct. 6, 1838. He stopped at first at Goldsmith Gilbert's Tavern, in Muncie Town, where Henry Wysox's residence now stands. The journey had been made in a one-horse wagon, and as his wife made the trip with him, carrying their only child in her arms, it was a hard and trying experience. Mr. Spence decided to settle in Niles township, and entered a tract of forty acres, the last unoccupied piece on the market. He built a log house with a stick chimney, plastered with "cat and clay" (as they called the mixture of straw and clay), and started in to clear his land. This he speedily accomplished, and in time bought eighty acres more, not adjoining but in the same locality.

Although Mr. Spence remained in Indiana till 1851, he moved several times during that period. In that year he turned to pioneer life again, going to Iowa where he bought eighty acres of prairie and timber land and made his home on it for one year, after which he returned to Indiana, bought a small farm, and later he moved to Granville and there spent his remaining years. He died Oct. 27, 1874, aged fifty-nine years, seven months and twenty-four days. In religious belief he was a Methodist and a devout member of that church, with a quiet, peaceful disposition that made him a good exemplar of Christian living. Physically he was a man of unusual prowess, weighing 320 pounds, and strong enough to handle two ordinary men. Though in early life a Democrat, he voted for Fremont and every succeeding Republican candidate till his death.

On July 4, 1836, in Sussex county, Del., Mr. Spence was joined in marriage to Miss Ellen Reede, who was a native of that county, born July 9, 1817. She was one of five children, Sylvester, Daniel, William, Ellen and Levina, born to William and ——— (Hopkins) Reede. Her father was a large land owner and farmer in that section, and lived to the age of sixty-five or seventy years. Children were born to Isaac and Ellen Spence as follows: Nathan Ney; Elizabeth, July 6, 1839; William H., June 16, 1842; Sarah Ann, in 1844 (died at the age of twelve); John H., Oct. 31, 1846 (who died in Eaton, Ind.); James G., April, 1851; Isaac Wesley, 1854; and Minerva, 1856. Mrs. Spence died in February, 1868, and Mr. Spence later married a widow, but there were no children of this second union.

Nathan Ney Spence was only an infant fifteen months old when his parents moved to Indiana, and his whole childhood was associated with the frontier. His school days were spent in the old log school-house, to which the children of that region found their way by blazed trails, coming sometimes more than three miles through the woods. The Stover, Maitland, Berry, Blakeley, Thornberg and Wroughton families were among those represented. The school-house was of logs, with one cut out and panes of glass inserted in order to admit the light, while the floor was of sawed boards. There was an enormous fireplace, the wood for which was brought in by the boys each night. The teacher in charge in our subject's time was a noted master in those pioneer days, one David Bell, bald-headed and wearing old-fashioned iron-rimmed spectacles. He was a famous athlete, and quick as a cat in his movements. Kindly by nature and always mild towards a good pupil, he was yet a strict disciplinarian and a terror to evil-doers. Hanging on a hook near him were always kept well-dressed hickory rods, small ones for the little boys and larger for the older youths, and these were not infrequently used. No interference was brooked, and when on one occasion John Blakeley objected strenuously because his son Andrew had been whipped for sneezing loudly, Mr. Bell told him that if he came there and swore he, too, would receive a whipping. For six winters and one summer Mr. Spence studied under Mr. Bell and like all his pupils was turned out a good reader and speller, and was well versed also in arithmetic. He attended other schools too until he was sixteen, though meantime he also did a good deal of clearing on the farm and helped in all the work. At eighteen he began to learn the carpenter's trade, and followed it in Delaware county till the war broke out, although after his marriage in 1860, he also operated a small farm in Niles township, on which he and his wife had settled.

With his new domestic responsibilities upon him, Mr. Spence did not respond to the first call for arms in the Civil war, but Aug. 9, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, 84th Ind. V. I., under Capt. John H. Ellis, to serve three years or during the war. He was discharged June 14, 1865, at Camp Harker, Tenn., five miles from Nashville, and was mustered out at Indianapolis, July 1, 1865. Except for a short hospital record, he shared in all the experiences of his regiment, was never a prisoner and was wounded only once, in the right shoulder. He was in the Atlanta campaign, with its four months of constant fighting, and in the battles of Chickamauga, Buzzard's Roost, Dalton, Rocky Face Ridge and Resaca. He was injured by lifting a dead tree out the path for a charge, was disabled for ten days, and also contracted a chronic disease so that he was sent to the rear and lay in a field hospital in Nashville three weeks. He was then detailed to a convalescent camp in Murfreesboro, Tenn., next to build block houses for the Chattanooga and Nashville railroad, for six weeks, and then to guard his regiment at Nashville, remaining there till his discharge.

After the war, Mr. Spence returned to Delaware county and built the toll house on the Granville pike. In the spring of 1866 he moved to Pontiac, Livingston county, Ill., where he followed his trade for more than two years. In the fall of 1868 he went to Bloomington, Ill., and engaged as a carpenter and contractor till 1872, when he went to Chicago to become foreman for a contracting company. This was a brief episode, however, as in the spring of the next year he went to Hartford City, Ind., and six months later returned to his early home in Niles township. There he resumed his old work of building, put up the school-house at Granville, three in Niles township, two in Union, the Methodist Church at Black's Mills, a square bank barn for William Cox, the largest barn in Delaware county, at that time, 60 x 80 feet, and a number of fine residences.

While Mr. Spence was highly successful in his building operations, he had always had a natural inclination towards legal subjects, together with marked power as a speaker, and finally he resolved to give up contracting entirely and read for the Bar. He studied with Judge Ryan and Judge Lotz, and was admitted to the practice of his profession in September, 1886, on the motion of Hon. R. S. Gregory. Although at that time forty-nine years old, Mr. Spence began with all the enthusiasm of a younger man, and was remarkably successful in speedily establishing a good practice. For four years he was in partnership with Hon. Ozro Cranor. Of late years he has been applied to as special judge to try many cases and has made quite a name for himself. Of a strong personality, he shows special force in addressing a jury, and has great influence over them. An active politician, Mr. Spence was till 1896 a strong Republican, but in that year became a Democrat. He has made many speeches and is a potent factor in a campaign.

In 1871 Mr. Spence became a Mason, during his residence in Illinois, and is a member of Lodge No. 433, F. & A. M. He has long been prominent, too, in G. A. R. work, and as a member of Williams Post, No. 78, has been adjutant three times, commander one term and chaplain one term. He was an organizer of John Brandt Post, No. 56, of Eaton, Ind., and suggested naming it for a member of his company, who was mortally wounded at Chickamauga and carried off the field at night by Mr. Spence and others.

The first marriage contracted by Mr. Spence occurred in Delaware county, Feb. 27, 1860, when he was twenty-three years of age. His bride was Miss Ellen Cunningham, born in Huntingdon county, Pa., July 4, 1835, daughter of Robinson Cunningham (her mother's maiden name was Myton), of Scotch-Irish stock. Mr. Cunningham, a farmer, who died in 1866, had six other children, all now deceased, John, Robinson, Jr., Mary, Eliza, Esther and Annie. Mrs. Spence being the youngest. She died in December, 1876, the mother of six children, namely: John C., born Jan. 15, 1861; Frank T., Jan. 5, 1863; Isaac W., June 16, 1866; Robert N. April 4, 1871 (who died aged two years); Charles D., May 4, 1869; and Georgia H. June 13, 1873 (who died aged five years)

After Mrs. Spence's death in Eaton, Mr. Spence was married to Miss Amanda Harn, who died in 1882. His third wife was Miss Martha Anderson, by whom he has had one daughter, Austa, born in April, 1883. Miss Spence has received a good education, attending the public, grammar and high schools, and has also been well-trained in music, for which she has much natural talent.

VALENTINE APPLE, one of the reliable citizens of Warren township, Marion county, Ind., where he has been engaged in farming and stock raising, deserves consideration as a survivor of the Civil war, in which he held official position. He was born on his father's farm in Marion county, Nov. 29, 1840, son of Andrew and Catherine Apple.

John Apple, grandfather of Valentine, was born in Pennsylvania, and in young manhood accompanied his father to Hamilton county, Ohio. He married Sarah Ann Mitchell, daughter of John Mitchell, a Revolutionary soldier who settled in Marion county, and is buried in the McVey graveyard, where his tombstone can still be found. Valentine Apple remembers leading around his great-grandfather, who was nearly blind, and of being interested in his many thrilling tales of the Revolutionary war. John Apple moved with his family to Marion county about 1827 or 1828, settling in Warren township, one and one-half miles northeast of Irvington. He entered eighty acres of land, which he cleared, and lived in his log cabin on this farm until his death. He is buried in Anderson cemetery, one mile northeast of Irvington. Both he and wife were members of the Baptist Church. Their children were: Solomon, Elias, John, Michael, Andrew, Judith and Polly.

Andrew Apple was born Nov. 30, 1817, either in Pennsylvania or Ohio. On Dec. 1, 1836, in Marion county, he married Catherine Shearer, born in Hamilton county, Ohio, daughter of Andrew and Mary Magdalena Shearer, the former of whom was a Pennsylvania German who settled first in Hamilton county, but later was a pioneer in Marion county, Ind. He entered land in Warren township, and was a neighbor of John Apple. Andrew Apple cleared up an eighty-acre farm, built a log house and barn, and resided in Marion county until his death, Feb. 3, 1899. Before his marriage he had entered forty acres, later entering another forty, and afterward adding to his land until he had 160 acres. The hewed log house still stands on the same spot where he placed it. Both he and his wife were respected citizens, and were leading members of the Methodist Church, in which he was a class leader and steward. Andrew Apple was one of the founders and builders of the old log church at Bethel, which preceded the present one, and also the church at Lawrence. His children were: James Marion, born Feb. 8, 1838; Valentine, Nov. 29, 1840; Andrew, Oct. 30, 1860; Sarah Ann, Nov. 14, 1843; and Elzina, April 21, 1847. The mother of these children died March 18, 1899.

Valentine Apple was reared amid pioneer surroundings, and his early education was obtained in a subscription school held in an old log school-house with very primitive furnishings. During the summers he was expected to work on the farm, and was kept at home whenever it was thought necessary, and occasionally there was too much snow, or he had no shoes, and thus was not able to attend school very regularly. The shoes of the family were made by his father from leather tanned from the hide taken to a neighboring tannery. When twenty-one years of age he remembers assisting to raise a frame barn on Solomon Kuhn's farm, for that was a very memorable day to him, as on that same evening he enlisted for service in the Civil war. On Nov. 29, 1861, he was sworn in at Indianapolis, as a private of Company K, 52d Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, which contract he kept until honorably discharged at Canton, Miss., when he immediately re-enlisted in the same organization for three years. He was elected by his comrades and promoted to be duty sergeant in 1862, and to be orderly sergeant when his regiment was consolidated with the 50th Ind. Inf. Later he was commissioned second lieutenant, but refused to accept this honor as the war was then over. He served with his regiment, marching in Missouri and Kansas after Price, for forty-one days, covering 750 miles from and returning to St. Louis. His army experiences were in Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Alabama and Georgia. His battles were: Siege of Fort Donelson, siege of Corinth, Fort Pillow, Nashville, Fort Blakeley, Tupelo, River Lake, Durhamville, Tenn., Jackson, Miss., and small battles and skirmishes too numerous to mention. His nearest danger to death was when a ball grazed the right side of his head, close enough to smart the skin, and when he was attacked with swamp fever when he was obliged to be in a hospital six weeks. His record is that of an active soldier and faithful officer, one who took part in all the fights that his regiment was in, and also in dangerous small ones while out with squads.

After the war Mr. Apple returned to his father's farm, and was married in Warren township, Marion county, Aug. 22, 1867, to Ann Clark, born near Irvington, Ind., March 18, 1840, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Askren) Clark. Their children were as follows: Lena and Sanora, twins, born Oct. 16, 1868; Claretta Anice, July 21, 1878; Maggie Esmer, Jan. 4, 1881; Elsie Jane, Aug. 27, 1884; Byron P., Jan. 3, 1870; Austin Ora, Jan. 25, 1873; Henry M., April 27, 1876; Andrew Clark, Aug. 2, 1883 (died Aug. 16, 1883). Lena married Albert J. Newhouse, farmer on the home place, and their children are: Andrew Valentine, Morris Byron and Omer Austin. Sanora married James Grove, a farmer in Warren township, and their children were: Walter (deceased), Celestia and Everett. Claretta Anice married Oscar J. Kuhn, a farmer in Iowa, and their children are: Vernie, Gladys, Fay and Kennett. Austin Ora married Carrie Willman, is a farmer in Warren township, and his children are: Gertrude, Mabel, Leona and Julia Ann. Maggie Esmer died Jan. 14, 1888.

Mrs. Apple is a daughter of Joseph Clark, born in Pennsylvania and married in Hamilton county, Ohio, where he went with his father in boyhood. Elizabeth Askren, his second wife, was born in Pennsylvania, daughter of Thomas and Helena (Mundell) Askren. Both families were among pioneers in Hamilton county. Joseph Clark moved to Marion county, Ind., after the birth of two children to his second union, namely: Nancy, born Sept. 9, 1824; and Sarah, born April 12, 1827, then a babe in arms, who died in Marion county aged twenty-one years. This removal was in 1827, and they came in a wagon, and settled five miles east of Indianapolis, where Mr. Clark entered 160 acres of land, paying $1.25 per acre, and they lived in a log cabin which had been built by his brother Caleb. It had neither floor, door nor windows, and wolves would howl around it at night and hundreds of Indians would call on them, passing along the old National road. It was necessary to keep big fires at night in order to frighten away the wild animals. All the clearing that had yet been done was represented by five brush heaps. Mr. Clark had been a soldier in the war of 1812, and had a land warrant for eighty acres, subsequently purchasing the rest of his property. He succeeded in clearing up this farm, and lived on it until his death at the age of sixty-three years. In politics he was a Democrat. Both he and wife belonged to the Baptist Church. Their children were: Nancy, born Sept. 9 or 10, 1824; Sarah, April 12, 1827; Eleanor, Aug. 9, 1830; Margaret, Dec. 23, 1832; Henry, April 2, 1834; George W., May 2, 1837; Ann, March 18, 1840; James H., Jan. 24, 1843; Thomas Jefferson, Feb. 12, 1845.

Joseph Clark died from the effects of an accident. His first wife had been Mary Parker, and bore him two children: one that died in infancy, and Mary. His second wife, Elizabeth, died in December, 1864. Two of Joseph Clark's sons were soldiers in the Civil war; George W., in the 79th Indiana, of which he was second lieutenant, and James H., who was orderly sergeant of the 70th Indiana, and both were killed in the service.

Mr. Valentine Apple bought eighty partly-cleared acres of his present farm, "Fortwood," on which stood a house and barn, and for this he paid fifty dollars an acre to Col. George Parker, which was less than its value. The family lived in the log house until he built his present one and one-half story frame dwelling. He inherited forty acres from his father, and now owns 111 acres, a part of which is cut off by the railroad. His farm is in good condition, and his buildings are of a substantial character.

In politics Mr. Apple is a Republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, when he was a soldier at St. Louis. He has served as supervisor of his township. He belongs to James Beard Post, No. 433, G. A. R., at Lawrence. Both he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MACDONALD WALTERS. For the past twenty-five years the gentleman whose name heads this sketch, has been confined to his bed, but he has borne his sufferings with remarkable fortitude, and directed the management of his affairs with a clear head and keen foresight, such as to invoke the admiration of all who know him. Mr. Walters was born in Owen county, Ind., Nov. 10, 1833, son of William and Catherine (Asher) Walters, the former of whom was a son of Robert Walters.

(1) The progenitor of the American branch of the Walters family was a native of Wales, and probably came to this country during Revolutionary times. Among his children was Robert.

(II) Robert Walters was born in Virginia, but came to Indiana at a very early day, locating in Owen county, where he cleared off a farm, and resided until 1828, when he removed to Morgan county, and entered the land upon which our subject now resides. Until his death Robert Walters made this property his home.

(III) William Walters was born in Kentucky, but was reared in Owen county, where he bought government land and cleared it, residing upon it until his death.

(IV) MacDonald Walters, remained with his father until he was twenty-four, when the former gave him 400 acres of land, all wild. He cleared over 200 of it, and made a good home, where he was married. In the fall of 1861, he enlisted in Co. B, 59th Ind. Regt., and was honorably discharged at the close of 1862, on account of disability. His trouble increased, until since December, 1882, he has been confined to his bed. Such cases as this bring with full force to the thoughtful what the brave boys of the sixties endured for their country.

In 1857, Mr. Walters married Margaret E. Patrick, born in Putnam county, Ind., daughter of Gabriel and Keziah, both of Kentucky, who came to Indiana at an early day, and became successful farmers in Putnam county, after some years spent as pioneers. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Walters: One died in infancy; Deoti died at the age of twenty-one; Leoni married Charles Woffetts; Lucy married William Shake; Edwin married Hattie Beenan, and was a farmer of Adams township; Hester married John Smedley; Rutford R. married Jeynette Colman, a farmer of Illinois; William W. married Cora Sterwelt, and is a farmer of Morgan county; Garfield P., at home, married Edna Mugg; and two died in infancy. All of the children have been given good educations.

In politics Mr. Walters is a Republican. He is an ex-member of the I. O. O. F. That the government appreciates his service is shown in the fact that he receives $72 per month pension, but this does not compensate him for his suffering and the loss of his limbs. Still, with the cheerfulness which is characteristic of him, he bears his burden, and is one of the favorites of the neighborhood, his friends coming in to spend the evening about his bedside, and going away profited by his words of wisdom.

DR. A. A. CECIL, coroner of Delaware county, and a physician of note, whose field of practice is the city of Muncie and vicinity, was born three miles southeast of Muncie, in Delaware county, Jan. 25, 1854, son of Samuel and Rhoda (Truitt) Cecil, and grandson of Aaron and Anna (Springer) Cecil.

Aaron Cecil came from Miami county, Ohio, near Hardin, in 1831, to Delaware county as a pioneer, making the journey with a team of horses, a wagon and two yoke of oxen with a big covered ox-wagon, and his wife and eldest daughter rode horseback the entire distance. Mrs. Cecil carrying her youngest daughter, a child, most of the way in her arms. Aaron Cecil purchased land in Perry township, and cleared his farm from the woods, building a log cabin which is still standing. He improved his farm, and in later years built a good home, becoming a substantial citizen. He was a member of the old State militia, and his brother, Ingraham Cecil, was in the war of 1812, participating in the battle of the Thames, Canada, and saw Tecumseh shot by a private soldier. Aaron Cecil was an old-line Whig in politics, and an old-time Methodist, assisting to build the early churches of this section, and was a man of strong character. He died aged about seventy years, in 1858, the father of John Springer, Zachariah W., Elihu, Samuel, Gordon, Sarah Ann, Rebecca and Mary.

Samuel Cecil, father of Dr. A. A., was born Nov. 23, 1824, in Miami county, Ohio, and was but seven years old when he came with his parents to Indiana, of the journey to which State he can relate many interesting accounts. He assisted his father in the clearing of the land, and attended the old log schoolhouse. After marriage he settled on a farm three miles south of Muncie, known as the old Town Hill farm, the site of the old Indian town, and many Indian relics have been found on this place. The tribe took a prominent part in the battle of Tippecanoe, and being badly punished never returned to the old town. A brass kettle, which Mr. Cecil as a lad of fifteen years helped to unearth, is supposed to have contained money when buried, and it is supposed that it was dug up and emptied of its contents by a white man who had made his home with the Indians. On this farm Mr. Cecil built a durable log house, in which all of his children, Dr. A. A., Ann Stewart, and Mrs. Sarah G. Stephens, were born. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil were prominent members of the Methodist Church in Delaware county and he was class leader and steward thereof. For the past eleven years Mr. Cecil has lived retired in Muncie, residing in his fine home on property on Kirby avenue, where he built in 1896. He is a typical Indiana pioneer, and is much respected and esteemed in his community.

Mr. Samuel Cecil was married in Center township to Rhoda Truitt, who was born in Adams county, Ohio, July 25, 1829, daughter of George and Frances (Waldon) Truitt. George Truitt descended from Scotch ancestors, and was formerly a farmer in Ohio, but removed to Delaware county, Ind., and settled in Center township in 1834, clearing up a farm of 160 acres from the woods. He lived to be about seventy-five years old, and reared a large family of children.

Dr. A. A. Cecil was reared on the old homestead, and when a boy worked at the usual pioneer farmer boy's tasks. He first attended the district school, which was held in a small frame house in the woods, his first teacher being Miss Mary Winslow. When about twelve years of age he came to Muncie, and rode to and from public school on horseback. Dr. Cecil still possesses the saddle-bags in which he carried his books, and which are still in an excellent state of preservation, although they are now very old, having been purchased by his father from Rev. John Trego, an itinerant Methodist minister. During the summers the Doctor worked on the farm, and in winters until eighteen years of age he went to Muncie Academy. After marriage he settled on a farm in Center township, and in 1880 began the study of medicine with Dr. T. J. Boles, of Muncie, as preceptor. He then attended the Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati, 1882-3, and again in 1885-6, graduating therefrom in the latter year. In Wayne county, in 1883, he began the practice of his profession, and continued there two years, and after his graduation took up his practice in Muncie. In 1886 he went to Nemaha county, Kans., but returned to Delaware county, Ind., in 1891, practicing in Cowan until March, 1896, since which time, he has been following his profession in Muncie. He is well known throughout the county as a physician of skill, as well as a man prominent in public life. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1904 was elected coroner of Delaware county by an excellent majority. He is an unaffiliated member of the I. O. O. F. He is a member of the Delaware County Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a subscriber to the leading medical journals of the day, and keeps himself acquainted with modern discoveries and inventions. He is the possessor of a valuable medical library.

On February 22, 1877, at the age of twenty-three years, Dr. A. A. Cecil was united in marriage in Delaware county, with Miss Maggie Drennen, who was born in Iowa, daughter of George, and his wife (whose maiden name was Guthrie). To this union there was born one son, Carl, who is now an expert electrician of Muncie. Mrs. Cecil's death occurred June 16, 1878, and Dr. Cecil was married (second) in the fall of 1882, in Portland, Jay Co., Ind., to Miss Emma J. Roach, born March 7, 1863, in Portland, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Barrick) Roach. To this second union there were born eight children, four sons and four daughters, as follows: Herman M., Ralph V., Anna Lucille, Ethel G., Rhoda E., Samuel R., Albert Gordon and Mabel F.

During his residence at Muncie, Dr. Cecil has made many friends, both personal and professional. He is favorably known in the various organizations with which he has connected himself, and worthily represents the old pioneer stock from which he has come.

REASON T. HARRIS, a substantial agriculturist and veteran of the great Civil war, who is engaged in farming in Blackford county, Ind., near Eaton, was born Oct. 7, 1835, in Delaware county, near Eaton, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Denman) Harris.

Francis Harris, grandfather of Reason T., was a pioneer of Athens county, Ohio, and in 1829-30 removed with his family to Union township, Delaware county, Ind., settling at the present site of Eaton, this locality at that time being nearly all woodland. There were few settlers, and deer, wolves and other wild game were plentiful. Mr. Harris cleared a farm where the brick house built later by Charles Carters now stands, at Henpeck, built a dam on the Mississinewa river, and a grist mill of logs, the mill also containing a corn cracker. The mill stones were "nigger heads" split in two and dressed so that they would grind, and were but two and one-half feet across. Mr. Harris resided on his farm, which lay along the river, all of his life, and there died at an advanced age. His children were: Rachel, Jane, Hannah, Jacob, Isaac, Abraham and Benjamin.

Benjamin Harris was born in Athens county, Ohio, in 1809. He there married Elizabeth Denman, born in 1810, daughter of Samuel Denman, and their children were: David, Francis, Hannah, Reason T. and George, all of whom with the exception of Hannah and Francis were born in Indiana. Benjamin Harris came to Indiana by an ox team and wagon, and settled along the river in the woods, where he entered eighty acres and erected a log cabin. Here he continued until he removed farther West, to Iowa, remaining there about eight years, but returned to Delaware county, locating on the farm of ninety acres, on which John Morris now lives. This farm belonged to his father's estate, and here Benjamin died aged forty years, shortly after returning from Iowa. His wife survived to the age of eighty-six years, and died July 10, 1897, at the home of her son, Reason T. She had married for her second husband, Albert Green, a farmer of Delaware county. Benjamin Harris was a Republican in politics, and a stanch Union man, having two sons in the Civil war—Reason T. and David.

Reason T. Harris was reared among the pioneers, and received his education in an old log schoolhouse. He worked on the farm continuously during the summers, but attended a part of the time during the winters the subscription schools, which were the best of the kind at that period, the teacher boarding around at the homes of the pupils. In 1854, when nineteen years old, he was married at Eaton to Hannah Roberts, born in Wayne county, Ind., daughter of John and Susie Roberts. For two years following their marriage, Mr. Harris and his wife lived on his father's farm, and when it was sold he bought forty acres in Delaware county, all of which had been cleared except seven acres. He lived here for some years, and on this farm his first wife died. They had two children: Benjamin; and Sarah, who died in young womanhood. Mr. Harris continued to live on his farm and improved it with a log cabin and log stable.

Mr. Harris was married (second) in Delaware county, to Amanda Cochran, born in that county, daughter of Daniel Cochran, a pioneer of Delaware county, who had cleared up a good farm there. The children of the second marriage were: Ella, Amanda, Laura (who died aged thirty-one years) and William (who died aged forty years). The mother of these children died Nov. 18, 1872, and Mr. Harris was married (third) Dec. 5, 1873, to Mary Jane Shreve, born Feb. 12, 1833, in Pendleton county, W. Va., daughter of William and Rebecca (Hedrich) Shreve, and had one son, David, who farms the homestead, is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Red Men at Hartford City. William Shreve was a son of John and Eliza Shreve, the former of whom crossed the Atlantic Ocean with his parents when six weeks old, probably from England. His children were: Daniel, John, Amos, James, Benjamin, William, Jennie, Eliza, Polly, Kitty and Lucinda. John Shreve died in West Virginia, in old age, and his wife lived to be ninety-six years old.

William Shreve was born in Pendleton county, W. Va., where he married Rebecca Hedrich, of German stock, daughter of Charles Hedrich. He first settled on his father's land, to which he added by purchase. He was a soldier in the Home Guards in West Virginia during the Civil war, and was killed by the Confederates in a skirmish. He had two sons in the Civil war, Charles W. and William C. His children were: Mary Jane, Susannah, Charles Wesley, Louisa, William Clark, Ann Elizabeth, Zachariah and George. Mrs. Shreve moved with her family to Indiana about 1867, and settled in Delaware county, near Selma, where her son, Charles Wesley, lived on a farm.

After his third marriage Mr. Harris settled in Delaware county, three miles east of Granville, where he had ninety acres of improved land, and they remained there until 1883, when he bought his present farm of eighty acres, on which he has made many improvements, including extensive draining and the building of a substantial frame house. He is a Republican in politics, and belongs to the Red Men at Hartford City.

David Harris married, Feb. 8, 1904, Mrs. Isabel (Gauce) Confer Harris, born in Shelby county, Ind., Jan. 5, 1867, daughter of John and Mary (Johnson) Gaunce. John Gaunce was a farmer of Shelby county, and married (first) Chloe Confer. Mrs. Harris married (first) Mr. Charles Confer, (second) William T. Harris, a son of Reason T. Harris by his second marriage, who died Jan. 22, 1902, and she was subsequently married to David Harris as above mentioned.

In politics Mr. Reason T. Harris is a Republican, and he has always been an earnest supporter of the Government. In January, 1865, he enlisted in Delaware county, Ind., as a private of Company B, 147th Ind. V. I., and was honorably discharged at Harper's Ferry, in August, 1865, after serving nine months in Virginia. For six weeks he was confined in a hospital with typhoid pneumonia, and has never entirely recovered from its effects.

MAHLON JOHNSON. There is to be found in the township of Monrovia, Morgan Co., Ind., a settlement of the Society of Friends, among whom are men of probity, honesty of purpose and uprightness of living. These men are simple in word and manner of living; they are in the world, but not of it. They make no oaths in courts of justice, nor are words of vanity found in their mouths. Their simple promise is considered sufficient, even in legal matters, for a Quaker values his word as he does his life. These good people, quiet and unassuming as they are, exert untold influence in a community. Such a man is Mahlon Johnson, a successful farmer of the township, who was born Aug. 24, 1835, in Monroe township, Morgan county, son of Philip and Martha (Hubbard) Johnson, natives of North Carolina, the latter born in Randolph county.

(I) Robert Johnson was a native of North Carolina, but of English descent, the progenitors of the family evidently coming to the New World in Colonial days, and there he died, respected by all.

(II) William Johnson was born and reared in North Carolina, where he married. At an early day, when the nineteenth century was still in its teens, he came to Richmond, Ind., and settling in the woods, lived the life of the pioneer of that day. Working hard, he cleared off his farm, but in 1832, he came to Morgan county, and there lived until his death.

(III) Philip Johnson, son of William, and father of Mahlon, was thirteen years of age when the family came to Indiana, but in 1827, he left his father to come to Morgan county with his wife and brother Ashley, and they settled upon land his father had previously entered. William Johnson in all entered 960 acres in Monroe township, which he and his boys and sons-in-law cleared off, and brought into a state of cultivation. Although he was not yet of age, his father allowed him to start out for himself, and the young fellow began to fell the trees with a might, feeling that each stroke brought him nearer success. Not only did the family have to contend with the savage wild beast, but also with the Indians, and the history of those times would make exciting reading. The mother was the good genius of the family, always busy, spinning, weaving and cooking. Mahlon Johnson has the old spinning wheel his mother used, and it is quite a curiosity in these days. Their hard work was rewarded by success, and Philip and his wife lived upon this property until they died, he passing away Jan. 19, 1879, and she March 14, 1886. Both were members of the Society of Friends. Six children were born to them: Emeline E., deceased; Eliza, deceased; Mahlon; Mahala, deceased, twin to Mahlon; George H.; and Ashley, a resident of Monroe township, where he is a farmer. These children were given good educations, and now own excellent homes.

(IV) Mahlon Johnson has grown up in the community, and when twenty-six years of age, began learning the trade of a carpenter. For twelve years he followed this, and then went on the farm, and has been a farmer ever since. While following his trade, he went to Wayne county, Ind., and lived there for nine years, but has lived in Morgan county all his life, with the exception of those years, and believes it is the best section of the State.

On Sept. 4, 1861, Mahlon Johnson was united in marriage with Sarah A. Hampton, born in Wayne county, Ind., a daughter of David and Jane (Moon) Hampton, born in Ohio and North Carolina, respectively. The Moons moved to Ohio in 1812, overland, and Jane Moon walked most all the way. After living as pioneers in Ohio, they came to Indiana in 1818, and took up government land in Morgan county. They lived on the place where they settled, until they passed away, both consistent members of the Society of Friends. They had a family of eleven children, eight of whom grew to maturity, and Sarah A. was the eighth in order of birth.

The following family has been born to Mahlon Johnson and wife: Ella married L. Riter, and resided at Indianapolis, where she died, leaving one child, Helen, who is with her maternal grandfather; Mary is a teacher at Pasadena, Cal.; Philip, who after completing his common school education, took a mechanical course of the Scranton, Pa., correspondence school, being a natural born machinist, and now assists his father on the farm, married Gertrude Harvey, and has one child, Kathaleen; and Jane M. is deceased.

Mahlon Johnson is a member of the Society of Friends, and is one of its most earnest and consistent members. He votes for the man rather than the party, believing that sound principles and good morals will insure better government than certain set platforms. He is living on the farm his grandfather entered so many years ago. His farm consists of 135 acres of good land, adjoining Monrovia, and has telephone connection. His success in farming has been remarkable, and he is looked up to as one of the most representative farmers and Friends in Morgan county.

LYCURGUS P. McCORMACK, whose important position as State labor commissioner of Indiana has enabled him to do much in the interest of peace and the progress of industry, is a resident of Indianapolis and a member of the third generation of his family to live in that city. The name of McCormack has been known and respected in Indianapolis from its very beginning, for John McCormack—a brother of James McCormack, grandfather of Lycurgus P.—built the first house in what is now the capital of Indiana, settling here in 1820. Descendants of both brothers are numerous in Indianapolis and other cities of the State, and, indeed, are found throughout the country.

The McCormacks are of Scottish extraction, and the ancestors of this branch moved from Scotland to the North of Ireland, whence the early ancestors in America emigrated. They crossed the ocean about the year 1700, and settled first in Pennsylvania, thence moving to near Winchester, Va. When the troubles which culminated in the Revolution began they sympathized with the Colonial cause, and John McCormack, Sr., the great-grandfather of Lycurgus P. McCormack, according to the records enlisted three times, twice from Virginia and once from Pennsylvania, being in the service from 1775 to 1783. He was born Aug. 13, 1754, in Virginia, and on March 24, 1785, married Catharine Drennan, who was born Jan. 25, 1769. They had eight sons and six daughters. The family moved from Virginia to Butler county, Ohio, and in 1808 farther out into what was then known as the Northwest Territory, settling near the present site of Connersville, Ind., where they built the first cabin in the settlement. The Indian fort was still there and occupied. John McCormack was a man of fine character, highly regarded for his ability and intelligence, and took an active part in the organization of Fayette county. The first grand jury met in his house. He died April 18, 1837, and his wife survived him many years, having reached the great age of ninety-three years when she died, Feb. 22, 1862. She received a pension as a widow of a Revolutionary soldier until her death.

James McCormack, son of John and Catharine (Drennan) McCormack, was born in 1797 in Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio, and was only a boy when his parents came to Indiana. While still young he learned the trade of millwright, which he followed all his life, and many of the old-fashioned water-mills in central Indiana were of his construction. His brother, John (born in Hamilton county Ohio, Sept. 25, 1791—died Aug. 25, 1875) had moved out with his family to the paternal home near Connersville after the war of 1812, in which he served. There he remained until after the treaty of St. Mary's (1818), when he decided to remove to the "New Purchase," the tract of land in central Indiana secured by that treaty. He and his family started for the new location Feb. 18, 1820, accompanied by twelve men, who helped to cut the road, and though the distance was but sixty miles the journey by sleds took eight days, the party landing on the banks of the White river Feb. 26, 1820. They camped on a spot near where the old National road bridge was afterward erected, and the double log cabin which was to become historic as the first white man's dwelling in what is now the capital city of Indiana was commenced at once. It was located on the White river, on the narrow, wedge-shaped piece of ground lying between what is now West Washington street and the National road, and stood between the two bridges which later were built across the river at the base of the wedge, being just north of the east end of the Washington street bridge. Some years ago there was a popular movement on foot to secure this piece of ground for a public park, to contain a reproduction of the McCormack cabin, which went to ruin many years ago, but nothing has been accomplished in that direction. The log house was typical of the times. It contained two rooms, each eighteen feet square, separated by a passage eight or ten feet wide, and the outside was often decorated with coonskins, bearskins and more frequently deerskins, stretched out to dry. The early settlers often wore breeches made of deerskin. John McCormack located on the east bank of the river because the stream could not be forded, and moreover, the abundance of fish was an advantage not to be overlooked in the days when the immediate food supply was a question of even greater importance than it is now. James and Samuel McCormack, brothers of John, were of the party mentioned as helping him to move and erect his cabin, after which they returned to Connersville. Part of James McCormack's family had made the journey, and he came back with his wife and the rest of his household in March. Samuel McCormack removed hither in the fall. The Indians were still in the neighborhood at the time of John McCormack's settlement, and the nearest white settlers were those on the bluffs of the river near what is now Waverly. He kept the first tavern at that point, and when the commissioners chosen to decide upon a location for the seat of government visited this section they boarded with him part of the time. On June 7, 1820, Indianapolis was chosen, and the members of the delegation were greeted at the McCormack cabin by the few settlers of the vicinity. The McCormacks—John and James and their families—lived here for two years, and then moved about four miles up the river, to what is now the Pitts farm, on the south edge of Washington township. They bought government land, and built on the east bank, almost directly west of the present site of the Country Club. There John McCormack built the first saw mill in the county, and some of the timbers of the old dam can yet be seen at low watermark. The brothers continued to live together and operate the mill until James moved to Rush county, in 1824, after which John ran it until his death, in 1825. He had married in Hamilton, Ohio, in 1811, Bethiah Case, and they had a family of eight children, their twin daughters, Tabitha and Lavina, celebrating their fourth birthday the day after the family arrived at Indianapolis. After her husband's death Mrs. Bethiah McCormack married a Mr. King, by whom she had four children, and he pre-deceased her. She continued to live near the bluffs until after the close of the Civil war, when she moved to Arcadia, Ind., to live with her twin daughters until her death, in 1879.

James McCormack, who as related made the journey from Connersville to Indianapolis with his brother John, and himself settled here in March, 1820, went back to Rush county in 1824. In 1826 he moved to Marion, Shelby county, whence he returned to Indianapolis in March, 1832. His home was on the ground now included in Crown Hill cemetery, which he had bought the previous year. There he built a house in which he lived for three years, when he moved to Millersville to build a mill for Noah Leverton, on the site of the present mill at that point. His stay there was limited to a single season, and the following spring, 1836, he located on what was known as the Morrow farm, now a part of Riverside Park, and traversed by the Big Four railroad. In 1838 he bought the old mill site where his brother John had built a mill, putting up one which he conducted for some years. Disposing of this he moved to the Huston farm, and thence to the Hoover Mill, on the other side of the river. In 1845 he made his home on the Baldwin farm, where he lived a year and then he returned to the Hoover Mill, where he remained until the big freshet of 1846-47. After that he had his home on the Martindale farm, on Eagle creek, whence he moved to a place he had bought a little south. This farm he sold and in 1853 moved into Hendricks county, near Cartersburg, where he bought land and built the mill which he was operating at the time of his death, Oct. 6, 1858.

At Connersville James McCormack married Patsy (Martha) Perkins, a native of South Carolina, daughter of John Perkins, who was also born in that State. John Perkins and his wife were both of German descent. They were pioneers in Rush county, Ind., where Mr. Perkins engaged in farming, kept a dry-goods and grocery store, and also bought stock. He and his wife died in that county. They had a large family. Eight sons and six daughters were born to James and Patsy (Perkins) McCormack, of whom five were surviving at last accounts: Jediah R., of Indianapolis; Amos P. (twin of Jediah), of Lebanon, Ind.; Ira M., of Jamestown, Ind.; James W., of Bainbridge, Ind.; and Kate, wife of William H. Eagle, of Frankfort, Ind. The mother died in Frankfort in 1880, at the age of seventy-seven years. She was a Methodist in religious faith, while Mr. McCormack was a Baptist. He was one of the first three commissioners of Marion county.

Hezekiah S. McCormack, son of James and Patsy (Perkins) McCormack, was born at Connersville, Ind., and was only an infant when the family first came to Indianapolis. He experienced many phases of life in the early days, the frequent removals of the family giving him many opportunities to become familiar with the typical features of the times. He learned the tailor's trade, which he followed most of his life. For about twenty-five years he made his home in Danville, Hendricks county, and for four years he lived in Greencastle, returning to Indianapolis in 1873, after an absence of over a quarter of a century. He spent the remainder of his life in the city, dying here in 1885, when sixty-six years old.

Mr. McCormack married Lucinda Beatty, a native of Highland county, Ohio, born near Hillsboro. Her father, John Beatty, was born in Virginia, and he and his young wife, Docia (Carter), made the journey from that State to Highland county, Ohio, on horseback. They settled on a farm near Hillsboro, and his remains are interred on that place. Mrs. Hezekiah McCormack died in 1887, at the age of seventy-one years. When a young girl she lived with her sister in the brick house on Washington street (next to the Lorraine Hotel), which was torn down the last week in November, 1901, after standing seventy years. She and her husband were Methodists in religious belief. They had three sons: Zuinglius K. (an attorney), Lycurgus P. and Charles W., all citizens of Indianapolis.

Lycurgus P. McCormack was born Jan. 17, 1846, in Danville, Hendricks county, Ind., and there spent the first nineteen years of his life. He attended the public schools and the Danville Academy (which has since become the Danville Normal), and continued his education at the Asbury University, at Greencastle (which has since become the DePauw University), from which he was graduated in 1873. He learned the printer's trade, and became a master book and job printer in the old Cincinnati book and job office, following his trade for some twenty-five years. In 1874 he was admitted to the Bar at Greencastle, but he never practiced, though he is now a member of the Indianapolis Bar. He is a Republican in politics. In 1897 Mr. McCormack was appointed State labor commissioner by Governor Mount, his first commission expiring in 1903.

Mr. McCormack resides at No. 312 Tenth street, Indianapolis, and he owns a farm in Hamilton county, this State, which is one of the finest properties to be found in that region of fine farms. The way in which it is maintained reflects credit upon his skill and ability. He is unmarried.

REV. JOHN W. APPLE. Among the old and honored families of Indiana, is that of Apple, a worthy representative of which is found in the Rev. John W. Apple, a minister of the Christian Church at Oaklandon.

The family was founded in Centre county, Pa., in the early part of the eighteenth century, and the name was pronounced Opple, and sometimes spelled Appel. In early days the Pennsylvania progenitor removed to Clermont county, Ohio, about sixteen miles above Cincinnati, and there cleared a large farm on which he lived for many years. Three of his sons, John, Christopher and William, removed from Ohio to Marion county, Ind., in huge Conestoga wagons, and all settled with their families in Lawrence township, entering heavily timbered land. John settled two miles southwest of the present village of Oaklandon, William settled on the present site of Oaklandon, whence, however, he soon removed to Hancock county, settling near McCordsville, and Christopher settled on a farm adjoining (now owned by the Rev. John W. Apple) where the Mock farm is now located. Here Christopher Apple entered 240 acres in the woods, and built for his first home, a round log cabin. Later he erected one of hewed logs, which is still standing, and here he lived until removing to the village of Oaklandon, where he had purchased residence property, and where he died Feb. 28, 1862, aged eighty-seven years, eleven months and twenty days. He was a Universalist in religious belief, and gave a part of his farm for cemetery purposes, this now being known as the Mock cemetery. He married Julia Ann Schafer, who died on the farm Oct. 19, 1852, aged seventy-three years. To them were born these children: Andrew S., born Dec. 15, 1795, in Centre county, Pa.; Christopher; John; Peter; Mary; Sarah; Elizabeth Mary, born in 1799 (the latter married George Pickle, Sr., and died Nov. 20, 1861, aged sixty-two years, nine months, two days); Catherine, born in 1813, died April 14, 1884, aged seventy-one years, two months, four days; Susan; Martha; Daniel, born in 1819, died June 7, 1880, aged seventy-one years, nine days.

Christopher Apple, son of Christopher, Sr., was born April 28, 1807, in Clermont county, Ohio, and was married in Ohio to Catherine Crumbaugh, of Pennsylvania-Dutch stock, and probably born in Pennsylvania. Immediately after marriage Mr. and Mrs. Apple removed to Montgomery county, six miles from Dayton, and there lived for seven years, Mr. Apple owning eighty acres. In 1837 he came to Marion county, Ind., making the journey in a Conestoga wagon, and settled on eighty acres, which he purchased from a Mr. Porter, this land having had no improvement at all. He built a hewed log house of two stories, and later a frame addition, cleared his land, purchased forty acres west of it from the Snyder heirs, and 140 acres in the northwest corner of Hancock county, near the line, and became a substantial citizen, leaving at his death a considerable property to his children. In 1859 Mr. Apple built a good brick house, in which his son, the Rev. John W. Apple now resides. He was a staunch Jacksonian Democrat, and a strong Union man, and one of his sons, Peter, served in the Civil war, being first in the three years' service, and later veteranizing with Company K, 11th Ind. V. I. Mr. Apple was a member and elder of the Christian Church, which he joined in 1865, and in the faith of which he died Jan. 24, 1871, his widow surviving until Jan. 10, 1876. Their children were: Eliza Jane, born Feb. 20, 1830; Mary, March 30, 1832; Peter, Feb. 29, 1836; Phoebe, Dec. 11, 1838; John W., Sept. 7, 1841; Mahlon, Feb. 19, 1844; and William M., Aug. 6, 1846.

John W. Apple was born Sept. 7, 1841, in the old log house that stood across the road from the present residence, and attended school in the old log school-house, which was fitted with puncheon floor, split log benches, and writing desk along one wall, supported by pins. This subscription school Mr. Apple attended for about three months each winter, until he was thirteen years old, when he commenced attending a subscription school in Oaklandon, where he continued for three years, afterward entering a graded school in a frame school-house, where he was in attendance until twenty years of age. He was assistant teacher for two years, but his health failing he relinquished this work and for four years was engaged on his father's farm, when he began teaching a district school in Hancock county, continuing here for two terms. Mr. Apple then entered the Northwestern Christian University—now Butler College—in the preparatory department, which he attended one year, and after leaving this institution taught in the Oaklandon graded schools as principal, later teaching district No. 1. In 1868 he attended the Pendleton Academy, and during the sickness of a teacher at that place, taught school. Later he taught in Cumberland for two years, and then in districts Nos. 4 and 7, when he became principal of the graded schools of Lawrence and Oaklandon, in which position he continued until his retirement from teaching. His work as an educator covered a period of thirteen years, and during this time he became well and favorably known as a pedagogue, many of his former pupils now being men and women of prominence, holding positions of honor and responsibility in the various walks of life, for which they were fitted by Mr. Apple's early instructions. After giving up the profession, Mr. Apple engaged in farming, in which he has continued to the present time, now owning 170 acres, including the old homestead.

Mr. Apple was married (first), March 10, 1872, to Sarah A. Mock, born July 7, 1849, in Lawrence township, Marion county, who died Jan. 25, 1879, daughter of John and Leah (Klefer) Mock, and to this union were born: Arthur V., born Feb. 14, 1873, who owns the old Mock farm near Oaklandon, married Clara Klefer, and has one child, Edgar Allen; Edward F., born Jan. 15, 1875, a farmer three miles north of Oaklandon, married Mary A. McCord, and has two children, Beatrice L. and John H.; Mary A., born Sept. 27, 1877, married Irwin Ellsworth, of Madison county, who was educated at the State Normal School, Terre Haute, Ind., and has three children, Vennis A., Alitha B. and Frances P. Mrs. Apple was a member of the Christian Church. She was educated in an academy at Lebanon, Ind., and taught school in Hamilton county for one year. After her death Mr. Apple married, in Lawrence township, Feb. 27, 1880, Margaret J. Mock, sister of his first wife, born Nov. 27, 1854, in Oaklondon.

John Mock, who was of Pennsylvania-German stock, was born June 1, 1820, in Butler county, Ohio, son of Michael Mock, who was a pioneer of Marion county, Ind., where he settled as early as 1828, entered land in Lawrence township, and cleared a farm of 160 acres. John Mock was also a pioneer farmer, and was married June 29, 1844, to Leah Klepfer, who died Sept. 29, 1863. He owned a fine farm of 250 acres, and was a member of the Methodist Church, in which he served as a trustee. His children were: Sarah A.; Daniel; Margaret J. and Marietta. John Mock died on his farm Jan. 29, 1894, respected and honored by all who knew him.

To Mr. Apple and his second wife there were born: Demia Anna, born Dec. 6, 1880, married Pearly O. Apple, a railroad agent at Oaklondon, and they have one child, Laurel; John Porter, born Nov. 4, 1883; Miriam Mina, Dec. 11, 1886; Alta Doris, Nov. 19, 1890; and Freeman, Feb. 1, 1895.

Mr. Apple joined the Christian Church May 1, 1866, in Oaklondon, Ind., and was Sunday-school superintendent for forty years. He was ordained minister in Oaklondon in 1868, and has preached in various places since, still presiding at funerals. Mr. Apple has probably married more couples in the last thirty-five years than any other minister in this section of Indiana. In politics he is a Prohibitionist, and has voted that ticket for twenty-four years. He has been an earnest advocate of all moral reforms—especially that of temperance—taking lead in all moves looking to the removal of the saloon from his township, which has been an accomplished fact for more than six years. No man stands higher in the community than he, and during his long service as a preacher of the Gospel he has done much toward the advancement of his fellow men.

DAVID R. JOHNSON, a prosperous general farmer and stock-breeder of Pike township, Marion County, Ind., residing at New Augusta, and one of the leading men of his locality, was born in Washington county, Va., Feb. 25, 1842, son of Walter and Mary (Barb) Johnson, born in Tennessee, Oct. 10, 1810, and Washington county, Va., in 1815, respectively.

John Johnson, the grandfather, was of Irish descent, but was born in Tennessee, where he was a successful farmer. He died in Tippecanoe county, Indiana.

Walter Johnson, who became a successful farmer, became the possessor of 300 acres of land, and lived upon it until his demise, in Virginia, in 1897. His wife, Mary Barb, died in the same State in 1869. The following children were born to them: William, deceased, was a farmer; John F., living in West Virginia, was clerk of the court; Margaret, now deceased, married William Stanbus, and lived in Tennessee; Jacob H., living in Virginia, married Amanda Craig; Sarah L. married Thomas Bailey, now deceased, of Virginia; and David R. In politics the father was a Democrat, and for some time held the responsible office of sheriff of Washington county, Va. His religious convictions made him an English Lutheran.

David R. Johnson has some 240 acres of land, nearly all under the plow, although twenty acres are kept in timber land. He devotes his land to general farming and stock-raising, and finds a ready market for his products. The present property was bought by him in 1892 at New Augusta, Marion county, Ind., and since then he has made many improvements upon it, it now being one of the average farms in the township. Like his father, he is a Democrat, and a member of the English Lutheran Church, and he is a very estimable man, who has won his competency by good management.

In 1864, Mr. Johnson married Emma E. Ropp, daughter of John and Thirza (Parrot) Ropp. John Ropp was born at Winchester, Va., in 1800, and his wife was born in the same State in 1809. Following farming all his life, John Ropp was a prosperous man, and he died in 1874, while his widow survived until 1884. Early in life he was a Whig, but later became a Democrat. To himself and wife nine children were born, four of whom are still alive: Margaret; Mary; Henry; John; Emma E.; William; Jane; Susan and David. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have one child, Thirza, who married William Heath, now farming on his father-in-law's place.

JACOB YOUNG CASE, a substantial retired farmer of Jackson township, Hamilton county, a soldier of the Civil war, and the head of a respected family, was born Aug. 14, 1842, in Lockbourne, Ohio, son of Peter and Annie (Piatt) Case.

The Case family is an old one of New Jersey, of Colonial stock and English descent. Howell Case, grandfather of Jacob Young, was a farmer near Trenton, N. J., and in addition to farming was also a physician. His children were: Peter, Jacob, Rebecca, Eliza and Sarah. After the marriage of Peter the whole family removed to Pickaway county, Ohio.

Peter Case, son of Howell, was born Feb. 18, 1810, near Trenton, N. J., where he subsequently owned a farm, removing, after his marriage, as stated, to Ohio. In 1844 he and family removed with horses and wagons to Hamilton county, Ind., and settled in White River township, on forty acres cleared from the woods. In 1856 he moved to Jackson township, west of Cicero, on a tract of 153 acres, which he improved with good buildings, and upon which he resided until he retired from active life and moved to the village of Cicero, where he spent his last days, dying aged ninety-two years.

Jacob Young Case was two years old when his parents came to Hamilton county. His rearing was that of a boy on a pioneer farm, and his schooling was only such as could be obtained during a few winter months in the district school. When the Civil war broke out he was ready to offer his services to his country, but he was not the arbiter of his own fortunes until he was twenty-one, and then he enlisted in Cicero, Dec. 12, 1863, to serve three years or during the war, as a private in Company C, 130th Ind. V. I., and he served until honorably discharged Dec. 2, 1865, on account of special orders, at Charlotte, N. C., having served seven months after the actual closing of the war. He participated in the following battles: The Atlanta campaign; the thirty days' march from Nashville to Chattanooga; Buzzard's Roost; Resaca; Pumpkin Vine creek; Kenesaw Mountain; New Hope Church; battle at the old mill pond; and the siege of Atlanta, during which he was for six months and four days under fire. This regiment was one of those detailed to attack Hood, and he went to Nashville under old "Pap" Thomas, and was in the two days' fighting there. From there the regiment was sent to North Carolina and took part in the battle of Kingston, taking part in what was called the cutting off march in Tennessee, General Hood having succeeded in cutting off the regiment from reaching Nashville. This made it necessary for the regiment to march 140 miles by way of Clarksville, to reach Nashville, where they arrived on December 7th. This was a very difficult march, in a very inclement season of the year. Mr. Case recalls that in fording Duck river he was up to his arm-pits in the icy water, at ten o'clock at night, and they remained in an open field until three in the morning, when the guerrillas drove them out and they then marched to Centerville. This was particularly hard on Mr. Case as in the crossing, he had slipped on the bank of the river, and had received a severe strain in his right hip and back, which, together with the exposure following completely disabled him for a time. In fact he has never entirely recovered, although he was helped at the time by his comrades. He has a good record as a brave, loyal, faithful soldier, taking part in twenty-three battles. Although never wounded nor in a regular hospital, he will always feel the effects of his years of service in his country's cause.

After the close of the war, Mr. Case returned to Hamilton county, where he engaged in farming, and on Sept. 4, 1870, he was married, in Cicero, to Sarah J. (Simpson) Yetter, who was born July 11, 1847, near Hamilton, Butler county, Ohio, daughter of David and Amelia (Collins) Simpson, and widow of Henry E. Yetter, a soldier in Company A, 139th Ind. V. I., son of Daniel and Levina Yetter, of Henry county, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Yetter were married Dec. 4, 1864, and he died April 6, 1868, leaving his widow and one child, Amy M., who married, March 1, 1885, A. W. Voss, and lives on a farm near Cicero.

Jesse Simpson, the grandfather of Mrs. Case, was a pioneer in Butler county, Ohio, in the days when the Indians were still there and blazed paths marked the way through the forest. He improved and cleared up a farm in the woods. The children of Jesse Simpson were: William, Jesse, Polly, Ann, Elizabeth, Sarah and David. David Simpson moved to Union county in 1852, and settled on an improved farm for two years, and then moved to Wayne county, where he farmed two more years, and also engaged in a mercantile business. He then removed to Henry county where he lived for twelve years, next to Hancock county for four years, thence to Jackson township, Hamilton county, where he bought 180 acres of improved land adjoining the town of Cicero. In addition he owned considerable property in Cicero where he was also interested in a mercantile business. He died there in April, 1899, aged eighty-four years, and his wife passed away aged seventy-nine years. She was born in Somersetshire, Eng., a daughter of William Collins, of a family of Welsh extraction. William Collins died in Ohio, and when she was twelve years old she lived in Chillicothe. The children of David Simpson and wife were: Annis, born June 28, 1840, near Hamilton, Ohio; Jesse, born May 14, 1842, in Butler county, a soldier in the Civil war, a member of the 84th Ind. V. I., served three years, and at one time was hospital steward; Mary E., born Dec. 27, 1844; Sarah J., born July 11, 1847; and Amelia F., born Sept. 25, 1851. David Simpson and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was superintendent of the Sunday-school. In politics he was a Democrat, and was a strong supporter of temperance movements. He was a man of exemplary character.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Case settled on a farm belonging to Mr. Simpson, and he then bought a farm with Mr. Simpson, it being the first farm across the creek on the west of Cicero. This farm contained eighty acres, and he settled on it in 1880. On June 14th of that year, the buildings were struck by a cyclone at six o'clock in the evening. Mr. Case stepped to the door, and was blown about seventy-five yards into the orchard. The family, consisting of Mrs. Case and three children, one an infant less than two years old which, at the time, was so ill it was not expected to live, were in the house. The windows were blown in, the door blown off, and the roof, which was torn from the house, has never been seen since. The dwelling was a large farm house, 30 x 36 feet, one and a half stories in height, with heavy frames. It was blown toward the east, five feet from its foundations. The chimney was demolished, the barn was also destroyed, and every tree in the orchard was blown down. A very heavy fall of rain came at the time. It seems miraculous that neither Mr. Case nor family received any serious injury from this violent exhibition of a force of Nature too little understood at present to be sufficiently guarded from.

Mr. and Mrs. Case have had these children: Commie, born June 5, 1871, married Estella Brown, and is a barber in Cicero; Essie E., born Sept. 25, 1876, died aged three years; Fred A., born Aug. 5, 1879, married Maud McMurtry, and is a paper hanger in Cicero; and Charles C., born May 19, 1884, married Maud Stout, and is a barber in Sheridan, Indiana.

Politically Mr. Case has been identified with the Republican party ever since the first candidacy of General Grant. He is no politician, but takes a deep interest in the success of the party which he believes is in sympathy with the principles upon which our Government is founded. He belongs to Post No. 207, G. A. R., Cicero, in which he has held the position of quartermaster for ten years. He is a man who enjoys a wide acquaintance with the most reputable men of this locality, and is regarded with universal respect.

JOHN B. SHUMAN, one of the substantial men of Muncie, Ind., who is engaged in a flourishing grocery business, is a survivor of the Civil war. He was born Feb. 19, 1847, in Henry county, Ind., son of John and Lydia (Houck) Shuman, and grandson of Joseph Shuman, who came to Henry county, Ind., from Pennsylvania.

The father of Mr. Shuman died when he was but an infant, from the effects of an accident. When he was a child of seven years his mother married a second time, becoming the wife of Josephus West, of Delaware county, and her death took place when Mr. Shuman was thirteen years of age. Until his enlistment at the age of sixteen years for service in the Civil war, Mr. Shuman lived with his sister, Mahala, who had married Jerry S. West. In September, 1863, Mr. Shuman enlisted as a private in Company B, 118th Ind. V. I., in which he served out his first term of enlistment, which covered six months, and from which he was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind. During this period he had served in Tennessee, Alabama and Kentucky, participating in the battle of Walker's Ford, and was on the field and in the line of battle at Blue Springs, Tenn. After the fight at Walker's Ford he was taken ill with the measles, and was placed in the hospital at Tazewell, Tenn., where he remained but four days, having nothing to sleep upon but straw. Although he was sick for three weeks he preferred to be with his regiment at Tazewell. Upon receiving his discharge he returned to Delaware county, and after remaining at home for five months he re-enlisted in 1864 in Company H, 38th Ind. V. I., a veteran regiment, contracting to serve one year or during the war. His service continued until the close of hostilities, and he was honorably discharged and mustered out in June, 1865. During this enlistment Mr. Shuman served under General Sherman in the Atlanta campaign, and on the March to the Sea, participating in all the fighting which took place during this period, including the battle of Bentonville. As foraging was permitted during the long march to the sea Mr. Shuman remembers that he lived better on this expedition than during the previous six months, for during one week at Greenville, Tenn., and Bull's Gap, the soldiers lived on parched corn, the rations having given out. With his regiment he marched to Goldsboro and then to Raleigh, N. C., and was present when General Johnston surrendered, and the famished soldiers of the Confederate army laid down their arms. This was a notable sight and was celebrated by the victors with a great display of artillery and musketry. After this the regiment started for Washington, marching thirty-three and one-third miles every day, this being a forced march, causing many of the tired soldiers to fall by the way. It was on this account that Gen. Jefferson C. Davis was placed under arrest, as the marching was done under his orders. Mr. Shuman states that only four men of his company stacked arms at night for several nights, and once he was the only one of his company to reach the rendezvous at the appointed time, his companions straggling in all through the night. Mr. Shuman was permitted to take part in the great military pageant at Washington, and the record of his military career shows that he was a brave and faithful soldier during the whole period.

After the close of his army life Mr. Shuman returned to Delaware county. As he had providently saved his money, it had been invested for him by his brother-in-law, Jerry S. West, in a saw mill, and together they ran the mill for five years, following which Mr. Shuman settled on a farm which he continued to operate until 1890, when he removed to Muncie. For about nine years he worked for a business house in this city, and then embarked in his present grocery enterprise, in which he has met with satisfactory success.

In 1870 Mr. Shuman was married in Delaware county to Mary F. West, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Hale) West, and they have the following children: Loretta, Cora, William, Emma, Charles, Ross and Anna. Mrs. Shuman is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Shuman is identified with the Republican party, having cast every presidential vote with this organization since the second candidacy of U. S. Grant. He is a member of Williams Post, G. A. R., Muncie, of the I. O. O. F., the Independent Order of Red Men, Garfield Council, and the American Mechanics. Mr. Shuman is recognized as one of the able business men and respected citizens of Muncie, where he owns considerable valuable real estate. He has always been interested in movements looking to the public welfare of the city, especially in an educational line, and has given his family many social and educational advantages.

ASHLEY JOHNSON, a prosperous farmer of Monroe township, Morgan county, and a member of the Society of Friends, was born Nov. 2, 1843, son of Philip and Martha (Hubbard) Johnson, and the youngest in a family of six children. After receiving a common school education, at the age of twenty years he took charge of his father's farm, and has been at the same location ever since. When he began farming the property, he had 118 acres, but has added 100 acres, and has built upon the property some excellent barns, and otherwise improved it, until he now has one of the best and most productive farms in Morgan county, Indiana. In addition to carrying on general farming he buys stock which he feeds for the market.

On Feb. 22, 1865, Mr. Johnson married Elizabeth Hough, born in Wayne county, Ind., a daughter of William and Kezia Hough, both natives of North Carolina. William Hough was a son of Jonathan and Gulialma Hough, also of North Carolina. Jonathan was the son of William and Mary Hough, also of North Carolina, where they died. Jonathan and his wife came to Indiana and located in Wayne county, where they lived and died. William and Kezia lived and died in Wayne county, Ind., and all became successful farmers.

Four children have been born to Ashley Johnson and wife: The first, Emily, died at the age of eleven years; one child died in infancy; Eliza married Edward Maxwell, a farmer of Monroe township, and they have a family of three children, Edith, Howard and Anna Elizabeth; William P. married Esther Edgerton, of Barnesville, Ohio, has one child, Eva Pauline, and they live on the farm with his father. The children are well educated, and attended college at Barnesville, Ohio. All are members of the Society of Friends, the family having been carefully reared in the belief of this organization. Ashley Johnson is a Republican, but has not taken any active part in political affairs. He is well-known and highly successful, and is a man beloved for his kindness of heart and gentleness of disposition.

ISAAC POWELL, ex-auditor of Hamilton county, Ind., and a prominent and influential citizen of Noblesville, was born in Fayette county, Ind., March 1, 1842, son of Thomas and Anna (Chadwick) Powell.

The Powells came from Wales, originally, and there is a well-defined tradition that there were three brothers of the family who first made the journey. Zenas Powell, the grandfather of our subject, was born, it is believed, in Wales, and, on coming to America, prior to 1800, settled in Maryland and learned the wagon maker's trade, at which he worked until reaching maturity. He married Charity Baker, and they removed to Kentucky, becoming pioneer settlers of Bourbon county, and afterward of Nicholas county. In 1825 Zenas Powell and his wife, settled with their family of ten children five miles northwest of Connersville, Ind., where Mr. Powell cleared up a new farm of 160 acres, and here he lived until his death, at the remarkable age of ninety-three years. His children were: Nathan, John, Thomas, Zenas, Isaac, Polly, Margaret, Asseneth, who married Joseph Caldwell; Charity, who married Benjamin Caldwell; and Katherine, who married Purnal Berry. Zenas Powell was six feet, two inches, in height, weighed 220 pounds, and was a very strong man.

Thomas Powell, father of Isaac, was born in Bourbon county, Ky., in 1801. He received but little education in the pioneer days, and came to Indiana in 1825, when a young man. He was married in Connersville, Fayette county, to Anna Chadwick, daughter of Wheeler Chadwick and wife (the latter's maiden name was Evans), of English stock. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Powell settled on a sixty-acre tract of land near Harrisburg, Fayette county, where Mr. Powell erected a sawmill. He later removed to Hamilton county, settling in Clay township in 1846. Here he purchased 160 acres of land, but partly cleared of the heavy timber with which it was originally covered. He cleared and improved this land, erected good farm buildings, and became a substantial farmer, and here reared his family. He was a wagon maker by trade, was a sober, industrious and hard-working man, and was very highly esteemed and respected throughout the community in which he resided.

Thomas Powell and his wife were both members of the Christian Church, and were the parents of these children: Lorinda, who married Charles Whitehead, of Marion county, Ind.; Ira; Isaac; Asseneth, who married Reuben Bonnell, and John. Thomas Powell, the father of these children, died in 1865.

Isaac Powell received his preliminary education in the pioneer schools, and was reared to manhood on a farm. After his first marriage Mr. Powell settled on a farm in Clay township, and by thrift and industry prospered. Mr. Powell is a representative citizen and a staunch Republican in politics. He was twice assessor of Clay township, and was four times township trustee. In 1900 he was elected auditor of Hamilton county, by a large majority, and proved an efficient and popular official. His honesty and integrity are above reproach.

Mr. Powell married (first) Mary Jane Searight, born in Decatur county, Ind., daughter of George and Susan (Riter) Searight. The children of this marriage were: George, who married Nettie Brown; and Ella, who married Martin Hoover. Mrs. Powell died July 27, 1902. Mr. Powell married (second) Mrs. Catherine (House) Lacy. Mr. Powell is an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Blue Lodge, Carmel, Ind., and the Eastern Star. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F.

Mrs. Catherine (House) Powell was born one mile south of Noblesville, July 16, 1849, daughter of Ephraim and Rosanna (Seibert) House, the former born near Reading, Pa., about 1810, of old Pennsylvania-German ancestry, and the latter the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ludwig) Seibert, Ephraim House was a contractor, and in 1847 removed with his family to Hamilton county, Ind., settling on land south of Noblesville. He died in Cincinnati, Ohio, while under treatment for blindness, about 1855. His children were: Elizabeth, John, Daniel, Samuel, Mariah, Catherine and Jonathan. Three of the sons, all who were old enough, were soldiers in the Civil war. Mrs. House lived to be fifty-four years old and died in Peru, Indiana.

Mrs. Catherine (House) Powell received but little education in the pioneer schools, her whole school attendance being but nineteen months. Her mother, on the death of Mr. House, was left with nothing, and had seven children to support. She was obliged to work very hard, even going into the fields to earn the means wherewith to bring up her children, and the boys were put to work as soon as old enough. She married (second) William Brandon, a farmer in good circumstances, and removed with her husband to Butler county, Iowa. Catherine, afterwards Mrs. Powell, went with her mother to Iowa, where the family remained until 1862, and in this year they settled in Indiana, at New Britton. At the close of the Civil war the family went to live at Peru, where Catherine married, when but seventeen years old, Jan. 22, 1867, Junius M. Coffin, born in North Carolina, son of Sergeant Parker Coffin, a descendant of the early Quaker family of that name, who were some of the earliest settlers of Nantucket Island, off the Massachusetts coast, and who, being persecuted, settled before the Revolutionary war in North Carolina. Junius Coffin served as a soldier in the Civil war, having run away from home, being under age, and after the war he returned to Peru, Ind., where he was employed as a railway foreman. The children of Junius and Catherine (House) Coffin were: Oliver and Nellie Rose. Mrs. Coffin was married (second) to Emanuel Lacy, a school teacher of Hamilton county, who was accidentally killed in a factory at Noblesville, in October, 1895. Mrs. Lacy then married Mr. Isaac Powell.

While having few opportunities for an education while young, Mrs. Powell has educated herself, and, through study, and the reading of valuable works, has made herself well-read and well-informed. She has a wide knowledge of history, being especially interested in all matters pertaining to the history of her State and township, although the history of the country at large is a matter of great interest to her. She is cultured and refined, and, like her husband, is well known and very highly esteemed and respected in the community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Powell have a host of friends.

MOSES C. RATCLIFF, a reliable citizen of Muncie, Ind., who was a soldier in the Civil war, was born on a farm in Mount Pleasant township, Jan. 26, 1845, son of Abner and Martha (Perkins) Ratcliff.

Abner Ratcliff, father of Moses C., was a pioneer of Mount Pleasant township, where he entered 160 acres of land, eighty of which he cleared, building thereon as shelter, a pen of poles, open on one side, in which he built for warmth a great fire, which he kept up night and day. Wolves would come often and prowl about, howling all night. There were deer in plenty, and Mr. Ratcliff being an excellent shot, he was never in want for food. Afterward he built a substantial log house, and here he reared his family, which consisted of these children: John, Amos, Ann, Ellen, Elizabeth, Thomas, Martha, Margaret, Sarah, Robert and Moses, and several children who died small. He was married three times, but all of his children were born to his first wife, Martha Perkins.

Moses C. Ratcliff was reared on his father's farm, and his education was secured in the pioneer log school-house, with puncheon seats and greased paper windows, which he was able to attend about two months each winter, his summers being spent in work on the farm. He enlisted at Muncie, Ind., in August, 1862, as a private of Company D, 84th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged at Camp Harker, Tenn., June 14, 1865, having served two years and ten months. His service was in Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Virginia and North Carolina. He was in the great Atlanta campaign, during which the Union troops were under fire for four months, and in the battles of Buzzard's Roost, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Resaca, Missionary Ridge, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga (two days), Atlanta and Lovejoy Station, at the latter place being shot through the right forearm with a musket ball, which injured him seriously, killing all sensation in the lower arm and hand, the wound being still very sensitive. He was in the field hospital for one month, and in the hospital at Nashville for a like period, and, the wound not healing rapidly, was sent home on furlough for two months. He then rejoined his regiment at Nashville, and was in the rear of Nashville during two days' fighting, under fire. He went with his regiment in pursuit of Hood, and assisted in the capture of many of the latter's men and much ammunition. They then returned to Nashville, and, the war closing, to Indiana. He was in many hard marches, the worst of which was the march to Chickamauga, the men marching twenty-five miles each day for two days. After this battle his regiment fell back in the direction of Chattanooga, across the Tennessee river from Lookout Mountain, with very scant rations, barely enough to keep life in the men. At this time Mr. Ratcliff showed that courage and bravery that had distinguished him throughout the struggle. A brave, faithful, willing soldier he fulfilled his duties carefully and cheerfully, and earned the respect of his officers and comrades.

After the war Mr. Ratcliff returned to his father's farm, and on Feb. 1, 1866, he was married in Mt. Pleasant township, to Hannah M. Reed, born May 31, 1846, daughter of John and Nancy (Dragoo) Reed. After marriage they rented land for some years in Mt. Pleasant township, and then purchased a forty-acre tract near Yorktown. This he sold and purchased thirty-five acres three miles northwest of Yorktown, added twenty acres thereto, and in 1898 sold out and moved to Muncie, buying a lot near the Normal College, on which he built his present comfortable home, and on which he has resided ever since. He has added to this property, having purchased two more lots, and is considered one of the good, reliable men of the city. In political matters he is a stanch Republican, was supervisor in Mount Pleasant township, and has been a juror in the Delaware county courts.

To Mr. and Mrs. Moses C. Ratcliff were born the following children: Hattie, who married Isaac Humbert, a farmer of Mount Pleasant township, died aged thirty-four years; Josiah Alonzo, who married (first) Addie Simpson and (second) Emma Finley, is a photographer now living in Oklahoma City; Clarence Elmer, who married Delilah Jackson, of Harrison township, and has one son, now resides in Joplin, Mo.; John Oscar, who married Myrtle Mann, is a resident of Mount Pleasant township, where he is engaged in farming operations; Nancy Jane, who married Ora Caster, and has two children, Alice and Mabel, resides in Muncie; and Bessie E., who resides at home with her father, is a young lady of culture and refinement. The wife and mother passed away Dec. 3, 1906, in the faith of the New Light Church.

REV. URBAN C. BREWER, a minister of the Gospel for fifty years, now residing in Gregg township, Morgan county, Ind., was born in Monrovia, Ind., June 27, 1837, son of John C. and Mary E. Brewer, of English and German ancestry.

John C. Brewer was born in Randolph county, N. C., and came from that State to Morgan county, Ind., when seventeen years of age. In 1836 he was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Wilhite, who was born in Oldham county, Ky., and ten children were born to them, three sons and seven daughters, of whom Rev. Urban C. Brewer was the eldest.

The boyhood days of Urban C. Brewer were spent upon a farm. When only fourteen years of age he became a member of the Christian Church (Disciples) and was very earnest in his professions of faith. As soon as he was prepared, he attended Belleville Academy, in Hendricks county, Ind., and later went to the Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, at Indianapolis, Ind. Still later, he was graduated from the University of the City of New York in law. After entering the ministry the Rev. Mr. Brewer occupied pastorates in New York City, Indianapolis, Greensburg and Danville, Indiana.

On Oct. 11, 1866, the Rev. Mr. Brewer was married (first) to Miss Emma H. Hall, of Lyndon, Vt., born in Caledonia county, Vt., June 21, 1846, daughter of Dudley P. Hall. She bore her husband children as follows: Emma Evangeline, Albert Dudley, John Clarence, Urban Charles, Mary Amelia, Jeremy Hall Anderson and Ruth Elizabeth. On Aug. 31, 1898, he married (second) Miss Cora Edith Hurst, who was born in Putnam county, Ind., July 11, 1871. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics he is a Republican, he cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln for President of the United States.

LIEUT. CHARLES W. WYNN, a substantial citizen and practical farmer of Vernon township, Hancock county, and a veteran of the Civil war, was born Sept. 3, 1840, in the same township, son of Joseph and Miriam (Jarrett) Wynn, and grandson of Thomas and Lucretia (Woods) Wynn.

Thomas Wynn, the grandfather, was a soldier of the Revolution, serving seven years in the Patriot army, and was in the battle of Long Island. During his service a son was born to him whom he did not see until the little one was six years of age. Thomas Wynn was three times married and he reared a family by each wife, lived to a venerable age and died in Pennsylvania. Of his children, Abraham, Isaac, John and Joseph are remembered, and these were children of his third marriage. John was a soldier in the Mexican war.

Joseph Wynn, son of Thomas and Loretta (Woods), was born in Franklin county, Pa., in April, 1809. He had no educational advantages, and could neither read nor write, his attendance at school being of one day's duration, but he had what is called "a good head for business," and could figure up his cattle and hogs when he sold them, and could easily compute interest on money lent, all in his head without the assistance of written characters. He came to Madison county, Ind., with Henry Hiday, in 1818, and was then aged nine years. He grew up among the pioneers, and when he attained manly strength, he assisted in the clearing of the land upon which a part of the city of Indianapolis now stands. He settled in Vernon township on forty acres of land, which is now owned by his widow, Mary H. Wynn. By thrift and industry he cleared up his land and added to it until he owned 320 acres, and he became a well-to-do farmer. By working on the Wabash road he earned the money with which to enter the first forty acres, in 1846. For many years he was a worthy member of the Christian Church, and was one of the organizers of the first church in Green township, Hancock county, and afterward the Christian Church at Ingalls. The old church edifice in Green township was constructed of logs, away back in 1848, but before that religious services were held in the log school-house. The community was in sympathy with the Campbellite movement, and other prominent men in this historic church organization were: John K. Rash, John Huston and William Shortridge. The last named gave the land on which the church buildings stood.

Joseph Wynn married Miriam Jarrett, born in Pennsylvania, daughter of David Jarrett. Mr. Jarrett was a pioneer on the land which is now the site of Ingalls, and there he cleared up a farm of 160 acres, became a substantial citizen, and died advanced in years, the father of Robinson, Andrew, Charles, John, Jane and Miriam. Joseph and Miriam Wynn had the following children: David T., Charles W., Elizabeth Jane, Mary A. and Margaret Caroline (who married Henry Hiday). After the death of his first wife, Joseph Wynn married in 1846, Mary H. Likens. He was always active in politics, and while a man of no education, was possessed of unusual natural ability. As a good, practical business man, he accumulated property and was noted for his integrity of character.

Charles W. Wynn was reared a farmer and obtained a common school education, his attendance being confined to the winter seasons as his summers were made use of on the farm. He attended school in a log building furnished with slab seats and a writing desk made of a slab running along the side of the room and fastened with wooden pins to the wall, while the other seats were made of puncheons. However, it was in these primitive school-houses that such men as Abraham Lincoln and Henry Clay gained the foundations of their educations.

Mr. Wynn enlisted for service in the Civil war the day he was twenty-one years of age, Sept. 3, 1861, as a private of Company K, 8th Ind. V. L., to serve three years or during the war, and he served until he was honorably discharged at Indianola, Texas, to re-enlist as a veteran in the same organization, Jan. 1, 1864, for three years more. His final honorable discharge was at Hilton Head, S. C., in 1865. During this long period of service he participated in the following battles: Black Mountain, Mo.; Sugar Creek, Ark.; Pea Ridge, Ark. (three days); Cotton Plant, Ark.; Port Gibson, Miss.; Champion Hills, Miss.; the first battle at Jackson, Miss.; Big Black River; Vicksburg, Miss.; second battle at Jackson, Miss.; Mustang Island, Texas; Fort Esperanza, Austin, Texas; Baton Rouge, La.; Carrion Crow Bayou, La.; Atchafalaya, La.; Berryville, La.; Halltown, W. Va.; Opequan, W. Va.; Winchester, W. Va.; Fisher's Mill, W. Va.; Newmarket and Cedar Creek, W. Va. He also took part in many skirmishes, and was always an active soldier, doing his duty promptly and cheerfully. He was in every campaign, march, battle and skirmish of his regiment except Rich Mountain, W. Va., which was fought during the three months previous to Mr. Wynn's enlistment. While in the army he was five feet, ten inches in height, but he was strong and healthy. During his long period of service he was neither wounded nor taken prisoner, and never went to the hospital until after the close of the war, when he went to Hilton Head, S. C., to have treated an affliction of the eyes, caused by the flying sand in Texas. His first promotion for meritorious conduct was to the rank of corporal, then to orderly sergeant, then to second lieutenant and still later to first lieutenant. His captain was killed in the battle of Vicksburg, and the first lieutenant, Poindexter, was a prisoner of war, and thus Lieut. Wynn was in command of his company for nine months, and commanded at the battle of Cedar Creek. During his service he was in twenty different States. His record is that of a faithful, energetic soldier and officer, one whose patriotism and loyalty endeared him to his comrades.

After the close of the war Lieutenant Wynn returned to his home and engaged in farming, settling first in Center township where he lived four years, and then bought forty acres of cleared land where he now resides. To this he has added until he now has 173 acres of fertile land, a large part of which he has cleared from its native growth of timber. He has improved his property, built substantial farm buildings and has a comfortable residence.

On Feb. 20, 1868, in Center township, Hancock county, he married Louisa Frazier, born Jan. 13, 1846, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Walker) Frazier. They have had these children: Cora, who married Robert Buler, a farmer of Madison county; Edgar, who died aged twenty-four years; Myrtle, who married Herbert Alford, a farmer of Vernon township, and has three children, Mamie, Gladys and Thelma; William J., a farmer on the home place; and Fred G., born Nov. 13, 1882, who died April 19, 1906.

The Frazier family, to which Mrs. Wynn belongs, came originally from Scotland. William Frazier, father of Mrs. Wynn, is a prominent farmer living six miles north of Greenfield, Hancock county, a very highly respected citizen. He was born Mar. 16, 1823, in Guilford county, N. C., son of James and Nancy (Dillon) Frazier. When a boy, William Frazier came to Hancock county with his sister, Mrs. Martha Roberts, and when he reached manhood, purchased forty acres of the farm on which he now lives, and which was then covered with a thick growth of timber. He cleared his land, and, by hard work prospered and became the owner of 640 acres.

Of this he has given largely to his children, reserving 140 acres for himself. Mr. Frazier married Elizabeth Walker, daughter of Robert and Dorcas (Denny) Walker, and their children are: Louisa, Nancy, Francis, Robert, John and Winfield and Dayton, twins. In political opinions William Frazier is a staunch Republican. He is a typical American pioneer, of the better class, and in his active life has been a practical and successful farmer, stockraiser and shipper. At the age of more than four score years, he is still sturdy and strong mentally.

Returning to the subject of this sketch, Lieut. Wynn is an honored member of Sol. D. Kempton Post, No. 228, G. A. R., in which he has been chaplain for nine years. In political principle he is one of the original Republicans. While in the army he cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln, but it was merely a test vote and did not figure in any record. He also voted for Gen. Grant both terms, and has since supported every Republican candidate for the Presidency. Mr. and Mrs. Wynn are both members of the Christian Church, in which he has been an elder since its establishment here, some eighteen years ago. In closing this record of one of the representative men of the locality, it behooves the biographer to call attention to the noble qualities of life and character which have made him honored and esteemed by his community.

BENJAMIN F. BUSH. Among the highly respected citizens of Liberty township, Delaware county, Ind., was the late Benjamin F. Bush, who was also a survivor of the great Civil war. He was born Feb. 18, 1840, in this township, son of Samuel and Nancy (Foley) Bush.

The Bush family is of German extraction, and the Foleys came to Indiana from Virginia. The paternal grandfather was born in Kentucky and settled near Oxford, Butler county, Ohio.

Samuel Bush was born April 15, 1797, and was a farmer and butcher. He was married Feb. 4, 1819, in Butler county, Ohio, to Nancy Foley, born Dec. 20, 1800, and their children were: William, born Dec. 27, 1819; Lewis, Aug. 18, 1821; John, Oct. 20, 1822; Mary Frances, Sept. 29, 1825 (died young); Jane, June 15, 1827; Margaret, March 20, 1829; Lucinda, March 22, 1831; Keziah, May 5, 1833; Benjamin F., Feb. 18, 1840; and Jacob V., Nov. 25, 1841. The above record was copied from the old family Bible in the possession of Benjamin F. Bush.

In 1830, Samuel Bush moved to Indiana and settled in Liberty township, Delaware county. He bought forty acres of partly cleared land, one-quarter mile south of Smithfield, where he died in January, 1855. Both he and his wife were members of the United Brethren Church and were worthy, virtuous people. In politics he was a Democrat. As long as health permitted Mr. Bush was an industrious hard-working man, but later in life rheumatism attacked him and caused him much suffering. He gave many of his sons to the service of their country. Lewis Ringsby, his second son was a soldier in the Mexican war, and died of measles during his term of service. Jacob and Benjamin F. were both soldiers during the Civil war. Jacob was a member of Company K, 19th Ind. V. I., in which he served three years, and then veteranized in the same organization, serving four years in all. He participated in many of the important battles of the war in the army of the Potomac, and was on the dreadful field of Gettysburg. He was always a man of strength and endurance and still survives.

Benjamin F. Bush was reared among the pioneers of Liberty township, and could well remember when Smithfield was a pioneer hamlet consisting of three stores, three blacksmith shops and a wagon-maker's shop, William Lewis being at that time one of the leading merchants and a well-known pioneer. Mr. Bush attended school at Smithfield in the old red carpenter shop and one of his schoolmates was James L. Hutchins, afterward a comrade in the Civil war. His educational chances were very poor as his father died when he was but fourteen years of age, leaving a large family. He was unusually manly and dependable for his age and endeavored to relieve his over-taxed mother all he could. She made her home with him until her death, living to her seventy-second year, dying at Smithfield, Aug. 18, 1872. She was a very worthy member of the U. B. Church. Her virtues were many and some years of her life, during pioneer days, were hard. Her children have reason to remember her with feelings of admiration and love.

Benjamin F. Bush remained on the farm until he was twenty-one years of age. In the meantime war had broken out, and Mr. Bush from the very first decided to enter the army. This decision was put into effect July 2, 1861, when he enlisted in Company K, 19th Ind. V. I., under Capt. Williams, and served until honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., April 16, 1862, by reason of disability, having been confined for three months in the hospital with small-pox and serving sometime after his own recovery as a nurse. Mr. Bush returned home in a feeble and disabled condition, and for a year could do no work, but he was firm in his resolve to re-enter the army, and he re-enlisted as soon as able, at Smithfield, Ind., under Capt. James L. Neff, and was enrolled Feb. 4, 1864, in Company H, 124th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or until the close of the war. He was honorably discharged a second time at Greensboro, N. C., Aug. 31, 1865, by reason of the closing of the war. His service took him to Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina. He participated in many battles, the leading ones being: Resaca, Ga.; siege of Atlanta when the Union troops were under direct fire for four months; Allatoona and Kenesaw Mountain. He was with his command when it then went to Nashville with "Pap" Thomas, and was in the second battle of Franklin, which military men have decided was one of the hardest fought battles of the whole war; and he was in the subsequent battle at Nashville. Here the Confederates made thirteen separate charges on the part of the earthworks where Mr. Bush was stationed, coming right up to the trenches, and the scenes of carnage were dreadful. The Union troops retired to Nashville in the night, a terrible never-to-be-forgotten march. During all this danger Mr. Bush miraculously escaped death, injury and capture. At the battle of Wise's Forks, or Kingston, a ball struck his left heel and passed around the seam of his boot, and he also had a buck shot in his right sleeve, while several balls passed through his clothing, all almost near enough to have closed his career forever. It is remembered that Mr. Bush was always an active soldier, passed no time in the hospital during his second term of service, and did his full duty promptly and cheerfully. For meritorious conduct he was promoted to be second duty sergeant.

After his final return from the war he settled at Smithfield and engaged in farm work. On July 25, 1867, he was married to Lydia Ann Pence, born in Wayne County, Ind., Sept.

10, 1847, daughter of Reuben and Mary (Davis) Pence.

Reuben Pence was a son of Henry Pence, who was of German extraction, and who came from Virginia to Madison county, Ind., where he developed a farm. He had three children, Lewis, Lydia and Reuben. He died in Daleville, in 1858. Reuben Pence was born March 24, 1823, in Virginia, and came to Madison county with his father when about ten years old. The family spoke only German at that time. He followed farming and coopering. At Hagerstown, Wayne county, Ind., he was married to Mary Davis, born in Virginia, daughter of William and Sarah Davis. In 1861 he moved to Delaware county, Ind., and settled on a farm near Luray, where he reared his family. In 1864 he enlisted at Muncie, Ind., for three years or during the war. He was a private of the 9th Ind. Cav., and took part in the battles of Franklin and Nashville. After the close of his service he settled in Smithfield, where he purchased residence property and resided here several years, working as a farmer, removing then to Muncie, and then to Burlington, Ind., and still survives, now advanced in years. His children by his first wife, Mary, were: William Henry, Lydia Ann, David, Walter, Christian, Julia, Linsey and Edmund, the two latter deceased. His first wife died in 1862, and he was married (second) to Elsie Turner. Their children were: Fannie, Annie, Hattie and Levi (who was a soldier in the Spanish-American war). Mr. and Mrs. Pence were members of the U. B. Church.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bush settled in Smithfield where has since been the family home. They had five children, as follows: Mary L., born Jan. 15, 1868, married Clarence East, a substantial farmer of Madison county, Ind., and they have four children: Bessie, Homer, Maggie and Hobert; Samuel E., born Nov. 21, 1869, married Eva Brooks, an oil man at Selma, Ind., and they have one daughter, Ruth; William, born Dec. 4, 1875; Alice, born July 25, 1881, married Curtis Greenwalt, a Selma oil man, one of the foremen in the oil fields; and Effie, born Nov. 4, 1886.

In politics Mr. Bush was a Republican, but he was such as a citizen and not as a seeker for preferment. In all that concerned his community he was interested. He was a representative man of that period when the eyes of the world were turned to our struggling country. They were times to try the courage and loyalty of youth, and nobly was the response made. Mr. Bush entered into rest Dec. 21, 1906.

THOMAS J. PAGE, a respected citizen of Muncie, Ind., who served with honor in the war of the Rebellion, was born Jan. 1, 1833, in Butler county, Ohio, son of Robert and Martha (Riley) Page, the former of whom, also born in Ohio, lived to be an aged man.

Thomas J. Page was reared by his uncle, John Riley, and he secured his education in the pioneer school houses of his day, which had slab benches and puncheon floors. He worked on the farm during the summers and attended school about two months of each winter, until he was fourteen years old, when he started out for himself, going to Kansas and securing farm work near Fort Scott. After about three years he made his way to St. Louis, Mo., where he remained for one year, following teaming, subsequently returning to farming in the neighborhood of Springfield, Mo. His next employment was in a sawmill at Coldwater, Mich., and from there he went to Terre Haute, Ind., where he operated a sawmill on the Eel river until he went to Ohio and soon after, enlisted for service in the Civil war just opening.

In April, 1861, Mr. Page enlisted for three years or during the war, as a private in Company H, 12th O. V. I., and was honorably discharged at Columbus, O., in 1864. Re-enlisting at once he again served out his time and was honorably discharged at Macon, Ga., Feb. 20, 1865. Mr. Page saw service in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama, and he participated in the battles of Stone River, Lookout Mountain, Macon and Dalton, during which time he received no serious injuries. His greatest escape was when a minie ball grazed his scalp and knocked him senseless, inflicting a scalp wound which bled profusely and which left a mark yet plainly visible. This confined him to the field hospital for two weeks, after which he rejoined his regiment. He can recall his whole term of army service with pride, never having escaped a soldier's duties or evaded its necessary dangers.

After his discharge from the army, Mr. Page returned to Butler county, Ohio, where he remained until 1867, when he went to Olney, Ill., returning to Ohio after working for two years on farms. Later he came to Indiana, and was married in Henry county in 1879, after which he moved to Randolph county, where he engaged in farming and operating a sawmill for many years. Later he moved to Muncie and engaged in a teaming business, subsequently establishing his permanent home here, buying a lot and erecting the comfortable house in which he lives.

Mr. Page was married Jan. 26, 1879, near New Castle, Ind., to Elizabeth Felton, born July 21, 1848, at New Castle, daughter of Adam and Barbara (Cross) Felton. The Feltons are old pioneers of Indiana, the grandfather of Mrs. Page, William Felton, having settled near Hagerstown, when the Indians still roamed over that region. He married Sarah Stonebreaker, of another old family. Adam Felton, father of Mrs. Page, cleared up a small farm of thirty acres and built a log house. He married Barbara Cross, born in Virginia, daughter of Joseph Cross, also a pioneer. Adam Felton lived to be fifty-eight years old, dying on his farm in 1853. His widow survived until Feb. 14, 1896, at that time being aged sixty-six years, eight months and eleven days. The children of Adam Felton and wife were: Elizabeth, Mrs. Page; Sarah, who married Levi Chafin, a soldier in the Civil war; Martha, who married Samuel Drago, a soldier in the Civil war; William, who married Elizabeth Kiger; Nancy, who married Arthur Van Meter; Ellen, who married William Kilmer; Amanda, who married John Stanley; Jacob, who married Mary Lacy; and Belle, who married Joseph Lacy. Mr. and Mrs. Felton were members of the U. B. Church, and were people who enjoyed the respect of all who knew them.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Page were as follows: Ollie, born Sept. 19, 18—, married Eli Houser, a farmer of Henry county, Ind., and they have children, Zola, Hazel, and Von J.; Raleigh, born May 30, 1881, married Emma Hershey, and is in business at Muncie; and William lives at home.

Mr. Page has always been identified with the Republican party, but has never had any ambition for official position of any kind. He cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln and for every subsequent Republican candidate for the Presidency. He is a valued member of Williams Post, G. A. R., at Muncie. He is considered one of Muncie's good, straightforward, honorable citizens.

JOHN L. McCORMICK, late of Indianapolis, was widely known as a carpenter, contractor and builder of many years standing in that city. He was born in Rush county, four miles south of Rushville, at Perkins Corners, March 24, 1825, son of James and Patsy (Perkins) McCormick, who are fully mentioned in the sketch of Lycurgus P. McCormick.

Mr. McCormick was a year old when his parents moved to Shelby county, and seven years old when they returned to Indianapolis, in 1832. He had his home in Marion county and in Indianapolis until 1855, when he moved to Hendricks county, living there until 1860. After that, until his death, he made his home in Indianapolis, residing for forty years in the home at No. 1402 North Capitol avenue, now occupied by his widow. He owned that place and other city property. His first schooling was secured in an old-fashioned subscription school. When about eighteen years old he began learning the millwright and carpenter trades, which he followed from 1849. Mr. McCormick was independent in political matters, although he had Republican tendencies.

Mr. McCormick was married Aug. 9, 1848, to Julia Ann Pitts, who was born March 2, 1826, near Pendleton, Ind., daughter of Stephen and Rachel (Hendricks) Pitts. To them were born three children: (1) Rachel R. married John H. Koontz, and they had two sons, Ora L. and Harry L. (deceased), both of whom married and lived in Illinois. The mother is now deceased. (2) Mary E. married Matthias Garver (deceased), and now lives on Capitol avenue, Indianapolis. They had five daughters, but none are living. A granddaughter, Alta Garver Gladdon, lives with Mrs. Garver. (3) Fannie, who married Charles J. Miller (now deceased), of Chicago, now resides with her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Miller had no children.

Stephen Pitts, father of Mrs. McCormick, was born near Nashville, Tenn., and passed his early life in that state. His father died when the family, Stephen, James and several sister—Elizabeth, Margaret and others, were young, and Stephen was bound out to a strict Presbyterian family. When sixteen years old he enlisted in the war of 1812, after which he settled in Hamilton county, Ohio, where he learned the tailor's trade, becoming an unusually skilled workman. He always made the clothing he and his sons wore. Stephen

Pitts was married in Ohio to Rachel Hendricks, a native of that state, daughter of David and Rose Hendricks. David Hendricks was a Revolutionary soldier and an early settler of Ohio, made his home in Eaton, that State, and died in Ohio. After his marriage Stephen Pitts came to Indiana, settling in Richmond, where he worked for old Mr. Mansur, whose son, William Mansur, married a daughter of David V. Culley. David and George, the first two children of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Pitts, were born in Richmond, whence in 1821 or 1822 the family moved to Indianapolis, where Mr. Pitts owned the ground now occupied by the Soldiers' Monument. They remained there, however, only a short time, removing to Pendleton, where he took a claim. His wife always said her happiest days were spent on that place. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pitts: David never married; George W., of Indianapolis, married Mary Ann Beechart; Julia Ann was the wife of John L. McCormick; Eliza Ann died in infancy; Cynthia married Joseph Butsch, of Indianapolis; Mary E. married Truman French, of Indianapolis; Martha married Granville Mathews, of Indianapolis, and died nine months afterward; Frank M. married Fredonia Morrell; Rachel died in infancy; Hiram died at the age of sixteen. Only three of this family are now living. Mrs. Julia A. McCormick, Mrs. Cynthia Butsch and Mrs. Martha Mathews. Mrs. Pitts died at the age of fifty-nine years, and Mr. Pitts survived her a year, reaching the age of sixty-one. He drew a pension for his services in the war of 1812. In his early days he was a great hunter, and killed many deer and bear.

AMOS K. HOLLOWELL, former president of the Indiana Lumber & Veneer Company, No. 1101 East Twenty-third Street, Indianapolis, was born in Paoli, Orange Co., Ind., Aug. 19, 1844, son of James and Celia (Thomas) Hollowell, both of whom were born and reared in Indiana.

Nathan Hollowell, the grandfather of Amos K., was born in North Carolina, but when a child came to Indiana with his parents who were among the early pioneers of the State. They made their home for many years in Orange county, but when past middle life removed to New London, Howard county, where the grandfather died when over seventy years of age. He was a merchant in his more active years, and reared a large family. His ancestors were English, and his father, Robert, who was born in North Carolina, was the son of Thomas Hollowell, the first of the name in this country.

Stephen Thomas, the maternal grandfather of Amos K. Hollowell, was born in North Carolina, and came of Welsh descent. In Orange county, Ind., he was among the very early settlers, and there he died at a ripe old age. His family was a numerous one, and he belonged to old Quaker stock.

James Hollowell was born in 1821, and was always a farmer. The greater part of his life was spent in Washington and Orange counties. He died near Salem, Washington county, in 1896, at the age of seventy-five years. His wife, Celia Thomas, passed to her rest in 1858, at the age of forty-one years, in the faith of the Friends' Society. They had a family of four sons and one daughter born to them, only two of whom are now living: Amos K., and James S., of Montezuma, Ind. Mr. Hollowell married for his second wife Amanda Lindley, who bore him four children, two of whom are now living: John J., of Jamestown, Ind.; and Mary, the wife of O. M. Morris, who lives on the old homestead near Salem.

Amos K. Hollowell was reared in Orange county, Ind., until he reached the age of fourteen years, when he lost his mother. After that disaster he lived for a time in Hendricks county, where he attended school, finishing at Bloomingdale Academy. For about four years he was a clerk in a dry goods store, and in 1865 he came to Indianapolis, and secured a clerkship in a wholesale house, but presently became bookkeeper in a wholesale hardware establishment, which position he held four years. After his marriage in 1870, Mr. Hollowell opened a general store at Newport (now Fountain City), Ind., where he was in business some five years. After that he became associated with Nordyke, Marmon & Company, in the making of machinery for flouring mills, a business connection that lasted from 1875 to 1895, Mr. Hollowell being treasurer of the Company all the time. The company removed the plant from Richmond to Indianapolis in 1876, and is still in active business operation in this city, though Mr. Hollowell withdrew in 1895. Three years prior to this he had established the Indiana Lumber & Veneer Company, and was for years after its organization its president. It is the largest enterprise of the kind in the world, its goods going to all parts of the United States as well as Europe. Mr. Hollowell was president and stockholder in the Jenney Electric Motor Company, until its destruction by fire in 1897. He is an extensive stockholder in the New Long Distance Telephone Company.

In 1904 he organized the Harris Air Pump Company, whose business is manufacturing pumps for the purpose of raising water from deep or artesian wells and displacement and return; air pumps for pumping water from open cisterns, lakes or streams, all of which are operated by compressed air. This young company is meeting with phenomenal success and their machinery is now becoming generally used by cities, towns and irrigating companies, where quantities of water are required. Of this company Mr. Amos K. Hollowell is president and treasurer.

Mr. Hollowell was married Oct. 19, 1870, to Miss Adaline H. Parker, daughter of Joel and Mary (Maris) Parker. They had one son, Lynden P., who is the vice president of the Indiana Lumber & Veneer Company. Mrs. Hollowell died in April, 1900, at the age of fifty-one years. She was actively interested with her husband in the Friends' Society, in which both were hard and faithful workers. Mr. Hollowell is a Republican, but has never held political office of any kind. He has a handsome home at No. 2505 College Avenue, which he built in 1894.

EMORY WATSON CLIFFORD, a well known resident and highly esteemed citizen of Chesterfield, Madison county, comes of sturdy pioneer stock.

Jonathan Clifford, his grandfather, emigrated from England to Vermont about one hundred and fifty years ago, and settled on a farm within four miles of the village of Johnsbury Plains. It is not positively known whether his ancestry was English or Irish, but believed to be Irish. At Johnsbury Plains he married Ellen Pierce, a niece of President Franklin Pierce, and of Scotch-Irish descent. Of this union were born six sons: William, John, Ephraim, Isaac, Benjamin and Joseph. After the two eldest boys, William and John, had worked on the farm for years, they were overtaken with what is known as the Western fever. They undertook a task that would appall our city boys of today—that of walking from Johnsbury Plains to Cincinnati, Ohio

(then a village), a distance of nearly 1,000 miles. There they obtained employment, flat-boating rock down the Licking river. After one year, having accumulated some means, they walked back to their native town, buying of their father the time of their brother Ephraim, and the three then tramped their way back to Indiana to the county line between Connersville and Rushville. There they each pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land. The next fall the old folks, having a desire to see the western country that had won their boys from their native hills, began the journey westward, taking two teams. They came to Fayette county, near Fairview, and entering one hundred and sixty acres of land, there began farming. William, the eldest son, lived to be ninety years of age, dying at Connersville, Indiana.

Isaac Clifford, father of Emory Watson, emigrated in 1852 from Rush county, Ind., to Madison county. He was a carpenter, and also a stock dealer, owning a fine farm of two hundred acres in Anderson, where the power house of the Union Traction Company now stands. In 1840 he married Mary Sangston, of Brownsville, Ind. She was a Pennsylvania German, and her ancestry were of the Jackson family, she being a distant relative of Stonewall Jackson. She died in Madison county in 1866, and her husband in Augusta, Butler Co., Kans., twenty miles from Wichita, in 1875, aged seventy years. Of this union were born six children: Emory Watson, John B., Luther F., Sarah L., Love J. and Maude L.

Emory Watson Clifford was eighteen years old when the first gun of the war of the Rebellion was fired at Fort Sumter. He was filled with youthful enthusiasm, and while plowing in the field he heard the cheering of a train load of the first volunteers from the North. Leaving his horses in the field, and the plow sticking in the ground he jumped aboard the train and went to Camp Morton, Indianapolis, offering his services for the Union, but he was compelled to wait upwards of two months for an opportunity to enlist, as the quota for the one hundred day and one year men had been filled. The first three-year regiment was being formed—the 17th Ind. V. I.—Col. Milo S. Haskell, with Lieut.-Col. John T. Wilder, who afterward commanded the noted Wilder Brigade, and General Wood was Division Commander. Mr. Clifford enlisted as a private, and was afterward made orderly sergeant. Shortly after the battle of Stone River, he was commissioned second lieutenant, and while serving in that capacity for some time was in command of the Company, and as a reward for meritorious conduct was made aide-de-camp on General Wilder's Staff. Lieutenant Clifford was in all the battles of his company, forty-two regular battles and skirmishes. He served three years and seven months, and after the battle of Nashville was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., at which time he was tendered a commission in the regular army, but he refused. Lieutenant Clifford then went to Anderson, Ind., where in 1864 he was married to Miss Letitia A. P. Makepeace, daughter of Alfred Makepeace, she coming from a family of highly esteemed pioneers of English ancestry. Lieutenant Clifford and his wife are of the same age, each being born Aug. 21, 1842. Mr. Clifford has a beautiful home in Chesterfield, and conducts a highly successful milling business. What he feels most happy to relate is that he became identified in 1876, with the Christian Church, and later became a minister, preaching the Gospel to the saving of many souls during his ministry of ten years. He was converted when fourteen years of age at a protracted Methodist meeting conducted by Frank Hardin, during meetings conducted by J. C. Tully. Mr. Clifford's family consists of five children, four sons and one daughter, Frank L., Elmer E., Hadley W., Alfred I., and Vinnie E. The sons are all engineers and electricians, holding valuable and responsible positions in Kokomo and Anderson.

HENRY C. GRESH, who is a general merchant and a very popular postmaster at Broad Ripple, Marion Co., Ind., was born in Cambridge City, Wayne Co., Ind., Feb. 26, 1846, son of Levi and Mary Ann (Pritchard) Gresh.

John Gresh, the paternal grandfather of Henry C. Gresh, was born in Pennsylvania, and came of German descent. By trade he was a brick-layer, but in later life he became a farmer, and for many years he had his home in Marion county, Ind., living in Center township, three miles east of Indianapolis. He died at the age of eighty-four years. In his family were many children.

Levi Gresh was born in Pennsylvania, and was brought to Wayne county, Ind., by his parents when only eight years of age. There he was reared to manhood, and there he was married to Mary Ann Pritchard, a native of Maryland. In his early career Mr. Gresh was a renter, and he later bought a farm in Washington township, Marion county, where he has lived for over fifty years. He is now ninety years old. Mrs. Mary Ann Gresh passed to her rest in 1850, dying in the faith of the Methodist Church, of which Mr. Gresh has also been a member for more than half a century. They were the parents of three daughters and one son, namely: Henry C.; Emeline C., the widow of Mr. Van Herrin; Caroline, the wife of Peter Davis; and Almira, deceased, who married George Herrin. Levi Gresh married for his second wife Mrs. Judea Herrin, the widow of Benjamin Herrin, and daughter of John Apple. To this union were born three daughters, one of whom survives, Mrs. Ida M. Griffey.

The maternal grandfather of Henry C. Gresh was Phineas Pritchard, who was born in Maryland, and came into Wayne county, Ind., at a very early day, residing there a number of years. His family consisted of two children. He died in Marion county when over eighty years of age.

Henry C. Gresh was about eight years old when his parents found a home in Washington township, Marion county, and he has never since lived outside of the county. When a boy he attended the district school and he was reared to farming, which occupation he followed until 1895. He began for himself by renting land, and in 1880 he bought eighty acres in Washington township, which he sold in 1895, moving into Broad Ripple, where he opened a general store. Two years later it was wrecked by an explosion, in which his son was killed. Mr. Gresh opened his present place of business in 1899. He acted as assistant postmaster until June, 1901, when he was appointed postmaster, in which position he still serves his community in a most acceptable manner.

Mr. Gresh was married Dec. 15, 1867, to Miss Sarah A., daughter of William and Sarah (Roberts) Bradley, and to this union were born children as follows: Mary B. is the wife of James Overby; they live three miles north of Millersville, and among their children are Bernice, Imo and Ruth. Minnie O. is the widow of Burton Foley. Nellie J. married E. H. Purcell, a merchant of Broad Ripple, and is the mother of Harold and Eugene. Pius E. was clerking for his father and was accidentally killed by an explosion when he was eighteen years of age. Fannie is a graduate of the Broad Ripple high school. Mr. and Mrs. Gresh and their family belong to the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Mr. Gresh is a Mason, and belongs to Broad Ripple Lodge, No. 643, A. F. & A. M., and he is treasurer of Broad Ripple Lodge, No. 548, I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Republican. He was supervisor of Washington township two years, for four years was a justice of the peace, and at present is a member of the Broad Ripple town board, serving his fourth term. In addition to his business Mr. Gresh owns a good home in Broad Ripple.

The parents of Mrs. Gresh, now deceased, were early settlers of Marion county. William Bradley, her father, was born in the "Blue Grass" region in Kentucky, and came with his parents to Hamilton county, Ind., when a child, the family settling on a farm near Noblesville. His father was John Bradley.

JAMES H. VANDIVIER (deceased). The ability to produce great results in the business world from small beginnings, is an art most coveted of all commercial conjurations. It is indeed marvelous how some men possess the power—even though beginning the struggle with empty hands—to rise from one position to another, while others fail and are unable to keep what they had at the inception of their business career. This power of multiplying his possessions with infinite tact and skill, was a gift freely granted to James H. Vandivier, and he added to this ability, an abundant energy and devotion to his chosen calling, with the result that he became one of the wealthiest and most capable agriculturists and business men of Johnson county.

In Mercer county, Ky., on the thirteenth day of February, 1823, he was born, being one of fourteen children of Peter and Sarah (Garshwiler) Vandivier. His father was a native of New Jersey, born Oct. 15, 1787, and his mother of Kentucky, born Oct. 17, 1788. Of these children, ten of whom were sons, five are now living: Susan, widow of John Byers, living in Franklin, Ind.; Isaac C., of Franklin; Polly, widow of Hiram Deer, of White River township; Jefferson, of Union township; and Harriet, wife of Willis Dollin, of Johnson county.

Peter Vandivier was a miller by occupation, and for many years operated a mill near Harrodsburg, Ky. In his younger days he was a teamster, driving from Louisville to Harrodsburg. He moved to Johnson county in 1826, and entered 180 acres of land from the government in Union township, which, with the aid of his sons, he cleared and improved. He continued to live there until the time of his death, which occurred Sept. 30, 1866. Both he and his wife, in earlier days, belonged to the Newlight Christian Church, and latterly to the Christian (Disciples) Church. She died June 29, 1863. At the beginning of the War of 1812 he was drafted into the army, but furnished a substitute as he was unable to go. By abundant energy and effort he cultivated a prosperous farm and was highly esteemed by all who knew him, as was also his good wife. They were both earnest Christians, having a high regard for the sanctity of the Lord's day, which they taught their children to observe as they themselves had done.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, Joseph Vandivier, was born in New Jersey, and was of sturdy Holland-Dutch descent. He died in his native State at an honored old age, leaving several sons and daughters. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Vandivier was Joseph Garshwiler, a native of Kentucky, who died at an advanced age. He was by occupation a farmer and reared several sons and daughters. He came to Indiana and settled in Johnson county in the early days.

Mr. Vandivier was of the tender age of three and one half years, when his parents removed to Johnson county, where he afterward made his home. As a boy his tastes and ability early turned in the direction of farming, and he soon became adept at all of its varied duties. In early years he attended the old fashioned subscription schools of that part of the State, and lived at home until he reached the age of twenty-five years, when his father gave him $100 in cash and he began life's struggle on his own account. He first worked at farming by the day and later by the month, and did a great deal of clearing in that locality. Entering eighty acres of land with the money which his father had given him, he soon after sold it for $200, and bought one hundred acres of land for $950, sixteen acres of which he immediately set about clearing, after which he built a home and later bought sixty acres of land in Franklin and entered a tract of forty acres in Union township. After this he bought and sold until he accumulated over 800 acres of land.

On the 16th of November, 1848, he was joined in marriage to Mary M. Buckner, daughter of Avery and Margaret (Sturgeon) Buckner. His wife was born on May 29, 1832, in Kentucky, and of his union with her eight children were born, five sons and three daughters: John Wesley, born Nov. 18, 1849; Samantha Jane, Nov. 8, 1851; Avery Martin, May 29, 1854; Joseph Henry, Jan. 14, 1857; William Alvirous, Dec. 15, 1859; Sarah Margaret, Sept. 9, 1862; James Thomas, Aug. 15, 1864; and Minnie Belle, Jan. 5, 1871. Of these John Wesley married Elizabeth Rule, lives in Union township, and has four children, Vina, Charley, Bertha and Hazel; Samantha Jane married Charley Sisson, of Union township and has two children, Mary and James; Joseph Henry wedded Addie J. Hamilton, who died Sept. 17, 1907, and has one child, Stella; Sarah Margaret married Benjamin Merritt, of Union township, and has one child, Gracie; Avery Martin married Lizzie Merrick, and lives in Franklin township; William Alvirous married Fannie Paris, has one daughter, Jessie, and they reside in Franklin; James Thomas married Carrie Cohorn, lives in Union township, and has five children; Minnie Belle married Clarence Doty, of Union township, and has three children, Paul M., Florence M. and Lillian B.

Mr. Vandivier, as his children arrived at the age of maturity, gave each a well-improved and productive farm, ranging from eighty to ninety acres, and valued at about $5,500 each. He was a man of indomitable energy, and was not content with conducting his large farm alone, but also he ran a threshing machine for some thirty-five years. His wife lived to the age of sixty years and four months, dying Sept. 23, 1892. She was a member of the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church in which Mr. Vandivier is now an active and influential member. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party, and is a staunch believer in its principles. He served as county commissioner for one term, and was director and president of the Gravel Roads system for about sixteen years, during which time the roads were improved from their almost impassable condition when he took charge of the work, to their present highly developed state. He also served as school director for two terms, in all of which positions he served ably and well. Of the grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren, the only one deceased died in infancy. Mr. Vandivier lived to see his long years of labor crowned with abundant success. He was the honored head of a large family for whom it was ever his pride and pleasure to furnish every advantage, and he was able when the children, one by one, left the home nest, to make each a handsome gift of a portion of the lands he himself had accumulated and developed to their present highly productive state. He died Sept. 11, 1907, and was buried in the old Mount Pleasant cemetery. His funeral was one of the largest ever attended in this community and his loss was severely felt by his fellow townsmen and a large circle of friends throughout the county.

WILLIAM LEWIS HERETH, manager of the Safety Deposit Department of the Indiana National Bank, of Indianapolis, was born in that city Sept. 6, 1864, son of John Christopher and grandson of Lewis Hereth.

Lewis Hereth was born in Germany, and was a carpenter by trade. He brought his family to America, landing at Baltimore, and about 1847 settled near Madison, in Jefferson county, Ind., on a farm. After working the farm for a few years he sold it and moved to Indianapolis, settling on a farm south of the city, which he cultivated until his retirement. He continued to live in Indianapolis until his death, which occurred in 1888. Lewis Hereth was a Methodist in his religious convictions, and held membership in the First German M. E. Church, of which his nephew, George Hereth, was a trustee. Mr. Hereth was twice married, and had a large family.

John Christopher Hereth, son of Lewis by his first marriage, and father of William Lewis Hereth, was born near Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, and was reared on his father's Indiana farm. He learned the saddle and harness business in Madison, as an apprentice to William Taylor, and in 1852 came to Indianapolis, where he worked at his trade with Berry Sulgrove and others on Washington street. Engaging in the business on his own account, he opened one of the first harness and saddlery establishments—store and shop—in the city, being quite successful; later he moved the store into the Hereth block, built by him on North Delaware street, opposite the court house, and continued in this business until about 1880, when he went into other lines, carrying on the manufacture of men's shirts and overalls. Later, however, he resumed his saddle and harness business. Like his father, Mr. Hereth became a member of the First German M. E. Church with which he was identified until 1870, when he transferred his membership to the Trinity M. E. Church, an English organization. This church later moved to Central avenue and became the Central Avenue M. E. Church, and Mr. Hereth was an official member thereof until his death, which occurred in September, 1900, when he was aged seventy-two. He was active in the work of this church, and at the time of his death was one of the oldest of its original members. His wife and family were all members of this church.

Mr. Hereth was married twice, his wives being sisters. His first wife, Rosina Niklaus, bore him two daughters, Anna and Emma. Mrs. Hereth died in 1854, and he married her sister, Anna Barbara Niklaus, who was born in Münschenmier, Oberamt Erlach, Canton Berne, Switzerland, and who survives him. Her father, Jacob Niklaus, came to Madison, Ind., where he purchased a farm and settled. To Mr. and Mrs. Hereth was born a large family, of whom seven are living: Mary F., Ella B., Carrie C., William Lewis, Louise M., Edward G. and Oliver T.

William Lewis Hereth attended the grammar and high schools of Indianapolis, graduating from the high school in 1882, and on Jan. 3, 1883, he entered the Indiana National Bank, as messenger. Through promotions he became general bookkeeper of the bank which place he held for four or five years, when in 1889 he was made paying teller, holding that position until 1897 when he was appointed manager of the Safe Deposit Department.

Mr. Hereth was married Oct. 15, 1890, to Miss Minnie E. Wells, who was born in Indianapolis, Ind., daughter of Dr. Merit and Morincie (Robertson) Wells. Dr. Wells was formerly a leading dentist of Indianapolis until he retired to his farm, in 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Hereth have two children, Bessie Aurelia and Willard Wells. The family are members of the Central Avenue M. E. Church, in whose work Mr. Hereth is active, being a steward and secretary of the church. In politics he is a Republican.

GEORGE HUGHES, one of Johnson county's leading citizens and successful men, was born in White River township, this county, March 31, 1833, son of Jesse and Nancy (Milton) Hughes.

Jesse Hughes was reared in Tennessee, and came to Indiana when a young man, settling in Fayette county, where on June 25, 1818, he was married to Miss Nancy Milton, daughter of David and Abigail Milton, of Virginia. She was born Aug. 29, 1801, and was a lady of intelligence and culture, and a worthy helpmate to her husband. She died in June, 1852. Her father, David Milton, remained in Virginia until his marriage, when he moved to Fayette county, Ind., where for several years he rented a farm. Having bought land in White River township, Mr. Milton moved there with his family and became one of the successful men of the county, and lived there until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Milton were members of the Methodist Church, and did much to promote its growth. Their children were as follows: Nancy, Mrs. Hughes; Elizabeth, Mrs. L. Townsend; Mary, Mrs. Amos Smith; and John, who died and left a large family. Jesse Hughes rented a farm in Fayette county, and besides attending to this he found time to do other work, and being a careful man managed to save money. He remained in Fayette county until after the birth of his fifth child in 1830, moving to Johnson county, where he entered 160 acres of heavily timbered land in White River township. He built a cabin and lived on this land until 1850, when he purchased the adjoining farm of 160 acres, on which place George Hughes now lives. Jesse Hughes made many improvements to this farm and buildings, and spent the remainder of his life there. He had the confidence and respect of all who knew him, and was one of the leaders in the development of the county. In his youth he worked hard, doing all his farm work by hand, and well-deserved the wealth he had accumulated for old age.

Mr. Hughes became a Christian early in life, and joined the Methodist Church. He was an active worker and filled all the offices of the church. He became class leader and exhorter, and was for many years a local preacher. Through his efforts the society now known as Mt. Auburn M. E. Church was formed. The history of Mt. Auburn M. E. Church dates back to 1826. The few Methodists of this vicinity at that time worshipped in a frame building 24 x 30 feet at Pleasant Hill, and located on the banks of Pleasant Run, one mile west of the present site of Fairview Church. The names of some of the members are still remembered: Henry Britton; Abner Leonard and wife; George Wright; Jesse Hughes; Julia Pruitt; Frank Sanders; Margaret Smart; Thomas Davis; and Nicholas Orme. This was a flourishing society for many years, but as the country became better settled other societies formed. In the year 1835 the first Methodist Class was formed in this neighborhood, being organized at the home of William Harrell, which is now owned and occupied by George Hughes. This class was partly an outgrowth of the Old Pleasant Hill Society, and much of the credit for its formation is due to Jesse Hughes. Some of the members were: Jesse Hughes and wife; John Surface and wife; William Harrell and wife; John Robe and wife; Jane Bass; Amos Smith and wife; Abner Leonard and wife; David Milton and wife; Valentine Carter and wife; J. B. Dobbins; Eve Dobbins; Mrs. Cox; Catherine Sells; W. K. Smith; John Andis; Michael Surface. Others united later. About 1836 the members of this society and others erected, about one-half mile west of the present church, a small frame building, with walls of mud. This building was used for school and church purposes, and was familiarly known as the Old Mud School House. This was used for thirteen years during which time twelve or fourteen ministers labored in the field, and in 1840, 1843, 1844 and 1845, successful camp-meetings were held. In 1848 or 1849 the present church was erected and although not entirely finished was used as a house of worship. In 1853, through the efforts of our subject, George Hughes, then a young man, who passed around a subscription list which was headed by his father, who made a liberal donation, enough money was obtained to finish the building. Mt. Auburn Church has always been an important factor for good in the community, and has had many able pastors. The Sabbath-school of this church had its origin in the Old Mud School House, and has become one of the largest and most active in the State. Mt. Auburn Church stands as a monument to Jesse Hughes and his fellow-workers for their efforts to spread the teachings of Christ.

Jesse and Nancy (Milton) Hughes were blessed with thirteen children as follows: David, who died in Iowa; Thomas, who died in Missouri; John, who died in Iowa; James, who died in Iowa; Almira, Mrs. Jeff Davis, who died about four years ago in Pleasant township; Wesley, who died on the homestead; William, a banker at Corydon, Iowa; Jesse, who died in June, 1907, in Corydon, Iowa; George, our subject; Milton, who died in Whiteland, March 1, 1908; Benjamin F., of Iowa; Margaret, Mrs. T. Mitchell; Absalom P., who died at the age of four years. Before the birth of two younger children some of the older ones had left home to start out for themselves. At a reunion of the family all were under the paternal roof, the only time that the entire family sat at one table. Three sons and one daughter still survive. The children are worthy church members and good citizens. Mr. Hughes sold all his land but the farm on which our subject, George Hughes, lives, and had invested his money in Government bonds, which were divided among his children at his death. George Hughes removed the remains of his father and mother, and David Milton and wife, to Mount Pleasant Cemetery, where they now rest.

George Hughes was born and reared among the pioneers of Johnson county, and in his youth took part in the hard work of the new country. He remained at home until twenty years of age, when his father gave him, as he did all his sons, one hundred dollars with which to go out into the world. George rented land for a year, when he went to Iowa and there he entered land; later he returned to Johnson county, and in February, 1856, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Sells, a lady of culture, who was born in this county, daughter of William and Catherine Sells, of Virginia. William Sells came to Indiana before his marriage, entered land and became a successful farmer. He was noted as a rail splitter. Both he and his wife died in this county and are buried at Mt. Pleasant Cemetery. Their children were as follows: David, who died young; Eliza, Mrs. J. Groseclose; Isaac, who went west and is now dead; Elizabeth, the first wife of our subject; Lloyd, at home. Mrs. Elizabeth (Sells) Hughes died in Johnson county, and was buried in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery. She was a good Christian woman, a devoted wife and mother, and a consistent member of the M. E. Church. Her children were as follows: Nancy Catherine, Mrs. G. Wassham, whose husband is a member of the police force, of Indianapolis; Anna E., Mrs. O. Dunham; Rose A., Mrs. J. J. Sedam; Mary E., Mrs. W. McCarthy; Chameron C., who follows the occupation of a farmer; Bruce, who is an insurance agent at Indianapolis; and Brusam (twin to Bruce), who married J. J. Clara, a policeman of Indianapolis.

In 1890, several years after the death of his first wife, Mr. Hughes married Mrs. Ursula Clara, whose first husband Wesley Clara, had died leaving her with four children. Mrs. Ursula Hughes is a daughter of Jacob Dorrell, whose history can be found in the sketch of William Dorrell elsewhere. She is a worthy helpmate to her husband and a Christian woman, being a consistent member of the U. B. Church. There are no children by this union.

After his marriage Mr. Hughes rented a farm and built a saw mill, in which he used steam power, and was the first to introduce the circular saw in this county. He conducted his saw mill for three years meeting with good success, when he sold his mill and established a general merchandise business at Rocklane, this county, and was in business there for eight years. After selling his merchandise business Mr. Hughes bought the interests of the other heirs to the home farm, and moved there. He still occupies the place, giving his attention to stock raising and farming. In his youth he united with Mt. Auburn M. E. Church, and has ever since been one of its leading members, and has contributed largely to its success. In politics he is a Democrat, and while he has filled several offices, he has never aspired to become prominent in politics. He is a successful business man and farmer, and is one of the popular and honored citizens of the community.

WILLIAM MCFARLAND, who resides at No. 1420 Pleasant street, Indianapolis, was born in the southeastern part of Campbell county, Ky., April 12, 1814, son of Benjamin and Mary (Ratcliff) McFarland, both of whom were natives of Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin McFarland moved into Indiana with their family in 1826, and, locating on Government land, made a home on Lick Creek, Perry township, Marion county, and there lived for twenty-seven years. At the end of that period, because of advancing age, Mr. McFarland put the management of his affairs in the hands of his son William. In 1854, when William moved into the southeastern part of the county, his father accompanied him, and again, when William moved to the neighborhood of Southport, he went too, and there died about the opening of the Civil war, when he was ninety years and six months old. His wife, the mother of William McFarland, died about five years prior to his death, when she was aged eighty-five years. In religion they were both Presbyterians. When he lived in Harrison county, Ky., he long served as sheriff of his county. Benjamin McFarland was twice married, his first wife being Martha Stinson, by whom he had one child, a daughter. His second wife was Mary Ratcliff, and they were the parents of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are deceased but William, the youngest.

Robert McFarland, grandfather of William, was a native of Virginia, and an early settler of Kentucky, where he died in old age. He had a large family and was a veteran of the war of the Revolution. His main occupation in life was that of farming. The maternal grandfather of William McFarland was a native of Virginia and an early settler in Kentucky, where he too died at a ripe old age, leaving a numerous family.

William McFarland was twelve years old when he accompanied his parents into Indiana, and he has lived in Marion county continuously since his arrival. When he was a boy he attended subscription schools very little and did not secure an opportunity to study arithmetic until he was twenty-one years of age. At that time he was running a saw mill and felt the need of a knowledge of figures in his own business affairs. With vim he entered upon the study of arithmetic, and soon was able to cast accounts and calculate quickly and accurately. William lived with his father until old age began to tell very seriously upon that old gentleman, whereupon he took charge of the family affairs, and for many years was a thrifty farmer and most industrious mill man.

Mr. McFarland was married Sept. 26, 1839, to Miss Martha Ann Chinn, daughter of John P. and Elizabeth (Pig) Chinn. To this union were born eleven children, ten of whom are now living: (1) Carey Allen, who lives in Perry township, married Margaret Grable, and had five children, Edna, Guy, Agnes, Elizabeth and Fay. (2) Mary Elizabeth, who married Rev. E. S. Riley, a Baptist preacher, lives in Garnett, Kans., the mother of one daughter. (3) Miss Appoline lives at home. (4) John L., who runs a transfer business in Indianapolis, married Ellen Stadel, and they have two children, Edith May and Charles. (5) Artamecie is unmarried and at home. (6) Benjamin F. married Salina Ewing, and they live in Indianapolis. (7) William H., a farmer on the old homestead, married Belle Smock, and they have five children, Roxanna, Lawrence, Nancy, Parvin and Martha. (8) Luella is at home. (9) Belle, who married Charles Collins, died leaving four children, Clarence, Frederick, Mary and Leo. (10) Margaret and (11) Lillian are at home.

Mr. and Mrs. William McFarland are members of the Baptist Church of Southport, where they still keep their membership. In politics he is a Republican, but has never held office except in the early days when he was school director for a time. His farm comprises 140 acres of fine farming land, well improved, near Southport. For over ten years he and his wife have lived in Indianapolis. His daughters Luella and Margaret are teachers in the Indianapolis schools, where they have been engaged for some years.

JAMES W. BALDWIN is a name well and favorably known throughout Johnson county and particularly in the city of Franklin. Its possessor has steadily risen on his own merits for years past, until the community has come to recognize him as a fit and competent leader, and a man to whom it can turn upon all questions affecting its welfare. The ability to command and direct the affairs of men, is always greatly coveted, and proud should he be who is fortunate enough to be so constituted as to be competent to assume these responsibilities, and doubly so, if he can so conduct himself as to win only approval at the hands of his fellow citizens. Popularity is always largely conditioned upon success, for this is at least a safe, even if an unfair, measure of ability. Mr. Baldwin combines all these varied talents and is rapidly rising into prominence in city and county where he is highly esteemed by all.

He was born in Boone county, Ind., March 5, 1859, son of George Baldwin, of Ohio. He has two brothers now living, John, of Boone county, and James W., of Franklin county; also a half-brother living in Lebanon, and a half-sister in Crawfordsville. His father was by occupation a farmer, coming with his parents from Ohio when only five years of age, and settling with them in Putnam county, where he passed his boyhood days in the varied duties and pleasures of a farmer boy. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the Civil war, in the 52d Ind. V. I., and served about a year with great honor to himself, when he fell before a rebel bullet in the battle of Murfreesboro, never to rise again. His widow still lives in Boone county. Both were earnest and useful members of the Methodist Church.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Baldwin of this review, by name John Baldwin, was a native of Ohio, and of Irish descent. He was a farmer in Putnam county, moving later to Montgomery county, Ind., where he settled about seven miles east of Crawfordsville, and there he lived until his death, which occurred when he had reached the age of seventy-six years. He left a large family, which was well-provided for by his estate.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. Baldwin was James McGowns, a Kentuckian of Dutch descent, and a farmer by occupation. Emigrating from his birth place, he came to Indiana and there resided for about fifteen years, when the desire to see his old State again induced him to return to Kentucky, and he settled about five miles from Frankfort, where he died, at the advanced age of seventy-five years. He was the father of eighteen children, by three different wives.

Mr. James W. Baldwin was reared on a farm in Boone county, attending the district schools, of that section. He was an agriculturist until the year 1889, on Dec. 12th of which year he came to Franklin, and here he has since made his abode.

On Nov. 25, 1881, he was joined in wedlock to Alice McClain, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (McClain) McClain. Nine children were born of this union, four sons and five daughters, and these were named Delia, Anna, B'anche, Lucky, James, Gale, Emma and Charlene, and one child died in infancy. Emma also died when young, being only two years of age. Delia followed at the age of ten. The other children are now all residing at home, and reflect much credit upon their parents.

Both Mr. Baldwin and his wife are earnest and influential members of the Methodist Church, where they have long been highly esteemed. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, Red Men and the Modern Woodmen, in all of which fraternities he is very popular. In politics he has long been an ardent Democrat, and has been prominent in the party for many years. He was appointed prosecutor of Harrison township, in Boone county, for one term of two years. He followed the draying business in Franklin for eight years, when he was appointed city marshal, in which office he acquitted himself with great ability, and as the result of his able services in times past and of the high opinion in which he is held, he was selected as the nominee of the Democratic party for sheriff, was elected Nov. 6, 1903, and re-elected in November, 1905, serving until Jan. 1, 1907. He owns a pleasant home filled with many comforts, about five acres of land in the northeastern part of Franklin, and 323 acres of land in Brown county, Ind. His steady rise from the lowly lot of the farmer's boy has been attended at all times with respect and admiration of those who have known him, and it is safe to predict for him a splendid future, as he is just in his prime and possesses many qualities that go to make the successful business and public man.

GEORGE W. WEIR (deceased), formerly sheriff of the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana, was born in Wheeling, W. Va., Nov. 2, 1840, a son of Thomas and Jane (Kennedy) Weir.

Thomas and Jane (Kennedy) Weir were both born in Scotland, the former in Edinburgh, and the latter in Paisley. They had a family of seven children, three sons and four daughters, but one of whom survives, Catherine Ann, wife of Eli Thompson, of Indianapolis. David Kennedy, the maternal grandfather, was engaged in the manufacture of the celebrated Paisley shawls, at Paisley. Later he came to America and settled at Steubenville, Ohio, where he died well on in years. Thomas Weir, father of George W., came to America about 1820, and settled at Wheeling, W. Va., removed thence to Steubenville, Ohio, and still later to Bethany, W. Va. By trade he was a millwright, and he followed that occupation where business opportunities seemed most promising. From Bethany he went to Cincinnati, and in the spring of 1849, came to Indianapolis, where he remained until his death, which took place in 1866, at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife preceded him on July 3, 1860, aged sixty years. They were Presbyterians in religious faith at first, but united with the Christian Church under the powerful preaching of Alexander Campbell, the founder of that branch of Christian faith.

George W. Weir was nine years old when he came to Indianapolis with his parents, and this beautiful city was his home up to the time of his death. His education was obtained in the common schools and in the Edinburg Seminary. He was working at the carpenter's trade when the Civil war broke out, and the stirring events of those days aroused a loyalty that caused his enlistment, Aug. 12, 1861, in Company C, 27th Ind. V. I., with which command he served gallantly for three years. Wounded at the battle of Antietam, he was transferred to the Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps. He participated in the great battles of South Mountain, Antietam and Winchester, and in innumerable skirmishes and lesser engagements.

After the happy closing of the war, Mr. Weir came home and went to clerking in the store of J. L. Franklin in Indianapolis, and later engaged in a number of different lines of business, including butchering, keeping a restaurant and conducting a dairy. For more than seven years he was sheriff of the Supreme and Appellate Courts of Indiana, filling the position with the greatest efficiency.

Mr. Weir was married Feb. 13, 1870, to Miss Annie E. Lynam, daughter of John D. and Mary Jane (Watkins) Lynam. Four children were born to this union, Stella, Everett L., Edwin A. and Eugene M., all of whom died in infancy, except Everett L., who is paymaster in the office of the Atlas Engine Works. On Sept. 19, 1906, he married Miss Bertha Lucille Elliott, daughter of James Edward and Rose (Kimberlin) Elliott. Mr. Weir was an active member of the Sixth Street Christian Church, of which he was treasurer, and with which the son and mother are also united. The family home is located at No. 1122 Hoyt avenue. Mr. Weir belonged to Gordon Post, No. 281, G. A. R., and to Wheatley Lodge, No. 8, Knights of Honor. He died Jan. 29, 1906, aged sixty-five years, two months and twenty-seven days. He had been a resident of Indianapolis more than fifty years, and had the confidence and respect of all who knew him.

ALEXANDER McCLAIN. Industry and frugality have, we venture to say, accomplished more in the history of this country than all the ephemeral brilliance of discovery and invention. The occasional man who is equipped with rare intellect and executive ability—one who can promote great undertakings and amass untold wealth—is really almost unimportant in our domestic economy. In the very nature of things all men cannot excel their fellows or lead them to business successes. These rare spirits do indeed excite great interest, and, like the flying comet, leave a blaze of brilliance wherever they go, but nevertheless it is the great mass of the people who constitute the State and a country prospers solely according to the successes of the great majority of its component factors, its citizens, in their respective spheres.

Mr. Alexander McClain was born in Marion county, Ind., Aug. 25, 1835, son of John and Susanne (Clark) McClain, both natives of Kentucky. He had three brothers and three sisters, four of whom are now living besides Alexander; Sarah Isabel, wife of Henry McCauley, of Tipton, Ind.; Louie J., wife of Harvey Clark, of South Carlton, Ky.; Moses G., a prominent and successful lawyer in Indianapolis; and John W., of Southport, Ind. Another brother, James S., was an orderly in the Civil war, and lost his life while fighting valiantly for the cause of the Union. He had one other sister, Malinda C., who is now deceased, and who was about forty years of age at the time of her death.

John McClain, the father, conducted a successful business as an agriculturist throughout his life, coming to Indiana when of tender age with his parents, who settled near Indianapolis in Marion county. Here he grew to manhood and was married, and here he reared his family, dying in Franklin township, without warning, while at work in the fields, on the sixth day of July, 1865. He was born March 10, 1808. He was a life-long member of the Methodist Church, in which he was an exhorter and a licensed local preacher, and he always kept his doors open to the traveling preachers of those early days. He was noted for his hospitality, his devotion to his religion and his sterling qualities. Three of his sons served in the regular army, and he was himself a participant in the defense against the Morgan raid during the Civil war.

Susanne McClain was born April 29, 1811, in Muhlenberg county, Kentucky, removing from Kentucky to Indiana with her father's family in 1827. She was joined in wedlock to John McClain in the year 1834, and the earlier years of her life constitute a thrilling history of hardship and privation. Coming into this country when it was an unbroken wilderness, she lived to see it developed into its present state of cultivation and productiveness. For many years before her death, which occurred at her home near Southport, in Marion county, on Monday, April 30, 1877, she was a confirmed invalid, suffering extremely from physical infirmity. For about fifty years she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and during all her sufferings she never lost her faith or interest in her religious belief, and lived and died true to its teachings, and filled with the certainty that a life eternal awaited her beyond.

"As the bird to its sheltering nest,
When the storm on the hill is abroad,
So her spirit has flown from this world of unrest,
To repose on the bosom of God."

The paternal grandfather of Mr. McClain was James McClain, a native of Kentucky, who came to Indiana among the early pioneers, and settled in Marion county, where he died at the age of nearly one hundred years. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he was actively engaged in the war of 1812, and later in the Black Hawk war. He was of Scotch-Irish descent and possessed all the qualities which went to make the pioneer of early days. He reared a large family, giving them such advantages as were possible, and providing for them each and all as they grew up.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. McClain was Alexander Clark, coming also from Kentucky in the early days and settling in what is now known as Clark township, in Johnson county, where he died at an advanced age, as did his wife, after they had successfully reared a large family.

Alexander McClain passed his boyhood days in Marion county, where he was wont to go a distance of from two to three miles to the little pioneer school-house. He well remembers many exciting incidents of danger and privation in his boyhood days, among which is falling off a foot-log one winter's day, while crossing a creek swollen with melting snows. He narrowly escaped drowning, but after a struggle succeeded in clambering out of the water and with his clothes frozen stiff about him, he made his way as best he could to the distant school-house. He remained at home until he reached maturity, when he went to work by the day, and later by the month, for himself, and his first purchase of land was forty acres near Des Moines, Iowa, where he lived, caring for the same, for three winters. In the spring of 1861 he returned to Indiana and rented a farm in Needham township, Johnson county, which he soon purchased, and which he still owns. Adding to this from time to time other land, he now finds himself the owner of 240 acres of highly improved and valuable land. He retired from farming, and Oct. 4, 1907, he purchased his present beautiful home at No. 15 North Forsythe street, in Franklin.

On Nov. 4, 1857, he was joined in marriage to Mary Jane Hendricks, daughter of L. N. and Drucilla (Hardesty) Hendricks, and by her had seven children, five sons and two daughters, as follows: Jasper B., Squire H., Emma B., William M., Laura A., John G. and George C. Of these Jasper B. died Sept. 14, 1885, at the age of twenty-six years. Squire H. married Elva Tilson, and lives in Needham township, with his wife and five children, Delta, Marie and Mary (twins), Oak, and Lyman Alexander. Emma B. married Sandy Brockman, and lives in Needham township. William M. was married to Ida Edmunds, by whom he has three children, Isel, Marcia and Fred, and resides in the same township. Laura A. married Dillard Beeson, now deceased, and had three children, George, May and Glenn; she married (second) Harrison Adams, by whom she had one child, Ray, and now resides with her family in Franklin. John G. died March 16, 1898, unmarried, at the age of twenty-six years. George C. lives at home and is married to Orpha Belk, and has one child Marion.

Mrs. Mary J. (Hendricks) McClain died Sept. 10, 1886, at the age of forty-nine years and four months. She was an active and devoted member of the Methodist Church. On June 11, 1890, Mr. McClain married Rhoda A. Price, daughter of William and Drucilla (Russell) Price, of Terre Haute, Ind., being born, however, in Johnson county, near Edinburg, on Oct. 26, 1855. Both are influential and active members of the Methodist Church, in which he is a trustee. He is a master Mason in the Franklin lodge, in which he is highly esteemed. His political faith is that of a Republican, and he has long been an ardent adherent to Republican principles.

Mrs. Rhoda A. (Price) McClain was one of five children, her parents being early settlers in Johnson county and her mother was born in Blue River township, near Edinburg. Richard Russell was her maternal grandfather and was a native of Virginia, removing with his parents to Kentucky when about twelve years of age, and coming when a young man to Johnson county, Ind., where he located. He died in Vigo county at the age of sixty-two years, leaving a large family. Her father died in Vigo county in the year 1874, at the age of fifty-four, and her mother died at the same age, surviving her husband, however, some fourteen years, and living until 1888.

Mr. McClain has long been regarded as one of the most able and influential men of Needham township. Now in his advancing years, having carefully reared a large family which cannot but be a source of much gratification to him; having attained most of his earlier ambitions, and having made a thorough success of his life's work in the business world; having done much within the church and outside of it, to advance the cause of humanity and possessing the esteem and admiration of all, he should join his friends and associates of years past and say with them, in looking back over the years gone by, "It is well."

WILLIAM T. McCARTY, M. D., of Indianapolis, engaged in general practice, and at the same time a specialist in cancerous troubles and skin and blood diseases, was born at Greencastle, Putnam county, Ind., April 27, 1856, and was reared to manhood in his native city, where he had Dr. Evans, a well known physician, for his preceptor, when he began his medical studies.

Dr. McCarty was graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1880, and for four years was engaged in practice at Bainbridge, after which he took a course of lectures at the Indiana Medical College, and was there graduated. After this he practiced medicine in Greencastle, where Dr. Evans, his esteemed friend and preceptor, had been in practice some twelve years. After eight years of successful professional work at Greencastle, Dr. McCarty removed, in 1888, to Indianapolis, and here, besides in his general practice, he has made a reputation in the treatment of cancerous afflictions and skin and blood diseases of various kinds. For this work he has made thorough preparation, and his success is marked. Patients come to him from distant cities and States, and derive vast benefit from his scientific and interesting treatment. Competent assistants are employed by him, and every device that modern medicine suggests in alleviation or cure of these dread diseases.

Dr. McCarty was married in Brainbridge, Ind., in 1888, to Miss Flora Hubbard, a daughter of Oliver Hubbard, a well-known merchant of that city. She is a graduate of the Bainbridge High School. To this union have come two children, Robert and Ruth, both of whom are living and at home. Dr. McCarty belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and in politics is a Republican. He is a member of the Columbia Club, one of the leading political associations of the city. He and his wife belong to the Methodist Church.

Dr. McCarty is a son of John and Martha (Peck) McCarthy, natives of Tennessee, who came to Putnam county, Ind., in childhood. The father was one of the pioneers of that county where he died on a farm near Greencastle, in April, 1900. The widowed mother still lives on the old farm, and is now over eighty years old. Two sons and two daughters were born to them, of whom Dr. William T. is the youngest. The oldest is Mrs. Sarah Brockway, of Greencastle, where Mr. Brockway is a manufacturer of wagon stock. The second member of the family is Mrs. Amanda Wible, of Orange county, Ind., where her husband is a farmer. Isaac is unmarried, and lives at home with his mother, and has charge of the family estate. The father left much valuable real estate, and all the family are well and comfortably situated. The family ancestry of the McCartys runs back to Scotch-Irish progenitors.

ISAAC B. SCUDDER, a prominent farmer of Wayne township, Marion county, Ind., is a descendant of one of the early settled families of this county, and is connected by ties of kindred with some of the names which have been representative of distinguished families in a number of States. Mr. Scudder has every reason to feel the pride of birth, although he is so well-known and so highly esteemed individually, that he needs no such heritage.

This Scudder family was founded in America by the first of the name who came hither from England in the early Colonial days, and settled in New Jersey. There John Scudder, grandfather of Isaac B., was born Aug. 8, 1757, and there married Susan Hatfield, also of English descent, born Oct. 22, 1758. John Scudder was a man of honor and integrity, was a leading farmer, and he reared a family which in turn inherited his most estimable qualities. The record of his children reads: Alfred, born in 1781; John, born in 1783, died at St. Louis; Ann, born in 1785; Sarah, born in 1787, became Mrs. Decamp; Susan, born in 1790, became Mrs. Williams; Clark, born in 1793; William, born in 1795; Nathan, born in 1798; and Elizabeth, born in 1800. Both the Decamp and Williams families were prominent in the early days and later growth of Cincinnati, Ohio.

William Scudder was reared in New Jersey, and there learned the trade of stone-mason. He went first to New York City, but later drifted Westward in pursuit of work and thus reached Cincinnati. There he followed his trade, and then engaged in the flat-boat business, carrying produce southward, and he thus was enabled to embark in a grocery business at Cincinnati. Other lines in which he was successful were as host of one of the old-time taverns, in Hamilton county, and in farming and stockraising; connected with the latter was the buying, matching and selling of horses. He was an excellent trader and fine business man, and became very wealthy. Much of his property was, however, lost by his kind endorsement of notes for friends. Mr. Scudder is spoken of as being a man of fine appearance, and as possessing all those qualities which make a man esteemed in his neighborhood and beloved in his family. His hospitality was genuine and his companionship agreeable. In 1855 he bought a farm on the old National Road, six miles west of Indianapolis, to which he moved in 1856, but his death occurred in 1857. His effects included many farming machines which he had made use of long before his neighbors invested in them. In public affairs he was always deeply interested, and belonged to the State militia, and during the Mexican war, served as a quartermaster. In politics he was a strong and a leading Democrat, but never accepted political office, although his time was much in demand as administrator and executor of estates and as guardian for children. His reputation for integrity was above reproach.

William Scudder was married thrice, first at Cincinnati, and one daughter was born to this marriage, Elvira, who married (first) J. Gilpin, and (second) A. Skank. The children of his second marriage were: Henry, born in 1830, resides in Indianapolis; William, born in 1832, lives in Arkansas; and Edward, born in 1835, is deceased. In 1838, Mr. Scudder's third marriage was to Jane Moore Ray, born Dec. 11, 1822, in Delaware, daughter of Abraham and Jane (Moore) Ray, of Irish descent, although natives of Delaware. Mrs. Ray married (second) Blair Kincaid, who, later with the family, moved by team to Illinois, but soon went by way of flat-boat, back to Cincinnati, and in Hamilton county, Ohio, bought a farm. Here Mr. and Mrs. Kincaid lived to a good old age. Mr. and Mrs. Kincaid belonged to the Baptist Church.

Mrs. Scudder, the mother of Isaac, still survives, and although past eighty years old, is one of the most intelligent and active members of her son's family, beloved and tenderly cherished. Her children were these: John, born June 18, 1840, was long a prominent business man of Indianapolis, many years in the livery business, but now deceased; Mary J., born Aug. 16, 1843, was Mrs. Isaac Johnson, now deceased; Isaac B.; and Robert, born Aug. 21, 1851, died single.

Isaac B. Scudder was born July 18, 1848, in Hamilton county, Ohio, and came with his parents to Indiana when a boy of seven years. Here he was reared and educated in the common schools and after the death of his father, remained with his widowed mother until he was twenty-four years old. In 1874 he went to Indianapolis and engaged in a livery business for five years, in 1875 marrying and settling on the farm where he still continues, this being a portion of the Thomas Eaglesfield farm. Until 1879 he lived in the original house, but at that date he erected a commodious two-story brick residence on a most beautiful site, surrounded by a delightful grove and commanding a fine view. Here Mr. Scudder has successfully carried on large farming operations and for a number of years has also engaged in dairying, taking a just pride in his fine herd of sleek Jersey cattle. His life is filled with congenial cares and he never aspires to fill political office, voting an independent political ticket.

Mr. Scudder married Mary L. Eaglesfield, born May 16, 1850, at Indianapolis, a lady of most amiable qualities and womanly virtues. She was a daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Stubbs) Eaglesfield, the former of whom was born in 1807, at Elizabethtown, N. J., and the latter near Camden, Ohio, where they were married. Thomas was a son of Theophilus, and he a son of Thomas Eaglesfield, of England, where Theophilus was born. Thomas was a large grower of wool and an extensive manufacturer of carpets, and was successful prior to his emigration to America. On the voyage he lost a portion of his property by the sinking of the vessel. He is mentioned in the History of New Jersey as one of the early settlers. In his new home at Newark, he established a hat factory, and there his life terminated. His son Theophilus married Phoebe Gardiner, daughter of Benjamin Gardiner, also of England. Theophilus located first at Elizabethtown, N. J., but later moved to Butler county, Ohio, and settled among the pioneers, becoming prominent and wealthy, dying in middle life. All the Eaglesfield family belonged to the Church of England. The children of Theophilus were: Thomas, the father of Mrs. Scudder; Jane, Mrs. Railsback; Mary A., Mrs. Dr. A. A. Stall; George W., who died at Indianapolis; Sarah, Mrs. R. King, a teacher; Harriet, Mrs. L. E. Freeman; William, who died at Indianapolis.

Thomas Eaglesfield was born in New Jersey and moved with his parents to Butler county, Ohio, where he remained until after the death of his father, and then returned to his grandfather in New Jersey, and was apprenticed to the coach and wagon-making trade at Newark, and later went to New York City, also making a prospecting tour through the South, visiting Lexington, Ky., and New Orleans. Upon his return to Butler county he married, and in 1834 came to Indianapolis, entering 320 acres of land in Wayne township which he held during life. Soon after coming to Indianapolis, he formed a partnership with Fred Foltz, and they established the first carriage and wagon-making shop of any note, in the town, on the corner of Market and Pennsylvania streets, where the postoffice stands. After a few years this partnership was dissolved, and Thomas Eaglesfield established himself in business which he successfully conducted for a few years, and in 1838 joined his brother William in the dry-goods business. Some years later he sold his interest and rented a saw mill which the Ogden had erected, running this for them for a number of years. Embarking again in his trade, he was established on West Washington street, where he conducted business several years, leasing his land. In 1838 he moved upon a cleared up tract of his estate, settled down to life in his cabin, hired help to improve his farm and started active operations there. In the meantime another old New Jersey family, the Ogdens, had made large investments of land in and around Indianapolis, and knowing well the character of Thomas Eaglesfield for integrity, insisted upon his acting as their agent, giving him power of attorney. For many years this mutually satisfactory arrangement continued. It was a daughter of one of these Ogdens, Jonathan, who married Philip D. Armour, the Chicago meat magnate. The closest social relations existed between the Eaglesfields and the Ogdens. From 1858 to 1869 the family of Thomas Eaglesfield lived on the farm in Wayne township, when, on account of failing health he went to Louisiana, bought a plantation adjoining the town of Franklin, and decided to remain in the more genial climate. All things were not as desired, however, and after a trial of several years, he sent a portion of his family North, remaining behind to attend to the final closing of his affairs, when he was stricken by apoplexy and died April 27, 1871. His remains were interred at Franklin. His family returned to the Indiana homestead, and there his wife died in 1877. Thomas Eaglesfield was a strong and influential Democrat, and served as a member of the Indianapolis council. All of his brothers were also early business men of Indianapolis. Thomas was kindly remembered for his many acts of charity and for his energy and public spirit. He was always in favor of developing the city's resources and was one of her most prominent and useful men. In Camden, Ohio, he married Margaret Stubbs, daughter of John and Rhoda (Whitcomb) Stubbs, the former a native of North Carolina, and son of Isaac Stubbs (he being the third Isaac in succession), of English descent, and among the early families of the American colonies. They were Quakers and opposed to war, and also to slavery, leaving North Carolina on that account. Isaac Stubbs settled in Ohio in 1785, a pioneer and frontiersman. In Chatham county, N. C., he married Margaret Carter, of an old and honored North Carolina family. John Stubbs, son of Isaac, was a miller by trade and followed same in Butler county, accumulating large means. He remained there until his children were grown and settled for themselves, and after the death of his wife came to Marion county and passed his last days among his children. He lies buried in the old Bridgeport Quaker cemetery. The Whitcomb family was a prominent one of New England, and although they were of Quaker belief, participated in the Revolutionary war. The children of John and Rhoda Stubbs were: Huldah, Mrs. F. F. White; Margaret, mother of Mrs. Scudder; Zimri, who made his home with the Eaglesfields for a time, and who was married four times and finally died in Cowley county, Kans.; Mary, Mrs. M. Shurts; James, deceased; Joshua, of Marion county; Elizabeth, Mrs. A. Fuqua; Isaac W., who entered the Civil war as a private, was promoted to be captain for bravery at the battle of Stone River, and died in Texas in 1874 from effects of hard service; Anthony W., who died in Missouri.

The children of Thomas Eaglesfield were: Emma W., Mrs. George Hanch; Mary, who died when two and one-half years of age; and Mary L. (2), who is Mrs. Scudder.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Scudder are: Helen, born Aug. 17, 1879; Margaret D., Dec. 20, 1880; and Jane M., Jan. 19, 1884, all remaining yet with their parents, making a happy and united family. For many years Mr. Scudder has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, Bridgeport Lodge, No. 162.

AUGUSTUS SPIEGEL, who died July 28, 1906, was a resident of Indianapolis for almost fifty years. He was a native of Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, born May 1, 1825, in the village of Michelstadt.

Jacob and Elizabeth (Braun) Spiegel, Mr. Spiegel's parents, were natives of Germany, and his paternal grandfather died in that country. He carried on a tannery. Jacob Spiegel was a tanner and currier in Hessen-Darmstadt. In 1832 he brought his family to this country, locating in Baltimore, where he died in 1835, at the age of forty-nine years. His widow took the family to Cincinnati, where she died in 1839, at the age of fifty-two years. Both were Lutherans. They had three sons and one daughter, Christian, of Shelbyville, Ind., being now the only one living. The father of Mrs. Elizabeth (Braun) Spiegel was also a tanner in Germany. He died in his native land.

Augustus Spiegel was only seven years old when his parents came to this country. He lived at Baltimore until he was twelve years old, when he accompanied his mother to Cincinnati, and there grew to manhood, remaining in that city until 1848. For the ensuing ten years he had his home in Lawrenceburg, Ind. In 1858 he came to Indianapolis, where he made his home for the rest of his life. His education was obtained principally in Cincinnati, and when he was seventeen years of age he began at the trade of cabinet-making, which he followed as a journeyman until coming to Indianapolis. In 1858 he engaged in business with his brother Christian, Frederick Thoms and Henry Frank, under the firm name of Spiegel, Thoms & Company. His partners had established themselves in business three years before, and they continued together forty years. In 1895, when they retired from business, Augustus Spiegel and Henry Frank sold the plant to the railroad company for terminal purposes. Mr. Spiegel was in business on Washington street, in the building which is now occupied by the People's Outfitting Company, one of the large and substantial blocks of that street. Spiegel, Thoms & Company manufactured furniture, doing both a wholesale and retail business, all of the time under the same firm name.

Augustus Spiegel was married June 29, 1848, to Miss Ann Eliza, daughter of William and Hester (Allen) Lackey, and to this union were born six children: (1) Louisa married Willard C. Nichols, of Indianapolis, and is the mother of two children, Clarence W. and Isabell (who married Bernard Gardner). (2) Elizabeth died when twenty months old. (3) William C. married Anna Crafftiofer, of Indianapolis, and has four children, Catherine, Henry, Clara and Earl. (4) Henry L., of Indianapolis, married Anna Miller, and has two sons, Frank and Rollin. (5) Alice died at the age of seventeen years. (6) Mary A. first married Edward Nolan, and subsequently became the wife of Bartholomew B. Brooks, a coal dealer in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Spiegel died Jan. 13, 1893, at the age of sixty-eight years. She was a Methodist, and her husband held to the same religious faith. His mother was the second woman member of the German Methodist Church in Cincinnati. Mr. Spiegel belonged to Centre Lodge, No. 18, I. O. O. F., and held independent views in political matters. His home was at No. 403 North Liberty street, Indianapolis.

CORNELIUS LOW DITMARS, a prominent and substantial farmer and respected citizen of Johnson county, located on Section 17, in Franklin township, was born July 15, 1825, near New Brunswick, N. J., son of Garrett and Sarah (Low) Ditmars, both of whom were natives of New Jersey.

The ancestry on both paternal and maternal sides were of Dutch descent, being descendants in New Jersey of the sturdy burghers of Holland, who made their homes in that State prior to the Revolutionary war. They followed agricultural lives, but were ever ready to defend their adopted country from foreign foes, and Grandfather Low was a colonel in the Revolutionary army. His immediate descendants were not numerous.

Garrett Ditmars, father of Cornelius L., came to Indiana as a farmer, about 1837, located in Johnson county and bought land in partnership with his son William, in Union township. This property contained 200 acres which they cleared and improved and here he died when about sixty years of age. His widow survived him but two years. Both were devoted members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for many years. Outside of his farming interests, his ambitions and activity were centered in the church. A family of six sons and six daughters were born to these parents, the survivors of this family now being as follows: Peter, Cornelius L., John T., Richard V., and Rebecca, who is the widow of Oren Donnell, who lost his life in the Civil war. Edward, one of the sons, died recently.

Cornelius L. Ditmars was about twelve years of age when he accompanied his parents to Indiana, and he has lived in Johnson county ever since. His boyhood and youth were passed on the farm, his education being supplied by the subscription schools. Until he was twenty-one years old, he assisted at home, and then started out for himself, engaging to work by the month for George King, for $108 per annum. His next work was in a mill, where, by laboring about eighteen hours a day, he earned $35 per month, but he returned to farming, and worked for various parties for some five years, in the meantime accumulating money and building up a reputation in his neighborhood as a reliable, industrious young man. After his first marriage, Captain Banta, his father-in-law, asked him to take charge of and manage his farm of 500 acres, while he and wife moved to town and retired from active labor. The young man consented and ably managed this large property for eight years, this being of great value to him in the way of experience. In 1856 he bought his present farm, originally containing 170 acres, and moving to it in 1858 has resided there ever since. At the time of purchase it was in a dilapidated condition, but now it is one of the finest farms in Johnson county. In 1868, Mr. Ditmars erected a handsome brick residence and has otherwise beautified and improved the property, building barns, fences, planting orchards and making everything attractive. The farm now includes 320 acres and he also owns another farm, east of the home place, also consisting of 320 acres. Mr. Ditmars is an intelligent and scientific farmer, and thoroughly understands every detail of his business, and adopts modern machinery and approved methods.

On Feb. 1, 1850, Mr. Ditmars was married to Miss Caroline Banta, daughter of Capt. John P. and Catherine (List) Banta. Four children were born to this union, namely: John W., a farmer in Franklin township, married Etta Graham, and they have two children, Marie and Edith; Mary Belle married Everett McCaslin, of Rock county, Wis., and has two children, Herbert and Caroline; William S., a farmer in Franklin township, married Minnie Graham, and their two children are Jane and Court; and Emma died in infancy. Mrs. Ditmars died in 1863, a member of the Presbyterian Church. In February, 1872, Mr. Ditmars was married (second) to Miss Jennie Voris. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ditmars are valued members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he, like his father, takes a deep interest and serves as one of the elders. In politics he has always been identified with the Republican party, but says he has never found time, nor has he had the inclination to enter actively into political life, although in every way he is fitted to hold offices of trust and responsibility. In speaking of political preferment, he has been known to remark that he would prefer to hold a pair of lines over a team of mules, than to fill the best county office in the gift of the party. Through his own efforts he has become one of the wealthiest men in his community, and what is also true is that his accumulations have come through legitimate channels. He is truly a self-made man, and is a fine example of what energy, honesty and economy can accomplish. Mr. Ditmars has long been a leader in the model locality known as the Hopewell district, its residents being noted for sobriety and morality. His interests are much centered in agricultural movements, and he strives to not only reach a high point of excellence himself, but also encourages the efforts of others. As a man of the highest personal integrity he is esteemed by all.

MARK H. HOLLETT, of Indianapolis, has been associated with the history of central Indiana from his earliest days, having been born in Wayne county, this State, March 21, 1831. His father, Thomas Hollett, was born in Washington county, N. Y. The family is of French ancestry.

Thomas Hollett removed with his parents to Waterloo, Fayette county, Ind., when he was but a small boy, and there his father died soon after their arrival on the frontier. For many years he had his home in Wayne county, thence removing to Hendricks county. His wife, Sarah Acre, a native of Virginia, came to Indiana by way of Tennessee and Preble county, Ohio, where her people lived for several years. In the fall of 1837 Mr. Hollett and his family, consisting of his wife and four children, removed to Hendricks county, settling on a farm, where both father and mother spent the remainder of their lives. The four children, noted as coming to Hendricks county, were all living at the time of this writing, viz.: Mrs. Tabitha Jane Free, who resides in Hendricks county; Mark H., whose name introduces this article; Mrs. Martha Waffendon, of Arizona; and Mrs. Susan King, of Nebraska. The following children were born to the parents in Hendricks county: John, who was a member of the 79th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in the Civil war, was killed on the skirmish line at Big Shanty, Ga.; he was a good soldier, and had borne a gallant part in several heavy engagements previous to the one in which he lost his life. Mrs. Nancy Bray resides in Irvington, a suburb of Indianapolis. Mrs. Mary Matilda Whineyates is a resident of Rossville, Ill. Thomas B. died at the age of two years. James T. B. Hollett, now a resident of Brownsburg, Hendricks county, Ind., served in the 9th Indiana Cavalry during the war for the Union. Sarah E. Hollett, the youngest daughter, died in Arizona some years ago.

Mark H. Hollett was about six years of age when he moved with his parents into Hendricks county some seventy years ago, and he well remembers the appearance of the country in its pioneer days. The family was one of the very first to locate in that section, and there the father erected a log cabin in which the family lived for several years. There Mark H. was reared to manhood. When the family removed to Hendricks county in 1837, he passed through what was then Indianapolis, but a small place, and affording little promise of its future development. There are few now living whose memory out-reaches his. Thomas Hollett owned a grist mill in Hendricks county, which was run by water-power, and which was one of the first two in the county. Mark H. Hollett well remembers bringing cornmeal to Indianapolis when a boy, and selling it for twelve and a half cents a bushel. His memories of the old times are vivid, and his stories of the hardships through which the early settlers passed most pathetic. Yet the early days were not all days of trouble. There was a heartiness of life, a broadening sympathy and interest in the welfare of the community, and a readiness to help and cheer, that brightened the days of these hard-working men and women who were making a great State out of the wilderness and the prairie. And he has many pleasant and beautiful memories of the long ago.

In 1864 Mr. Hollett was married to Nancy Jane Smoth, a daughter of Almond and Nancy (Dodds) Smoth. Her father was born and reared in Virginia, and was a cousin of the famous general and President, Andrew Jackson. The mother was born Jan. 10, 1803, in Henry county, Ky., and her parents were from Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Smoth came to Hendricks county, Ind., in 1836, and there spent the remaining years of their lives. He was born in 1799, and died at the age of ninety-two. She died two years previously. Mrs. Hollett was one of seven children born to this worthy couple, two sons and five daughters, five of whom survive: Richard, of Haughville, a suburb of Indianapolis; James H., in Hendricks county, Ind.; Lydia Ann, of West Indianapolis; Elizabeth, who is married and living in Plainfield, Hendricks county; and Nancy Jane, Mrs. Hollett, who was born in 1842. Of these, James H. Smoth was a member of the 63d Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served valiantly and well in the war for the Union.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hollett have come six children, three sons and three daughters: William Grant, Nora, Flora, Thomas, Iva and Virgil. As has been seen, Mr. and Mrs. Hollett represent prominent Indiana pioneer families, and the greater part of their lives has been spent in Hendricks county. Their home has been in Indianapolis since 1894. They have many friends, and are well entitled to a long and sunny afternoon to their industrious lives.

GEORGE W. BYERS, a prominent farmer of Johnson county, located on Section 21, in Franklin township, was born in that township, June 15, 1851, son of Henry S. and Maria (McCauley) Byers, natives of Kentucky.

Henry S. Byers, paternal grandfather of George W., was one of the first of the pioneers from Kentucky into Indiana. A preliminary trip was made during which he entered land and, in preparation for his family, cleared six acres and erected a comfortable log house, returning then to Kentucky and later bringing the family to the new home in Indiana. Franklin township was his home until late in life, when they went to live with their children, the grandfather dying in White River township, at the age of eighty years. By his wife, Elizabeth Riley, he had a family of seven sons and four daughters. During the war of 1812, he served as a drum-major. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Byers, was Dr. Robert McCauley, a native of Scotland, and he also was an early settler in Johnson county, making his home near Mt. Pleasant Church, where he followed his profession and also engaged in farming. His death occurred in middle life, and he left two children.

Henry S. Byers (2), father of George W., was eighteen months old when his parents brought him to Indiana, and he grew to manhood and passed his life as a resident and successful farmer in Franklin township. He died on the old home farm, in 1900, aged seventy-five years, after dividing his large estate of some 700 acres among his children. His life had been spent in accumulating for them, and their welfare was very dear to him. His widow survived until 1901, dying at the age of seventy-three years. Both were consistent members of the Baptist Church, although in early years she had been a Presbyterian. During the Civil war, Mr. Byers served with the Home Guards. In politics he was a Republican. A family of thirteen children came to Mr. and Mrs. Byers, and eight of these are still living: Margaret is the widow of Isaac Vandivier, Jr., of Franklin township; George W.; Alonzo N. is a resident of Franklin, Ind.; Sylvanus lives in Franklin township; Adaline is the wife of John Wilkes, of Trafalgar; Caroline (twin to Adaline) is the wife of Riley Riggs, of Franklin; Susie is the wife of Newton McCaslin, of Franklin township; and Archibald lives in Franklin township. These names represent some of the best citizens in Franklin township, owners of the finest farms and most comfortable and attractive homes.

It is not a matter of surprise that George W. Byers was warmly attached to the people and surroundings in Franklin township, for this has been his home through life. His schooling was gained in the neighborhood district schools, and until he attained manhood the hospitable old home roof sheltered him. At the time of his marriage, his generous father gave him the sum of $2,000, and for the first year he remained on his father's land, and then rented his present farm, containing 150 acres, four years later purchasing the property. Success has attended him in his farming operations, his farm being one of the well-managed ones which have given Franklin township an enviable reputation in the county.

On Dec. 31, 1873, Mr. Byers was married to Miss Olive Rice, daughter of John and Sarah (Harding) Rice, and to this union were born eight children, as follows: Bertha M.; Ida May, who married Everett Carlsted, of Indianapolis; Mary E.; Walter H.; Florence G. H.; Carl R.; Ruby M. and Gladys G. H. The religious connection of the family is with the Baptist Church, in which Mr. Byers is both a deacon and a trustee. His convictions on public matters make him an adherent of the Prohibition party. In his locality where he is so well known, Mr. Byers enjoys universal respect and esteem.

The parents of Mrs. Byers were natives of Kentucky, who came to Indiana and settled first in Marion county, later moving to Hendricks county. There the father died in 1872. The mother of Mrs. Byers died in 1858, aged forty-nine years. Both parents belonged to the Missionary Baptist Church. They had ten children, the surviving three being: Mrs. Mary E. Faucett, of Newton, Ill.; Mrs. R. C. Briggs, of Homer, Ill.; and Mrs. Byers.

Mr. Rice later married Mrs. Delilah Kelley, but there was no issue to that union. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Byers was David Rice, who lived and died in Kentucky, a farmer and the father of a large family. The maternal grandfather was Aaron Harding, who was a native of Fayette county, Pa., of French descent. Moving to Kentucky and locating on a farm, he married in that State, but came to Indiana about 1837, settling near Brownsburg, in Hendricks county, where he died when almost ninety-six years old. His family consisted of three daughters and four sons. The Harding family came to America in the seventeenth century and settled in Pennsylvania. Samuel Harding was a pioneer Baptist preacher, and was one of the founders of Franklin College, and also the first pastor of the First Baptist Church of Franklin. He was a first cousin to the maternal grandfather of Mrs. George W. Byers. Another connection of interest was that Great-grandmother Harding was originally a Moore, and she was a sister to Mrs. Abigail Moore Simpson, whose mother was Hannah Simpson Grant, and maternal grandmother of General U. S. Grant.

GEORGE BYRON ELLIOTT, of Indianapolis, was born in that city Feb. 29, 1868, son of Joseph Taylor and Annetta (Langsdale) Elliott. The Elliots are of English descent, and of sturdy Pennsylvania stock.

William J. Elliott, grandfather of George B., was born in Butler county, Ohio, son of James Elliott, who emigrated from Pennsylvania to Ohio in 1799. Coming to Indiana in the fifties William J. Elliott settled in Indianapolis. For some years before settling here, however, he had been a resident of Ohio, and served as sheriff of Butler county, that State. On coming to Indianapolis he first engaged in the hotel business, which he followed some years. After the Civil war he served two terms as recorder of Marion county. During the war he was a close friend of Governor Morton. He died in Indianapolis about 1890, aged about eighty years. He was the father of a family of six children, four boys and two girls. One of his sons, Byron K., was born Sept. 4, 1835.

Joshua M. W. Langsdale, maternal grandfather of George B. Elliott, was born in Kentucky, and came to Indiana some time in the thirties. He died in Indianapolis about 1891, at the age of seventy-eight years, the father of a large family. He was a large real estate dealer.

Joseph Taylor Elliott, father of George B., was born in Butler county, Ohio, and came to Indiana with his father. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the 11th Indiana Zouaves, later becoming a member of the 124th Ind. V. I., and he served throughout the struggle. Entering the service as a private, he was promoted to second lieutenant. He had many thrilling experiences, and was in prison at Andersonville. After his discharge from the army he returned to Indianapolis, where he engaged in the abstract business until he sold out in 1900. He has been prominently identified with the business interests of the city, is the senior member of the firm of Jos. T. Elliott & Sons, is vice-president of the Indiana Title Guaranty & Loan Company, and for several years was president of the Marion Trust Company. In political faith he is a Republican.

Joseph T. Elliott married Annetta Langsdale, a native of Indianapolis, and to them were born three sons and one daughter, the three sons being: George B.; Joseph T., Jr.; and Charles Edgar. The daughter, Florence L., died when she was three years and nine months old. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott are Methodists in religious connection.

George B. Elliott was reared in Indianapolis and attended the public and high schools, which he left to take a position in Kansas City, Mo., as assistant local ticket agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company. He was there and at St. Joseph, Mo., for over a year, and then returned to Indianapolis to enter the employ of Elliott & Butler, in the abstract business. He was still in their employ in 1898, when elected to the office of county clerk, in which he served with great efficiency. Mr. Elliott has also served a term—1897—in the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1896 on the Republican ticket; and was clerk of the Circuit court of Marion, from November, 1898, to Jan. 1, 1903. He is a director in the Central Trust Company, and a member of the firm of Jos. T. Elliott & Sons.

Mr. Elliott belongs to Indianapolis Lodge, No. 56, K. of P., the Columbia Club, the Marion Club (of which he was one of the first presidents) and the Maennerchor.

In June, 1902, Mr. Elliott was married to Miss Mary Fitch Sewall, daughter of Elmer

E. and Lucy Sewall. They have had two children, George Elliott (deceased) and Sewall Elliott.

SAMUEL BROWN, a retired farmer now living in Franklin, Johnson county, Ind., is well known throughout that section. For many years his life was a very active one, but now on account of advancing age he is taking things easier, though he still conducts a flourishing livery business, not being content to live in idleness. He is the architect of his own fortune, and his various properties have all been accumulated by his own earnest efforts and unremitting labor.

Mr. Brown was born in Shelby county, Ky., April 8, 1828, son of James and Nancy (Thorn) Brown, natives of the same State. They had six sons and four daughters, three now living besides Samuel: Isaac N., of Wabash, Ind.; Elizabeth, wife of Lehman Weddel, of Arkansas; and David, who lives in Indianapolis, Indiana.

James Brown, the father, was a lifelong farmer. He came from Kentucky to Indiana in about 1855, settling in Hensley township, Johnson county, in which county he spent the remainder of his fruitful life, removing to Needham township, where he died at the age of about seventy years; his wife, surviving him about ten years, departed this life while on a visit to her home in the State of Kentucky, at the age of about seventy-two. Both are buried in Smiley cemetery, in Needham township.

Barnabas Brown, grandfather of Samuel, was born in Virginia, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Kentucky, dying there at an advanced age. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he had six children.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. Brown, was Samuel Thorn of Kentucky, who was a prosperous farmer in that State. In early youth he was stolen by the Indians, and was kept by them in all their wanderings for about three years, and was then poisoned, but afterward was partly buried in the earth for several weeks in order that the poison might be drawn from his system. This treatment finally had the desired result, and he was restored to the colonists by virtue of some treaty. After many thrilling experiences and dangers he returned to Henry county, Ky., where he lived to a ripe old age, leaving but a small family.

Mr. Brown spent his early boyhood days and his young manhood in the State of his nativity, coming to Indiana when about nineteen years of age, where he worked by the month on a farm for several years. Afterward he leased a tract of land which he operated successfully, and then purchased eighty acres in Hensley township, for which he paid $2,400. Here he continued to reside, carrying on a successful farming business for about seven years, when he sold his holdings for $50 an acre, thus realizing a handsome profit, and he then came to Franklin where he bought ninety acres of land, adding to this from time to time, until he once owned 275 acres. In 1893 he left the farm and sold the same at a good figure, locating in Franklin, where he now owns a fine home and conducts a large lively business, as well as owning other property.

On July 19, 1849, he wedded Mary G. Branch, daughter of Benjamin and Matilda (Ashburn) Branch. Eleven children came to bless their union, five sons and six daughters, as follows: Laura, Matilda, Benjamin, John, Susan, Harry, Rebecca, Fred, Isaac and two who died in infancy. Laura was the wife of John L. McClain, and moved to Kansas with him where she died after having two children, Florence and Fred, who were raised by our subject. Florence was a teacher in the Franklin public school, and is now deceased. Matilda married James Richardson, and lives in Indianapolis, having six children. Benjamin was county auditor of Johnson county; he married Angie Dunlap and they have three sons living, Ralph, Henry and Dan. John was accidentally killed by a swing at the early age of twenty-two years just as he was completing an excellent education in Washington, D. C., and his remains were brought home and now lie in Greenlawn cemetery at Franklin. Susan married Dan Davis, and lives in Alexandria, having three children, Mary, Ray and Hugh. Harry died when a child, and Fred died also at the early age of two years. Rebecca is the wife of Edward Throckmorton, and resides in Franklin, having two children, Robert and John. Isaac, a prosperous farmer of Franklin township, married Emma Cox, and died in 1892, leaving a son Arthur, who was raised by his grandfather, Mr. Brown.

Both Mr. Brown and his wife are sincere and influential members of the Christian Church, in which for many years he served as deacon before coming to Franklin. In political belief and action he has long been a Democrat, and though never seeking any political office, rendered valuable services to the party in many ways. Mr. Brown has always been a firm believer in education in all its practical branches, and has ever used his influence toward the improvement and extension of the curriculum of the local schools. He has taken particular pride and interest in the education, not alone of his own family, but also of his grandchildren and others, and has been often gratified throughout the last half century, with the improvement and splendid progress made by his young proteges. It is needless to say that he has the hearty good-will and gratitude of a large contingent of the younger generation in consequence, and indeed this high regard is shared by all who have known him, and is richly deserved.

JOHN M. BAILEY, a well established attorney-at-law of Indianapolis, was born in Morgan county, Ind., Jan. 2, 1858. He is a son of James L. and Harriet M. (Carroll) Bailey, natives of Indiana, and grandson of Tilford Bailey, a native of Kentucky, who was of English descent. He was a farmer and also a Baptist preacher. He was an early settler in Morgan county, Ind., moved to Hendricks county, and lived there for about twenty-five years—the latter part of his life. He died there aged sixty-seven years. He married Matilda Hoffman, and they had a large family.

James L. Bailey was a farmer in Morgan county and afterward in Hendricks county, later in life becoming a minister in the Methodist Protestant Church, belonging to the Indiana Conference. For ten years prior to his death he lived retired in Indianapolis, where he died Feb. 14, 1901, aged sixty-five years. His wife still survives. Four children were born to them, three sons and one daughter, John M. being the only one now living.

Mr. Bailey's maternal grandfather, Samuel Carroll, was born in Kentucky, of Irish descent, and was a farmer by occupation. He came to Indiana in an early day, first settling in Clark county, then in Morgan. He made two trips to the West by wagon—once to Arkansas and once to Missouri, in an early day, but returned to Morgan county, Ind., where he died in 1888, aged seventy-four years. His wife was Angelletta Eunis. They had a large family. He was quite an athlete and had the reputation of being the best wrestler and cradler and wood chopper in his community.

John M. Bailey was reared in Morgan county until fifteen years old. He was born in a log cabin, and although not an old man well remembers some of the customs of pioneer life, having attended first the old fashioned subscription schools. Later he went to the public school in Morgan county, and the Normal at Valparaiso. He then began studying for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and preached for two years in Indianapolis, but he finally turned to law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1889, since when he has practiced in Indianapolis. His specialty is criminal law and damage cases, and his offices are at Nos. 604-606 Lemcke Building, Indianapolis.

On Aug. 19, 1881, Mr. Bailey married Miss Alice Skaggs, daughter of Jonathan and Catharine (Clark) Skaggs, and they have one daughter, Bernice U. The family home is at No. 3430 North Meridian street. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Roberts Park. In politics he is a Democrat. He was a candidate for the State Senate in 1896, but went down in the landslide.

WILLIAM H. BISHOP, in his lifetime one of the well known and successful business men of Greenwood, Ind., was born in Covington, Va., Dec. 24, 1827, son of Jacob and Margaret (Moyers) Bishop, natives of Alleghany county, Va., and he died Oct. 19, 1906, sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends.

The paternal grandfather of William H. Bishop, was a native of Virginia, probably of Scotch descent, and by occupation a farmer. His death occurred in Virginia. One of his brothers served in the war of 1812. The maternal grandfather, George Moyers, was of German descent, and he died in Virginia.

Jacob Bishop was born Jan. 17, 1806, and was a wagonmaker by trade. He emigrated to Indiana in 1854, purchasing 160 acres of land in White River township, Johnson county, near Waverly. After improving his farm, upon which he resided for about ten years, he removed to Greenwood in 1866, and engaged in the mercantile business for many years. While still residing in Virginia, he was a general repairer, and in connection with his other interests, after locating in Greenwood, he engaged in watch repairing, continuing the latter until the sickness which terminated in his death, Aug. 2, 1886, when he was eighty years and six months old. His first wife, Margaret Moyers, the mother of William H., was born Oct. 6, 1807, and died Oct. 6, 1865, aged fifty-eight. Both were consistent members of the Methodist Church. The second wife of the father was Mrs. Harriet E. (Alexander) Haywood, who was born Feb. 23, 1838, and who is still living, making her home at Houlton, Maine. Mr. Bishop was a justice of the peace for a number of years. By his first marriage Mr. Bishop had twelve children, five sons and seven daughters, six now living: Virginia, who married (first) Joseph C. Brummerner, a soldier who died in the war of the Rebellion, and (second) William Wilson, and they now live in Greenwood; George, who served all through the Civil war, and is now in the National Hospital in Washington, D. C.; Margaret, wife of William A. Curlee, of McPherson, Kansas; Emma, wife of Henley Vaught, of Harper, Ind.; Maria L., widow of Henry S. Byers, of Franklin, Ind.; and John J., who lives half a mile west of Greenwood. To the second marriage of Mr. Bishop were born twins, Claude, who married Maude A. Hunter, of Memphis, Ind., and now resides in New Albany, Ind.; and Maude, wife of Edward H. Kimball, whom she married in San Francisco, Cal., but they now reside in Houlton, Maine.

William H. Bishop lived in Virginia until he attained mature years, being educated in Covington, where he studied algebra, Latin, Greek and other higher branches, and also pursued his studies under private instruction, adding botany and natural philosophy. Before he was twenty-one, he was engaged as a school teacher, teaching four terms in Covington, and then went to West Virginia for one term. In the spring of 1852 he located in Indiana, and during the latter part of 1852 and 1853 and 1854, he taught in Bainbridge, Ross county, Ohio. In 1854 he removed to Johnson county, Ind., and settled in White River township, where he taught a number of terms, living there until 1866, when he located in Greenwood and taught for eight terms in and about the place, after which he resumed the business of general repairing, which he had pursued once before in Greenwood, and this he continued successfully until his death. During his early experiences as a school teacher, Mr. Bishop began the study of phonography, selecting the Ben Pitman system, and so expert did he become that he included it in the branches taught by him and he found this knowledge very convenient in the keeping of his accounts and writing in his diary, the shorthand enabling him to lighten his tasks and to make notes of matters pertaining strictly to his personal affairs. Although perfectly competent to do so, Mr. Bishop did not follow the calling of a stenographer, his other duties rendering this impossible. A very interesting series of volumes is the diary Mr. Bishop kept from his boyhood days, as also the weather reports he kept from 1854, making four records per day. In addition to the many duties already recorded, Mr. Bishop found time to learn wagon and carriage making and repairing, painting and trimming, and in his younger days engaged quite extensively in these lines. At the last his flourishing business was confined to the handling of pumps, repairing of same, as well as other light repairing, a specialty being made of organ repairing. Mr. Bishop was a natural mechanic, in spite of his scholastic attainments, and his success was largely due to the fact that he early learned to utilize every moment. During hours when others were idling, he was storing his mind with useful facts, or training his skilful fingers to a new trade, and as a result could engage in a number of callings, and make a success of any one of them.

On April 17, 1856, Mr. Bishop was married to Miss Sarah J. McAllister, daughter of William and Mary (Moyer) McAllister. Six children were born to this union, two sons and four daughters: Charles T., of Washington, D. C., married (first) Caroline Johnson (now deceased), had one daughter, Josephine C., and he married (second) Mrs. Mary Dixon. Lucy V. married M. C. Jensen, also of Washington, D. C., and has one son, William R. Annie C. married A. C. Owen, a druggist of Greenwood. William C. married (first) Jennie Doan, of Indianapolis, and (second) Katharyn Moore, of Greenwood. Mary E. married George Christian, of Greenwood, and has one child, Edith M. Jessie E. married John C. McClain, of Greenwood, and has three children, Maurine Fay, Lillian May and Sarah Anna. Mrs. Bishop died Aug. 2, 1895, aged fifty-nine years. She was a member of the Methodist Church, as was also Mr.

Bishop, he having joined the church when sixteen years of age, and was one of the church trustees. Fraternally he was a member of Greenwood Lodge, No. 198, I. O. O. F., and as long as either the Sons of Temperance or the Good Templars had a lodge in his vicinity, he was one of the most enthusiastic members. In politics, when national matters were at stake he voted the Republican ticket, but in local affairs he believed in supporting the best man for the place. For ten or fifteen years he served most efficiently as town clerk. In 1871 he built a comfortable home in Greenwood, and there he resided enjoying to the last the highest respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens, as well as the love of his family.

REV. GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, at Indianapolis, where his learning, pulpit ability and marked devotion to his Master have won him many friends, was born in Nova Scotia Jan. 1, 1860, son of John and Elizabeth (Bruce) Mackintosh, natives of Scotland. They were the parents of seven children, of whom we have mention of the following: Rev. George L.; Jessie, the wife of Mr. Morse, of Lynn, Mass.; Duncan, of Greenwood, British Columbia; John, who is also a resident of Greenwood; Mary, deceased in 1902, who married Sidney Smith of Nova Scotia; and Elizabeth, of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

John Mackintosh was a farmer and emigrated to Nova Scotia from Argyshire in 1843 and there he farmed until his death in County Guysborough, in 1898, at the age of seventy-four. His wife died in 1868 at the age of forty years. Both belonged to the Presbyterian Church. Duncan Mackintosh, the grandfather of Rev. George L., emigrated to Canada in 1843, where he died at the age ninety-six, leaving a family of nine children, two of whom are now living.

George Bruce, the maternal grandfather of Rev. George L. Mackintosh, was a native of Caithness, Scotland, and emigrated to Canada, settling not far from the Mackintosh family. He died at the age of fifty years, leaving a family of five children. His trade was that of a stone mason, and he did much contract work.

Rev. George L. Mackintosh spent the first nineteen years of his life in Canada where he had the advantage of a common school education. In 1879 he came to the United States and entered Wabash College, the well known institution at Crawfordsville, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1884. For a year he taught in the Lawrenceburg high school, and then studied law in Indianapolis. At this time he turned his attention towards the work of the ministry, and after taking instruction at Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio, spent four and a half years in missionary work in Northern Indiana, with his location at Winamac. In 1891 he was called to the pastorate of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, a place he still holds, and an office which he most ably fills. The membership now exceeds 350, and is constantly increasing. They worship in one of the finest church edifices in the city.

Rev. Mr. Mackintosh is a member of Mystic Tie Lodge, No. 398, F. & A. M., and of the Knights of Pythias. He belongs to the Sigma Chi fraternity, and is president of Wabash College. He votes independently and has a fine home at the corner of Nineteenth and Alabama streets.

Rev. Mr. Mackintosh has oratorical abilities of a high order, and in the oratorical contest of 1884, in Indianapolis, the first prize was awarded him, and he carried off the second prize in the Inter-State contest in Iowa City, when ten States were in competition.

F. M. CLARK. As a representative of one of the pioneer families of Marion county, where he has passed his entire life, and where he is now a representative farmer, residing on a portion of the old homestead, in Wayne township, it is certainly apropos that a review of the ancestral and personal history of Mr. F. M. Clark be incorporated in this work. He was born on the farm where he now lives, May 10, 1862, and was there reared to maturity, receiving his educational training in the public schools. He is a son of Alfred and Sarah E. (Eaker) Clark, both of whom were reared in Butler county, Ohio, where they were married.

Alfred Clark was a son of Isaac G. and Catherine (Miller) Clark, the former of whom was born in Maryland and the latter in Pennsylvania, of German lineage. Samuel Clark, father of Isaac G., was born in Pennsylvania, where his father, who likewise bore the name of Isaac, took up his abode about 1731, having emigrated thither from England and having there passed the remainder of his life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. Samuel Clark was reared in the old Keystone State, whence he eventually removed to Maryland, where was born his only child, Isaac G., grandfather of our subject. He became one of the early settlers in Butler county, Ohio, where he took up government land in the midst of the forest and reclaimed a good farm, upon which he passed the residue of his life, having become one of the honored and prosperous citizens of that section.

Isaac G. Clark was a young man when he accompanied his parents on their removal from Maryland to Ohio, and he assisted his father in reclaiming the homestead and placing it under cultivation. After his marriage he purchased a tract of land and improved a farm of his own, there continuing his residence for many years, while the homestead was the birthplace of all his children, who were there reared to years of maturity. In 1849, all of the children having left the paternal roof, he disposed of his farm and came to Hendricks county, Ind., where he purchased another farm, upon which he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, he dying in 1874, aged eighty-two, and she surviving him about five years, reaching the age of eighty-seven, being buried in the old Shiloh cemetery. He was a strong and influential Democrat in politics, and while in Ohio was incumbent of various offices of local trust, but later in life he refused to allow the consideration of his name in connection with any office. He was a staunch supporter of the Union during the Rebellion, and was a man honored for his sterling character, tolerance, kindness and ability. His wife, Catherine, whom he married May 22, 1815, was a daughter of Henry Miller, the maiden name of whose wife was Hostetter, both being members of old Pennsylvania families of German descent. Henry Miller's children were as follows: Lewis, Sarah (Mrs. Enyard), Catherine (Mrs. Isaac G. Clark), Mary (Mrs. Sickles), Daniel, Israel and Eliza (Mrs. D. Griffith, mother of the eminent Bishop Griffith, of New York City). Isaac G. and Catherine (Miller) Clark became the parents of the following named children: Israel, born in 1816; Salem, in 1818; Alfred, in 1819; John, (who died in childhood); Mary (Mrs. J. H. Pearson); Daniel M.; Ann E. (Mrs. J. H. Wear); Carman (deceased); Almira (Mrs. William Eaker); Martha J. (Mrs. R. H. Miller); Isaac; and Nancy (Mrs. B. Faucett). The mother was a devoted member of the old Shiloh church, and her husband was a liberal supporter of religious work, though not identified with any church organization.

Alfred Clark, father of our subject, was reared in Butler county, Ohio, and before his marriage was engaged in the mercantile business in Philanthropy, that county, about two years. He then closed out the business and was shortly afterward married, and in 1850, in company with his wife, he removed to Indiana, purchasing a farm in Wayne township, Marion county. The place had about ten acres cleared, and its principal improvements were a small house and barn of the most primitive order. His first purchase comprised 160 acres, and as prosperity attended his earnest and well-directed efforts he continued to add to his landed estate until he was the owner of a fine place of four hundred acres. Upon this homestead he made the best of improvements, and made the place a model farm. He gave his attention to diversified agriculture and stock raising, was progressive and enterprising in his methods and possessed of that mature judgment and business sagacity which ever make for success. He became one of the solid men of the county, and his course was ever guided by the highest principles of integrity and honor, so that he commanded uniform esteem. In 1888, after years of earnest toil and endeavor, he retired from active labor, and took up his residence in Indianapolis, where he purchased a pleasant home, and where he enjoyed the rewards of his former years of application. He received a good education, and during his earlier years was a successful teacher in Kentucky and Indiana, while he was ever known as a broad-minded citizen and able business man. In August, 1900, he and his wife came to the old homestead for a visit, and also for the purpose of attending an old settlers' picnic, and while enjoying the festivities of this occasion Mr. Clark was stricken with paralysis, Aug. 17th, and was taken to the old home, where he breathed his last only seven days later, the entire community mourning his loss. His mortal remains were laid to rest in the family lot in Crown Hill cemetery. He had been a devoted member of the Shiloh M. E. Church for nearly half a century, and had held the more important offices in the same, and been a liberal supporter of all departments of its work. He was a trustee for many years and also rendered efficient service as class-leader. In Ohio he had been identified with the I. O.

O. F., but there being no lodge accessible after his removal to Indiana, he dropped his active affiliation. In politics he accorded a stalwart allegiance to the Democratic party, and although an active supporter of its cause he invariably refused to be a candidate for office. He was a distinct man and individual, and his entire life was exerted for good, not one of exaltation but one singularly true to lofty ideals and to the responsibilities which canopied it. He is survived by his wife, who still resides in Indianapolis, having a wide circle of devoted friends in the capital city and the county where she has lived so many years. She is a daughter of Joseph E. and Mary (Sterrett) Eaker, both of English descent, and the latter a native of Pennsylvania, where she was a schoolmate of James Buchanan, afterward President of the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Eaker settled in Butler county, Ohio, in the pioneer epoch, and after his death his widow came to Indiana, where she passed the remainder of her life in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Clark. She died in 1884 at the age of ninety-three, and her remains were laid to rest beside those of her husband, in Butler county, Ohio. She was one of three children, the others being James, of Iowa, and Rebecca, Mrs. Dodds. Of the children of Joseph E. and Mary (Sterrett) Eaker we enter the following brief data: James, who was born in Maryland, after his marriage settled in Butler county, Ohio, where he died, a prominent and wealthy citizen; William married a member of the Clark family and died in Hendricks county, Ind., in 1868; Mary C. was the wife of L. E. McClyman, a prominent lawyer of Cincinnati; Sarah E. is the mother of our subject; Wesley went to California as one of the argonauts of 1849, and thereafter nothing was heard from him save on one occasion, shortly after his arrival; and George is a resident of Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Eaker were both zealous members of the M. E. Church. Alfred and Sarah E. (Eaker) Clark became the parents of eight children, three of whom died in infancy, the others being as follows: William P., a prominent farmer of Hendricks county; Joseph E., who died in 1885, at the age of thirty-two; Isaac G., Jr., of Indianapolis; F. M.; and Emma L., wife of H. G. McKenzie, of Indianapolis.

F. M. Clark owns and resides upon the old homestead where he was born, having the house and other excellent buildings erected by his honored father. He received a good public-school education, and remained on the parental farm with his parents until their removal to Indianapolis, when he assumed the management of the place, having in the meanwhile taken unto himself a wife, who has ably assumed her quota of the responsibilities and proved a valuable coadjutor and helpmate. After the death of his father he bought the interests of the other heirs, and thus has full control of the old homestead farm, which is one of the most valuable and attractive in this section of the State, being devoted to general farming and stock growing. He is known as one of the progressive and influential farmers and stock men of the county and as a representative citizen. His farm, as arranged at the time of the settlement of the estate, comprises 216 acres and on every hand are the evidences of thrift and good management. In politics Mr. Clark is a staunch Democrat, as was his father, and he has served efficiently in various local offices, including that of township trustee, of which he was incumbent for five years. He is a member of Bridgeport Lodge, F. & A. M., the Royal Arch Chapter, Indianapolis, and also of the Improved Order of Red Men, while both he and his wife are identified with the O. E. S., the women's auxiliary of the Masonic order. Mr. Clark also has the distinction of being at the time of this writing president of the Old Settlers' Association of Marion and Hendricks counties.

In 1885 Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Ida M. Martin, who was born on her father's farm, where Haughville (a suburb of Indianapolis) is now located, May 30, 1865, daughter of John and Harriet (Pearson) Martin, both natives of Ohio, where they were married. The former was a son of William Martin, who was one of the honored pioneers of Marion county, Ind., where he was engaged in farming until his death. His children were John, James, Ambrose and Ezra. John Martin, father of Mrs. Clark, was also an early settler of Marion county, having been for many years successfully engaged in market gardening, and having passed the closing years of his life in retirement in Haughville, where he died July 31, 1895. His widow survives him and resides in Elwood. Both identified themselves with the Baptist Church in early life. Their children were as follows: Elmer, a resident of Muncie, Ind.; Ida M., wife of our subject; and Walter, of Elwood.

John Martin had been previously married to Miss Stout, a member of a sterling pioneer family, and she died leaving three children—Thomas, Cynthia (Mrs. Tomlinson) and Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have three children, namely: Alfred J., born Dec. 29, 1889; Carlisle G., born Jan. 9, 1891; and Floyd M., born Jan. 21, 1900, who died aged two and one-half years. Mrs. Clark is a zealous and devoted member of the M. E. Church. Their beautiful home in the center of gracious hospitality.

HON. JOSEPH M. TILFORD (deceased) was born in Scott county, Ky., Feb. 17, 1811.

William Tilford, his grandfather, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1749, and was the founder of the family in America. His home was in Virginia, and he served under General Washington in the war of the Revolution.

Joseph M. Tilford, Sr., father of the late Joseph M., came to Indiana, and settled near Madison, Jefferson county, in 1816. Here young Joseph attended the public schools, and in 1827 attended the opening session of Hanover College, at that time under the Rev. Mr. Crow, who was its first president. Mr. Tilford's fellow students were Noble Butler, Daniel Smock, and Samuel and James Latimore. After a year in college Mr. Tilford served three years as an apprentice at the cabinet-making business, in which he engaged for himself in 1832 in Madison, Ind. There he remained until the fall of 1850, when he removed to Hanover, Ind., and three years later came to Indianapolis. In 1854, in company with Ovid Butler and J. M. Mathes, he bought the Indianapolis Daily and Weekly Journal of John Defrees for the sum of $20,000. The corporation was the Indianapolis Journal Company, and into it was merged the Free Democrat. In 1856 Mr. Tilford became the president of the corporation, and retained that position until the sale of the plant to Col. W. R. Holloway in 1864, the price being $30,000, not including the real estate, which was valued at an equal sum.

Mr. Tilford then formed a connection with the Indianapolis Publishing House, and later became a member of the firm of Tilford & Carlon, printers and book binders. They were established in the building now occupied by Carlon & Hollenbeck.

Mr. Tilford removed to Irvington in 1873, but three years later came back to Indianapolis. In 1890 he again went to Irvington to make his home with his grandson-in-law, Prof. Wilson, with whom he lived until his death, Nov. 15, 1897. The circumstances of his death were remarkable. While attending the services at the Church on Children's Day, and the gathering was gay with happy faces and fragrant flowers, he was called to his heavenly home, and passed without a struggle before a physician could be summoned. Although he was eighty-six years of age, and the morning was damp and rainy, he had walked from his home to the church, a distance of four blocks, and taken a seat near the pulpit. The opening selection had been sung by the children's choir, and the responsive Scriptural reading had followed, Mr. Tilford attentively keeping track of the reading, when suddenly his head fell back on the pew, and though he was hastily taken into the lecture room, and tenderly cared for, nothing could be done, and he almost immediately passed away. Notwithstanding his great age, Mr. Tilford had appeared to be in excellent health, and heart failure was the cause of his sudden and unexpected death, which came as he would have had it, quickly and peaceably after a long and useful life.

Mr. Tilford was married in 1833 to Miss Mary Maxwell, by whom he had seven children: Dr. John H., who was a surgeon in the 79th Indiana Volunteer Infantry in the war of the Rebellion, died in September, 1894; Samuel E., a veteran of the Civil war, who served three months in the 11th Indiana Infantry, twenty-two months in the 26th Indiana Infantry, and one hundred days in the 123d Indiana, now lives in Indianapolis; Eliza E., Mrs. Green, lives in Kansas City; Emma J.; Julia V., Mrs. Avery, lives in Indianapolis; Charles died in childhood; and Alice T., Mrs. Garvey, lives in Indianapolis. Three sons-in-law of Mr. Tilford served in the Union army.

Joseph M. Tilford was a representative citizen, public spirited and progressive, making his mark in journalism, and his long connection with the Indianapolis Journal gave him a wide acquaintance with men and measures. During the war of the Rebellion he was president of the Journal Company, and made that paper a power in the land supporting the Government in all its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion. In early days he was a Whig, and an Abolitionist, and from its beginning a supporter of the Republican party. He was long a trustee of the Northwestern Christian University, which has since become Butler College, was made an elder of the Christian Church in 1840, and was active in church work to the time of his death. A successful man, a good neighbor and a true friend, when he passed suddenly and quietly away, it was felt that a good man had been called from earth.

JOHN HARDIN, a representative citizen of Johnson county and a descendant of an honored pioneer family, was born Dec. 16, 1838, in Johnson county, Ind., a son of Judge Franklin and Ann (Goslin) Hardin, both natives of the State of Kentucky.

Judge Hardin was born July 27, 1810, in Fleming, now Nicholas county, Ky., of French ancestry, and he occupied an honorable place in the history of his native State, as jurist, statesman and representative citizen. The family was so prominent in the early days of Indian warfare that three States of the Union have considered it an honor to commemorate the name in important counties.

Franklin Hardin was the fifth child in the family of ten children born to Henry and Catherine Hardin, the others being Thomas and Benjamin, both of whom settled and died in Illinois; Elihu and Mark, both of whom died in Johnson county, Ind.; Elsa became Mrs. Sibold; Ruth married R. Burns; Miss Betsey; Hannah married J. Harris; and Rachel became Mrs. Waddle. Although these children, in the main, inherited robust constitutions and large stature from their ancestors, Franklin himself was under size, with a frail hold on life. For this reason he was given better school opportunities than his more robust brothers, and thus became prepared for the public duties which later awaited him. After the death of his father, he attended the county seminary in Carlisle for a space of six months, and with the other branches taught, was instructed very thoroughly in surveying. This knowledge was put to good account in later years. In 1822 his two older brothers explored White River Valley, Ind., and with means furnished by their father, had entered considerable land for themselves and others of the family, and in 1824, several members moved to Johnson county and a year later, the mother, with Franklin, then in his fifteenth year, set out on horseback to visit her sons in the wilderness of Indiana. Two years later the family moved to the State, and took up their abode in White River township. Franklin was ambitious, and took advantage of every opportunity to obtain an education, and early began to teach school. During this time he laboriously put in his spare time at the study of law, but he probably overdid his strength, as a spell of sickness caused him to abandon it for a time.

In 1831 he returned to Kentucky in order to marry, and with his bride went back to Indiana, taught school one year on Fall Creek and then, in the fall of 1832, settled in Johnson county, where he later had a great political career and where he made his home until his death, July 9, 1890. In 1833 he received the appointment of assessor of White River township, the first employment, aside from school teaching, that he had secured in five years. In 1836 he was appointed county surveyor, and he held that position for six consecutive years. In 1840, party lines were closely drawn and he was brought forward as a leader, doing good service for the Democratic party, and in 1842 he received the nomination for representative. He was elected to the office, and re-elected in 1843 and 1844, and in 1845 was elected to the Senate. In 1850 he was elected a delegate to the State Constitutional convention. In 1851 land was now becoming more valuable, and people began to be anxious to have the old corner stones found and true lines of their property drawn, and there was a popular demand for the reinstatement of Mr. Hardin as surveyor, and he again filled the office for one year. However, in 1852, he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, was re-elected in 1856, and at the close of his second term withdrew from political life. During his legislative career he held high place in the estimation of his party, was a valued advisory member, and did much good work as a lawmaker. In 1856 he was chosen a delegate to the National convention, and supported the Breckenridge wing of the party and was a candidate for elector. In all his political career and in all his incumbency in office, he was ever the honorable, dignified representative of the country's best class of citizens. His religious connection all through life was with the Presbyterian Church.

In 1831 Franklin Hardin married Ann Goslin, daughter of Nathan Goslin, a miller by trade, later a very prominent farmer in Kentucky, who was the father of these children: Harrison, a minister in the M. E. Church; Nathan, a farmer as was also David; Amanda, who became Mrs. Tronser; Ann, who became Mrs. Hardin; Sabra, who married J. Moore; Sarah, who married W. Moore; and Mary and Martha, twins. The children born to Franklin Hardin and wife were: Louisa, who married (first) J. Hoggeland, and (second) William St. John; Addison, who married Louisa Moore, and lives on the old homestead; Milton, living in Smith Valley; John; Tilghman, a Miami county farmer; Thomas, ex-clerk of Johnson county, surveyor and man of note; and Elizabeth, Mrs. Josiah Bell.

John Hardin was born and was reared at the old homestead in Johnson county, where he remained until grown to manhood. He developed good business qualifications, and when he was prepared to marry in 1868, had accumulated means. His interests have always centered in agricultural pursuits. After marriage he settled on a farm which he had purchased prior to this event, and in connection with farming manufactured brick for eight years. Then he built a commodious three-story brick residence, which the family yet occupies, and made many valuable and desirable improvements. At one time Mr. Hardin owned an immense acreage, but he has disposed of a great part of it, giving his children comfortable homes. In all his operations, farming and stockraising, he has been very successful and has long been one of the solid men of his township.

Mr. Hardin, true to family tradition, has always ably supported the Democratic party, eling, however, to the principles of its founders. Mr. Hardin has always been intolerant of frauds in any line, and in an effort to suppress some which seemed to be working against the best interests of the township, he took a bold stand, and was selected as the most efficient person to effect reforms. As a result of his efforts he obtained a reduction of the township tax levy from the sum of $1.01 to fifty-nine cents, and during his term as township trustee also paid over $3,000 debts and left the affairs of the township in first-class financial condition. His work was done ably and well, and with an eye single to duty. Mr. Hardin aims to be a good citizen in every way, and belongs to what is known as the Horse-thief organization, which is for the purpose of protecting citizens from rogues. For many years he has been most highly regarded in the Masonic fraternity.

In 1868 Mr. Hardin married Miss Lorana C. Humbert, a lady of many graces of mind and person, born May 19, 1847, in White River township, daughter of Isaac and Martha J. (Mallow) Humbert, the former of whom was a native of Ohio, and the latter of Virginia, although they were married in Indiana. The Mallow family came to the State in 1834, and their last years were spent here as highly respected residents. Mr. Humbert was a carpenter and farmer and acquired a large property, at the time of death being also one of the much esteemed citizens of White River township. His estimable widow, at the age of eighty years, is a beloved member of her son-in-law's home. Mrs. Hardin is her only child. The father of Mrs. Humbert lived to the advanced age of ninety-three years and died in this county.

A family of five children was born to Mr. and Mrs. Hardin, the eldest, George, dying young. The others are: Mary, who married Albert Steward; Frank, who operates the home farm; Nora, who married William Dunn, a merchant at Glenss Valley; and Mattie, who is Mrs. O. Dunn, of Delta, Iowa. The religious connection of the family is with the Christian Church.

JOHN BAPTIST RITZINGER (deceased) was born in Woerrstadt, Germany, not far from Mayence, Aug. 23, 1841, son of Frederic and Marianne (Kamp) Ritzinger, both natives of Germany. They had three sons: John Baptist; Frank L., of Burlington, Iowa; and Augustus W., of St. Paul, Minn.; and one daughter, Miss Mary.

Anton Kamp, the maternal grandfather of John Baptist, practiced law for more than forty years and died at the age of seventy-two. Of his three sons, two died in the prime of manhood. The oldest, John Baptist, for fifty years in active service of the State, lived to be eighty-five years old, and at his death in December, 1900, the old Kamp family which had flourished for over 350 years, in the vicinity of Mayence and Bingen, became extinct in the male line. The daughter, Marianne, married Frederic Ritzinger of the Rhenish branch of the Ritzinger family of Austria, a member locating on the Rhine at the time of the French Revolution; he lived to be ninety-five years old, and was so scrupulously just and honorable in word and deed, that he lived long after his death in popular tradition. His son, Conrad Ritzinger, fought in the war against Napoleon, and was wounded on the field of Waterloo. He received the decoration of the "Iron Cross," an order only distributed from 1813 to 1815, and of which General Field Marshal Blucher, who commanded the Prussian forces, and decided the battle of Waterloo, held the "Grand Cross." By order of the Prussian cabinet the order of the "Iron Cross" was declared hereditary in 1837, and it would now be held by John Baptist Ritzinger had he lived. Almost ninety years old, Conrad Ritzinger died in 1877, and was buried with great military honors. His son, Frederic Ritzinger was destined for the ministry, but preferred a more active life and abandoned the study of theology. In the early forties, he was deeply interested in the religious movement in South Germany, and in the establishment of the "Independent German Catholic Church," in opposition to the Church of Rome. The Church still exists. In 1848 he took an active and prominent part in the Revolution, holding several offices of trust, serving on the committee appointed to negotiate with the Grand Duke of Hesse, and was also one of the men chosen to draw up a Constitution. His various activities acquainted him either personally or by correspondence with a great number of the public men of his day. Foremost in his admiration stood Louis Kossuth, the great Hungarian patriot. The Revolution failed, and Frederic Ritzinger, together with other patriots, was imprisoned at the fortress of Mayence. At the end of a year the trial came up and the leading lawyers contended for the honor of defending the "political prisoners of Mayence." All were acquitted, for none had carried arms against the government. Deeply disappointed by the failure of the Revolution, his fortune wrecked, Frederic Ritzinger went to England and in the spring of 1854 came to the United States, locating in Indianapolis, Ind. Like most of the exiles of 1848, he had the dream of the independent life of the American farmer, but soon gave up this vision and directed his energies successfully into other channels. An ardent Republican he took an active interest in the organization of the German regiments of Indiana during the Civil war. Ever alive to public interests he helped to establish and maintain the German Schools, prominent of which was the German-

English School, one of the best schools of the city, and for which he procured some of the thorough school masters of Germany. The institution flourished until after the introduction of German into the public schools, when it slowly declined. Frederic Ritzinger was a man of kind heart and was most benevolent; the unfortunate, the struggling or the needy, never appealed to him in vain. He was generous and open-handed, almost to a fault. Though of splendid physique he did not attain the great age of his ancestors, the illness and early death of his eldest son, John Baptist, weighing heavily upon him. He died in 1879, aged sixty years.

John Baptist Ritzinger was not quite thirteen years old when the family came to America. He had the advantage of seven years of the thorough schooling of Germany, the last three years being spent in a private institution where he pursued languages—Latin, French and English. For a while he attended the public schools of the city, and then entered Fletcher's Bank, working his way up from the foot of the ladder. As long as he lived banking was his business. After the war he became a banker for himself, and carried on a very successful enterprise.

Mr. Ritzinger was married Dec. 4, 1867, to Myla F. Fletcher, daughter of Stoughton A. and Maria (Kipp) Fletcher. To this union were born two sons and three daughters: Fletcher lived to be nineteen years old; John Baptist died when a little over five years of age; Laura F. married William S. Briggs, of Boston, and is the mother of two daughters, Myla and Julia F.; Marea F. married Clinton L. Hare, and is the mother of six children, Helen, John Maurice, Clinton Larue, Robert Ritzinger, Myla and Laura. Julia F. married William C. Hauelson, and is the mother of one son, Baptist Ritzinger, and one daughter, Marea. Mrs. Ritzinger belongs to one of the old and prominent families of Indianapolis, her father having been one of the leading bankers of the city, the founder of Fletcher's Bank, and universally recognized as one of the most prominent and influential men of Indianapolis.

John Baptist Ritzinger died in 1877, at the early age of thirty-six years. He was a quiet and unassuming man in all his ways, but of real worth and genuine character, and his many manly qualities drew around him a large circle of warm friends. As a citizen he was highly esteemed, and his successful career, so early terminated, gave rich promise had years been spared to him.

WILLIAM ELWARNER, secretary and manager of the Grocers' Baking Company, of Indianapolis, is at the head of an enterprise which exemplifies the most modern business principles. The characteristic features of the concern are the embodiments of his own ideas, for he was the chief promoter of the company, and the fact that he was selected for the management was evidence that his associates had confidence in his ability to put his theories into profitable practice. Naturally endowed with great energy, and keenly observant of good business principles, the success of the undertaking under his superintendence seemed to be a foregone conclusion to those who knew him, though there were many ready to predict failure for a business whose object was the common benefit of those who under any other circumstances recognized each other only as competitors. But the mere statement that so successful a man as Mr. Elwarner was willing to relinquish other business claims to give his time as manager in a novel and untried field demonstrates the confidence he himself held in the project. The results have proved that when confidence and ambition go hand in hand, prosperity invariably follows.

A brief review of Mr. Elwarner's early career is of interest, especially in the light of his present position. He was born in Dresden, Muskingum county, Ohio, and is of German extraction, his paternal grandparents having come to this country from Germany. They settled in Columbus, Ohio, where their son, Augustus, was born. He was married in Dresden, Ohio, to a native of that place, Lucy Green. William Elwarner was reared and educated in his native place, and on leaving school went to work with his father, who was a butcher. The father thought he saw a good opening in Columbus, Ind., so he moved thither, but luck seemed to be against him and he failed. He had taken his son, William, with him, as his assistant, and after the collapse of the business the latter, realizing that he would have to be the mainstay of the family, lost no time in finding employment elsewhere. He had no experience except that acquired in the butcher shop, but he determined to take the first work that came along, and meeting the foreman of a quarry he was engaged to shovel gravel. The unusual work was so hard on him at first that many a night, when through with his labor, he could have cried with the pain in his hands. But youth is buoyant, and he had strength, so he soon accustomed himself to the hard work. However, his peace of mind was not to last long, for he heard that the quarry would soon be closed, and of the seventy hands employed only thirteen men to be retained, for the laying of five miles of steel rails. Fortunately he was one of those picked by the foreman, but when this work had been completed he was again "a gentleman of leisure." Before long he saw a gang working on a construction train, and upon asking about work was given a place. Two days afterward he was called over and questioned about his parents by the foreman, who proved to be a very good friend of the family, which fact made Mr. Elwarner rather more secure about his chances for work. But he felt that he could never be satisfied to continue thus, without any prospects of bettering his condition permanently, so, although the foreman was very sorry to lose him, he left. Going to Rushville, Ind., he found employment as clerk in a confectionery establishment in conjunction with which a bakery was also conducted. He was soon placed in the bakery, there gaining his first experience in that line, which has ultimately been his life work. After a while he went to Richmond, Ind., also commencing there as a clerk in a bakery, and within a year was given charge of it, continuing thus for some time. He now began to feel that he was sufficiently familiar with the business to start on his own account, so leaving his employer he returned to Rushville, and hired the store in which he had previously been employed, on Aug. 25, 1887, opening a bakery of his own with the limited capital of $160. When he sold out, Sept. 1, 1888, he received $387 for the business, and meantime had made a good living out of it and saved money besides. Coming to Indianapolis he spent about six weeks with his wife's people, enjoying a well-earned vacation, and then bought a dairy from his wife's father. After carrying on the dairy for a year he traded it for a piece of property at the corner of Mississippi and Twenty-sixth streets, and then bought a grocery at the corner of Sixteenth and Bellefontaine streets. Without any experience whatever, he embarked in the grocery business at that location. His ready money being all tied up in the property he secured $600 by giving his father-in-law a mortgage on the place, and thus began the business in which he continued so successfully for the succeeding fifteen years. That he began modestly may be assumed from the fact that his first day's receipts amounted to only $3, half of which he had to pay his clerk. Three months later the clerk's services were dispensed with, and his place was filled by Mrs. Elwarner—a circumstance which Mr. Elwarner has ever since regarded as the chief factor in the prosperity of the business. Though she has never neglected her household duties, or made light of domestic obligations, Mrs. Elwarner has shown herself to be a born business woman, and her influence was felt in every department. Her pleasant manners and sincere desire to please patrons combined with the energy necessary to carry out her plans made the grocery so popular that before long it was seen that a meat market would be a profitable adjunct to the original establishment. The twelfth year he was in business Mr. Elwarner added a bakery to the already large business, which grew steadily until he sold it out, on May 30, 1904, to give the principal part of his time to the promotion of the Grocers' Baking Company, which had been incorporated on Jan. 1st of that year.

The years Mr. Elwarner spent in the grocery business were the most important in his commercial career. It is true that at the beginning he did not have the substantial position which he enjoys today, nor was he connected with enterprises of such note. But in those years he acquired the experience necessary to the successful discharge of the responsibilities now resting upon his shoulders, and gave evidence of the ability which has won for him so large a place in the confidence of his business associates. Nor may we overlook the fact that he laid the foundation of his solid financial condition at the same time. Mrs. Elwarner's aid and encouragement during all those years was an appreciable element in his prosperity, and Mr. Elwarner feels that too much credit cannot be given to her efficiency and devotion to his interests.

When Mr. Elwarner conceived the plan of the Grocers' Baking Company he imparted his ideas to the men whom he thought would be most interested in the promotion of such a concern. The grocers to whom he broached the scheme encouraged it at once, for the proposal appealed to them. The object was to supply grocers with bakery goods from a bakery owned and conducted by themselves

—a scheme the advantages of which are patent. The only question was: Will men who are essentially competitors in business work together in any cause for their common good? That they will has been amply proved during the brief life time of the Grocers' Baking Company, which has not only accomplished its primary object, but has succeeded in bringing all those interested closer together than was ever deemed possible. However, much preliminary work and planning were necessary before the plans could be set on foot. The company was incorporated Jan. 1, 1904, and the following officers elected: William Kothe, president; Louis Philip Cornet, vice-president; William Elwarner, secretary and manager; and H. E. Schortmeier, treasurer. These gentlemen, together with Charles Rinne, R. T. Mulis and William Rathert, constituted the board of directors. As Mr. Elwarner had been the prime mover in the organization of the company, and as his ideas formed the basis of their operations, it was a high compliment to his ability, and a well deserved one, that he should be entrusted with the active management, with full power to operate the business according to his own judgment. Such assurance of the high regard of his associates was a spur to success which Mr. Elwarner could not ignore, and he bent all his energies to the judicious conduct of this novel enterprise, so that its triumphant career is a fitting climax to years of earnest application and honest endeavor.

Some account of the company and its establishment will not be out of place in this connection. The capital stock of $50,000 is divided among 260 shareholders—all of whom are connected with the grocery business of Indianapolis. To avoid the usual difficulties regarding the balance of power there is a provision which restrains any stockholder from owning any more than $2,000 worth of stock. When the company was organized a building committee composed of Mr. Rinne, Mr. Elwarner and Mr. Rathert was appointed, to select a location and have plans for a building drawn, and the bakery erected is one of the largest and most modern in the State. The committee visited many of the large cities for the purpose of inspecting up-to-date bakeries before adopting the plans of the present building, a two-story and basement structure, 100x92 feet in dimensions, which cost $60,000. It is equipped with every appliance known to the trade for facilitating the work and insuring perfect cleanliness and the most approved sanitary conditions, so that the product can be guaranteed to be clean and healthful. None of the so called "box goods" are made, only the goods sold fresh every day by grocers generally. The company sells to grocers outside the city, shipping several thousand loaves of bread daily, besides cakes, rolls, etc. Employment is given to sixty hands, and twenty-seven delivery horses are in constant use. We quote the following from an article which appeared in "The Indiana Retail Merchant," for May, 1905:

"A floor space of nearly 17,000 feet is employed. In addition to this is the stock room, located in the basement of the building as are also the boilers, used for heating purposes only, as the machinery is run by immense electric motors, seven of which are required to furnish power sufficient to supply the demands. In another building, joining the main one, are the wagon sheds and stable, the sanitary condition of which is second to none. The floors are of mastic rock, sloping to gutters in the center of the building that are connected with sewers. A movable board floor covers the mastic rock, it being less injurious to the animals while standing in the stalls, and permitting of a complete flushing every day. Twelve wagons and twenty-seven horses are required to deliver the products of this company.

"To the roof of the building the flour is hoisted by a link elevator, being taken direct from the cars to a mixer where six barrels of flour are mixed at a single time. The flour passes through a sieve of fine silk, making it impossible for any foreign substance to get into the dough. From here it passes into the dough room below, where it goes into a machine that both weighs and molds each loaf, thereby securing a uniform weight in every loaf baked. Not a hand touches it from the time it leaves the cars in which it is brought to the bakery until it leaves the oven, being handled entirely by machinery. On the second floor are the dough rooms, the flour storage rooms and the cake bakery. These storage rooms have a capacity of twenty car loads of flour. In the cake bakery a force of twenty-four cake bakers are employed on rolls, doughnuts, layer cakes, etc., as the bakery makes no small cakes ordinarily termed 'box goods.' A reel oven of eight pans, constantly revolving, thus permitting a continual baking, is in use in this cake bakery, and has a capacity of 20,000 loaves every twenty-four hours, the capacity of the entire bakery being 100,000 loaves per day. It requires 1,200 dozen eggs weekly to supply the cake department, every one of which is candled before being broken and must be guaranteed by the persons from whom they are purchased as strictly fresh. The receipts from this part of the business amount to about $1,500 per week. On the first floor are the bread ovens, which are of the most modern type, and are now turning out about 100,000 loaves of bread a week."

One change has been made in the executive board, Mr. Kothe having resigned the presidency because of the pressure of other business, and Mr. Cornet having succeeded him, Mr. Rinne taking the vice-presidency.

Mr. Elwarner has not been indifferent to the advantages of judicious investments, and he has put his surplus earnings into real estate and stocks. When he sold out his grocery business he owned four valuable pieces of property, including his nicely situated residence at No. 2109 Ashland avenue. He is a stockholder in several large enterprises, the most important of which are the Grocers' Baking Company and the Arizona-Colorado Copper Belt and Gold Mining and Milling Company, which latter was incorporated in September, 1901, under the laws of Arizona. The company has 2,500,000 shares of capital stock, at a dollar a share, fully paid up, and Mr. Elwarner is one of the large stockholders and a member of the Board of Directors. The concern has offices in the State Life Building in Indianapolis.

On July 18, 1885, Mr. Elwarner was married to Miss Amelia Gass, daughter of George H. and Margaret Gass, and they have had two children, Beulah and Ethel Katherine. Fraternally Mr. Elwarner unites with the Red Men and the Knights of Pythias. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church.

DR. ERNEST M. HAGGARD, physician and surgeon, whose office is at No. 719 Stevenson building, Indianapolis, was born in Mt. Alger, Jackson county, Iowa, Dec. 9, 1861, and is a son of David M. and Mary A. (Schmidt) Haggard. She was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, and he in Kentucky.

The Haggards, of England, from whom Dr. Haggard is descended, trace their lineage back to Sir Andrew Ogard (Haggard), who went to England from Denmark, and was naturalized in 1433. Tradition says that James Haggard, a son of a wealthy and aristocratic lord of England, who had been educated for the ministry, left his native country, in 1698, and came to America on a merchant ship which made Norfolk, Va. He was still under twenty-one, and as his education was good, he was at first employed in teaching. Some time afterward he wedded a young lady connected with the school, and to their union were born: Nathaniel, Edmund, Zachariah and Gray (or Granville). Dr. Ernest M. Haggard belongs to the Edmund Haggard branch.

Edmund Haggard was born about 1725, and married a lady of Welsh descent named Rice. To them were born seven sons and two daughters. Of the sons, the eldest, William, was a preacher, teacher and miller, and he died at the age of ninety-eight years, eleven months and sixteen days; during the Revolutionary war he bore arms for three years. Rice Haggard, another son, was one of the celebrated preachers in the early days of the Christian (or Disciples) Church.

David Haggard, the third son of William, and grandfather of Dr. Ernest M., was born in Kentucky June 30, 1789, and by occupation was a farmer. He moved with his family to Iowa in the early settlement of that State, making his home in Dubuque county, where he died Dec. 21, 1865, at the age of seventy-six. In early life he was a Baptist, but later during the early days of the Restoration movement joined the Disciples. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, as his father had been in the war of the Revolution. On Jan. 12, 1809, he married Elizabeth Gentry, born in Madison county, Ky., Jan. 6, 1788, daughter of James Haggard Gentry; she died in Dubuque county, Iowa, Sept. 10, 1846. They had a family of seven sons and six daughters, all born in Kentucky.

David M. Haggard, the father of Dr. E. M. Haggard, was the eleventh child of David and Elizabeth, and he was born Dec. 17, 1829. On May 5, 1850, he married Miss Mary Ann Schmidt, who was born Aug. 18, 1832, eighteen miles below Strasburg on the Rhine river. Her father came from Germany to this country about 1847, sailing from Havre, France, to the mouth of the Mississippi in an old time sailing vessel, being about three months on the way. He located on a farm in Dubuque county, Iowa, which he cleared and improved, and there he died at an advanced age. His four children, two sons and two daughters, are all living. They were reared in the Catholic faith. To David M. Haggard and wife were born ten children, six sons and four daughters, nine of whom are now living: Rev. Alfred M., Dean of the Bible College of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, and minister in the Christian Church; Silas W., a real estate man at Toronto, S. Dak.; Charles L., a merchant at Seattle, Wash.; Dr. George D., a physician of Minneapolis, and a professor in the medical department of the University of Minnesota; Flora P., wife of Edward Conger, of Adel, Iowa; Dr. Ernest M.; Arabella, who died at the age of nine years; Mary Eliza, wife of Charles Beck, of Gordon, Neb.; Martha, wife of John Semones, of Denver, Colo.; Benjamin Franklin, who is unmarried, and has his home in De Soto, Iowa. David M. Haggard was ten years of age when taken by his parents to Iowa. At the age of seventeen, he was baptized and became a minister of the Christian Church. In the more than twenty-five years of his ministry he preached in several States, establishing the church at Concord, Minn., as well as a number of others, and his work was productive of many conversions, a host of people coming to him for baptism. Although self-educated he had a rare command of the English language, and a remarkable knowledge of the Bible. In 1859 Mr. Haggard started for California, but on reaching New Orleans was taken ill, and when he recovered returned home. When he left home he was a Democrat, but after seeing the prison pens of the South, he became a Republican. In 1863 he settled in Eau Claire, Wis., and in 1877 moved to Brown county, Minn., where he took up government land. In the early days he was a surveyor in the employ of the United States government in the Western States, and in Iowa and Minnesota he was a pioneer farmer, and in Wisconsin a lumberman, though, later, at Eau Claire, he engaged in a mercantile business. His death occurred Friday morning, April 10, 1896. For about six years he had a home at De Soto, Iowa, where his widow still lives.

Dr. Ernest M. Haggard was two years old when his parents removed from Iowa to Eau Claire, Wis., where he attended the public schools and grew to manhood. For some four or five years he helped his father in the making of his farm in Brown county, Minn., and for one year he worked in the pinneries in Wisconsin. His next employment was with his brother in a meat market, after which he worked on the river. At Oskaloosa College, in the Iowa city of that name, he studied for a profession, being a student in that school from 1885 to 1890, in which latter year he was graduated with honor. During the long vacations he would do any work he could find to do—railroad bridge carpentry, farm work, book canvassing—for the purpose of paying his expenses another year. In order to earn money to pursue his medical studies he engaged in biographical work in Iowa, Wisconsin and in Illinois. He entered the Physio-Medical College of Indiana at Indianapolis, and taking a three years' course was graduated in 1894. Shortly thereafter he opened an office in Indianapolis and there he has been engaged in a very successful practice to the present time.

Dr. Haggard was married April 25, 1894, to Miss Cora L., a daughter of William H. and Margaret Caroline (Ayres) Brown. To this union were born five children: Paul Anthony, born April 21, 1895, died Aug. 10, 1895; Esther Margaret, born Aug. 3, 1896; Edmund Brown, born Jan. 18, 1899; Lois Mary, born Aug. 27, 1902; and Doris Mabel, born Feb. 7, 1905. Dr. and Mrs. Haggard are members of the Third Christian Church. He belongs to the Improved Order of the Knights of Pythias, where he has passed the chairs of the local and grand lodges, being commander of the Grand Lodge of Indiana in 1900. He is also a member of the I. O. R. M. Professionally he is affiliated with the National Association of Physio-Medical Physicians and Surgeons, the Physio-Medical Association of Indiana, and the Indianapolis Physio-Medical Society. In politics he is a Prohibitionist.

Dr. Haggard has a comfortable residence at No. 2248 Central avenue. Mrs. Haggard graduated from Oskaloosa College in the class of 1891, and was for several years a teacher. Her father, William H. Brown (born in Ohio April 6, 1840), is a prominent farmer in Mahaska county, Iowa, fourteen miles from Oskaloosa, where he has lived for many years. During the Civil war he served in Company C, 15th Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded in the battle of Shiloh. He married Margaret Caroline Ayres, born in Ohio May 5, 1838, and they have had a family of eight children, six of whom are now living: Cora L., born Feb. 3, 1867; Lena, wife of Charles

A. Kent, superintendent of schools at Charles City, Iowa; Ethel M., wife of the Rev. Frank Garrett, a missionary to China; William H.; Wirt, who with William H. is farming the home place; Justin, a graduate of Penn College and Haverford, and now a missionary in China; and Winnfield A., and Anna L., the latter a twin to Lena, are deceased.

William H. Brown has held various town offices of Monroe township, and is secretary of the Prairie Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company. His assistance is frequently invoked to determine legal matters and to settle neighborhood disputes. Both he and his wife belonged to the Christian Church.

William Brown, father of William H., was a native of Virginia, of Holland-Dutch descent. He also was a farmer, and lived for a time in Ohio, and later in Story county, Iowa. In 1852 he settled in Mahaska county, Iowa, where he secured a quarter section of land. Before he completed his house he died from a congestive chill. He was about fifty years of age, and had a family of seven sons. In politics he was strongly interested, and did much speaking in the interest of the Democratic party.

The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Haggard was W. C. Ayres, who was born in Ohio, and came of Scotch ancestry. He was a farmer and a Universalist preacher. During both the Mexican and Civil wars he served as a soldier. Moving to Illinois, he had his home in that State until after the War, when he moved to Sullivan county, Mo., where he died at the age of sixty-nine years. In his family he had four children. His father was a Revolutionary soldier.

JOHN LAMBERT BACON belongs to one of the old pioneer families of Indianapolis. His father, Elisha W. Bacon, was born in Connecticut, removed to Indianapolis while a very young man, and built up a large business in plumbing, painting and tinning. His contracts were so profitable he was able to buy a good-sized tract of land on North Alabama street, and built his home, which is still standing, at the northeast corner of Alabama and North streets. It is one of the oldest houses in that part of the city. The old Trinity Church, and the Benjamin Harrison house, which stood on the corners opposite the Bacon homestead, have long since given way to apartment buildings.

Elisha W. Bacon married Eliza J. Conn, and they had seven children: Joshua, William M., Robert D., John Lambert, Charlotte, George J. and Fanny Elizabeth. William M. died in 1887. The other children all have their homes at present in Indianapolis, Joshua, the eldest son, now making his home with his son, the Rev. Charles E. Bacon, in Woodruff place. The older daughter is married to John Born and the younger daughter, Fanny E., to I. Lynn Klingensmith, who has a drug store on College avenue.

John Lambert Bacon was born March 12, 1838, and passed all his early life in the old homestead at North and Alabama streets. His father died in 1862, and the son continued to live with his mother until his marriage, several years later. He enlisted in Company C, 132d Ind. V. I., serving his full term of enlistment, and receiving his honorable discharge from the service. Mr. Bacon was with Haugh & Company, ironworkers (now the Brown Ketcham Company), for a great many years. The last twenty years of his business life were spent at the Atlas Engine Works, his entire business life being passed in the employ of these two firms. He retired from active work about fifteen years ago, and means to enjoy his last years in well-earned rest in his comfortable home at No. 207 East Fifteenth street.

During the seventies Mr. Bacon was married to Mrs. Mary Frances (Jones) Campbell, widow of the Hon. Henry Campbell, who was a member of the Indiana State Senate during the Civil war. Mrs. Bacon was a daughter of James Jones, a prominent citizen of Greencastle, Ind., where he served as postmaster for a number of years and was widely known as "Uncle Jimmy Jones." Rebecca Foster, Mrs. Bacon's mother, was of an old Virginia family which removed to Kentucky soon after the Revolution. Alexander Foster, her grandfather, came to America when he was but fifteen years old, and fought with the Pennsylvania troops in the Revolutionary war. He was granted a pension in 1832, and passed his last days at Crawfordsville, Ind. Mrs. Bacon has an old china saucer her grandmother brought from Scotland to Virginia, and then carried in a pioneer wagon over the mountains from Virginia into Kentucky. With her sister, Mrs. Mellie Wilson, of Attica, Ind., Mrs. Bacon is one of the two surviving members of a large family. She has a daughter by her first marriage, Minnie May Catherine, married to Howard C. Warren. Mr. and Mrs. Bacon have a son, Bert, married to Mattie V. Roach in 1896. Their daughter, Catherine Lucille Bacon, is the only grandchild in the family, and divides her grandfather's attention with G. A. R. meetings and the old Volunteer Firemen's meetings. Mr. Bacon is a member of the "Fire-fighter's Club," an organization of veterans of the days when the Indianapolis Fire Department fought fires with buckets and a hand engine.

JOSIAH BELL, one of the prosperous farmers and well known residents of White River township, Johnson county, was born in Preble county, Ohio, Aug. 28, 1834, son of David and Susan (Roberts) Bell, natives of North Carolina.

Josiah Bell, the paternal grandfather, was a native of North Carolina, of Irish descent. By occupation he was a farmer, but probably died in Ohio when in middle life. The maternal grandfather was also a native of North Carolina.

David Bell, the father, was a farmer in Ohio, and moved to Illinois, locating in Mt. Sterling, Brown county, where he resided for about ten years, when he returned to the old home in Preble county, Ohio, in 1848, and died there in that year, aged about forty years. His wife died in May, 1848, aged about thirty-five years, a steadfast member of the Christian Church. Nine children were born to them, and of this large family, five are now living: Martha, wife of Jeremiah Vincent; Lucinda, wife of Jerry Robinson, of Hutchinson, Kans.; Josiah; Mariah, wife of Richard Paddock, of Thawville, Ill.; and Eli, of West Newton, Indiana.

Josiah Bell resided in Preble county, Ohio, until he was eighteen or nineteen years of age, when he removed to Illinois and remained there until 1848. At that time he returned to Ohio with his father. His education was obtained in the common schools of Ohio, and at Clayton Academy, Clayton, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1856. Following his graduation he taught school five or six years, worked at the carpenter's trade several years more, and operated a mill in Rushville, Ill. In 1879, Mr. Bell went to Texas and engaged in the cattle business in the "Panhandle" country for three years; then removed to Kingman, Kans., and embarked in the sheep business for five years. In addition he was a merchant at Bluffs, Ill., and later engaged in the same line at Bluff Creek, in Smith's Valley.

For the past few years he has been conducting the excellent farm owned by his wife, in Section 33, White River township. He has resided in Johnson county, Ind., since 1886. This farm consists of sixty-seven acres all well cultivated, and supplied with good buildings, as well as a comfortable residence.

On Feb. 4, 1858, Mr. Bell was married to Miss Margaret Jones, and four children were born to them: Mattie, wife of Wesley Brown, resides at Kingman, Kans., and has six children; Oscar, who married Laura Line, operates a meat market in Greenville, Ohio; Lulu married Milton Paddock of White River township, and has one child living, Margaret; Henry died at the age of two years. Mrs. Bell died in 1868, aged about thirty-three. She belonged to the Christian (or New Light) Church. On Jan. 31, 1900, Mr. Bell married Miss Bettie Hardin, daughter of Judge Hardin. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bell are members of the Methodist Church. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and an Odd Fellow, and in politics he is a Republican. He has many friends in the community where he now makes his home.

CHARLES G. ZABEL (deceased), an early promoter of the manufacturing interests of Indianapolis, was born at Weinböla, in the Kingdom of Sachsen, Germany, July 12, 1830, and was reared to farm pursuits, receiving but eight years of schooling. He was a son of John G. and Rosa (Herrman) Zabel, both members of a prominent and highly respected family. They died in their native land, leaving these children: Frederick, who came to America in 1848, locating at Louisville, Ky., and died there; Charles G.; Hannah; Christina; Augusta; Emilia, and Rosa—all the daughters remaining in the old country.

Charles G. Zabel remained under the parental roof until the death of his father. At the age of seventeen years he was apprenticed to the cabinet making trade, at which after three years of work he received but fifty pfennige (about twelve cents) a week in wages. In 1851 he emigrated to America, the sum of $310 which he received from his father's estate enabling him to make the voyage. He landed at New York and then pushed on to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he found employment and remained until 1854, when he went for one year to Lawrenceburg. In 1856 he first came to Indianapolis, and the years 1857-58 he spent at Dubuque, Iowa, and in 1859 at Tell City, Ind., engaged in carpentering, but late in the latter year he went to Louisville and worked there at his trade until 1861. In that year he returned to Indianapolis, and here became one of the most skilled men in his line in the Union of Cabinetmakers. This was an association of eighteen young men who had learned their trade in Germany and joined together for mutual benefit. Each put in $400 and they formed a land syndicate, purchasing a tract of land on which they erected temporary buildings, met their obligations, established thus a good credit, and later put up more substantial buildings of brick. The Cabinetmakers Union is still carried on as an industrial concern, some of the original promoters of the enterprise being yet interested. The history of this enterprise is very interesting. They built their own shops, worked in concert, piled up their lumber, after working hours in other places were over, did their own guarding, kept honest and true to each other, and attained success in their work of building up one of the biggest manufacturing plants in Indianapolis. After twenty-eight years Mr. Zabel sold his stock and retired from active labor, investing his capital in real estate, from which he realized a comfortable income. From 1888 Mr. Zabel was not connected with the Union, although three of his early comrades still are interested.

When Mr. Zabel came first to Indianapolis the population was about 18,000 and the future of the city did not look encouraging. But he lived to see the poor streets converted into beautiful thoroughfares, the erection of buildings rivalling those of any other inland city, and a wonderful growth and development of manufacturing and railroad interests. His late residence at No. 1015 East Ohio street, built in 1873, and occupied by him ever after, was at that time at the very edge of town, although now close to the center of the city. He was interested in all the city's development and identified with much of it. Mr. Zabel was not a member of any religious body, but believed in and strictly observed the Golden Rule as his line of conduct. In fraternal connection he was an Odd Fellow, and he belonged to the society of German Pioneers. In politics he was a Republican on national questions, but in local affairs voted for the candidate he judged most fit. He died at his home May 7, 1907.

In 1864 Mr. Zabel married Kate Merlou, who was born in Germany and came with the family to America in 1847, when four years of age. The parents settled at Pales-tine, Hancock Co., Ind., and she was reared on a farm. Her father, Henry A. Merlou, a most estimable man, died at the age of eighty-two years. His children were: Henry; John; Conrad; George; Mary; Kate; Emma; and Lizzie. Of the four children of this marriage two died young, the others being: Anna, who died aged twenty-one years; and Laura, wife of A. Graul, a merchant of Indianapolis. The mother, who was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church, died in 1871.

In 1873 Mr. Zabel married Barbara Korn, born in Germany, where she lived until the age of twenty-eight. Her parents died when she was young, and she accompanied a sister and an aunt to America. She is a most estimable lady, full of health, ability and cheerfulness, and has made a happy, sunshiny home for our subject. They reared two children, a son and a daughter, both of whom reflect much credit upon them, viz.: Emil, who is a bookkeeper in one of the breweries; and Lena, who married Carl L. Peters, a promising young man, who is a member of the firm of Geiger & Peters.

ADDISON HARDIN, in his lifetime a successful farmer residing on Section 33, White River township, Johnson Co., Ind., was born Oct. 31, 1834, at his late home, son of Judge Franklin and Ann (Goslin) Hardin, natives of Kentucky.

William Henry Hardin, father of Judge Franklin Hardin and grandfather of Addison Hardin, was known as "Harry" Hardin, and was born in 1768 in Pennsylvania, but later came to Kentucky with some of the first of the pioneers of that State, down the Ohio river in a flat boat. His death occurred in the State of his adoption, when he was about sixty years of age. Twelve children, who grew to maturity, were born to him, the majority of whom found their way to Indiana as pioneers, while others settled in Illinois in the pioneer days of that State. All of them were worthy citizens, and showed forth in their lives the virtues inherited from the French Huguenots who founded the family.

Nathan Goslin, the maternal grandfather of Addison Hardin, was also one of the good old pioneers of Kentucky. His calling was that of a miller, and he made many trips to New Orleans on the river by flat boat. His death occurred in Kentucky, when he was about seventy years of age, and his family was a large one.

Judge Franklin Hardin was a land surveyor, who located in Indiana about 1828, purchasing a farm in Marion county at Glenns Valley, but never lived upon it, he making his home on Fall creek for about two years, when he settled on a farm of 160 acres in White River township, and there he resided until his death. In addition, he bought an eighty-acre tract northwest of the home farm, which he superintended, his boys operating it as they grew to manhood. During the early days of their residence in Indiana, Judge Hardin's duties as surveyor called him from home the greater portion of the time, and the burden of attending to the farm fell upon the shoulders of his wife, who was one of the good pioneer women of that time. He was elected judge of the Court of Common Pleas for two terms, serving eight years. This court was afterward merged into the Circuit Court, and he was also county surveyor for six years, and was a member of the lower house in the State Legislature for a number of years, and then was elected to the State Senate. Judge Hardin was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of the State, and one of the most prominent men in Johnson county. Few men of his day were better versed in the law than he, and he was a hard student and a fine mathematician and geologist, as well as a superior lawyer. His large law library was one of the finest in the State. In 1890 occurred his death, at the venerable age of eighty years; his wife had died a few years before, when she was seventy-five years old. They were members of the old school Presbyterian Church, in which they enjoyed universal respect and esteem. Six sons and two daughters were born to Judge and Mrs. Hardin, five of whom are now living: Louisa, wife of William St. John, of Morgan county; Milton, of Smith Valley, White River township; John, of White River township, near Kinder post office; Tilghman, at Bennett's Switch post office, Miami county; and Elizabeth (Bettie), wife of Josiah Bell, of White River township.

Addison Hardin was reared upon the home farm, attending the old-fashioned subscription schools in the log cabin school houses, with a log left out for a window, the hole being covered with greased paper. The first school he attended was one of this description, taught by his father, it being one of the few then to be found in that neighborhood. These schools usually were held but three months out of the year. When he became old enough, Addison Hardin became himself a school teacher, and for eight or ten terms held this position, remaining at home until twenty-eight years of age. All of his life was spent in Johnson county, with the exception of five years spent in Illinois and six years in Missouri. He owned thirty-one acres of the old farm, and forty acres adjoining, as well as 142 acres in Henry county, Md. All of his land is in excellent condition, and Mr. Hardin was an up-to-date farmer, employing modern methods and machinery, with the result that his acres yielded good returns, and his success was unquestioned. The home is a pleasant one, and he kept his barn and other out-buildings in good condition, the entire farm bespeaking the thrift and good management of the owner.

On Dec. 24, 1862, Mr. Hardin was married in Coles county, Ill., to Miss Louisa A. Moore, daughter of William P. F. and Sarah (Goslin) Moore, and seven children were born to them: John married Miss Anna Leota Bailey, and has four children, Laura, Esther, Carl and Gertrude; Sarah Ann died when about thirty-two years of age; Franklin lives on a farm owned by his father in Henry county, Mo., and is unmarried; Frances died at the age of five years; Martha resides in Indianapolis; Addison died in infancy; William is a railroad man, conductor on one of the Chicago elevated roads. Mrs. Hardin is a member of the Christian (or Disciples) Church, in which she is an active worker, and she is a most estimable lady. In politics Mr. Hardin was a Democrat, as was his father before him, and he held the position of school director for a number of years.

JAMES C. ARMSTEAD, an old and highly esteemed citizen of Indianapolis, is of the third generation of the family in America. It is a remarkable fact that each of these three generations bore arms in defense of the country. The grandfather was Joseph Armstead, who in Colonial times emigrated from England, his native land, to America. When the war broke out he joined the Revolutionary army and fought against the mother country. He lived in Connecticut. It is believed by the family that the correct way of spelling the name is Armitstead.

Henry Y. Armstead, the father of James C. Armstead, was born in Connecticut about 1785, one of eight children, and when a lad he was brought by his parents to western New York, the family settling near Buffalo, where Henry Y. was reared to manhood. There he married Sarah Blake (her stepfather's name was Cooper). Later he moved to Ohio, near Cincinnati, where he spent the remainder of his life. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812. His wife died at the residence of her son James C., in Indianapolis, at the ripe old age of ninety-four. Henry Y. Armstead had a sister who married a man named Cooper.

James C. Armstead was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, about ten miles north of Cincinnati, in 1820, the seventh of a family of thirteen children, consisting of nine sons and four daughters, of whom he is the sole survivor. Mr. Armstead married, in Butler county, Ohio, in 1845, Miss Olive Patterson, who was born in southern Ohio in 1824. Eight children have been born to James C. and Olive Armstead, four sons and four daughters. Of these four are now living, namely: John T., lives in Duluth, Minn.; James H., in Indianapolis; Mrs. Lucy Hill, in Oklahoma, and Miss Mary E. Armstead in Indianapolis.

Mr. Armstead enlisted in 1863 in Company G, 136th O. V. I., for the one hundred days' service. He served the full time and received an honorable discharge. He is a member of John F. Ruckle Post, No. 165, G. A. R., and has been an active member of the I. O. O. F. since 1864. Mr. Armstead has been a resident of Indianapolis since 1869, and his present home is at No. 419 Dorman street. For a number of years he has been engaged in mercantile business as a grocer. He has made many warm personal friends in Indianapolis during his residence here of more than a third of a century and he is held in the highest esteem for his genial disposition and his many sterling traits of character.

AUGUSTUS STELTING. At No. 2815 West Washington street, Indianapolis, is located the attractive home of Augustus Stelting, who is now living practically retired, having gained a competence through honorable and well-directed efforts and having been essentially the architect of his own fortune. He well merits classification among the representative citizens of Indianapolis and is a member of one of the honored pioneer families of the State, coming of that stanch German stock which has contributed so materially to the progress and prosperity of our great republic.

Though he has passed practically his entire life in America, Mr. Stelting is a native of Germany, having been born in Leipsic, Germany, June 9, 1831, son of Dietrich and Sophia Stelting. The parents were born and reared in Germany, where the father learned the trade of cooper, to which he continued to devote his attention during his entire active career. He had attained a position of independence in his native land and could have there passed the remainder of his life in comfort, but he was anxious to establish his sons where better opportunities were afforded for individual effort and where there was freedom from monarchical rule. Accordingly, in 1836, accompanied by his family, he emigrated to America, landing in Baltimore and thence proceeding to Strausburg, Crawford Co., Pa., where he remained about one year and then came to Indianapolis, which was then but a village. Here, associated with his brother Christian, who had accompanied him, he engaged in the work of his trade, and a few years later he removed to Plainfield, Hendricks county, where he purchased land and erected large shops, establishing an extensive cooperage business. A number of years later he disposed of his interests in the town and purchased a farm on the Rockville pike road, in the same county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of years and where his wife died. Eventually he sold the property and, in company with four of his children, removed to Vernon county, Wis., where he entered a large tract of government land which he developed into a valuable farm, and there he passed the rest of his signally honorable and useful life, dying in 1880, at the venerable age of ninety-two years. He was a man of superior education and wielded a marked influence in the various communities where he lived, while he ever commanded uniform confidence and esteem. He and his wife were devoted members of the Presbyterian Church and reared their children in that faith. By industry and good management Dietrich Stelting accumulated a valuable estate in Wisconsin, and this was inherited by the four children who accompanied him on his removal to that State in the pioneer days. He was a Democrat in politics, was broad-minded and public-spirited, and his charity and kindness in all the relations of life were proverbial, while he was ever helpful and sincere, imbued with that high principle which made him believe in the honesty of others. Being an excellent judge of character, he was not often betrayed in his trust in his fellow-men. Of his children we enter the following brief record: William, who was married in Wisconsin, is now a resident of Tennessee; Augustus was the next in order of birth; Frederick is a prosperous farmer in Tennessee; Salinda, who was born after the emigration to America, was first married to James Williams and after his death became the wife of John Jones, her first husband having died while serving as a Union soldier in the Civil war (she died in Wisconsin); Mary is the wife of Jonas Hubbard, a farmer in Wisconsin.

Augustus Stelling was but five years of age at the time of his parents' emigration to America, and his early educational discipline was received in German Lutheran schools in Indianapolis. He remained at home until he had attained maturity, learning the cooper's trade under the direction of his father, whom he assisted in his work for many years, and he thus continued until his marriage, in 1851, when he established a home of his own in Plainfield. In the meanwhile he had also learned the carpenter's trade, to which he continued to devote his attention until 1855, when he purchased a farm in Hendricks county, conducting the same about one year and then disposing of the property and starting for Wisconsin, to visit his father and other members of the family. While in that State he filed claim on a tract of government land, in Vernon county, shortly afterward returning to his home. Three years later he removed with his family to his place in Wisconsin, where he made some improvements, continuing his residence there for seven years and then returning to Indiana, where he passed the ensuing seven years, at the expiration of which he again removed to his Wisconsin farm, to the cultivation and improvement of which he devoted the next seven years. He then disposed of the property and came to Indianapolis. Later he purchased and took up his residence on a farm in Hendricks county, remaining there about a year, and then again establishing his home in the capital city. He eventually disposed of the Hendricks county farm and later bought a tract of 250 acres in Greene county, and this place, which is now a very productive and valuable farm, he still owns. He there maintained his home for five years, at the expiration of which he rented the place and bought his present attractive residence in Indianapolis, where he has ever since lived. Shortly after his final return from Wisconsin Mr. Stelling accepted a position as traveling representative for the firm of Chandler & Taylor, manufacturers of agricultural machinery and implements, in Indianapolis, and he continued in the employ of this concern for fourteen years, exhibiting their products at State and county fairs and otherwise doing much to promote the interests of the business. In addition to his residence property Mr. Stelling has become the owner of other valuable realty in Indianapolis, including a double tenement house and a good house and lot on Redmond street, and by his efforts and excellent business methods he has accumulated a competence and is enabled to live retired from the more active duties of business life, giving his attention to the supervision of his real estate and other interests. He has been the builder of his own fortune, having received nothing from his father's estate but that best of all bequests, the wise and noble counsel of an honored parent, so that he went forth well equipped for the battle of life, with high principles and a high sense of his stewardship and of the responsibilities which attend every life. He has lived retired since 1893 and is known as one of the public-spirited and loyal citizens of Indianapolis, in whose material prosperity and advancement he maintains a lively interest. He is staunchly arrayed in support of the Democratic party, but has never desired the honors or emoluments of public office.

On Nov. 23, 1851, Mr. Stelling was united in marriage to Miss Malinda Wiley, who was born in Hendricks county, Aug. 25, 1834, and who has proved a devoted wife and helpmate, making the home one of ideal character. She is a daughter of Alfred and Susan (Thompson) Wiley, who were married in their native State of North Carolina, the former being a son of William and Anna (Armfield) Wiley, natives of Virginia. William Wiley was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, after which he located in North Carolina, whence, in 1833, he removed to Hendricks county, Ind., becoming one of the pioneers of that section of the State. There he entered eighty acres of government land, upon which he erected a primitive log cabin and made other slight improvements. He died in 1837, while on a visit to North Carolina, his remains being brought to Hendricks county for interment and being the first to find a resting place in Gossett's cemetery. He was born in 1760. He and his wife were prominent members of the M. E. Church. His children were as follows: Abner, Isaiah, Shannon, Samuel, William and Alfred (father of Mrs. Stelting). The Wiley family comes of stanch old Irish stock, and William Wiley's wife was of German lineage.

Alfred Wiley was reared to maturity in North Carolina and several years after his marriage removed thence to Ohio, settling on a farm near Dayton, where three children were added to the family circle. In 1834 he became a pioneer of Hendricks county, Ind., taking up his abode on the land entered by his father and later securing an additional eighty acres. He here improved a good farm and became one of the prominent and influential men of the locality. Late in life he sold out, with a view to removing to Wisconsin, but he finally determined to remain in Indiana, and purchased a farm near Danville which was his home until his death, which occurred in 1870 while he was visiting one of his sons, in Illinois; his remains were brought to Hendricks county and laid to rest in the same cemetery as were those of his honored father. His wife survived until 1897, passing away at the venerable age of eighty-eight, in Illinois. Mr. Wiley was a Democrat in politics and originally he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church, but later became identified with the Baptist Church, in whose work they were prominent. Their children were as follows: Harper, who died at the age of eight years; Abner, who died in Kansas, where he was a successful farmer; Susan, wife of William Glascock; Malinda, wife of Mr. Stelting; William, who died in New Orleans; John, whose death occurred in Indiana; Henry, who resides on the old homestead; Elizabeth, wife of Ezra Dickinson; Harriet, who died at the age of fourteen; and Sarah, who died at the age of eleven years.

Grandfather William Wiley was an Irish gentleman of the fine old type, genial in nature and with a kindly word for all. His reminiscences in regard to the pioneer days and his service as a Revolutionary soldier were ever full of interest. He endured the hardships and privations which the valiant patriots suffered during the dark days when the liberty of the nation hung in the balance, being at times with barely sufficient clothing to cover himself, while hunger was the rule rather than the exception. The soldiers frequently found it necessary to cut the linen from the looms of the women and manufacture rude clothing from the same, while the fortunes of war were such that they were at times compelled to secure food from those who needed it themselves. So great was the distress that a complaint was made to Washington, who finally invited the command of which Mr. Wiley was a member to have breakfast with him. At the foot of a big tree the breakfast was prepared, consisting of potatoes and salt, the revered father of his country offering a long prayer before the meal. The object lesson was not lost, and the soldiers decided that if their great general could thus subsist and carry forward the fight they too could do their part, and how well they did this history records.

John Thompson, grandfather of Mrs. Stelting in the maternal line, was born in Virginia and later removed to North Carolina, where he was engaged in farming until his death. His wife came to Indiana, where she reared her children to lives of honor and usefulness, her death occurring in Henry county. She was a devout Methodist and was a noble Christian woman, devoted to her children and her home. Of her children we record that John died in North Carolina; Elizabeth became the wife of Thomas Odell; Hannah married J. C. Patton; James was next in order of birth; Kate married Reuben Coverdale and after her death he married her sister Martha, the youngest of the children, all of whom are now deceased.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Stelting we enter the following data: Harriet is the wife of Joseph Maynard, of Wisconsin; Susan is the wife of George Ryman, of Indianapolis; Josephine is the wife of William Bradford, of Johnson county, Ind.; Alfred is an erecting engineer, residing in Indianapolis; Eudora is the wife of M. C. Werkheiser, of Trenton, N. J.; William, a molder by vocation, resides in Indianapolis; John W. is foreman of the steam-fitting department in the factory of Chandler & Taylor; and Lawrence is a resident of the city of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Stelting are identified with the M.

E. Church, of which she is a member, while he contributes liberally to the various departments of church work and is a close student of the Bible, for which he has the utmost reverence, believing that it amply provides for the guidance of mankind in all the relations of life.

JUDGE GEORGE W. GRUBBS, ex-Judge of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and a highly esteemed citizen of Martinsville, Ind., was born Sept. 26, 1841, in Franklin, Johnson county, Ind., son of Richard F. and Louisa (Armstrong) Grubbs, the former of whom was born in Kentucky and the latter in Pennsylvania. A family of six children was born to these parents, the three survivors being: Judge George W.; Helen, wife of Charles A. Sloan, of Franklin; and Mary L., Mrs. Bryan, of Franklin, Indiana.

Richard F. Grubbs was born in Kentucky, son of Richard Grubbs, who also was a native of Kentucky, of Virginia parentage. The family originated in England. Richard F. was one of a large family. He learned the tailoring business in Kentucky, and in 1835, he moved to Indiana and located at Franklin. His home was a little farm adjacent to the city, and here he also carried on merchant tailoring. Although he voted with the Republican party, and was once assessor of Johnson county, he was not what would be called a politician. His death occurred in 1867. Both he and his wife belonged to the Baptist Church. She was a daughter of Thomas Armstrong, a native of Pennsylvania, from which State he came to Indiana, and was one of the early settlers in Indianapolis. He kept tavern in that city on the site of the old "Bates House." Mr. Armstrong was one of the soldiers of the War of 1812. The last few years of his life were spent in Franklin, where he died at the age of eighty-eight years. He was a prominent member of the Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon. He was also one of the trustees of Franklin College.

Judge George W. Grubbs was reared in Franklin and enjoyed all the educating influence of a college town. In 1861 he was one of the graduating class at Franklin College, and spent the first year after leaving his Alma Mater as principal of the Franklin Academy. In July, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, 70th Ind. V. I., as a private, for service in the Civil War. In August, 1863, he was commissioned first lieutenant of Company F, of the same regiment, and served in the field until September, 1864, when he was made assistant Adjutant-General of the 1st Brigade, 3d Division, 20th Army Corps. In November, 1864, he was commissioned Major of the 42d U. S. Col. Inf., and served with this rank until April, 1866, when he was mustered out at Huntsville, Ala. This gallant soldier, so often promoted, did not escape the wages of war. At the battle of Peach Tree Creek, he was one of the unfortunate ones who received wounds. Major Grubbs participated in these memorable battles: Russellville, Ky.; all the engagements of the Atlanta campaign, and Resaca, when the only guns taken from Gen. Johnston during the campaign, were captured by his valiant brigade.

After the war Major Grubbs selected law for his chosen life-work, and entered upon its study with the legal firm of Porter, Harrison & Fishback, of Indianapolis. He graduated from the Indianapolis Law School, in 1867, and in November of the same year he came to Martinsville, and here he has been engaged in practice ever since.

Judge Grubbs has always been identified with the Republican party, and for many years has been prominent in its ranks. In 1875 he was elected to the Indiana Legislature, and served one term, and was then elected to the State Senate, serving from 1877 to 1881. In 1886 he made the race for Congress in the Fifth Congressional District, but was defeated by Col. C. C. Matson, the district being distinctly Democratic. In 1888 he was elected Judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District, and was re-elected in 1894, serving until November, 1900 when he declined further honors, and resumed his private practice. His public career has been one of marked ability, and he is justly regarded as one of the strong men of the State.

On Nov. 28, 1872, Judge Grubbs was united in marriage with Miss Mary Viola Griggs, daughter of Judge A. S. and Phoebe (Hutchinson) Griggs, of Martinsville. Four children were born to this union, namely: George Earle, Donald R., Daisy I., and Sidney M., the two latter still residing at home. The eldest son, George Earle, died in February, 1897, after having completed a course in law and being admitted to the Bar—a young man of brilliant promise. Donald R., the second son, is connected with the Gall Carpet Company, at Indianapolis; he married Miss Theresa Crouse, and has a family of three children.

Judge Grubbs and wife are members of the M. E. Church, in which he belongs to the board of stewards, and for fifteen years was Sunday-school superintendent. He is a valued comrade in Blankenship Post, No. 77, G. A. R., and is a Past Department Commander of the Department of Indiana, G. A. R.

ELIZA GORDON BROWNING, librarian of the Indianapolis Public Library, has been connected with that institution continuously since 1880, and has been librarian since 1892. Her eminent fitness for this incumbency and for responsibilities has been demonstrated time and again by her capable administration of various positions. Undoubtedly Miss Browning's mental qualities are inherited from a long line of intellectual ancestors, men and women who have been leaders of thought and progressive movements in their day as far back as history records. They are Americans of the highest type, people characterized by strength of mind, breadth of view, high-minded patriotism and distinguished public services. Miss Browning's immediate ancestors, both paternal and maternal, have been notable men in public life in Indiana, identified with political and literary interests in the city of Indianapolis and throughout the State.

Edmund Browning, her grandfather, was a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Lewright) Browning. He was born in Culpeper, Va., in 1795, and as a lad served in the War of 1812. He was for many years proprietor of a hotel in Indianapolis located on Washington street, where the New York Store now stands. From 1860 until the office was abolished, shortly before his death (which occurred in 1877), he was register of public lands in Indiana. He married Eliza Gordon, daughter of George and Sarah Wynne (Moss) Gordon, and granddaughter of Major Hugh and Jane (Ford) Moss.

Hon. William John Brown, Miss Browning's maternal grandfather, was a son of George and Hannah (John) Brown and a grandson of Thomas and Mary (Ball) Brown and John and Barbara (Evans) John. He was a lawyer and journalist, editing the Indianapolis Sentinel from 1850 to 1855, and became prominent in both State and national affairs as legislator and in other important connections. He was a member of the State Assembly from 1829 to 1832; served as prosecuting attorney for the Indiana district from 1832 to 1836; as secretary of the State from 1836 to 1840; as member of the Assembly again in 1841-42; in the national Congress, 1843-44 and 1849-50; and between these terms as assistant postmaster-general, from 1845 to 1849. Mr. Brown's high sense of personal responsibility in the discharge of the duties intrusted to him, his thorough comprehension of the people he represented and his desire to fulfill to the utmost their expectations regarding his services, made him an admirable public servant, and he maintained a position of power and prominence for many years. He married Susan Tomkins, daughter of Nathan and Mary (Wyatt) Tomkins, and her grandfather was a near relative of Vice-President Daniel D. Tompkins. Admiral George Brown, U. S. N., son of William John and Susan (Tomkins) Brown, has a world-wide record, which requires no comment here. His brother, Hon. Austin H. Brown, is also a man of mark, having served frequently in high offices of trust, in his city and State as well as in the councils of the nation.

The Browning, Lewright, Moss, Brown, John and Wyatt families are all of Virginia, the Gordons, of Philadelphia, the Tomkins, of Staten Island, N. Y. Three of Miss Browning's great-great-grandfathers, Thomas Brown, Hugh Moss and John John, and her great-grandfather, George Brown, were soldiers and officers in the Revolutionary war. George Brown also served in the Indian wars from 1783 on, and in the War of 1812. In 1825 his wife, Hannah (John) Brown, was left a widow with her little children in the then sparsely settled county of Rush, in Indiana. Here she brought up her family, and as there was no doctor within a radius of ten miles, she sent to Cincinnati for the necessary books, studied medicine and practiced her profession in the neighborhood. She is entitled to the distinction of being the first woman doctor in Indiana. Her second son, Dr. Ryland T. Brown, read medicine with her and later attended the Ohio Medical College. All through his life he occupied positions of importance in educational and national affairs. He was State geologist of Indiana; chemist in chief in the Department of Agriculture in Washington; and later was appointed by the government to make a survey of the State of Indiana to disclose her natural resources. The rich coal fields of Indiana were a result of this survey. During the last year of his life he occupied the chairs of Natural Science in the North Western Christian University, and Chemistry and Physiology in the Indiana Medical College.

Miss Browning was born Sept. 23, 1856, at Fortville, Hancock county, Ind., daughter of Woodville and Mary Anne (Brown) Browning, and was but a few months old when brought by her parents to Indianapolis, where she has ever since made her home. Her father, who was a merchant, died in 1861. She received her education in public and private schools in the city. Entering the library as a substitute in 1880, Miss Browning gave her services for a year without compensation. Her peculiar adaptability for the work—the result of a combination of energy and executive ability with a thorough knowledge of and love for books—soon developed, and she rose steadily until, in April, 1892, she was honored with election to the position of librarian. The next year she was re-elected by acclamation, and she has held the position continuously ever since. Miss Browning's administration of this trust has met with the heartiest approval among the citizens of Indianapolis. She has proved herself to be the possessor of excellent business qualities as well as the necessary literary appreciation required for the proper discharge of her duties, and the conveniences of the library—facilities for speedy and accurate attention to the numerous details of the work and for serving patrons with least possible waste of time—have been greatly improved and multiplied under her management. She is ever on the alert to investigate promising new methods which may be adopted or adapted, as the case may be, into her work with good results, with the effect that the institution under her charge is thoroughly systematized and judiciously equipped. Miss Browning has an analytical mind, is a close reader and a deep thinker, and a most interesting conversationalist. She is an accomplished musician. Her Revolutionary ancestry entitles her to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution, in which she has become quite prominent, being State historian of the Indiana Society of that organization, and joint editor with Mrs. Harriet (McIntire) Foster of the Year-Book of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Indiana. She also belongs to the Fortnightly Literary Club of Indianapolis, and to the American Library Association. In religious connection she is a member of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church.

It is only just to Miss Browning to include in this sketch the encomiums of two prominent citizens of Indianapolis. Charles W. Moores, attorney at law, etc., writes under date of Jan. 7, 1907: "Miss Eliza G. Browning, Librarian of the Indianapolis Public Library, carries greater responsibilities in the library world than any other woman and has held her present position longer perhaps than any woman ever has. Her wide acquaintance as a library expert among library people in this country and abroad and her large circle of friends in Indianapolis have made her a most acceptable public official and have added greatly to the reputation of the library abroad and to its popularity at home. She has grown up in the atmosphere of books and has given many years of an active and useful life to the service of the people and it goes without saying that no librarian is better liked than she is or secures more loyal and efficient cooperation from her assistants. She has been particularly active in the promotion of public movements among librarians and reading people, and is the only woman that has ever been enrolled in the membership of the Indiana Historical Society."

Judge Daniel Waite Howe writes under date of Jan. 5, 1907: "Eliza G. Browning was elected city librarian in 1892. She has given general satisfaction, and has manifested remarkable aptitude and skill in discharging the duties of her position as librarian. She undoubtedly possesses ability of a high order."

EPHRAIM HODGES, one of the early settlers of Morgan county, a retired farmer and substantial and highly esteemed citizen, was born July 19, 1820, in Wayne township, Owen county, Ind., one quarter of a mile from the present site of the town of Gosport.

The Hodges family originated in England where John Hodges, grandfather of Ephraim, was born. His parents were residents of London. According to family tradition, John wished to marry against his parents' will, and this caused him to run away from home. He later secured passage on an American-bound vessel, reached the Colonies in time to become a member of the Patriot army, and served his adopted land for three years. After the war he settled in North Carolina where he spent the remainder of his life, dying at the age of sixty years. His wife was Margaret (commonly called "Peggy") Lacy, and they reared a family of seven children. Probably Ephraim Goss, the maternal grandfather of Ephraim Hodges, was also a resident of North Carolina, and he came to Indiana in 1810, and settled in Washington county six years before it was admitted to Statehood. In 1818 he moved to Owen county, bought a section of land near Gosport, of an old Quaker by the name of Lindley, and lived there until his death. He was one of the proprietary owners of the land where Gosport now stands, and he assisted in the laying out of the town. He married Annie Workman, had a family of four sons and seven daughters, and died at the age of sixty-six years.

Philip Hodges, son of Ephraim and father of our subject, was born in North Carolina. In 1818 he located in Wayne township, Owen county, Ind., took here a lease of land, and awaited the coming of what was known as the New Purchase, into the market, and bought the first piece of land in that sale. This sale was held at Terre Haute. Mr. Hodges never occupied this land, not feeling satisfied with it, but borrowed money and entered a tract of 160 acres, in Section 14, Ray township, and this he cleared and improved. At one time he owned 1,300 acres of land in Morgan and Putnam counties, and, in addition, owned a whole section in Iowa. In the days of his settlement deer and wild turkeys were abundant, but Mr. Hodges was never known to slay any of them, only killing the squirrels because they damaged his corn. Mr. Hodges was an industrious and energetic man and possessed the good judgment which enabled him to succeed in almost all of his undertakings, whether in the buying and selling of land, or in the raising and disposing of stock. He died in April, 1887, aged eighty-nine years and six months, at his home in Ray township. He married Polly Goss, also a native of North Carolina, and she passed away in April, 1875, aged seventy years. Both were members of the Christian Church, in which he was an elder. The pioneer preachers of this religious body were his acquaintances and friends, and he was most highly esteemed by such men as Rev. Barton W. Stone and Rev. John O'Kane, who were early preachers in Indiana. Although he had no aspirations for office, he served at one time as county commissioner and was always ready to promote the best interests of his locality.

To Philip and Polly (Goss) Hodges were born ten children—seven sons and three daughters—of whom four survive, namely: Ephraim; Noah, of Lincoln, Neb.; Thomas, of Fairhaven, Wash.; and Henry, of Decatur county, Indiana.

For over eighty years Ephraim Hodges has resided in Ray township, and has been an interested spectator of the wonderful changes which have taken place in this time. Until he was a man of twenty-five he remained under the home roof, and he remembers that never before that time, had he grieved his mother by leaving home without telling her both when he would return and where he could be found. It was a mark of filial respect which it is pleasant to recall. His education was obtained in the subscription schools, the first one being a log cabin with earth floor and slab benches. At the age of twenty-two he began teaching, having prepared during the previous year, and he followed this profession for sixteen winters, working on the farm during the summers. When he wished to start in life for himself, he was assisted by his father, and he bought his present home farm, going into debt to his father some $1,200, which he paid in due season. Here Mr. Hodges has over 300 acres and owns other land, amounting in all to probably 600 acres. Although he has led a very active life, he is still vigorous and energetic, and unlike most octogenarians can read without the use of glasses. As a farmer he is known all through Morgan county, and as a man, he is universally respected. His political opinions make him a member of the Republican party, and he has served for two terms as county commissioner.

On Sept. 4, 1845, Mr. Hodges married Miss Ann Smith, daughter of Daniel Y. and Polly (Crum) Smith. Nine children were born to this union, five sons and four daughters, as follows: Noah, who died at the age of eighteen months; Mary, who married Newton J. Bowen, of Adams county, Neb., and has children, Charles, Kate, Marv, Frank and Robert; John Q., of Martinsville, who married Keziah Stirewalt, and has one child, Curtis; Clarinda, who married Perry Lankford, of Jefferson township, and has children, Howard, Fred and Carlton; Joseph C., who married Elizabeth Sears, lives in Ray township, and has children, Lawrence, Clona, Ralph and Howland E.; Charles S., who married Martha Davis, and lives on Section 13, in Ray township: Melinda, who married James J. Rhea, of Holdredge, Phelps county, Neb., and has two living children, Shirley O. and Frara; Philip S., of Washington township, who married Mary Prigg, and has two children, Dale and Annie Catherine; and Cora, who married S. F. Coble, of Paragon, and has four children, Mary, Urban, Gilbert and Evelyn. The religious connection of the family is with the Christian Church.

JOHN W. JOHNSON, one of the representative and exemplary citizens of Clay township, Hamilton county, Ind., was born in the county, in Washington township, Jan. 1, 1856, son of Cyrus and Acynthia (Hodgins) Johnson, he of North Carolina.

By occupation Cyrus Johnson was a farmer, who came to Indiana in an early day in the history of the State, and settled in the woods with the wild game, of which he was a hunter. He and his excellent wife had the following family: Henry, deceased; William, living in Clay township; John W.; Elias, deceased; Edward, living near Noblesville, a stockdealer and trader; Morton, living on a farm in Washington township; Robert; and Vannatta, a farmer of Washington township. Cyrus Johnson was successful in all he undertook, and he became the owner of 300 acres. He was always a member of the Society of Friends, in which he was very active. Both he and his wife lived to advanced age.

John W. Johnson was married, in 1879, to Sada Day, daughter of William and Ann (Diskson) Day, also of North Carolina, who moved to Indiana many years ago. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Johnson married Nancy Cloud, daughter of John B. and Mary A. (White) Cloud, of Indiana, who lived for many years in Hamilton county. By his first marriage, Mr. Johnson has three sons: Fred, a well educated young man, and now superintendent of schools at Carmel, who married Carrie Thomas, and lives at home; Ray, also living at home, and engaged as a teacher; Clifton, in high school at Carmel, Ind. By his second marriage, Mr. Johnson has two children, Grace and Grant, bright little ones, attending school.

The fine farm on which the family make their home, consists of eighty-eight acres, well-improved, on which there are 500 rods of tiling as well as sufficient ditching, so that the fields are very fertile. Mr. Johnson carries on general farming and raises considerable stock, including Chester White hogs and Shorthorn cattle. In politics he is a Republican, and in 1900 was elected trustee of the township, and he has admirably filled that office. Like his people, he is a member of the Society of Friends. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging at Carmel, and he is a member of the M. W. A., also at Carmel. All that he owns has been made by his own efforts, including an interest in a 3,100 acre ranch in Tunica county, Miss., on the delta of the Mississippi river, which is very valuable, and he is universally respected by a wide circle of acquaintances.

SOBISKI BUTLER, whose well-directed labor has resulted in the acquisition of a good farm and an ample competency, was born in Jennings county, Ind., March 6, 1852, son of Phineas and Lousiana (Scott) Butler. The Butlers are of English extraction.

Sidney Butler, grandfather of Sobiski, was a farmer who came to Jennings county, Ind., at a very early day, and died there. The maternal grandfather was Aaron Scott, of Kentucky, born in 1800, and died in 1876. He was a farmer who became one of the first settlers in Indiana.

Phineas Butler was born in New York in 1828, and his wife was born in 1827. They had eight children. Calidona married S. M. Morrison, a carpenter and farmer, and they live in Clay county, Ill.; R. B. is deceased; Sobiski; Alferetta married a Mr. Hord, and lives in Clay county, Ill.; Milton married Kate Brittingham, and is in the railroad service of the B. & O. road, having his home at North Vernon; Oliva married B. F. McClellan, a carpenter at Paris Crossing, Ind.; Olive married Henry Hord, and both are now deceased; Charles P. married a Miss Willson, and is a carpenter, residing at No. 1227 West Thirtieth street, Indianapolis. Phineas Butler, the father, followed farming in the State of Michigan from 1855 to 1862, when, hearing the call of his country, and giving heed to it, he enlisted in Company I, 16th Mich. V. I., and was killed in the Seven Days Battle, otherwise known as McClellan's defeat, June 27, 1862. Until this engagement he had taken a very active part with his regiment, and was a brave and gallant soldier. In political principles he was a Douglas Democrat. His widow survives, living in Jennings county, nearly four score years of age.

Sobiski Butler, eldest son of the family, was carefully educated for the profession of a teacher, taking a course at the Normal school at Danville, for two terms, and for the past twenty years has been one of the most popular teachers of this locality. He began teaching in Jennings county, in 1876, teaching until 1883, and then after a well-deserved rest, in 1884, he removed to Pike township, obtained a school and taught it in conjunction with farming. His long connection with the schools has made him thoroughly conversant with school matters, and in 1894 he was elected a school trustee, and he held the office until 1900, having been elected upon the Republican ticket. The farm of sixty acres, is nearly all under cultivation, and Mr. Butler makes a specialty of raising fruit and trees of all kinds.

On April 13, 1876, Mr. Butler married Mina C. Stewart, daughter of Peter and Elvira (Boyd) Stewart, of Indiana, the latter born at Madison in 1837, daughter of William Boyd, who resided at Madison; she died March 25, 1904. Peter Stewart was born in 1827, son of David Stewart, of Kentucky, and of Irish descent, and he died in 1900. Peter Stewart was a farmer by occupation, and spent the greater portion of his life in Jennings county. His work prospered and he died a wealthy man, owning 400 acres of land, and dealing in stock, shipping to various markets, and selling on the hoof. He fed his stock with the products of his large farm, and his profits were exceedingly large. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart had a family of six children, of whom but one is alive.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler had three children, and the survivors have been carefully educated: W. B., who married Pearl Ballard, and is a farmer on the home place; Carl C., who died young; and Ira, at home. Mr. Butler is a man of domestic habits, who enjoys his home and family. In his profession he has gained a wide-spread reputation for thoroughness and ability in making his pupils think as well as study. Kindly in disposition, a man who commands and retains respect, he is the idol of his pupils. He carries out in his own life the principles he inculcates, and teaches by his practice as well as by his words the great moral lessons without which no child can be thoroughly educated.

WILLIAM RUGENSTEIN, one of the highly respected German-American residents of Indianapolis, comes of an old and honored family of that locality, and was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, Feb. 7, 1857, son of John and Mary (Miller) Rugenstein, also natives of Germany, where they were married. His grandparents, natives of the same locality, both died there at very advanced ages, being each nearly one hundred years old. Their children were: John; and Theodore, of Buffalo, New York.

John Rugenstein, father of William, was born and reared to manhood in Germany, and there remained until his children were born, working as a laboring man. In 1870 he emigrated with his family to America, and arriving at Indianapolis that same year found employment at the rolling mills and later in the Vandalia Railroad shops, where he remained a good many years. He then retired from active work, and died in January, 1898, aged seventy-five years. He was a strong, active man, industrious and upright. In politics he was a Democrat, but he never aspired to public office. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Miller, passed away in 1876. They were both Lutherans in religious faith. Their children were: Fred, who served three years in the army, and was the last of the family to come to America; Sophia, now Mrs. Henry Rugenstein; Charles, the last to emigrate, who settled in Buffalo, and is now a farmer; Anna, now Mrs. F. Keppen; Theodore and William, twins, of whom the former died, leaving two children; Henry, a railroad engineer; Martin, also a railroad engineer; and Lena, now Mrs. August Pash. All are highly respected and well-to-do.

William Rugenstein was fourteen years of age when he came to America. The greater part of his schooling was received in the Fatherland. Here he also attended school for a short time, and first worked as a gardener. Later he worked for Dixon & Pearson at the old Academy of Music for about two years. His next employment was in the shops of the Vandalia Railroad Company, and after serving for a short time as a boy of all work, he fired a pony engine for five years, and during this time studied practical engineering. He then obtained a position with the Belt Railroad, with which he has remained for the past twenty-five years. During his quarter of a century of faithful service Mr. Rugenstein has never missed a day or failed to discharge his full duty. No man on the road is more highly respected than he, and he has given his entire attention to his work. Although a staunch Democrat, he has not lost any time looking for political preferment, believing that his best interests would be served by his attending to his work in hand. Having been reared in the faith of the Lutheran Church, he has never departed therefrom, and he and his wife being members of the South New Jersey street Lutheran Church.

In 1882 Mr. Rugenstein was married to Miss Carria Rafert, a member of an old and honored family of Indianapolis. She was born in that city, daughter of William H. and Philapena (Bloom) Rafert, both natives of Prussia. Mr. Rafert came to Indianapolis about 1847, and his first employment was as a farm hand, but later he worked at Ferguson's Pork House, where he was a meat salter for a good many years. He was next employed in a wholesale house, and was a very popular drayman as long as he was able to do the hard work. During his long life of labor he saved sufficient to take care of him in his old age, and he died respected by all who knew him. After he had worked here a few years he returned to Germany for his sweetheart, married her and brought her to Indianapolis. In politics he was a Democrat, but never aspired to any office. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Lutheran Church, and he died April 17, 1903. His wife survives him, and has been an invalid for many years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Rafert were: Philapena, now Mrs. William Clafin; Carria; William; Mary, widow of E. Wallace, and mother of three children; Charles, a drayman; George, at home with his mother; and Otto, clerking. Mr. and Mrs. Rugenstein have three children, Emma, William and Erwin.

J. H. GENTRY, the leading grocer of Arcadia, Hamilton county, Ind., and one of the representative men of the place, was born at Castleton, Marion county, Ind., Dec. 18, 1850, son of Thomas P. and Paulina (Wright) Gentry, both natives of North Carolina. They came to Indiana at an early day, driving from North Carolina with wagons, and located in Hamilton county, but after a short time went to Marion county, where they took up 160 acres of government land. There they resided until death, the father passing away in 1854, and his widow in 1861. Eight children were born to them, our subject being seventh in the order of birth.

tion, during which time he made the most of the advantages offered, Mr. Gentry worked upon his father's farm, but the young man was ambitious, and in 1870, he came to Arcadia, and started as a clerk for his brother W. B. Gentry. After six years of clerking, he started on the road for the grocery house of Sivers & McBride, and for six years more was their traveling man. About 1882, having acquired capital and experience, Mr. Gentry went into business for himself at Arcadia, and now has the leading grocery house here, carrying at all times a full line of staple, green and fancy groceries, which he offers at prices as low as is consistent with the real merit of the goods. During his residence here Mr. Gentry has erected a handsome home, and owns considerable realty in Arcadia.

In 1874, Mr. Gentry was married to Elizabeth Noble, born in Hamilton county, a daughter of W. F. Noble, a successful farmer. Two children have been born of this union: Mary, who married John Kibler, a resident of Arcadia, in business with Mr. Gentry, and they have one child, Julia; Ernest, who died at the age of twenty-one months. Mr. and Mrs. Gentry are active members of the Methodist Church, and do a great deal of good in this connection. Fraternally, Mr. Gentry is a member of the K. of P., I. O. O. F. and Redmen, and is as popular in these organizations as he is throughout his community.

WILLIAM E. DOWNS, postmaster of Edinburg, Ind., a well-known and influential citizen, was born in Columbus, Ind., May 20, 1866, son of Lewis and Sarah D. (Richardson) Downs.

Mr. Downs was an infant when his parents located in Edinburg, and here he has since resided and become identified with the growth and development of the place. His education was acquired in the public schools and his first business venture was driving a delivery wagon. Later he entered the employ of the Starch Works Company, remaining seven years, going then into the employ of D. R. Webb in the capacity of clerk, and remaining with him for eight years. His reliability resulted in his appointment as postmaster of Edinburg, on March 16, 1898, and since the 16th of the following April he has filled the office, being re-appointed March 15, 1902. Mr. Downs is a popular official, pleasant and obliging and enjoys the esteem and confidence of the community.

On Jan. 19, 1893, Mr. Downs was united in marriage with Miss Miranda E. Hurdle, daughter of James and Prascha (Flint) Hurdle. Two children have been born to this union, Lewis F. and William E. Mr. Downs is identified with the Republican party. His fraternal membership is with Edinburg Lodge, No. 100, F. & A. M.; and Fidelity Lodge, No. 42, K. of P. In 1889 he was elected town clerk of Edinburg and served two years. The pleasant home of the family is on the corner of Main and Campbell streets, which property he owns.

JOHN W. MINTON, for many years one of the leading citizens of Martinsville, who is now retired from activity, was born in Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 19, 1833, son of Ebenezer and Dorcas (Baldwin) Minton, the father a native of Virginia, and the mother of Tennessee. The four surviving children of a family of nine which was born to them, are the following: John; Mary Ann, who married (first) James Fletcher (who died during the Civil War in the army), and, (second) James Nosler (also deceased), and now resides in Gregg township, Morgan county; Thomas, of Martinsville; and Maria, wife of George Portis, of near Brooklyn, Ind. Sarah Jane, deceased, was the wife of the late Jasper Albertson, of Martinsville.

Ebenezer Minton came from Virginia to Indiana in 1849. His father, also Ebenezer, was born in Virginia and served in the Revolutionary War. He was one of the early settlers in Roane county, Tenn., and he died in Knox county, Tenn., when well along in years. His ancestry was French. When the parents of John W. Minton came to Indiana, they first located in Clark county, in 1853 settling in Jefferson township, Morgan county, but in 1876, at the age of seventy-one years, the father was living in Gregg township. He formerly belonged to the Baptist Church, but later both he and wife united with the Methodist Protestant Church. She was a daughter of Jesse Baldwin, a native of Tennessee, and who there reared a large family, and who died in Roane county, Tenn. Mrs. Minton died in 1886, aged eighty-one years.

John W. Minton resided until his sixteenth year, in Roane county, Tenn., and then accompanied his parents to Indiana. He lived at home, in Clark county, the succeeding four years, and one year after the family settled in Morgan county. He then went to Illinois, locating in Union county, near Jonesboro, where he lived until 1859. While residing here Mr. Minton was married, after which event he moved to Anderson county, Kans., and settled near Garnett, where he made his home until 1871. Shortly after locating in Kansas, the Civil War broke out, and on Oct. 10, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, 7th Kans. Cav., and faithfully served his country for more than four years. Much of his service was in the dangerous capacity of scout, but he took part in the battle of Corinth and many skirmishes, entering the army as a private and coming out as sergeant.

After the close of the war he returned to Kansas, but in 1871 he returned to his old home in Morgan county and embarked in a mercantile business in the village of Wilbur, in Gregg township. Here he continued until 1890, when he sold out and moved to Martinsville where he built a livery barn on West Morgan street, which he still owns, and conducted a business there for several years. In 1892 he erected a comfortable and attractive home, on North Wayne street, which he sold in March, 1907, and moved to No. 809 East Morgan street. For the past several years he has been retired. In politics he is a Republican, and prior to settling in Martinsville, he served for six years as county commissioner, and for seven years was trustee of Gregg township. He was also one of the school directors, having always been a man interested in the educational advancement of his locality.

On Aug. 27, 1855, Mr. Minton was married to Miss Mary Norton, a daughter of Joseph and Sophia (Adamson) Norton, and a family of twelve children was born to this union, four sons and eight daughters, namely: Emma, Clyde, Lida and Dolly, all died in early childhood; one child died in infancy; Maria married Henry Bucher, of Mooresville, and has two children, Gertrude (wife of Amos Horton of Waverly) and Guy (a lieutenant in the regular army); Alice married Samuel Hinson, and died at the age of forty-one years, leaving four children, Clifford, Ethel, Eva and John; Delilah married Alonzo Hinson, of Wilbur, and has four children, Myrtle, Iva and Jessie and Josie, twins; Ida first married W. D. Hall, who died in 1915, and she married (second) Thomas

Ellis, and they reside near Magdalena, Old Mexico; Carl, an attorney at Indianapolis, married Rose Knox and they have one child, Ralph; Elbert, who was a civil engineer with the Big Four Railroad and now a stockholder and officer with the LaFayette Engineering Company, lives at Lafayette, Ind., married Betty Butler, and has two children, Joanna and Percy; Lilly, married Benjamin Bryant, of Wilbur, and has four children, Joy, George, Clifford and Chester.

Mr. and Mrs. Minton are active in religious circles at Martinsville and for years have been useful members of the Methodist Church. Almost since his boyhood, has Mr. Minton been a steward and class leader, only resigning these duties two years ago, while Mrs. Minton still continues the beloved class leader she has been so long. In fraternal life Mr. Minton belongs to both Masonic and I. O. O. F. lodges in Martinsville, and to Blankenship Post, G. A. R.

Mrs. Minton, daughter of Joseph and Sophia (Adamson) Norton, comes of pioneer stock and of staunch adherents of Methodism. Her paternal grandfather was a native of Ohio named John Norton. He came as a pioneer to Indiana, and died in Union county, Ill., aged eighty years. He married Mary Bennefield, daughter of Rev. William Bennefield, a Methodist preacher from Ireland, and they had four children. Mrs. Minton's maternal grandparents were Jonathan and Ruth Adamson, the former of whom came from East Virginia to Indiana among the pioneers, when this great State was yet a territory. He died near Muncie, in Delaware county, of old age, leaving a large family. Mrs. Minton's father, Joseph Norton, was a licensed exhorter and class leader; her grandfather was a local preacher and her great-grandfather, William Bennefield, was one of the faithful, self-sacrificing pioneer preachers who went from one sparsely settled community to another, preaching the Word, burying the dead, giving in marriage and baptizing the babes, one of a class to which the country owes much. Mrs. Minton's father was born in Ohio, and came to Indiana in childhood, and her mother came at the age of eight years from Virginia. They married in this State, and in 1840 moved to Illinois, settling near Jonesboro, in Union county, where Mrs. Minton was reared, one of nine children.

Mr. Minton is a strong temperance man, and carries his dislike of stimulants to tobacco. It is his pride that he can say, in advanced age, that he never used the filthy weed or was ever under the influence of strong drink. All through life he has favored those measures which tended to abolish the traffic, and he has lived to see some wonderful changes in public opinion.

C. H. TECKENBROCK, one of the early settlers of the city of Indianapolis, who has seen much of the growth and development of the past half century, was born in 1830 in the Province of Hanover, Germany, in the village of Osnabruck, where he received the usual seven years of common school training. He was reared to farm work by his parents Harmon and Mary Teckenbrock, the former of whom was born in Prussia, the latter in Hanover, Germany. The father fled from his native home in order to escape being impressed into Napoleon's army which swept the country as it passed through, and he drifted into Hanover where he married and settled down on a small farm. Here he reared a family, all of his children being born in the same house. After the death of his wife and the scattering of the elder members of his family, in 1850, with the remainder, he emigrated to America, taking passage on a vessel bound for Baltimore, and after fourteen weeks of travel, arrived at Cincinnati. A few years later he came to Indianapolis and soon after joined his two sons in Illinois, who had preceded him to America in 1847. They were settled on good farms in Massac county, and there he found a comfortable home until his death, at the age of eighty years, in 1868. No business claimed his attention after coming to America, his children gladly contributing to his comfort, and enjoying his pleasure in seeing them respected and successful residents of their communities. He set them an example of honest and upright living, and taught them the value of industry and piety. During life he was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. Of his six children, Henry, who settled in the old country, was the only one who remained there; Fred came to America in 1847, first lived in Cincinnati, then in Dayton and came then to a farm in Massac county, Ill., where he died; Casper's life record was the same; Mary married F. Nieman, settled on a farm in Ohio and there they died; H. W. came with the family in 1850, and is now a resident of Indianapolis; and C. H.

C. H. Teckenbrock passed his twentieth birthday on the ocean, enroute for America. The passage was a tedious one and was not without adventure, the vessel stranding on the coast of Virginia on a sand bar. The captain was able to secure the services of a fishing smack to transport the baggage to Norfolk, Va., and Mr. Teckenbrock along with other passengers who could walk the fifty miles over the sandy roads, finally reached the same city, took passage to Baltimore, went from there to Pittsburg, thence by boat to Cincinnati, finishing up the most eventful fourteen weeks of his life. After reaching that city he engaged in any kind of business which he found to do, for several months and then made his way to Indianapolis where he found employment with Mr. Minsor in the pork packing business. Strong and willing, he soon attracted the attention of his employer, who gave him inside work, where he gave the greatest satisfaction and earned during the season the sum of $1 per day. Realizing that he must save his money, he drew very little of it and when the season of packing closed was paid the amount of $80, and was promised work the next season if he still wished it. His next employment was at the same wages in a brick-yard, and here he was employed until he unfortunately was taken sick, and lost sixteen weeks in this way. The next pork packing season coming on, he again was engaged there, and then carried a hod for a plasterer, later going to work in the old Washington foundry where he learned the boiler-making trade, and later, when the boss boiler-maker died he was again thrown upon his own resources as the business was sold. Mr. Teckenbrock, however, was in no way discouraged, for he knew that plenty of work awaited any one with his brawn and muscle who had his willingness, and he soon became a helper in a blacksmith shop connected with a factory, and being naturally inclined toward mechanics, he picked up the trade without instruction, and could soon do any part of a blacksmith's business.

On Dec. 29, 1852, he secured employment with the Vandalia Railroad as a blacksmith in their shops, and that position he still holds, after a service of over fifty years, during which time men have come and gone, but his services have always been appreciated and well rewarded. His efficiency, as well as his industry and his desire always to do his full duty, and his interest in the work in hand, have won for him the continued confidence and esteem of his employers. Mr. Teckenbrock has been blessed with excellent health in the main and has lost little time. By a provident saving of his earnings and judicious investments he has become possessed of property and has secured a comfortable competency for old age, in the hope of retiring voluntarily from activity to enjoy the fruits of his busy life. He is a most excellent example of what may be accomplished by one who starts out with the same desire to succeed. When he reached Indianapolis, with but fifty cents in his pocket, things did not look very encouraging, but his energy and industry enabled him to soon put himself in the way of earning an honest livelihood. It is a matter of just pride with him that he never was employed at a place in his life where his services would not again have been gladly accepted. He is known as a man of unimpeachable integrity, of honest and upright life, and is one of the justly respected citizens of this city. For a number of years he was a member of the old volunteer fire department, and he was a charter member of the German Orphan Home Society, one of the first trustees, and was active in the construction of the building which has been a blessing to the orphans there sheltered, and is a monument to the benevolence of its incorporators. His fraternal membership has been with Germania Lodge, No. 29, since 1859. His connection with Zion Lutheran Church is so long that he is one of its oldest living members, and he belongs also to the German Pioneer Society. In politics he has always been independent, never desiring political office. With much vividness he recalls the condition of this beautiful city fifty years ago, when the streets were full of mud holes, sidewalks indifferent, plenty of native timber still standing and fields of grain and vegetables and pastures where now are seen some of the stateliest buildings. Where now stands the "New Claypool Hotel," stood an old blacksmith shop in which he doubtless often used the forge, and other notable buildings occupy similar humble sites. It is very interesting to converse with so intelligent a pioneer citizen, and to enjoy with him the wonderful development which has taken place in the past half century and try to imagine what will take place in the next fifty years.

On July 6, 1854, Mr. Teckenbrock was married to Miss Frederika Lindeman, born Aug. 14, 1835, in Hanover, Germany, of an old settled family of Cincinnati, a daughter of Edward and Christina (Bensman) Lindeman, both of whom were of Hanover, where their five children were born. They were emigrants to America in 1850 on the same vessel which brought Mr. Teckenbrock. Mr. Lindeman settled in Cincinnati where he lived forty years, employed in a stone factory. When too old to work, with his wife he moved to Indianapolis and there both died, the wife some fifteen months after her husband, and both were interred in the Crown Hill cemetery. They belonged to a superior class of Germans and were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. Their children were: Caroline, the wife of H. W. Teckenbrock; Fredrika; Mary, who married H. Rodeberg, who died in the Civil War, leaving wife and two daughters; Minnie, Mrs. Fecken, of Cincinnati; and Louisa, Mrs. Charles Smith, of Indianapolis.

A family of four children was born to Mr. Teckenbrock and wife, namely: John H., a painter by trade, late an assistant in the county recorder's office; Emma, who for many years was a fore-woman in a wholesale millinery store, and who died unmarried, July 14, 1888, a worthy daughter and good woman; Kate, Mrs. Harry Landis, of Indianapolis; and William, who, since finishing school has been connected with Griffith Bros. Wholesale Millinery House, and is now one of their valued traveling salesman. The religious connection of the whole family has always been with Zion Lutheran Church.

JEREMIAH RESSLER, formerly postmaster at Hobbs, Ind., and a highly esteemed resident and substantial business man of that place, who is also honored as a veteran of the Civil War, was born June 30, 1847, in Tipton county, Ind., son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Lettsinger) Ressler.

Abraham Ressler was born near Lancaster, Pa., in 1820, and in his native place learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1840 he came to Indiana and opened a blacksmith shop at New Lancaster, Tipton county, building a shop here on two acres of ground given to him for that purpose by Carter Jackson, a pioneer. This was the first blacksmith shop of the village. He was married, three and one-half miles west of New Lancaster, to Elizabeth J. Lettsinger, born in January, 1826, in Nashville, Tenn., daughter of Philip and Susan Lettsinger. For some years after marriage Mr. Ressler worked in his shop, and then purchased eighty acres of land in the woods, which he later sold, then purchasing 160 acres of timber land, which he cleared. For this he received $2,500 in gold, and in 1856 he removed to Minnesota, then a new country. The family were living there during the outbreak of the Sioux Indians and sought refuge in Morristown, but the Indians got no further than New Ulm when the massacre occurred. In 1868 Mr. Ressler returned to Indiana, as he did not like Minnesota, and purchased the old Lettsinger homestead, on which he spent the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1882. He was a member of the M. E. Church, which his widow still attends. He was a strong Union man, and became a Republican early in life, voting for Lincoln and every other Republican candidate for the Presidency. He was one of the best blacksmiths in his section of Tipton county, but was handicapped by having to bring his iron on horseback for twelve miles through the woods. When the family removed to Minnesota the journey was made with two horses and four yoke of oxen, and the trip consumed the entire summer. Mr. Ressler was a man of great determination, and had many sterling traits of character. His children were: Jeremiah, Susan, Ellen F., Nettie M., Ida, Mary J., Emma and Angelina, all of whom lived to grow to maturity.

Jeremiah Ressler received his education in the pioneer schools of New Lancaster, Tipton county, Ind., and Minnesota, and early in life began to learn the blacksmith's trade, blowing the bellows when small, and as soon as big enough striking at the anvil. Later he went to Ohio and spent a short time at farm labor, but when he was nine years of age his father removed to Rice county, Minn., ten miles from Faribault, in which city Jeremiah enlisted at the age of fifteen years, Feb. 14, 1863, as a private of Company H, 3rd Minn. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and he was honorably discharged at Devall, Ark., Sept. 5, 1865, the war having closed. His services were in Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana and Kentucky, and he participated in the battles of Little Rock, Pine Bluff, and the second battle of Franklin, one of the hardest fought in the war. He was on the hard march to the Red River, La., and in many minor engagements and skirmishes, and endured all of the hardships and dangers of the war cheerfully and tirelessly, being, although so young, a brave, faithful soldier. He was never wounded nor taken prisoner, but was in the hospital for one month at Devall Bluff, Ark., in the fall of 1864.

After the war Mr. Ressler returned to Minnesota and hired out as a farm laborer. Returning to Tipton county, Ind., in 1869, as his father had returned to that State, he engaged in farm work with his father, and remained in that county until his marriage, March 26, 1876, to Annie E. Hobbs, born three and one-half miles southeast of the village of Hobbs, Tipton county, Ind., daughter of Levi and Cynthia Hobbs. She died July 10, 1902. Mr. Ressler was married (second) June 28, 1904, to Miss Ella E. Hobbs. After his first marriage Mr. Ressler removed to a ninety-acre farm two miles southeast of Hobbs, on which there was little improvement, but here he made one of the good farms of the locality, ditching it and building good substantial buildings. On this farm he resided until his removal to Hobbs, in February, 1892. He bought a small stock of goods, which he gradually enlarged from time to time, and now owns, besides his farm, which is tenanted, his store building, a residence and a lot in the village. During McKinley's administration he was appointed postmaster, and this position he filled efficiently and well until in the spring of 1906, he resigned, sold out his stock of merchandise, and removed, Aug. 23, 1906, to Oklahoma, on account of failing health. He took a homestead of 160 acres, located in the region called "No Man's Land," and there he and his wife are living, at the present date (Jan. 20, 1908), much improved in health. It is Mr. Ressler's intention later to remove to one of the so-called towns nearby, as there are no towns nearer to his present location than forty-five miles, and it is the same distance to a railroad. The altitude is 4,000 feet and there is rain in winter time, and some snow, but most of the time the sun is very warm and pleasant. He hired fifty acres plowed, and is improving his place. He has retained all of the real estate he ever owned up to the present time. In politics Mr. Ressler is a Republican. He is an ex-member of the G. A. R., Tipton Post, and is connected with the I. O. O. F., of Hobbs, having been treasurer of the lodge since its organization. Mr. Ressler was formerly a member of the Methodist Church, but now attends the Christian Church. He enjoys a honestly won reputation for integrity and fair dealing.

THOMAS HUSSEY, one of the successful farmers and substantial representative citizens of Clay township, Hamilton Co., Ind., was born in Fayette county, Ind., Jan. 13, 1853, son of Joseph and Sarah (Frazer) Hussey, the former of whom was born in 1815, in North Carolina, and the latter in the same State. The paternal ancestors of Thomas Hussey were English, and the maternal Irish.

Thomas Hussey, father of Joseph and grandfather of Thomas, died in North Carolina. He was a first cousin of that great American, Daniel Webster. His two children, Jonathan and Joseph, lived, respectively, to the ages of eighty-six and ninety years.

John Frazer, the maternal grandfather, was a native of North Carolina, and a very early settler in Fayette county, Ind. He married Rachel Beard.

In 1830 Joseph Hussey came to Fayette county, Ind., from North Carolina, and lived there until 1853. At the time of his death he owned 200 acres of land and had previously owned much more. He was an upright, honorable man, a member of the Christian Church, and a strong supporter of the Whig party in earlier days, and later of the Republican party. He married Sarah Frazer, who was born in Indiana when it was yet a territory, being about a year old when it became a State. The ten children born to Joseph Hussey and wife were: John, who gave up his life in defense of his country, falling a victim to the enemy's bullets on the field of Chickamauga, a member of Company F, 10th Ind. V. I.; William, who died in 1902, a farmer in Hamilton county, and who had married Hannah Jessup; Martha, who married Oliver Elliott, a farmer; Mary, who married Martin Carey, a farmer; Elizabeth, who married William Clark, a farmer; Harriet, who married Lewis Saban, a farmer in Illinois; Thomas, mentioned below; Rachel, who married J. W. Jessup, a farmer; Franklin, who died young; and Milton, who married Ella Hoffman, and is a farmer and also engaged in the hardware business at Zionsville, Indiana.

Thomas Hussey has a very fine home in Clay township, an elegant residence and substantial barn and all other buildings. He owns 320 acres of land in Hamilton county, and 640 acres of rich land in the delta of the Mississippi river. He raises Poland-China hogs and Durham cattle, and carries on extensive agricultural operations.

In 1879 Mr. Hussey married Sarepta

Daubenspeck, daughter of Greenbury and Sarah (Hissony) Daubenspeck, old residents of Indiana. Eight children blessed their marriage. In politics Mr. Hussey is a Republican. In 1901 he was elected one of the commissioners of Hamilton county, and in 1902 was re-elected to the same office.

JOSEPH LAFAYETTE HUSTON, a pioneer of Indiana, a veteran of the Civil war and a highly respected citizen and substantial farmer of Green township, Madison county, is a descendant of an old Colonial family, from which General Sam Houston of Texas fame also descended. Mr. Huston was born Dec. 24, 1838, on his present homestead, son of John and Sallie (Kingrey) Huston.

Thomas Huston, grandfather of Joseph L., was born in Virginia, and a tradition in this branch of the family says that his father was a Scotch-Irishman. He came to Indiana from Greenbrier county, Va., and was one of the early pioneers of Union county, settling in the woods about 1819, where he cleared up a large farm, and where he passed his remaining days. His children were: Joseph, William, John, Sallie, Nancy and Betsy.

John Huston, son of Thomas, was born in Greenbrier county, Va., Feb. 15, 1803, and was sixteen years of age when he came with his father to Indiana. He married Sallie Kingrey, born Aug. 13, 1803, in Union county, Ind., daughter of Martin Kingrey, a pioneer of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Huston resided for a time in Union county, and then located, between 1828 and 1832, in Madison county, settling in Green township, on the present Huston homestead. This land is located on a hill southeast of what is now the town of Ingalls, and here he entered eighty acres. The land, at the time of its purchase, was covered with a dense growth of black walnut, poplar, oak, and other native trees of Indiana, giants of the forest, some of them being from four to five feet through, and from sixteen to twenty feet in circumference. John Huston cleared up this farm by hard work, and adding to it from time to time finally became the owner of 300 acres. Some of the original deeds are signed by Andrew Jackson. When he came to Madison county to look up his land Mr. Huston saw the men who were afterward executed at Pendleton for the murder of the Indians engaged in making sugar troughs. In politics Mr. Huston was an old-line Whig, but at the formation of the Republican party joined its ranks. The following record of the children born to John and Sallie Huston is copied from the old family Bible: Mary Ellen, born Aug. 19, 1825; James Templeton, Oct. 12, 1826; Louisa, Jan. 22, 1828; Rachael, Aug. 5, 1829; William S. Clark, March 10, 1831; Thomas W. Scott, Dec. 1, 1832; Tabitha, Dec. 22, 1834; Sarah, Oct. 13, 1836; Rebecca, Nov. 12, 1837; Joseph LaFayette, Dec. 24, 1838; John, June 4, 1840; Lydia, Oct. 30, 1841, and Theodore C., Nov. 26, 1845. John Huston and his wife were members of the Christian Church, in which he was an elder for many years. The ministers of this church held services in his log house, in early times, and it was the home of the itinerant pioneer preacher. John Huston assisted in building the early churches in his neighborhood. He died on his farm Sept. 22, 1874; his wife passed away, April 29, 1864. The death records in the family Bible are as follows: Mary Ellen, Sept. 29, 1846; James Templeton, May 20, 1847; Louisa, Oct. 13, 1837; Rachael, Oct. 16, 1837; William S. Clark, July 6, 1853; Thomas W. Scott, Feb. 24, 1863, a soldier in the Civil war in Tennessee, from lung fever contracted in service; Tabitha (Huston) Stokes, March 23, 1899; John B., Jan. 18, 1854; and Dora (Oberdorf) Huston (wife of Joseph L. Huston), May 17, 1898. John Huston had two sons in the Civil war—our subject and Thomas—the latter of whom died as above recorded. He was a member of Company B, 12th Ind. V. I., in the three years service, and was a participant in many battles.

Joseph LaFayette Huston was born in a log house on the old Huston homestead, and was reared among the pioneers of Indiana. He can well remember the scenes and incidents of the early days, and that his father's old residence was hewed out of poplar logs and was two stories high, and also that the first home on the farm was a log cabin. He attended school in a log cabin, with a puncheon floor and a writing desk, split out of a log, extending along the wall, into which pins were driven for its support. The seats were also of puncheons, and it was here that he learned his "three R's—reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic." Here he gained the common pioneer education, attending school for three months during the winters and working on the farm in summers. He was reared to farm work and inured to the hard life of a pioneer, such as clearing new fields from the timber and breaking new ground.

On Aug. 20, 1861, at Indianapolis, when twenty-two years old, Mr. Huston enlisted in the Civil war as a private in Captain Vanderwenter's Company K, 8th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged Sept. 29, 1864. He took part in the following battles: Port Gibson, Miss.; first battle at Jackson, Miss.; Champion Hills, Miss.; Big Black River, Miss.; Vicksburg, Miss., where he took part in a charge; second battle of Jackson, Miss.; Mustang Island, Texas; Fort Esperanza, Texas; Austin, Texas; Baton Rouge, La.; Carrion Crow Bayou, La.; and Atchafalaya, La. He was also in Banks' expedition up the Red river and in a number of small battles and skirmishes. He was never wounded or taken prisoner, and was sick in the hospital but two weeks, which time, with the exception of once when he was sick with lung fever at Syracuse, Mo., when he was cared for at a private house and his father came all the way from home to nurse him, was the only time he was absent from his regiment. He was a gallant, brave and faithful soldier, and always did his duty as such, cheerfully and promptly.

After the war Mr. Huston returned to his home, where he was married March 25, 1875, to Dora Oberdorf, born in Ohio, daughter of William Henry and Elizabeth (Hart) Oberdorf, and to this union, two children were born: Leroy C., born May 7, 1883; and Merle, born Dec. 25, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Huston were members of the Christian Church. He was one of the original Republicans, and cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln both times, also voting for every Republican Presidential candidate since. Mr. Huston remained on the home farm and bought out the shares of the other heirs of the estate. He owns 195 acres in his home farm, and sixty-five acres adjoining. In 1888 he built a substantial two-story residence, and finished the sitting room with black walnut wainscoating taken from his father's old house, an interesting relic of the pioneer days that have passed away forever.

Uncle Joe Huston, as he is familiarly called, has hosts of friends and no enemies. He is a typical representative of the American pioneer, a plain practical farmer. He served his country faithfully as a soldier when his services were needed, and as a citizen his record is untarnished. He has passed all his life in this community, where everyone knows him as a straightforward, honest man, of kindly heart and gentle disposition.

CARLETON CALVIN PRITCHARD was born in Wilmington, Ohio, Oct. 17, 1870, son of Calvin and Anna (Pyle) Pritchard. His grandfather, William Pritchard, was born in North Carolina of English descent, and early settled at Raysville, near Knightstown, Ind., where he followed an agricultural career. He also engaged in tanning. His family consisted of three sons and one daughter.

Calvin Pritchard was a minister in the Society of Friends, and the greater part of his life was passed in Indiana, his native State. For twelve years he was editor of the Christian Worker in Chicago, and for another period of twelve years was pastor of a church in Indianapolis. He had pastorates in several Indiana towns, and at the time of his death was engaged at Kokomo, dying there in 1896, when over sixty years old, having served in that city a number of years. Municipal government was a subject in which he took an active interest, and he was a good worker in behalf of all reform movements. His first wife, Anna Pyle, was born in Ohio, and died in 1871, at the age of thirty-four years. They were the parents of four children: Dr. William, of Cincinnati; Edwin, a commercial traveler, of Chicago; Clifford, a civil engineer at Leavenworth, Kans.; and Carleton Calvin, twin to Clifford. Calvin Pritchard married for his second wife, Miss Esther Tuttle, who distinguished herself as a writer and public speaker, being very active in church work. Her home is still in Kokomo.

William Pyle, the maternal grandfather of Carleton C. Pritchard, was born in North Carolina, and came of English lineage. He early came to Clinton county, Ohio, where he engaged in both farming and milling. His attention was mostly given to milling, although he owned several large farms. In his active years he was a man of prominence in the county, and occupied at one time or another, several county offices, including the important position of county commissioner. A family of nine children was reared by him, and his death came in Ohio, in 1876, when he was past eighty-one years of age.

Carleton C. Pritchard was reared by an 1871 until he was grown to maturity. His preliminary education was secured at the district school, and he was graduated in 1893 from Earlham College, at Richmond, Ind. For about a year he taught school while pursuing the study of law, after which he was interested in a large stock farm in Ohio until 1896, continuing his law studies in the meantime. In January, 1897, Mr. Pritchard came to Indianapolis to enter into a partnership with W. W. Hubbard, of Indianapolis, the two engaging in farming and mercantile pursuits until 1900. In August of that year Mr. Pritchard was nominated by the Republicans for representative to the General Assembly, and he was elected. He was admitted to the Bar Dec. 1, 1900, and formed a partnership with Mr. Hubbard under the firm name of Hubbard & Pritchard, and almost immediately entered into a large and complimentary practice.

Mr. Pritchard was married Jan. 25, 1900, to Miss Leona Swails, daughter of J. Wesley and Martha (Fitzgerald) Swails. They have one daughter, Leona. Mr. Pritchard is a member of the Friends Society, and his wife of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of Pleasant Lodge, No. 34, F. & A. M., the Shelbyville Lodge of Elks, and the Acton Knights of Pythias. His present home is at Acton, where he has a fine residence, and where for some years he was engaged in business. His only official position has been that of representative, and the bill creating the position of oil inspector was written and pressed to a passage by him. In Acton he owns considerable real estate and town property, as well as stock in several corporations. He is vice-president and a director of the Acton Telephone Company, and is also vice-president and attorney for the Consolidated Feed & Fuel Company of Indianapolis.

Mr. Pritchard began with nothing, and has made his own way to a very creditable standing in the business and professional world. For several years he handled cattle on a considerable scale.

J. Wesley Swails is a lawyer and merchant at Acton. When he was seventeen he enlisted in the Union army and lost his hearing while at the front. His wife is a great-granddaughter of William Ward, an early pastor of Plymouth Colony, and an ancestor of Henry Ward Beecher and Harriet Beecher Stowe.

HOWARD. The Howard family, of which Mrs. May Howard May, of Indianapolis, is a descendant, has been located on this side of the Atlantic from the time of the Revolutionary war, in which Mrs. May's first American ancestor of the Howard name took part, giving up his life in that conflict.

There is some dispute as to whether this emigrant ancestor was named John or William. He was born on the border of Scotland, or England, and was related to the same stock as was the late Queen Victoria. Coming to the New World he married in New York State, Mary Hannah, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland. He served in the Revolutionary war, it is said, under Washington, and was killed in battle, supposedly at Cowpens. The widow with her three children, William, John and Helen, moved to near Good Hope burying-ground in Virginia, near the Pateposo river. The daughter, Helen, married a sea captain named Nevar, and went to Paris. William left home when twelve years old, was a jockey at Long Branch in the year 1780, and eventually established a famous race-course and betting house on the old Natchez and New Orleans pike. He visited his brother, Major John Howard, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., in the early years of the nineteenth century. William Howard was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving in the siege of New Orleans with General Jackson—was one of the twelve picket men. John Howard, later known as Major John Howard, the other son of the emigrant ancestor, was the grandfather of Mrs. May Howard May.

Major John Howard married Hannah Daniel, who was born in Virginia, near Winchester, Nov. 15, 1796, daughter of John and Susannah (Quaintance) Daniel, natives of Pennsylvania, the former born Dec. 26, 1747, the latter July 16, 1752, on the Brandywine, near Chadd's Ford, in Chester county. Her father, George Quaintance, was killed at the battle of the Brandywine, which his daughter, Susannah (later Mrs. Daniel) witnessed. The Daniels moved from Pennsylvania to Virginia, and thence in 1812 to Dearborn county, Ind., a district then on the frontier of civilization.

That John Howard was one of the men who shaped progress in the early days of Indiana may be inferred from the following, taken from the "History of Dearborn and Ohio counties, Indiana":

"In the second division we have referred to Major John Howard, who came to this county with the Reeses, Daniels, Sanks, etc., long before the war of 1812. Mr. Howard rendered good service on the frontier. He was a member of a company under Captain Sortwell that marched through the then wilderness country as far north as Indianapolis and returned through the eastern part of the State. Mr. Howard took the contract for clearing part of the State road from Lawrenceburg to Madison, which ran over the hills, crossing the divide between Wilson and North Hogan creeks, past Wymand's farm, then to Wilmington, down the hill to Lindsay's, thence over the divide between South Hogan to Laughery. This was necessary to avoid the mouths of the creeks where fords there were none. But now you can go to Hartford without climbing the hill. Mr. Howard was a peculiar man, but that peculiarity never led him to injure others. He spent much of his time in teaching school, and many of those of the present day (1885) will remember him as the kind and attentive instructor. The name was worthily represented in the ranks of those who volunteered to do battle to save the country which their fathers had fought to establish. His widow still remains (1885) and though enfeebled by the weight of many winters her memory is good; and she tells many a story of pioneer life."

MONTGOMERY CLAY HOWARD, son of Major John Howard, and father of Mrs. May Howard May, was born Sept 15, 1830, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., and died at Rushville, Ind., June 16, 1866. From 1852 to 1861 he was engaged as a pilot on the lower Mississippi and Red rivers, giving up this work to enter the Union service as a soldier in the Civil war, being first enrolled April 18, 1861. Under that enlistment he served three months, being discharged in August, 1861, at the end of his term, during which he was first sergeant of Company D, 7th Indiana Infantry, Capt. John F. Cheeks. He took part in the battles of Carrick's Ford and Phillippi, and he brought home the epaulets of the first Confederate general who fell in the war, General Garnet; Mrs. May now counts them among her treasures. On April 25, 1862, Mr. Howard again enlisted, this time in Company F, 52d Indiana V. I., which regiment he helped organize and was made sergeant major because of his service and knowledge of military tactics, and for Bravery at Fort Donelson was promoted to first lieutenant. He was commissioned captain by Governor Morton, Jan. 20, 1863, on the resignation of Captain Ross. He served until the close of the war, after which he was offered a captaincy in the regular army, which, however, he declined. His company, known as the "Andersonville Invincibles," at Fort Howard, in 1863, presented him a sword, in expression of their good will toward him and their appreciation of his kindly consideration for their welfare. The following account of the presentation will be of interest to many:

"The enlisted men of the 'Andersonville Invincibles,' Company F, 52d Indiana, Col. Wolf's regiment, now stationed at Fort Pillow, recently presented their captain, Montgomery Clay Howard, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., a magnificent sword. When the 52d left here for the field the Captain was sergeant major. Shortly after the battle of Fort Donelson he was promoted to first lieutenant of Company F; and about a year ago to the captaincy. Below we give our readers both the presentation speech and Captain Howard's response, the former delivered by Private Samuel Lowry, Company F, 52d regiment, Indiana Volunteers: 'Captain Howard: Permit me, sir, to state to you that I am instructed by the enlisted members of your company to inform you that they have purchased a splendid sword and paraphernalia for the purpose of presenting it to you, in consideration of the kind regard and esteem which they entertain for you as a brave officer and a patriotic soldier. I am instructed also to say to you that, in presenting to you this token of our esteem, we do sincerely believe that we are entrusting it in the hands of an officer who will never disgrace it, an officer who will wield it on the battle field with honor to himself and the brave men who have thought proper to make this demonstration of esteem toward you. We ask you, on our part, to unsheathe it only in defense of your country, your life and your property. There were some who came out in this company, as brave and buoyant, perhaps, as any who stand here today, to defend their country's rights. Brave men, their dust is now slumbering in those Southern climes, their places are vacant in our ranks; they sleep in death and hear of wars no more. I thought it proper on this occasion to pass this tribute of respect, in honor of their sleeping dust. In all probability, before this sanguinary war shall terminate, or our term of service expire, some of us standing here to-day may sleep that sleep that knows no waking, for such are the vicissitudes of war. But I hope that we may all be so fortunate as to return to our respective homes to meet our families, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and former associates; and we hope that our brave captain may return with the survivors, to meet his aged father and mother, brothers, sisters and his friends; and when peace is restored to this once glorious but now almost distracted country, when we separate and clothe ourselves in the habiliments of citizens, then look upon this sword and remember its brave donors. And should we ever be so fortunate as to meet again, I hope that we shall meet with feelings fraught with fraternal love. I now present to you this sword, Captain Howard, asking you to receive it as an emblem of the respect they entertain for you, both in a military and private capacity. May the Great Commander in Chief of Heaven and Earth conduct you safely through this bloody and sanguinary war, is our sincere desire.

"Gentlemen and Soldiers: You all expect from me a speech on this occasion. Well, I don't like long speeches. I believe in the old adage, 'The shorter the council the surer of success.'" But on this occasion I will express my thoughts and feeling to you, my brave men who stand around me, men who have been tried on the field of battle and never flinched. You have stood before the cannon that vomited forth shot and shell which caused many to bite the dust, and still you were firm; this is not much but this you have done. I have marched with you under the searching rays of the Southern sun and through the dismal swamps and woods, when at night we would lie down to sleep with no covering over us except the blue canopy of heaven. But such is the soldier's life. He is serving the best government the sun ever shone upon. You have today presented me with a sword of pure Damascus steel, beautifully wrought, and I say to you it is a priceless gift. May this arm of mine wither and this body rot without covering, as all cowards should, if ever I disgrace it. The blade is very bright, but I will cover it red with any rebel's blood, that may chance to come in my way. This is the first present that I have ever received which has a double value to me. These moments take me back to days gone by, when we hunted down the guerrillas in West Tennessee and Arkansas; I am reminded of a fierce charge the guerrillas, with three men to our one, made on us near Durhamville, Tenn., but a few volleys from our "Enfields" scattered them like chaff before the wind, and they fled, satisfied that the task that they had undertaken was more than they could accomplish. During the last year we have been doing garrison duty, but the earthworks and huge cannon that are visible show that we have not been idle; and orders from our brave Colonel tell us that there has been no lack of vigilance on our part to strengthen our position and to give the enemy a warm reception, should he be so bold as to attack us. Fellow soldiers, for this manifestation of your good will accept my sincere thanks."

One mile south of Fort Pillow is Fort Howard, built by Captain Howard and his men after Fort Pillow was taken by the North. The largest gun was nick-named "Mollie" after the Captain's wife. Fort Howard still stands, a monument to past glories and rights bought with the sacrifice of life's blood. The cannon "Mollie" is now situated at Covington, Tennessee.

Captain Howard married Mary J. Van Horne Sloan, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Van Horne) Sloan, and to their union came one child, May, born May 11, 1865. As previously noted Captain Howard died June 17, 1866.

In January, 1872, at Rushville, Ind., Mrs. Mary Van Horne (Sloan) Howard, widow of Montgomery Clay Howard, was married to Alvin B. Hinchman, a farmer of Rushville, where he was born Jan. 30, 1837. To this union were born twin children, Leonidas Clay and Leona, on Dec. 22, 1873. The daughter lives in Rushville with her parents. The son graduated from the high school in Rushville and from Rushville Academy, doing such good work that he received scholarships to Butler and Wabash Colleges. He received an appointment to Purdue, there being but two appointments granted by the commissioners from Wayne county, and graduated from that institution in 1894, having taken the course in pharmacy: He came directly to Indianapolis, where he has been engaged at his profession ever since, gaining a reputation as one of the most reliable and competent prescription clerks in the city. He now owns a drug store at the corner of Twenty-seventh street and College avenue. He is a prominent Knight Templar Mason, and a member of Phoenix Lodge, Rushville Chapter, Rushville Council and Rushville Commandery, and also belongs to the order of Red Men. On Aug. 27, 1907, he was married to Miss Pearl Bear, a member of one of the oldest families of Madison, Indiana.

The Hinchman family came from England in the seventeenth century, during the reign of the Calverts, long before the Revolutionary war. Alvin B. Hinchman is a grandson of John Hinchman, a native of Maryland, who moved with his parents to Monroe county, Va., when fourteen years old. He married Sarah Vinson, born in Shenandoah county, Va. Their son, James Hinchman, was born Jan. 24, 1800, in Monroe county, Va., and on April 11, 1822, was married there to Nancy Nelson Nickell, who was born in Monroe county, Sept. 5, 1804. The year of their marriage they came to Indiana, making the journey by wagon and horseback, Mr. Hinchman riding a horse all the way, while his wife rode in the wagon. They settled in Rushville, where their son, Alvin B. Hinchman, still resides. Upon his arrival here Mr. Hinchman had but $108, but he afterward became quite well-to-do, at one time holding deeds to 5,000 acres of land. Mrs. Nancy Nelson (Nickell) Hinchman was the daughter of George and Margaret (Nelson) Nickell, the latter a daughter of James Nelson, who was a descendant of Thomas Nelson, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Through her mother Mrs. May is connected with old Knickerbocker stock of New York. A brief review of her maternal ancestry is given herewith:

Cornelius Janson Van Horne was one of the first emigrants from Amsterdam, Holland, in 1657. He was one of the original burgo-masters of New Amsterdam in the New Netherlands, now New York City, was a trader and quite wealthy. His home was on "The Wall." He married Ann Marie Jansen, Oct. 4, 1659, and had several children. One son, Gerrit Van Horne, baptized in New York Dec. 17, 1671, married Elsie Provost, July 2, 1693. Five children were born to them. Of this family, Cornelius, born in 1695, moved to New Jersey in 1729. He was made captain of a Jersey Military company and led them in the expedition against Canada in 1737. He married three times, his first wife being Catherine Cox, who lived but six months after their birth of their son, Thomas, born in 1722. This Thomas Van Horne inherited the vast estate in New Jersey. He married Jane Ten Eyck, in 1748, and eight children were born to them. Cornelius Van Horne, son of Thomas, born in 1750, in New Jersey, emigrated to Meadville, Pa. He married Sarah Elizabeth Dunn, and their oldest daughter, Elizabeth Van Horne, married Samuel Sloan in 1811. Twelve children were born to them, of whom George W. Sloan, born in 1815, married Lemty Simons. Their third child, Mary J. Van Horne Sloan, married Capt. Montgomery Howard, and by this union there was one child, May Howard, born May 11, 1865, who married Fred Eldad May, May 2, 1895.

The original written biography of the Van Hornes is owned by one Cornelius Van Horne, of Seattle, Wash. The Van Horne and Ten Eyck families are the original families of those names, made famous by Washington Irving in his Knickerbocker Tales of New York. The original house called "The house of the four chimneys," described by Irving in the stories mentioned, was built by the Van Horne family in 1801, at Communipah, and is still standing. General Washington used the house at Morristown as his headquarters, and appointed Abraham Van Horne, brother of Cornelius, forage master. From this Abraham descended Sir William Van Horne, now of Montreal, Canada, whom Queen Victoria knighted. Cornelius Van Horne served many times in the Revolutionary war. His first service was under Colonel Plunkett in 1775. He then served under Colonel Mark Thompson, stationed at Amboy, and could see the Hessians on Staten Island. He was then elected lieutenant and stationed at Elizabethtown, under the command of Capt. John Petrys. He was the officer at the Ferry-house when the British flag was sent over. He also served as captain in several expeditions. In 1769 Governor Penn held his Indian treaty council, appointing Charles Stewart surveyor; he was assisted by Thomas Van Horne, father of Cornelius.

Mrs. May Howard May, daughter of Capt. Montgomery Clay Howard and Mary J. Van Horne (Sloan), was born in Rushville, Ind. Mrs. May received a fine education, which was begun in Rushville; she attended Hamilton Female College two years, the school of Lexington, Ky., where she studied music and painting, and eventually the College of Music in Cincinnati, for two years, after which she returned home. Before long, however, she went to Denver, where she remained three years; coming home at the end of that time she married William Voorhees Loder, of Cincinnati, a member of an old and prominent family of that city. Her second marriage, on May 12, 1895, was to Mr. May, whom she survives. Mrs. May is not only proficient in music, but she has also been successful as a writer of verse, many of her productions appearing in the leading papers of the country. She resides at No. 1015 Park avenue, Indianapolis.

FRED ELDAID MAY, late of Indianapolis, was a native of Mancelona, Mich., born March 6, 1865, and at the time of his death, which occurred Sept. 17, 1901, was serving as special inspector of engines on the Pennsylvania railroad. He was killed while engaged in the performance of his duties, and was buried the same day and hour the late President McKinley was laid to rest.

Mr. May came of fine American ancestry, being the great-grandson of Sylvester and Jemima (Arms) May, whose son, Eldad May, married Elsie Gilbert, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Salsbury) Gilbert, of Cayuga county, N. Y. William J. May, son of Eldad, was born in 1830, at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and married Lydia Ann Durkee, who was born in 1836, in Fenner Hill, N. Y., and died in 1900. She was the daughter of George and Mary Ann (Squire) Durkee, both of whom were born in 1814, the former in Connecticut, the latter in New York. The mother of Mrs. Mary Ann (Squire) Durkee was Ann (Lyon) Squire, whose father and his brother, Dagett Lyon, fought with Ethan Allen at the taking of Fort Ticonderoga during the Revolutionary war. Through his mother Mr. May was thus a cousin to the famous manufacturing family of Durkees.

JAMES L. WEBB, one of six brothers who served in the Civil war, is believed to be the youngest soldier to enlist as an infantryman from the State of Indiana. He was born near Connorsville, Fayette Co., Ind., April 21, 1849, son of William and Rebecca (Young) Webb.

The Webb family is of old colonial Maryland stock, and the Youngs are of English descent of the same State. William Webb, the grandfather of James L., was a soldier in the War of 1812, and with wife Mary Cloud, of Maryland, removed, soon after marriage, to Indiana, settling as a pioneer in Fayette county, in the early settlement of the State, where he cleared up a farm of 160 acres from the woods. He became the father of the following children: James, Calvin, Newton, William, Lewis, Mary and Nancy. William Webb lived to be nearly ninety years old, his wife living to about the same age, and they both died in the faith of the Christian Church, of which they were early members.

William Webb, the father of James L., was born in Maryland, in 1811. He settled near Connorsville, Fayette Co., Ind., and first bought eighty acres of land, which he cleared from the woods, and by his thrift and industry added forty acres more, making his farm an excellent tract of land. Here he died at the age of sixty-two years. He was twice married, and by his wife Rebecca Bennett had these children: William N., Jefferson, John L., and three daughters who died young. His wife Rebecca Young died at the age of thirty-three years, leaving three children, Charles F., Jesse F. and James L. All six of Mr. Webb's Sons served in the Civil war. Charles, Jesse and William were in the 36th Ind. V. I., in the three years service; James was in Hancock's veteran corps, where he served one year; and John L. and Jefferson were in the 124th Ind. V. I., in the three years service, in which Jefferson died. All of the brothers took an active part in the war, and were in many battles. Charles Webb was wounded at the battle of Stone River, and his brother Jesse F., who was in the same battle, worn out with exhaustion, lay under the cannon and slept during the heavy cannonading.

James L. Webb was reared on the farm and secured the usual common school education of his day. He was reared a farmer boy, and at the age of fourteen years and nearly ten months he enlisted at Connorsville, Ind., in January, 1864, as a private in Company D, 147th Ind. V. I., to serve one year or during the war. Although only five feet, five inches high, and weighing but ninety-five pounds, the lad stood all the hardships of a soldier's life, and did his duty as a soldier cheerfully and well. He served until honorably discharged at Harper's Ferry, Aug. 5, 1865, the war having closed. He served in Maryland and Virginia, being with the Army of the Potomac, and was in several skirmishes and raids in Maryland. Mr. Webb's family is probably the only one in Indiana which sent six sons to the front, and four of these died from the effects of army life, namely: Charles F., Jesse F., John L. and Jefferson. After the war Mr. Webb returned home and attended the district school for one year, and then learned the blacksmith's trade, at which he worked for twenty-seven years. He worked three years in Connersville and located in Anderson in 1867.

Mr. Webb was married March 17, 1872, in Anderson, to Sarah E. Cather, born in Anderson, Ind., Sept. 17, 1850, daughter of Robert Cather. Robert Cather was a pioneer settler on a farm of 117 acres near Anderson, which farm he had cleared from the woods. He had the following children: Lorenzo; John, a soldier in an Indiana regiment in the Civil war; Charles; Oliver; Richard; William; Sarah; Mattie, Belle and M——. Mr. and Mrs. Webb are the parents of the following children: Mary M., Charles L., Jessie B., Robert W., James B., Frederick B., Margaret H. and Oliver K.

For a time Mr. Webb conducted a blacksmith shop on West Eighth street, Anderson, and afterwards removed his business to Moss Island Mill, where he remained for a number of years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Webb are members of the U. B. Church, and for a number of years Mr. Webb was president of the Young People's Church Union. In politics he is a stanch Republican, casting his first Presidential vote for U. S. Grant, when he ran for his second term. Fraternally he affiliates with the Red Men of Anderson, in which he is past sachen, and is a member of the Grand Commandery of the State. He is an honored member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson. He is a highly respected citizen of Anderson and is engaged in real estate dealing, in connection with dealing in heavy machinery. Throughout his life he has been an industrious, straightforward man, and aided by his most excellent wife has raised a large family of children.

This record well illustrates the patriotism of the Indiana pioneer families. Few hesitated when the call came and almost every family had some representative in the war. Sometimes it was the only son of a widowed mother who signed the enlistment roll and went South to sleep his last sleep on a Southern battlefield; and sometimes all the sons were swept away on the battlefield or died in the hospital. Many others returned with shattered health, and the long roll call has been sounded continuously from the peace of Appomattox.

JAMES WHEELER HUDSON, who resides at No. 1221 Union street, Indianapolis, has been a resident of that city since 1865. He was born in Seneca county, Ohio, in 1826, son of George M. and Elizabeth (Wheeler) Hudson, the former a native of Philadelphia, of Irish extraction, and the latter of Kentucky, of Pennsylvania-Dutch ancestry.

George M. Hudson was a son of James Hudson, a leading man in the city of Philadelphia, where he died. The maternal grandfather of James W. Hudson was Thomas Wheeler, who settled in Kentucky at an early day, and from there removed to Ross county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm, and on it made his home until his death. To him and his wife were born quite a numerous family of children.

George M. Hudson lived for a time on the Ross county farm, and then became a resident of Seneca county, Ohio, and was living in Cincinnati at the time of his death. His first wife died many years prior to his passing away, and he was married a second time.

James Wheeler Hudson removed with his parents from Seneca county to Ross county, and from there to Cincinnati, securing his education at the public schools, and being well prepared for an active life both by sound instruction and by practical training in its art and industry.

Mr. Hudson was married in 1850 to Elizabeth Jane Kelpan, who was born in Cincinnati, Jan. 11, 1823, daughter of Thomas Kelpan. She was reared in her native city, where she lived until she left it in company with her husband. She had two children by a former marriage: James Thomas and Mary Jane.

Mr. Hudson learned the business of street paving and general street making, and was becoming quite successful in it when the War broke out, and presently carried him along with its patriotic inspirations to don the Union blue, and follow the flag in the battle for the life of the nation. He enlisted in the summer of 1862 in Company B, 83rd O. V. I., and was in active service with his regiment down to the battle of Arkansas Post, where he received a gunshot wound in the face, by which the upper jaw bone was so badly injured that it was removed at Adams Block hospital, at Memphis, on Feb. 1, 1863, twenty days after the battle. It should be remarked that his final recovery was due largely to the faithful care of his wife, who arrived at the hospital the day the operation was performed. In order that Mrs. Hudson might remain to nurse her husband, she was commissioned as a nurse, and she devoted herself to the care of her husband so faithfully and well, that he never could have recovered without her loving care. For two months she cared for him at the hospital, and as soon as he was able to leave brought him home. It might be interesting to note that Mrs. Hudson received an honorable discharge from the hospital as a nurse.

When Mr. Hudson was able he received an appointment on the Cincinnati police force, but the business did not please him, and he removed to Hendricks county, Ind., and came to Indianapolis as stated in 1865. From 1867 to 1896 he carried on general street contracting, and was quite successful. He is a well known and highly esteemed citizen. In his political views he is a Republican.

Mr. and Mrs. Hudson are consistent and faithful members of the Methodist Church, and their daily walk and conversation bring no blush to their religious associations. She has been a church member for sixty years, and with her husband commands and retains the respect and esteem of all with whom they have come into contact through these long and busy years.

JOHN F. DUCKWORTH, one of the representative farmers and successful cattle raisers of Morgan county, who owns one of the finest farms in Jefferson township, was born Sept. 26, 1855, in Jefferson township, son of William M. and Mary C. (Stout) Duckworth, both natives of Morgan county. They had a family of twelve children born to them, five sons and seven daughters: John F.; Mary E., wife of David Bothwell; Charles G., of Martinsville; Jasper T., of Martinsville; Thomas H., of Jefferson township; Ida B., wife of Emmet B. Curle, residing near Martinsville; Minnie, wife of Benjamin F. Bain, of Martinsville; Hettie, wife of Jasper Crawford, of Martinsville; Miss Leafy D., of Martinsville; James C., deceased; Pearl B., wife of Clifton Schnaiter, of Martinsville; and Lillie May, deceased.

John Duckworth, paternal grandfather of John F. Duckworth, was a native of Kentucky and a pioneer in Morgan county, Ind., where he entered forty acres of land from the government, the same now owned by his grandson. John Duckworth died Oct. 18, 1867, in Martinsville, aged sixty-four years. He married Mary Quinn, of Tennessee, and they reared a family of eight children, six of these still surviving. The maternal grandfather was John D. Stout, born in Monroe county, who was known as a successful farmer and great hunter. The first wife of Mr. Stout was Ellen Elliott, and his second was Mrs. Ann Dillman, of Bloomington, and he was the father of ten children.

William M. Duckworth, father of John F., lived in Jefferson township all his life, and engaged in farming and trading. He accumulated a large estate, and at the time of his death, Sept. 25, 1887, at the age of fifty-nine years, he owned 1,200 acres of land. His widow survived until Aug. 25, 1889, dying when over fifty-one years of age. They were consistent members of the M. E. Church, South, in which he was steward, trustee and class leader. Mr. Duckworth was a leading Democrat, and in 1876 was elected county commissioner by a majority of seventy, although the county went Republican by a majority of 600, thus showing the effect of his high personal character.

John F. Duckworth has always made his home in Jefferson township. He was educated in the district schools and Spiceland Academy. His occupation has been confined to agricultural lines, farming and stock raising. At the age of twenty-one he rented land and then bought a tract of forty acres, which, with a later purchase of 300 acres, makes a fine farm of 340 acres, all carefully cultivated and well improved. Mr. Duckworth has made a specialty of Percheron Norman horses and Hereford cattle.

On March 20, 1883, Mr. Duckworth was married to Miss Ruhamy Huxley, daughter of Charles and Mary (Spitler) Huxley, both of whom were natives of Ohio, in which State Mrs. Huxley died when her daughter, Mrs. Duckworth, was a child. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Huxley were: Lewis, of near Youngstown, Ohio; Mrs. Duckworth; Henry, of Martinsville, Ind.; and George, who died in 1864. Mr. Huxley married (second) Miss Marietta Stout, and the four children born to this union were: Jesse, deceased; Charles; Lucy, wife of Edwin L. Brown of Martinsville; and Lena May, of Martinsville. Mr. Huxley was a shoemaker by trade. He died in 1878, aged forty-two years. The Huxleys belonged to an old English family which was established at New Haven, Conn., in 1660, lived at Hartford in 1667, moved to Massachusetts and thence to Ohio and Indiana. The great-grandfather of Mrs. Duckworth, Jared Huxley, died at the age of ninety-four years, and his son, Socrates Huxley, born at New Marlboro, Berkshire county, Mass., lived in Mahoning county, Ohio, and died at Ellsworth, aged fifty-nine years.

A family of six children was born to Mr. and Mrs. Duckworth: William A., Richard, Mabel, Guy (died April 22, 1904), Ross Wade, and Hamilton. Mrs. Duckworth is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Duckworth is fraternally connected with Seminolian Tribe, No. 125, Improved Order of Red Men. As a large and successful breeder of fine cattle, Mr. Duckworth's name and fame reach all over the United States, his Hereford cattle, exhibited at the various fairs and places of competition, receiving the highest awards for excellence.

VAN BUREN PEARCY, proprietor of Percy & Son's livery and sales stable and meat market, Martinsville, Morgan county, Ind., was born Sept. 15, 1843, in Johnson county, Ind., son of Henry and Lavinah (Whitesitt) Percy, the former of whom was born in Kentucky, and the latter in Indiana. A family of thirteen children was born to them, eight sons and five daughters, the seven surviving members being: Robert, of Greene township; John, of Miami county; George, of Washington township; Van Buren, of Martinsville; Mary, wife of Eli Thomas, of the same township; Charity, wife of William Adams, of Greene township; and Hiram T., of Washington township.

Henry Percy was a son of Robert and Mary Percy, members of old Kentucky families. Robert Percy came to Indiana as one of the earliest pioneers to Jennings county, and followed both farming and shoemaking, clearing and improving a large farm. At the time of his death he was about fifty years of age. In young manhood he had taken part in the War of 1812. In politics he was a stanch Democrat as his old Pennsylvania Dutch ancestors had been.

Henry Percy accompanied his parents to Jennings county, but later removed to Johnson county where he lived for several years, and then came to Morgan county, settling in Greene township. Here his death took place in 1863, when he was at the age of forty-six. In politics he was identified with the Democratic party. His wife, Lavinah Whitesitt, was a daughter of John Whitesitt, a farmer in Jennings county, Ind., where he died at the age of forty years. In politics he was a Whig. His family was of medium size. Mrs. Percy survived until 1889, dying at the age of sixty-nine years. She belonged to the old school Baptist Church, and was a regular attendant upon religious services, being accompanied by her husband, although he was not a member.

Van Buren Percy was three years old when his parents removed from Johnson to Morgan county, and this section has been his home continuously with the exception of one year spent in Illinois. He remained at home until he was twenty-one, in the meantime obtaining a fair education in the subscription schools, and assisting in the general farm work. His first individual venture was the purchase of a farm of 120 acres of land in Crawford county, Ill., but after one year he sold this property and returned to Morgan county. He purchased a sawmill and operated it for three years, and then resumed farming, renting 600 acres of land, where he passed eight years. Afterward he bought a farm containing 155 acres, in Washington township, where he lived until 1906, when he sold out and established Percy & Son's livery and sales stable, and the Percy & Son meat market, in Martinsville, Indiana.

On Nov. 9, 1864, Mr. Percy married Miss Caroline Hess, daughter of Charles and Louisa (Knipstein) Hess, who died in August, 1895, aged fifty-two years. She was a most worthy member of the M. E. Church. Five sons and two daughters were born to this union, namely: George R., who died aged seventeen years; Charles Henry, farmer in Greene township, who married Iva Avery, and has children, Theresa, Ola, Jesse, Henry, Orville and Ralph; John William, a farmer in Greene township, who married Cora Perry, and has eight children, Earl, Harry, Claude, Inez, Rubie, Kenneth, Mary C. and Perry; Wilfred, a farmer in Greene township, who married Margaret Day (who died in September, 1902), and had children, Caroline, Raymond and Fay; Arnetta, who died at the age of nineteen years; Robert, at home; and one that died in infancy. On April 8, 1896, Mr. Percy married (second) Mrs. Lucy Catherine Davis, widow of Augustus F. Davis, and daughter of Benjamin T. and Elizabeth (Breckenkridge) Gentry.

Benjamin Gentry was a native of Virginia, and his wife Elizabeth of Ohio. They reared a family of five children, two now living, Mrs. Percy and her brother Benjamin Franklin Gentry, of Sycamore, Ind. Mrs. Percy had three half-sisters and two half-brothers, viz.: Lizzie E., wife of Oscar Pickett, of Sycamore; Charles, of Sycamore; Elisha H., who died in April, 1907; Jennie, wife of William Evans, of Kokomo, Ind.; and Leota, wife of D. Jones, of Greentown, Ind. Mr. Gentry was an early settler in Henry county, Ind., and he died in 1880, at Sycamore, aged sixty years. The mother of Mrs. Percy, his third wife, died in 1862. Mr. Gentry was married four times, and had four sets of children. By her first marriage Mrs. Percy had four children, namely: (1) Thomas W., of Anderson, Ind., married Miss Mary Bates, who died leaving one daughter, Mary Catherine. He married (second) Stella Smith, and they have one child. (2) Mabel, married Albert Van Slyke, of Anderson, and they have two children, William Warren and Lilas. (3) Winnie, married Harry Deatline, a farmer of Washington township, Morgan county, and they have two children, Catherine Luverne and Earle. (4) Arville died at the age of ten years.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy are Methodists, belonging to Taylor chapel. In politics he is a Democrat. His reputation in his locality is that of an honest and upright man, and he has always been known as interested in the improvement of his section. For about three years he served as one of the school directors. Both he and wife have a wide circle of friends.

NELDO KLINGENSMITH, one of the prosperous farmers and much respected residents of Pike township, Marion county, owning a fine farm of 114 acres, was born Oct. 22, 1872, son of Oliver and Mary E. (Line) Klingensmith.

Oliver Klingensmith, the father, was born March 16, 1839, in Pike township, and his wife, Mary E. Line, May 5, 1842, in Laporte county, Ind. They had twelve children born to them, namely: Elihu, a resident of Hamilton county; Joseph, deceased; Elizabeth, wife of J. F. Shelber, a farmer of Hamilton county; Sylvester, deceased; Martha; Abigail, deceased; Neldo; Flora, wife of J. O. Hadley, a farmer of Hamilton county; Anna, deceased; Minnie, wife of George A. Dailey, a harness maker, at New Augusta; Oliver, at St. Louis; and Mary F., who still resides at home.

Oliver Klingensmith was an excellent farmer, and he and his son, our subject, have worked hard together to make the present farm the well cultivated piece of property that it is. The father also has engaged in the manufacture of tile and has also operated a saw-mill. He owned 115 acres of land, which he improved very highly, with good buildings. The farm is very productive, and is kept in a high state of cultivation. In politics Mr. Klingensmith is a Democrat, but not very active. In religious views he is a member of the English Lutheran Church, while his wife is a Baptist.

Neldo Klingensmith is now the manager and operator of the home farm, and he carries on a general line of agriculture. He has been very successful with his stock, and raises a great many hogs of the Berkshire and Poland China varieties. He is a thoroughly practical young man, thoroughly interested in his work, and has earned the reputation of being one of the very good farmers of Pike township. Both he and his father are members of the Masonic lodge at New Augusta.

FRANK C. HURLEY, the popular and efficient superintendent of the Columbia Club of Indianapolis, Marion county, comes of a family of Irish extraction, and doubtless owes some of the traits which fit him so admirably for his present position to his strain of Irish blood.

The paternal grandfather was a native of County Cork, Ireland, who came to America and settled at Peoria, Ill. Both he and his wife Anna lived to be well advanced in years. They had a family of ten children, of whom three sons and two daughters are living. The maternal grandfather reached a good old age, dying about 1899, while his wife survived and made her home in Chicago.

James S. and Lucetta (McDermid) Hurley, the parents of Frank C., were both born in Illinois. They became the parents of ten children, six sons and four daughters, of whom five have died. The others are: James C., of Davenport, Iowa; Frank C.; Anna and Mary, both of Davenport, Iowa; and William, of Millersburg, Iowa. The father was a foreman in a wholesale candy factory in Peoria for a number of years, and later was similarly engaged in Chicago. His death occurred in San Antonio, Texas, in 1902, when in his fifty-third year. He had served as a soldier in the Civil war. In politics he was a Democrat. Mrs. Lucetta Hurley passed away at the age of thirty-seven, twelve years before her husband's death. Both were members of the Catholic Church.

Frank C. Hurley was born in Peoria, Ill., Dec. 10, 1877, and passed his childhood and youth there and in Chicago and Davenport. His school days were spent principally in the last city, where he was given a good public school education. When seventeen years old he began his training in his present business, and got his early experience in the Chicago Athletic Club, where he rose from the bottom to be assistant superintendent. With this successful record behind him, Mr. Hurley went in May, 1902, to Indianapolis, to take the entire charge of the Columbia Club of that city, one of the finest political clubs in the United States.

Mr. Hurley was married Nov. 6, 1901, to Mary Regis Stuart, daughter of Charles C. Stuart. Mrs. Hurley is a member of the Catholic Church. They reside at the "Denison Hotel," one of the leading hostelrys of the city. Both are deservedly popular and have a wide circle of friends. In politics Mr. Hurley is a Republican.

EDWIN B. BRIGHAM, M. D., Physio-Medical Physician and Surgeon at No. 150 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, is a native of Moretown, Washington county, Vt., where he was born Oct. 1, 1857, son of Elisha A. and Celia (Baxter) Brigham. Both families came from Great Britain, and early in the history of American institutions became thoroughly identified with the New World.

Elisha A. Brigham was born at Fayston, Vt., Dec. 22, 1821, and his wife, Celia Baxter, whom he wedded June 20, 1849, was born at Moretown, Vt., March 16, 1826. They lived together a happy married life of almost fifty years, and both died in Chippewa, Mecosta county, Mich., where they lived from 1867 until separated by death. She passed to her rest Jan. 17, 1897, and he died in December, 1899. Mr. Brigham owned a mill in Vermont, and was a manufacturer until his removal to Michigan, where he became a farmer. During the Civil war he spent two years in the West assisting in guarding and conveying trains across the Plains. He was a rugged and fearless man, and spent much of this two years in Indian fighting, hunting and trapping. His wife was a lady of superior educational attainments, and of marked refinement. During her girlhood she spent several years in teaching, and after her marriage, and almost up to the day of her death, she was a writer of poems, many of which have become literary gems, showing the trend of public thought and sentiment. Among them is an appeal for the freedom of slaves, written in 1844. This was entitled "An Appeal." Later ones were: "My Native Land," "A Fool's Confession," "I'm Sad at Times," "To a Cousin," "The Admission of Texas," "Fourth of July Song," "Musings by Moonlight," "Weep not for the Dead," "The Secret Urn," "My Brother's Gift," "A Remembrance," "My Mary," "The Christian's Hope," "To Our Absent Brother," "Absent Friend," "Trust Not," "Sing to Me," "No Time to Rust," "The Golden Land," and some hundred other pieces, many of which are very patriotic verses, prepared under the stress and strain of the Civil war, and these are tenderly cherished not only for their faultless composition, but also for their lofty sentiment. To Elisha A. Brigham and his wife were born three sons and one daughter. The latter, Rosa M., was highly accomplished and died at the early age of nineteen years, from over-study and hard literary work; she was an artist of pronounced ability, a trait inherited from her mother. Of the sons, Ziba W. occupies the old paternal home in Michigan; Elisha K. is a prosperous lumberman at Bay View, Mich.; and Dr. Edwin B. is the youngest of the family.

Dr. Edwin B. Brigham spent his early life on the farm, and later was engaged in the lumber trade with his brother. His academic education was acquired in the public schools of Michigan, and he began the study of medicine in 1886 while living on his farm in Michigan. Being well-to-do, for some years after arriving at man's estate, he spent his time in general study without any definite aim at first other than general information. He began the systematic study of medicine in 1890, pursuing his studies at first under a private tutor until 1892, when he entered the Physio-Medical College of Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1895. Since that year he has been an instructor in the College, occupying the position of Demonstrator of Anatomy since 1896. He has especially prepared for the treatment of cancer, and while he carries on a general practice, he has made a specialty of this line. He belongs to the various State and local societies of his school, and is connected with several fraternal and beneficial societies for which he is medical examiner. In his political views he is a strong Prohibitionist, and has been from the beginning a total abstainer from the use of stimulants and narcotics.

Dr. Brigham was married Sept. 27, 1885, at Cascade, Mich., to Miss Nina F. Dennison, a native of Cascade, and a daughter of Henry C. and Helen E. Dennison, now living at Cascade. Mrs. Brigham was educated in the public schools of Grand Rapids, where she completed the high school course, and for several years prior to her marriage was a teacher. To Dr. and Mrs. Brigham have come five children: Fred M., Helen E., Marshal A., Celia N. and Neal Dow, all of whom are living. Dr. Brigham has traveled extensively throughout the United States, particularly in the South. He has never aspired to political office, and takes no active part in public affairs.

PRESTON L. WORRELL, who has a neat and attractive home at No. 1417 Prospect street, Indianapolis, was born in Orleans, Ind., July 6, 1824.

Samuel Worrell, his father, was a soldier in the War of 1812. He was a pioneer in Indiana, and died when Preston L. was but a young child. His widow lived to be ninety-four years old. Preston L. Worrell is one of the family of five children born to his parents, three sons and two daughters: Lorenzo Dow is the oldest member of the family. William Wesley, the second of the brothers, served in the 66th Indiana Volunteer Infantry during the war for the Union, and is now a resident of Mena, Ark.; he is totally blind. The daughters are both deceased.

Preston L. Worrell was the youngest of the sons, and the youngest but one of the family. He learned the cabinet-maker's trade, at which he served an apprenticeship of two years. In 1847 he first married, and this wife died while he was in the army. He enlisted in the 49th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served as principal musician of his regiment, being a natural musician, and highly gifted in that art. In the enlistment and organization of the 24th, 28th, 50th and 49th Indiana Volunteer Infantry regiments Mr. Worrell was attached to the officers of organization, and directed the military music on several occasions. He remained with the army until he was mustered out. An officer of the 33d Indiana Volunteer Infantry pays him a high compliment in his history of that regiment, when he says: "He was a host every day in the camp. On reveille and on tattoo and taps he was divine. * * * The 49th was camped at one time on the top of the mountain, and at nightfall Mr. Worrell would go out on the lofty elevation and play to the ten thousand boys in the amphitheatre below." He is a charter member of the Grand Army Post at Jeffersonville.

Mr. Worrell was mustered out at Vicksburg, and since the war has worked many years for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at their car shops at Indianapolis. Though he retired from the shops and from the employ of the road when he reached the age of seventy-five years, he is still carried on the rolls of the company at full salary.

Mr. Worrell was married, Sept. 23, 1863, to Miss P. J. Shepherd, by whom he has had five children: Francis L., Edward, Charles, Mary and Leo. He has resided at Indianapolis since the establishment of the Pan Handle shops at this point.

SAMUEL A. TOWELL, one of the leading citizens of Anderson, Ind., superintendent of the Anderson Water Works, and an honored veteran of the Civil war, in which great struggle he served as an officer, was born in Chillicothe, Mo., March 31, 1846, son of Samuel and Lydia (Mindenhall) Towell.

The Towell family is an old Colonial Virginia one, of Scotch descent, while the Mindenalls were of English stock, and Friends or Quakers. Samuel A. Towell's mother having died, when he was an infant, he was brought up by Nathaniel Kurshner, a farmer, who brought young Towell to Richmond, Ind., when the latter was but six years old. The boy remained with Mr. Kurshner until his twelfth year, when he went to live with his father, who had come to Indiana about 1857, and married (second) Jane Demintt. He attended the public schools until reaching the age of seventeen years, and during the summer months assisted his father on the farm. In May, 1862, he enlisted in the 17th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and veteranized in Company D, 6th Ind. Cav., as a private, veteranizing with that organization at Pulaski, Tenn., in 1865. He served until honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 15, 1865, his service having covered a period of three years and four months. He was promoted to duty sergeant and a few months later to orderly sergeant, and in May, 1865, received his appointment to the rank of second lieutenant. He served in Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama; was in the first battle of Bull Run, Knoxville, Lookout Mountain and the great Atlanta campaign, during which he was under fire for four months; was wounded in the battle of Shiloh, receiving a wound in the leg which forced him to remain in the hospital at Nashville for three months; rejoined his regiment and took part in the battles of Dalton, Buzzard's Roost, Kenesaw Mountain and Columbia, and was in Sherman's March to the Sea, and during all of his service proved a faithful, brave soldier and efficient officer. The cavalry had much to do in the way of foraging, and while thus engaged took part in a great deal of skirmishing. While in Atlanta Mr. Towell was a member of an expedition to shoot eight Confederates and to capture four others, the names being given, and at the time that his company was mustered out he was with a scouting party in the East Tennessee mountains.

• After the close of the war, in which Mr. Towell has served so faithfully, he returned to Richmond, but a few days later located in Anderson, engaging in the grocery business in September, 1865. In this he continued for about five years, the next fifteen years being spent as a clerk in a hardware store. In 1886 he became chief of the fire department, and in 1891 was made superintendent of the Anderson water works, proving himself a faithful and efficient public official. Since 1895, when the city enlarged its service, Mr. Towell has had exclusive charge of the water works.

On May 27, 1870, Mr. Towell was married in Anderson to Ann M. Hilligoss, born in Madison county, Ind., daughter of Jacob E. and Eliza (Westerfield) Hilligoss, of an old family of Rush county, Ind., of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Towell have had these children: Maud Luella, Chauncey O., Courtland C. and Sammie Bess. In political matters Mr. Towell is a Republican. He and his wife attend the Christian Church. He is a member of Major May Post, G. A. R., in which he is past commander, having also held a number of other offices therein. He is connected with the Red Men of Anderson, and is a Royal Arch Mason. WILLIAM F. GREEN, M. D., one of the leading representatives of the medical profession at Shelbyville, Shelby county, Ind., is a native of Arlington, Rush county, Ind., and a son of Dr. James W. and Mary (Gowdy) Green.

The paternal grandparents of Dr. Green were Lot and Anna (Cooper) Green, pioneers of Rush county, and most estimable people. The Green family is of English descent, and Lot was no exception to the high character the family has always borne. By occupation, he was a farmer, and after an upright life, he died in the early thirties of the nineteenth century.

The maternal grandparents were Adam and Nancy (Oliver) Gowdy, stalwart pioneers of Rush county, Ind., where Adam was a blacksmith and prominent man of his day, serving two terms in the Indiana State legislature. Mr. Gowdy's father, Peter Oliver, an Englishman by birth, was a pioneer of Poplar Plains, Plummers Landing, Ky., and was by occupation a teacher, which avocation he followed until after he had passed his seventieth birthday.

James W. Green, father of William F., was born in Rush county, Ind., Feb. 5, 1825. His boyhood days were spent working upon the farm, and attending the common school of the neighborhood. Later he studied medicine with Dr. Frame, of Rushville, and in 1847, was licensed to practice by the Fifth District Medical Institute, and by the Rush Medical College in Chicago, in 1856. From 1856 to 1886, he was engaged in the practice of his profession at Arlington, Rush county, Ind., and was very successful and popular. On Sept. 1, 1886, he came to Shelbyville to take charge of a large and lucrative practice, which came into his hands on account of the death of his brother, William Frame Green, for many years a leading practitioner of Shelby county, who was graduated from Rush Medical College in 1856. Dr. James W. Green was a member of the Rush County Medical Society; of the State Medical Society, and of the National Medical Association. In politics he was a Republican, but not an office holder. His religious faith was that of the Christian Church.

Dr. William Frame Green was educated in the district and graded schools of Rush county before he started his medical studies, and in 1880 he was graduated from the Louisville Medical College. After graduation, he at once began practice in Shelby county, and since 1891, he has been located at Shelbyville, and has quietly and through his ability, skill and pleasant courteous manner, gained a large and profitable clientele in a general practice. He is painstaking, careful, prompt and efficient in all cases, and is justly regarded as one of the best doctors in the county. He is an intelligent, well-read and studious gentleman, of decided literary tastes, and has spent much time in careful study, being thoroughly informed on matters of interest as well as those pertaining solely to his profession. Of later years, he has given much attention and study to obstetrics and the diseases of children and has met with noted success in these particular branches of his practice.

Dr. Green is examiner for the Prudential and National Life of Vermont, John Hancock and Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance companies, and served four years as State examiner for the Modern Woodmen of America. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen and Knights of Pythias, in which orders he is very popular.

Dr. Green is married and has one son.

W. W. DEMAREE, an honored resident of Johnson county and a descendant of a pioneer family of Indiana, was born Jan. 14, 1827, in Shelby county, Ky., on the farm of his parents, Peter and Mary (Johnston) Demaree, the former of whom was a son of David and Rachel (Brower) Demaree, and David was a son of Samuel and Susan (Brower) Demaree, both of whom were of French Huguenot descent. The founders of this family in America set sail from Amsterdam, a part of a small colony which sought a home across the sea, and they first located at Hackensack, N. J. Later a committee of twelve members was selected to go to Kentucky, and, if possible, select there a site for a settlement. A tract of 10,000 acres was secured, each family occupying 160 acres, and it was upon this property that Samuel Demaree reared his family and died.

David Demaree, son of Samuel, also lived here, married, reared his family, and from all the records, seems to have occupied a very prominent position in his locality, and was certainly a man of affairs, having been County Judge and held other positions. The old home mansion and the water pond still remain as they were in his day. He was noted for his liberality and close attendance upon the services of the Presbyterian Church. The record of his children gives them as follows: Samuel, Jacob, Peter, David, George W., Mercy, Mary, Susan, Rachel and Sarah.

Peter Demaree, son of David and father of W. W., was born and reared in Kentucky, married there and settled on the old homestead upon which he remained until the birth of three children. In the fall of 1827, when W. W. was a babe in arms, he decided to leave the old home and secure some of the fine land of Indiana. Coming to the State he entered land in Franklin township, Johnson county, and later he added to it by purchase until he owned 150 acres, and here built a cabin and began clearing. Hardly was he well started, however, before his cabin was destroyed by fire. The country was but sparsely settled, but the news of the disaster spread and the next day, pioneers from all around came, axe in hand, and with that hearty good will that characterized their every act, remained until a new home was constructed and their unfortunate brother's family was again comfortably housed. This little act teaches its own lesson and stands as a reproach to the selfishness which has crept into the living of today. Mr. Demaree was a man of muscular strength and great industry, and soon was again on the highway to prosperity, and was just as ready to assist a neighbor in trouble as others had been to help him. His prosperity continued and he was able to provide for his family many comforts which others did not enjoy. During the ten years of life which was yet afforded him, he not only made progress in his own affairs, but took a deep interest in political questions, being a staunch Whig, and was one of the promoters of religious sentiment in his neighborhood. He was one of the charter members of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church and was one of the builders of the edifice whose foundations were laid so well that it still stands as a monument to the Christian lives of its founders. In its work he served as elder and through life made it an object of his concern. His view of life was broad-minded and liberal, his constant desire was to help those in need, he fulfilled the command to visit the sick, and when he was called away, in 1837, there seemed no one fit to take his place. His devoted wife survived him five years. She was a daughter of John B. and Ruth (Beckley) Johnston, of Virginia, early settlers of Kentucky, where they married. In 1827 the Johnstons also migrated to Indiana, and John B. became a prominent farmer in Johnson county, where he died at the age of seventy-two years. One son of the Beckleys also came to Indiana. The Johnston children were: Amelia, Mrs. Shuck; Dorcas, Mrs. J. Nelson; Mary, Mrs. Demaree; and John B., one of Hopewell's stanch members. The children of Peter Demaree were: Ruth, Mrs. John List; Rachel, who died young in Kentucky; W. W.; George W., who served in the Rebellion and died from injuries there received, in 1870, leaving one son; and Mercy, Mrs. John Gray, now living at Connersville, Indiana.

W. W. Demaree, as noted before, was brought to Indiana in infancy, and grew up among the pioneers of Johnson county. As long as his parents lived he remained at home, and was then bound out for a term of five years, to a neighboring farmer, Isaac Vannice. With him, Mr. Demaree remained six years or until he was twenty-one, and as the family had then been widely scattered, he took charge of the old home and operated the farm for two years. At the end of this time he married and settled in the old cabin home, buying the interest of one of the heirs, acquiring a tract of eighty-one acres. Mr. Demaree was practical in his farming and soon had placed his land under a good state of cultivation, later adding 100 acres, made many substantial improvements and remained here until 1872, when he accepted a good offer, sold, and came to his present farm.

This property had good soil and good location, but it had been neglected and run down, and when Mr. Demaree took charge of it he realized that he would have more hard work. The original purchase was 160 acres and he added at different times until he aggregated 320 acres. He built fences, dug ditches, put in tiling, was generous in feeding the land with those constituents which the soil needed, and after much hard work of reconstruction in every department, converted it into as good a farm, if not the best, as there is in Johnson county. Mr. Demaree has always been a man of progressive ideas, and was the first farmer to run a threshing machine in his locality, using first the old chaff filler. Keeping up with modern methods, he introduced steam and has now owned and operated a thresher for the past fifty years. He was the purchaser of the first reaper sold in Franklin and was one of the first to buy a binder, and he introduced the first corn planter into Johnson county. Mr. Demaree has always been open minded enough to see the benefits of labor-saving machinery. His life has been one filled with honest hard work, and he has accumulated a competency for his old age. In politics he is a Republican, but only as a supporter, not as an office seeker. Since the age of fourteen he has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and has filled the position of deacon in that body.

The marriage of Mr. Demaree was to Miss Lydia A. Carmine, this most excellent lady being born in January, 1830, in Johnson county, a daughter of Andrew and Nancy (Banty) Carmine, natives of Kentucky who migrated to Indiana and here entered land. By trade Mr. Carmine was a wagon-maker and he successfully followed it in connection with his farming. He was a deacon in Hopewell Presbyterian Church, well known and much respected, and he was the father of this family: Nelson, a carriage-maker, who died at Franklin; Lydia A., who married Mr. Demaree; Mary, Mrs. J. Brown; Peter, in Kansas; Sarah, Mrs. D. Bergin; Alma, Mrs. John McGill; John, who lives in Colorado; and Rachel, who is Mrs. Helms.

The children born to Mr. Demaree and wife were: Clara J. is Mrs. Ransdale, of Kansas; Mattie married J. Smith, a farmer of Johnson county; Mary E. is Mrs. E. Thompson, on the homestead; Olive, Mrs. John Ditters; and Ira and George, farmers in Johnson county. Mr. Demaree has had many blessings in life and some bereavements, one of the latter being the loss of his estimable wife on April 15, 1899. This family is one of the leading ones in Hopewell Church, as well as one of the most highly respected in this portion of Johnson county.

HARRISON THOMAS, one of the large farmers and substantial and representative citizens of Morgan county, whose life has been devoted to the advancement of its agricultural interests, was born April 25, 1852, in Washington township, Morgan county, son of John and Nancy (Maxwell) Thomas, the former of whom was born in Tennessee, of German descent, and the latter in Kentucky.

On both sides of the family Mr. Thomas comes of pioneer ancestry, his paternal grandfather, Peter Thomas, coming as a pioneer to Morgan county from North Carolina, being one of the first to enter land in Washington township. There he died at the age of eighty years. He married Sarah Graves, and they reared a large family. On the maternal side, Grandfather Thomas Maxwell and his wife, Elizabeth Askew came from Kentucky to Morgan county, in the early days, and both died there, leaving many descendants.

John Thomas, father of Harrison, was a child when his parents came to Indiana and he grew to manhood in Washington township. By his own industry he cleared a farm of 400 acres, three miles northeast of Martinsville, on the Indianapolis road, where he lived until 1874, when he retired from farming and moved into the town, where he died in 1892, aged seventy-five years. The mother of Harrison Thomas died in 1858. The second wife of the father was Mrs. Jane King, widow of Joshua King and daughter of Henry Harper. She died in 1892, aged sixty years. The children of the first marriage were: Sarah, wife of John Shearer, of Washington township; Harrison; and a daughter who died in infancy.

Washington township has been the home of Harrison Thomas all his life and he is one of the best-known citizens. His education was secured in the district schools, and as his father's only son, he never left home during his father's life. When the latter moved into Martinsville, he rented the farm and operated it for some years. In 1877 he came to his present home farm, in Section 3, a property inherited by his wife, from her father's estate. It contained 215 acres and thirty additional acres have been added, making 245 in this one farm which is situated two miles southeast of Martinsville and is very finely improved. Mrs. Thomas owns also a farm of 237 acres, located two and one-half miles south of the home place. Mr. Thomas owns 215 acres in Daviess county, Ind., and thus, together, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas possess many acres of some of the most desirable land in Morgan and Daviess counties. They also own 486 acres in Texas, Mr. Thomas owning 186 acres in Harris county, that State, and Mrs. Thomas owning 300 acres in Archer county.

On Oct. 28, 1875, Mr. Thomas was married to Miss Martha Bothwell, daughter of John and Martha (Hines) Bothwell, and they have a family of four children, namely: John, who farms the home place, married Cory Shireman; Harry, now deceased, married Daisy Hanna; William is a bookkeeper at Brownsville, Texas; Miss Jessie resides at home. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, Jessie and William are members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. Thomas has been a life-long Democrat. He was formerly a member of the I. O. O. F.

Mr. and Mrs. Bothwell, parents of Mrs. Thomas, were natives of Ireland. The father was a son of Charles and Mary (Gordon) Bothwell, who was born in Ireland but died in Ohio in old age. The mother was a daughter of William Hines, who was born in Ireland and after coming to the United States, settled in Ohio and then became a pioneer in Jefferson township, Morgan county, Ind., where both he and wife died. When John Bothwell came to America he settled in Pennsylvania and married his first wife there. His second wife, Martha Hines, came from Ohio to Morgan county, and lived near Waverly. John Bothwell was one of the early settlers of the county, was an excellent farmer, accumulated much land, about one thousand acres, in Washington township, where he died in August, 1888, aged eighty-five years. His wife died in February, 1877, aged sixty-six years. Of their nine children, the only survivors are: Martha, wife of Mr. Thomas, and Margaret, wife of Henry Shireman. All these families belong to the best class of citizens of Morgan county, thrifty, law-abiding, reliable and respected people.

STEPHEN DOUGLAS BARNES, a prominent and progressive farmer of Shelby township, Shelby Co., Ind., and a man who has made his own way in life, was born on the farm where he now resides, Nov. 20, 1858, son of Elijah and Mary H. (Gregory) Barnes, both natives of Kentucky.

Vincent Barnes, the grandfather, was a native of Kentucky, and a pioneer of Noble township, Shelby Co., Ind. There he resided until his death, successfully engaged in farming and preaching. His wife, Elvira, bore him the following children: Joel; Jackson; Elijah; Wyatt; and Sarah, wife of Silas Gore.

The maternal grandfather, Joel Gregory, was a native of Kentucky, who became a pioneer of Noble township, Shelby county, cleared and improved a farm, and there died, a most respected citizen.

Elijah Barnes was reared to manhood in Noble township, but about 1845 settled in what is now Shelby township, on the farm now occupied by our subject. This farm he operated very successfully, and in addition to attending to it, he was an extensive dealer in stock for a number of years. His peaceful death occurred upon this farm. His family was as follows: Nancy E., wife of William L. Worland; Jeol; Elvira, wife of Thomas Amos; Missoura, who married Edwin H. Dunn; William B.; Charles M.; Stephen D. and Thomas H.

Stephen Douglas Barnes was brought up upon the homestead, and received a good common school education in the district schools. He has always devoted himself to farming, and made a success of his work. As his name would indicate, he, as was as his father before him, is a strong Democrat, and he has been honored by election to several offices, having been trustee of the village of Shelbyville from 1888 to 1895; was elected commissioner of Shelby county in 1898, and re-elected in 1902 for a second term, and there is no doubt but that his name will appear in connection with offices much higher than these, he being an able, conscientious and trustworthy public official. Fraternally, he is a member of Chillon Lodge, No. 127, K. of P. of Shelbyville; Court of Honor No. 244, same city.

On March 18, 1883, Mr. Barnes was married to Josie, daughter of Park and Mahala (Barlow) Washburn, of Liberty township, Shelby county. One daughter has been born of this union—May, the wife of Burt Ensinger. The Barnes family is one of the most highly esteemed in the township, and Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have many warm personal friends to whom they show a kindly hospitality at their delightful home.

WILLIAM G. DUFF, proprietor of the Greenwood Milling Company, at Greenwood, Ind., was born in St. Etienne, in the French settlement in Canada, March 2, 1858, son of George and Mary (Anderson) Duff, natives of Scotland.

George Duff was a bookkeeper, and emigrated to Canada some time during the forties, and died there in 1860, when still a young man. His wife survives, and is now the wife of Louis Trudeau, of Glengarry, Canada. By her first marriage, William G. Duff was her only child; by her second marriage she had eight children, those now living being: James, John, Elizabeth, Maggie and Mary. Mr. Duff and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. The paternal grandfather died in Scotland at an advanced age. By occupation he was a farmer, and he had a small family. The maternal grandfather, John Anderson, attained the age of near four score years and ten. In younger manhood, he was a tailor, and he became a large landowner. Of his children two are now living: Mrs. Trudeau and James.

William G. Duff was reared in St. Etienne, Canada, and received a common school education in that locality. At the age of fifteen, he commenced to learn the trade of a miller, which calling he has followed ever since, a period of thirty years. In 1888, he came to the United States, settling in Greenwood ten years later, purchasing the flour mill owned by Isaac Thompson, of Franklin, since which time he has successfully operated the concern. After taking charge of the plant, he enlarged its capacity which now aggregates eighty barrels per day; made improvements in the machinery, and has one of the best mills of its kind in the county.

On May 27, 1889, Mr. Duff married Miss Elizabeth Clyde, daughter of William Clyde. Mr. and Mrs. Duff have an adopted daughter, Clyde Opal Duff. Both are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, in which they take a prominent part. Fraternally, Mr. Duff is a Master Mason, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Duff resides with his family in the pleasant home he erected in 1895, on East Broadway, and here is dispensed a delightful hospitality to the large circle of friends possessed by himself and wife.

ELIJAH OGLE, a substantial farmer and representative citizen of Delaware county, Ind., residing on his valuable property of 105 1-2 acres, which is situated on the Granville turnpike, six miles from Muncie, and is known as the "Hufferd Farm," was born in Monroe township, Delaware county, Ind., April 15, 1845, son of David and Nancy (Gibson) Ogle.

The Ogle family is of English extraction and came to Virginia in Colonial days. James and David Ogle, respectively, the grandfather and father of Elijah, was born in Virginia, the latter in 1801. His education was of the most meagre description, but he was reared to agricultural pursuits, and in 1826 in order to secure a farm in the newly opened territory in Monroe township, Delaware county, Ind., he covered the distance on foot, and after reaching here he entered several hundred acres of land. On a tract of sixty acres in the woods, he built a log cabin, in which his first wife died. The children of the first marriage were: Carrie, Hannah, Matilda and Elizabeth. His second marriage was in Delaware county to Mrs. Nancy (Gibson) West, a native of Ohio and a daughter of William and Diana Gibson.

William Gibson was a pioneer of Monroe township, where he cleared up a fine farm and became a substantial citizen, dying in old age. The Gibson children were: John, Lucinda, Martha, Valentine and Nancy. Nancy Gibson was reared on her father's farm and her first marriage was to Thomas West, a farmer of Monroe township, who left two children at death, William and Rachel.

David Ogle was a man who had many friends and was noted for his kindness and hospitality. At one time when the frost had killed most of the corn in the fields of his neighbors, and he owned a lot of old corn which with good business management he had stored for several years, it is related that he would sell none for money, but trusted all who desired it until they were able to pay. As another instance of his kindness it is told that he once bought a cow of a widow, and after the purchase he returned to the widow and gave her five dollars more than the price, saying that the animal was worth it. He was a consistent member of the U. B. Church. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican. His death occurred at the age of seventy-seven years, from the result of a railroad accident at Muncie in 1878.

Elijah Ogle was reared in the midst of pioneer surroundings and can recall many of the incidents of those days. He attended school at Macedonia, Monroe township, the building being constructed of round logs, with puncheon floor and with desks made of puncheons extending along under the windows, light being admitted through greased paper. Until he was fourteen years old he enjoyed about two months of schooling each winter, working upon the farm in summer.

Mr. Ogle is a veteran of the Civil war. He enlisted first at Muncie, Ind., in March, 1863, for 100 days' service in an Indiana regiment. From this service he was honorably discharged at Indianapolis in June, 1863, his service having been in Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama. In the spring of 1865 he re-enlisted as a private in Company B, 147th Reg., Ind. Vol. Inf., for one year or during the war, and seven months later was honorably discharged from the service at Harper's Ferry. He participated in a number of the severe marches which tried the strength of the soldiers in those days, including the thirty-day march from Charleston to Summit Point, Va., in full accoutrements, his knapsack alone weighing sixty pounds. On this march he contracted varicose veins, which the surgeons deem incurable, and also suffered an injury to his right eye. Mr. Ogle has a record of which he may be proud, having always been a self-respecting, loyal soldier and at all times was at his post of duty. After the close of the war he returned to Indiana.

On March 14, 1866, Mr. Ogle was married in Monroe township to Jane Dulcena Preston, born in Monroe township, Jan. 20, 1848, daughter of Phineas and Mary Booher (Kesling) Preston. Phineas Preston was born in Ohio in 1819, of an old English family, son of Reuben Preston, who died in Ohio. Phineas Preston was reared in Ohio, and in young manhood came to Delaware county, Ohio, where he married Mary Kesling, born in Tennessee, daughter of David and Frances (Booher) Kesling, both of whom died in Tennessee. The daughter, Mary, came to Delaware county, Ind., with her uncles, Martin and Daniel Kesling. Phineas Preston after marriage settled on a wild farm of forty acres in the midst of the woods, one acre of which had been cleared and a log cabin erected. This land he subsequently cleared, and increased to ninety-five acres. He was an industrious, hard-working man, a kind husband and a good neighbor. One of his sons, William, served for three years in the 10th Ind. Cav. His other children were: Mary, Delphina, Jane, Sarah Eliza, Artemisa, John A., and Harriet. Mrs. Preston survived to be almost eighty years of age, and she is remembered as a very energetic and capable woman. Both she and her husband were early members of the U. B. Church.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Ogle settled in Monroe township, Delaware county, he having inherited sixty acres from his father's estate, but this property he sold and located in Hamilton township, where he purchased sixty acres. This land they improved and lived thereon for twenty-one years, when they removed to the present 105 1-2 acre farm, on which they have resided to the present time. Their comfortable residence is a one and one-half story brick, and the surroundings are very attractive, as Mrs. Ogle with her many other estimable qualities is a great lover of flowers. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ogle are as follows: Marion; Frances, who died aged eighteen months; William, who died aged seven months; Millie Ann, born Sept. 11, 1870, who married Ira M. Johnsonbaugh, formerly of Hamilton, now of Delaware township, owning a farm near Albany, and has four children: Cleo E., Glen, Hazel and George. In politics Mr. Ogle is a Republican, and he cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, supporting this party's candidates ever since. He is a valued member of Williams Post, G. A. R., of Muncie.

ALONZO SNIDER. Among the enterprising and public-spirited farmers who have made Marion county, Ind., what it is today, is Alonzo Snider, of Warren township, who was born March 13, 1844, in Decatur county, Ind., a son of James and Lucy Ann (Simmons) Snider. Grandfather Snider was born in Germany, but came to the United States at an early day, settling in Virginia, where he engaged in farming and there died.

James Snider was born in eastern Virginia, in 1811, and his wife was born at Rome, N. Y., in 1819. James Snider came west at a very early day, and for a few years stopped at Cincinnati, where he cleared a place and built a cabin. In 1830, he left Ohio, and came to Indiana, settling once more in the woods, and working to clear off his land, of which he accumulated a large portion, and made a fortune, although in later years he lost some of his hard-earned money. By his first marriage he became the father of children as follows: Mary A., Catherine, Sally, Lavina, Henry and Sarah. By his marriage with the mother of Alonzo he had children: Alonzo, Lizzie, Abbie, Wilson, Emma, Clara and Ida. In politics he was an active Democrat, but never aspired to office, nor did he belong to any fraternal associations. He was an old school Baptist, and always displayed true charity, Christian kindness, and was a manly man, who could both trust and be trusted.

Alonzo Snider has always been a farmer, and thoroughly understands his work. At present he owns a fine farm of ninety-six acres, all of which is under excellent cultivation except twelve acres of timber, some of which is very fine. His orchard is one of the best in the township, containing 500 cherry trees and 400 plum trees and on the remainder of his land he carries on general farming. He raises hogs for the market, and he generally carries some 100 head. He built his present pleasant home, and made all the improvements, doing a good deal of ditching, and putting in 800 rods of tile. In addition to his farm, Mr. Snider owns four lots in the city, and is one of the substantial men of the locality. Although a good Democrat, he has never aspired to office. He is an earnest member of the Baptist Church, in which faith he was reared, and he gives liberally towards the support of the church. Although social by nature, he does not belong to any secret associations, but has many friends in the community. His success in every respect is unquestioned, and the future looks bright before him.

In 1866, Mr. Snider was married to Nancy J. White, daughter of George and Nancy (Martin) White, the former of whom was born in Clermont county, Ohio, in 1801, and the latter in 1802, in the same place. By occupation Mr. White was always a farmer, and in 1837, came to Indiana and entered land. He did a great deal of hard work, and finally became possessed of 320 acres of land in addition to a considerable fortune in money. His death occurred March 23, 1883. The following children were born to him: John, Dinah, Levi, Thomas, Martin, George W., James L., Sarah E. and Nancy Jane. In political matters he was a Democrat, although he never took an active part in local affairs. His religious views made him a Baptist, and he was always very welcome in the church. Mr. and Mrs. Snider had an interesting family of eight children: Lulu, Sarah A., and an infant died young; Carey A., married Myrtle ———, and is now an electrician; Alice L. married Thomas Lobb, a blacksmith; John M. married Gussie Rontier, and is a farmer near his father's estate; Charles is also an electrician; India E. is a milliner of Chicago.

The good influence exercised in any community by such a family can scarcely be overestimated. The father by his integrity and ability to work and ably manage his affairs, sets an example to others, which is strengthened by the fact that his success has been attained without his transgressing the teachings of the Golden Rule. Along the same lines his sons have planned their lives, while his excellent wife and daughters have shown what women of America can do today in their homes.

JOHN B. TAYLOR, late one of the highly esteemed residents of Anderson, Ind., was born in Hendricks county, Ind., Feb. 9, 1834, son of Bryant and Margaret (Fox) Taylor.

Mr. Taylor sprang from Scotch-Irish stock of Colonial Virginia, and was of the same original family as that from which came President Zachary Taylor. The great-grandfather of John B. Taylor was a Virginian and a Revolutionary soldier, as was his son, John. The latter removed to North Carolina, and settled near Salem, Randolph county, where he became a substantial citizen and county judge. He married at Hightower, a sister of Sterling Hightower, a wealthy slave holder along the river of that name. Grandmother Taylor inherited 100 slaves from her father, but these were set free during the Civil war and large planing mills owned by the Hightower family were destroyed. John Taylor was the father of nine children: Anderson, Bryant, Murphy, Wilson, John, James, Polly, Rebecca and Lucinda. John Taylor removed with his family to Indiana and settled in Wayne county about 1828, the removal being made as both Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were opposed to slavery and wished to settle in a free State. They located on Green Fork, where Mr. Taylor spent the remainder of his life in retirement. All of his children settled in Wayne county except Bryant. Judge Taylor, as he was familiarly called, died in 1835 in Green Fork, aged sixty-five years, in the faith of the Methodist Church. His son, Anderson was a soldier in the war of 1812 when but a boy.

Bryant Taylor, son of John B., was born in 1805, near Salem, Randolph county, N. C., and received a limited common school education. He was a blacksmith and wagonmaker, and this trade he carried on after coming to Indiana. He was married near Danville, Hendricks county, Ind., to Margaret Fox, born in North Carolina, daughter of Friends or Quakers, who were of French Huguenot extraction, the original name being DeFoix. Her grandfather, says tradition, fled from France on account of religious persecution. After marriage Bryant Taylor settled in Stringtown, near Amo, and opened a blacksmith and wagon shop, also purchasing land, on which he lived some years, after which he removed to Plainfield, where he opened a shop about 1845, buying land north of that place. His wife died in 1858, and he was married (second) in Madison county, near Elwood, to Sarah Stansberry, and by this union there were no children. By the first marriage there were these children: John B., David A., James D., William H. H., Jacob W., Alexander and Mary E.

Bryant Taylor not only had five sons in the Civil war, but enlisted himself. He was over fifty-five years of age, and was refused enlistment, as he had gray hair. He then had his hair and beard colored, and was accepted as a private of Company A, 19th Ind. V. I., Capt. Isaac May, Lieutenant Makepeace, in May, 1861, to serve three years or during the war. He served about sixteen months, as a good, faithful soldier, and was discharged on account of increasing years. After his second marriage he settled north of Elwood, where he died in November, 1889, in the faith of the Methodist Church. Mr. Taylor was an original Republican, and voted for John C. Fremont and later for Abraham Lincoln, both terms.

John B. Taylor was about ten years of age when he went with his father and the family to Plainfield, and his education was secured in the common schools, after leaving which he conducted a notion business for four years, later engaging in the plasterer's trade. He was married in Anderson, Sept. 23, 1860, to Margaret VanNort, born Dec. 26, 1839, in Madison county, Ind., daughter of William and Sarah (Bailey) VanNort. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Taylor settled in Anderson, where he engaged in plastering and contracting until his enlistment, Aug. 17, 1862, as a private of Company K, 16th Ind. V. I., Capt. Charles Doxey, for three years or during the war. He served out his time and was honorably discharged July 20, 1865, at Indianapolis, Ind., having participated in the following battles: Chickasaw Bayou, Dec. 27, 1862, Chickasaw Bluffs, Dec. 29, 1862; Arkansas Post, Jan. 11, 1863, Magnolia Hill, May 1, 1863; Port Gibson, May 1, 1863; Port Gibson, May 2, 1863; Raymond, Miss., May 16, 1863; Champion Hills, May 16, 1863; Big Black River, May 17, 1863; fighting before Vicksburg, May 19, 1863; charge at Vicksburg, May 20, 1863; assault and charge May 22, 1863; siege at Vicksburg, from May 22 to July 4 and general attack; Jackson, Miss., July 9, 1863; skirmish near Jackson, July 14, 15, 16, 1863. Mounted: March to Fort Donelson, marching 150 miles from Sept. 26 to 30, 1863; skirmish near New Iberia, in October, 1863; skirmishes Vermillion Bayou, Oct. 9, 1863; skirmishes, Vermillionville, Oct. 10, 1863; skirmish Morton's Plantations, Oct. 11, 1863; skirmish at Van Coteau, Oct. 19, 1863; Vermillion Bayou, Nov. 5, 1863; St. Martinsville, Nov. 16, 1863; battle of Camp Pratt and capture, Nov. 20, 1863; skirmish at Bayou Portage, Nov. 23, 1863; skirmish and capture near Grand Lake, Nov. 4, 1863; skirmish at Vermillionville, La., Nov. 25, 1863; skirmish near New Iberia, Nov. 27, 1863; skirmish near Franklin, Nov. 28, 1863; Moore's Sugar House, on Red River Plantation, March 14, 1864; skirmish Bayou Rapids, March 20, 1864; capture of Henderson Hill, March 21, 1864; skirmish at Grand Ecore, La., April 16, 1864; skirmish at Natchitoches, La., April 20, 1864; skirmish at the same place, April 21; skirmish near Cloutersville, April 22, 1864; Cloutersville, April 24, 1864; above the Falls, Alexandria, La., April 26, 1864; Governor Moore's sugar house, May 4, 1864; below Alexandria, May 30, 1864; skirmish Wilson's Landing, May 14, 1864; skirmish near Markersville, La., May 15, 1864; Markersville Prairie, May 16, 1864; Yellow Bayou, May 18, 1864; skirmish at the Atchafalaya river, May 19, 1864; Morganza Bend, May 13, 1864; skirmish at La-Fourche, and capture of three guns, Sept. 11, 1864; skirmish at St. Labadie, Sept. 9, 1864; near Houma, Oct. 11, 1864; skirmish at La-Blanc Plantation, Nov. 11, 1864; with Capt. Whitaker's men, 18th La., April 4, and skirmish with same April 10, 1865, captured one lieutenant and fifteen privates; skirmish and capture of Capt. H. C. Brown and five men near Bayou Soula, La., April 19, 1865; skirmish with same and capture of ten men, April 4, 1865; skirmish and capture of Lieut. Smith and three men, May 12, 1865. Lieutenant Taylor was always a faithful soldier, and did his full duty faithfully and cheerfully.

He had four brothers in the Civil war: Capt. James D. M., of Wilder's famous brigade, Company G, 17th Ind.; David A., private Company B, 17th Ind.; William H. H., scout, Company G, 17th Ind., and Jacob W., sergeant in 57th Ind. Inf., who died from the effects of army life on the day following his return from the war. Capt. James D. M. Taylor was shot and killed in a personal encounter with Gen. N. B. Forrest, at Ebenezer Church, Ala., April 2, 1865, after he had served through the war four years. He was the only Indiana soldier to have a personal encounter with a prominent Confederate officer. Twenty-six men were killed from Captain Taylor's company in this charge, and Gen. Forrest was wounded by Capt. Taylor, who spurred his horse directly upon him and struck him upon the head with his sabre. Gen. Forrest later said that he would not have killed the brave Union officer except to save his own life.

Lieut. John B. Taylor was promoted for meritorious conduct to be second lieutenant of Company K, 16th Ind. Inf., and was mustered out as such. At the battle of Jackson, Miss., he received a concussion of the brain from a cannon ball which passed directly over his head, knocking him from his horse, and he also received a sabre thrust from a Confederate patrol in the night at New Iberia. He was dispatch bearer at the battle of Grand Ecore and at Natchitoches, Miss., April 16, 1864, to Gen. A. L. Lee. He was captured in the big woods between these places, by mounted Confederate cavalry, and on his arms being demanded, drew both revolvers and discharged them, wounding one man and so surprising the other that he made his escape, as he was not even dismounted, and although fired upon, he reached the Union lines, delivering his dispatches in safety to General Lee.

After the war Lieut. Taylor settled in Anderson and engaged in plastering and contract work, in which he became very successful. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in his political views he was a Republican. He belonged to Major May Post, G. A. R., the Masonic Lodge of Ambrose, the I. O. O. F. and the Red Men.

To Lieut. and Mrs. Taylor were born these children: Ida M., born Sept. 23, 1861, married D. C. Jones, of Indianapolis; Flora D., born March 23, 1866, married Lewis M. Moore, of Newcastle; Minnie E., born Sept. 5, 1868, married B. F. Jones, an electrician of Chicago; Woodie Fern, born July 31, 1873; Chauncey B., born July 7, 1875, married Bessie Sipp, and they reside in Indianapolis; Claude O., born Oct. 7, 1877, married Kate Harrison, of Anderson; and Edith Alice, born Aug. 3, 1880. Mr. Taylor died Oct. 23, 1906, and his widow is now a resident of Newcastle, Indiana.

HIRAM T. PEARCY, a well-known farmer of Washington township, whose fine farm of 285 acres is located within two and one-half miles of Martinsville, was born Nov. 5, 1858, in Greene township, Morgan county, Ind., a son of Henry and Lavina (Whitesitt) Percy. Thirteen children were born to these parents, the seven members of the family who still survive being: Robert, John, George, Van Buren, Mary (wife of Eli Thomas), Charity (wife of William Adams), and Hiram Tilford, of Washington township. (Ancestral data of the Percy family will be found in the sketch of Van B. Percy.)

Hiram T. Percy was reared in Greene township and attended the district schools. Until the death of his mother and his own marriage, he resided at home, but in 1889 he came to Washington township and purchased his present valuable farm. Mr. Percy is practical in his methods and has improved his property, making it one of the excellent farms of this locality. He has raised cattle, hogs, horses and grain, and at present owns and operates the Clear Creek Dairy, having thirty fine-bred cows.

On Dec. 22, 1883, he was married to Miss Laura B. Perry, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Day) Perry, and the children born to this union are: Ara, Ola A. (married Roscoe Bailey and has one son, Roscoe Vernon), Georgia, Halcie Hazel, Mabel B., Ruth Estalette, Joseph Wayne, Morris Davis and Harlan Delbert. Mrs. Percy's parents were natives of Indiana and lived in Morgan county, the three survivors of their family of six children being: Mrs. Percy; Armina Catherine, wife of Joseph Gillaspay; and Cora Alice, wife of John W. Percy. Stephen Perry, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Percy, had a family of five children, one of these, John Perry, becoming the father of Mrs. Percy. He followed farming all his life as a vocation. During the Civil war he served as a soldier. His death occurred in 1881, at the age of forty-two years, his wife surviving him but three months, dying aged thirty-six years. Both parents were members of the Methodist Church.

The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Percy were David and Marilla (Thompson) Day, the former of whom was a native of Indiana and a farmer by occupation until his death in middle life. Mrs. Day resides in Boone county, Ind., and her mother, Elizabeth Thompson, was a venerable resident of Johnson county, and lived near the Morgan county line. She died in 1904, when ninety-eight years old.

Mrs. Percy is a valued member of the Methodist Church. In politics, Mr. Percy is identified with the Democratic party.

DR. JOHN M. FISHER, a successful practitioner of medicine and surgery, and a most highly valued citizen of Lapel, Madison county, Ind., is a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Madison county.

The Fishers are of Scotch, German and Irish descent. Benjamin Fisher, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Maryland, and there married Hannah Atherton. After his marriage he moved to Clermont county, Ohio. He had the following children: John, Charles and Mary. Benjamin Fisher moved to Indiana from Ohio, by way of wagon, and settled at Strawtown, on White river. There were but few families at this time at Strawtown, the place being an Indian trading post. The Indian trader, a man named Shintapper, had the post there, owning a brick house surrounded by a pole fence. He was in the habit of selling the Indians large quantities of whiskey, and while they were drunk abusing them, thus gaining their ill will. This so enraged the Indians that they determined to kill him, setting the day upon which to carry out the deed. Shintapper was not aware of this, nor were any other of the whites, and when the day set had arrived, the white settlers of the neighborhood had collected at the trading post to assist the trader in raising a log cabin, which he had just started. Not expecting the large party of whites the Indians came armed only with knives and tomahawks, while the settlers, not expecting trouble, were not armed in any way. The Indians were in their war paint and in an ugly mood, demanding Shintapper from the settlers, and making them acquainted with their design. After a parley with the red-skins, the whites induced them to give them time to counsel with the trader, who, greatly alarmed, begged them to defend him, and to his entreaties were added those of his wife and children. While not condoning his treatment of the Indians, the settlers were at once ready to defend him, and so informed the Indians. The latter, becoming enraged at this, endeavored to force their way through the gate into the enclosure, but were beaten back by the clubs in the hands of the white men, who forced them through the gate and followed them outside. During the melee an Indian knocked a settler down, and was on the point of scalping him, when he was himself killed by a blow from a mattock handle in the hands of another settler. The encounter then began in earnest, and the whites, seeing themselves outnumbered and unarmed as they were, retreated to the enclosure, to find that Benjamin Fisher, of their party, had fallen, and, having been struck on the head by a tomahawk, had been killed. Recovering the body of their dead warrior the Indians then retreated. The following night the trader, Shintapper escaped down the White river in a bark canoe, and was never heard of afterward.

Mrs. Fisher, the widow of Benjamin Fisher, was left to fight her own way in the world and care for the three children. She remained but a short time at Strawtown, removing with her children to what is now Fishersburg, and settling on what is now known as the Conrad farm. Here the stout-hearted pioneer mother had relatives who assisted her, John and William Fisher, brothers of Benjamin. Mrs. Fisher afterward married Benoni Freel, who, in 1828, settled on the banks of Stony Creek, on Section 21, near the David Conrad farm. Here he built the first log cabin in Stony Creek township.

Charles Fisher, the father of Dr. Fisher, was born Dec. 14, 1819, in Clermont county, Ohio, near Goshen. His parents moved to Indiana in 1820, when he was about one year old, while his brother John, the eldest child of the family, was about five years old at the time. Charles Fisher was brought up in the Indiana woods, and received but little schooling, learning to read and write, however, and to do a successful business. Unlike the other pioneers, Charles Fisher was not a hunter, giving his entire time to agricultural pursuits, and it is said that in his whole life he killed but one deer. If asked about this he would always say he was too poor to hunt, and had to depend upon agriculture for his food. When about twenty years old he was married, in Jackson township, to Lucy Jane Bushby, daughter of Thomas Busby, a pioneer of that township. Mrs. Fisher was born in Greenbrier county, Va. After their marriage the couple settled on the farm of Thomas Busby, and then for a time lived with Mr. Fisher's stepfather, Benoni Freel. Mr. Fisher finally settled on White river, on what was known as the White River farm, which he partly cleared. This he later sold to settle on the McDole farm. In the early forties he bought a stock of goods from William and Benjamin Sylvester, fitted up a building, and opened a general store, which he operated for many years, discontinuing it some time during the Civil war. He lived in the village of Fishersburg, and owned a farm of 160 acres which extended to the town. He also improved two other farms, one of 140 and one of 160 acres in another county, and owned the farm upon which Dr. Fisher now lives, of 130 acres. Mr. Fisher has now given most of his property to his children, retaining but a small farm for himself. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Fisher were: Thomas L., orderly sergeant in Company I, 39th Ind. V. I., now deceased; John M.; Melinda S., who married Dr. Jacob Horter, of Anderson; and Lewis W., deceased. Charles Fisher was instrumental in establishing the first postoffice in Fishersburg, and he continued to hold the office of postmaster throughout his business career. A strong Democrat, he served as trustee of Stony Creek township for one term. He and his estimable wife were members of the Methodist Church, which he assisted to establish in his community, and of which he was a liberal supporter. He was a very successful business man, and during his long and active career accumulated a handsome competency. He is still living, well past four score years. Always a very temperate and moral man, he is highly esteemed and respected for his sturdy worth. Mrs. Fisher died Sept. 16, 1886.

Dr. John M. Fisher was born Sept. 1, 1845, in Fishersburg. He was brought up to farm work, assisting on the home farm, and spent the greater part of his youth clerking in his father's store. He received a common school education, while his medical studies were prosecuted at the Medical University, Louisville, Ky., which he attended in 1867, 1868 and 1869, in which latter year he was graduated. He first studied with Drs. Jacob Harter and Olden at Fishersburg, and later with Dr. Daniel Cook. Dr. Fisher began the practice of medicine in 1869, choosing the town of Fishersburg as his field of professional labor, and here he has carried on a successful practice ever since, with the exception of five years. In September, 1883, he removed to Oswego, Kans., where he remained one year, in 1884 locating in Springfield, Mo. For several years he practiced medicine in several different towns in Missouri, and finally located in Shell City, that State, where he successfully engaged in a real estate business for a few years. In 1888 he returned to Fishersburg, after spending a short time in Logansport and Middletown.

Dr. Fisher was married May 7, 1872, in Fishersburg, to Miss Martha A. Taylor, born Dec. 2, 1847, near Pendleton, Ind., daughter of James and Mary Taylor. James Taylor was a substantial farmer, who settled near Pendleton. Mrs. Fisher died May 10, 1881, leaving these children: Hervey W., born April 25, 1874; and Grace J. Stanford, born July 21, 1877. Dr. Fisher was united in marriage (second) in West Chester, Ohio, Sept. 5, 1882, to Addie M. Bishop, born Feb. 25, 1854, daughter of Dr. Preston and Mary E. (Ford) Bishop, the former of whom is an old and well known physician of Ohio. He belonged to a family of physicians, among whom were: Dr. N. W. Bishop, of Loveland, Ohio; Dr. L. W. Bishop, of Batavia, Ohio; and Dr. Reuben Bishop, deceased. Dr. Preston Bishop is still living and makes his home in Clinton county, Ohio.

Dr. Fisher and his wife are members of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a member of the county and State medical societies, and is very popular in both organizations.

M. D. NICHOLSON, who has been residing on his valuable farm of sixty acres in Castleton, Ind., since 1889, is one of the representative agriculturists of Marion county, and a veteran of the Civil war. Mr. Nicholson was born Nov. 1, 1839, in Wayne county, Ind., son of Joseph and Sallie Nicholson.

John Nicholson, grandfather of M. D., was born in Guilford, N. C., and there married Mary Jester, by whom he had these children: Andrew, Joseph, Taylor, Sarah, Margaret and William. At an early day John Nicholson settled in Henry county, Ind., and he died near Newcastle, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. He was a member of the United Brethren Church.

Joseph Nicholson was born in North Carolina, and was an early settler of Wayne county, Ind., where he became a prominent agriculturist and at one time held the office of school director. He died aged eighty-three years, in the faith of the United Brethren Church. His children were: John, Margaret, Mary, Willis, Nimrod, Robert, Taylor, M. D., Elizabeth, William and Jesse, all born and reared in Wayne county.

M. D. Nicholson was reared on his father's farm and received his education in the schools of his locality, enlisting at Richmond, Ind., Oct. 3, 1861, as a private in Company A, 36th Ind. V. I., Capt. William Wilds, to serve three years or during the war, and was honorably discharged at Nashville, Tenn., in October, 1864. His service was in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, and he was in a number of battles and skirmishes too numerous to mention. He was taken sick at Nashville, was in the hospital six months, and after his partial recovery was made nurse in the hospital, serving as such for fifteen months. He was then transferred to the invalid corps, doing guard duty, and after his discharge went to Louisville, Ky., to care for the army horses, the war having not yet closed. He was ever a faithful and efficient soldier, and his record is one of which any man might be proud.

After the war Mr. Nicholson returned to Indiana and in 1889 located on his present farm of sixty acres, for which he paid $60 an acre, and which is now worth $125 per acre. He is one of the good, practical farmers of his community, and is a leader in any project that has for its object the betterment of his locality. He and Mrs. Nicholson are members of the Friends Church.

On Dec. 20, 1868, in Greens Fork, Wayne county, Ind., Mr. Nicholson was married to Nancy Ellen Cole, born in Wayne county, daughter of William and Eliza (Faucett) Cole, and granddaughter of William Faucett, an early settler of Greens Fork, Wayne county, of English birth. Mrs. Nicholson died in March, 1895, without issue. William Cole was a farmer of Randolph county, Ind., where he died aged seventy years. His children were: John, Eliza, William, Everett, Caroline, Martha, Jane and Nancy Ellen.

Mr. Nicholson's second marriage was to Mrs. Emma E. Jackson, born March 16, 1860, in Marion county, Ind., daughter of Jesse and Catherine (Flanagan) Klepfer, and widow of William H. Jackson, who was a substantial farmer of Hancock county, Ind., and son of Christopher C. Jackson. By her first marriage Mrs. Nicholson had four children: Daniel Elmer, Jesse A., Lemuel Roy and Anna Elizabeth. To Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson have been born two children: Esther Iona and Louis D.

Jesse Klepfer, father of Mrs. Nicholson, was born in 1820 in Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania German stock, son of Henry and Elizabeth (Snyder) Klepfer, the former of whom came to Marion county and settled near Oakland about 1833, entering his land from the U. S. Government and clearing a 200 acre farm, where he spent the rest of his life. His children were: Jesse, Simon, Lewis, Noah, Franklin, Aaron, Polly and Leah.

Jesse Klepfer was thirteen years of age when he came to Marion county with his father, having first lived in Wayne county for one year. He bought 130 acres near Castleton, and cleared a farm from the woods, making a good home. He died in 1887, in Indianapolis. His first wife, Catherine Flanagan, bore him these children: Henry F., Perry, Commodore, Jesse Welby, Vanderline, General, Emma Ellen, George B., McCloud, and Joseph H. His second wife, Savilla Jane Lynch (nee Clair) bore him four children, namely: Alva C., Walter, Jesse M. and Iva.

DAVID BENJAMIN WILSON, member of the firm of D. B. Wilson & Son, leading funeral directors of Shelbyville, Ind., and the oldest established firm of undertakers in this city, was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, Nov. 27, 1836, son of David B. and Cordelia A. (Brown) Wilson, natives of Scotland and Virginia, respectively.

David B. Wilson, Sr., was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1797, and came to America in 1820. He died in Paducah, Ky., in 1881.

The early life of David Benjamin Wilson was spent in Dayton, Ohio, where he was educated in the public schools. In 1852, he located at Paducah, Ky., and in 1872 came to Shelbyville, where for several years he engaged in carriage manufacturing. In 1880, he entered the undertaking business, in which he has since been successfully engaged. Mr. Wilson enjoys great personal popularity, and is well known throughout Shelby county. His gentle, sympathetic manner and thoughtful care for the afflicted members of a family when he is called to perform the last sad offices make him warm personal friends, who appreciate his services beyond any mere pecuniary consideration.

In politics he is identified with the Democratic party, and he cast his first presidential vote in 1856 for James Buchanan. He was whiskey inspector under the administration of Andrew Johnson, and in 1879 and 1880, he was doorkeeper of the Indiana House of Representatives. He is a member of the Masonic order, of the K. of P., and is popular in both organizations. In religious faith he is an Episcopalian.

On Aug. 16, 1858, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Ellen Bolan, a native of Ireland, and a daughter of Thomas and Maria (Stewart) Bolan. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson: Emma C., wife of Charles W. Ward; and Thomas D. Mr. Wilson was one of the promoters, is a stockholder, president and general manager of the Mutual Telephone Company, of Shelbyville; is a stockholder of the Farmers National Bank; in the Forest Hill Cemetery Association, and in the Eagle Range factory of Shelbyville. In 1892, he admitted his son, Thomas D., to partnership in the undertaking business, which since then has borne its present title. Like his father, Thomas D. Wilson is a practical undertaker, and is a young man of much promise in various lines of activity.

ABEL HUFFMAN, a wealthy farmer of Marion county, who has lived all his life within a radius of ten miles from Acton, was born in Johnson county, June 6, 1842, son of Aaron and Jemima (Wells) Huffman, both natives of Kentucky. The grandfather, Solomon, was from Virginia, but he left there in his early days and settled in Kentucky, where his son Aaron was born in 1805.

Aaron Huffman left Kentucky in 1826, and settling in Marion county took up eighty acres of government land, cleared it for farming, and made his permanent home there. He also followed the tinner's trade and was one of the first tanners in the region. He was a Democrat, though not an active one. He was a member of the Baptist Church and a successful man in his everyday affairs. He died in 1875 and his wife, Jemima Wells, born in 1807, passed away in 1899. They had seven children: Minerva, Harriet, Milton, Martha, all deceased; Elizabeth A.; Abel; and Noah A., living at Acton.

Abel Huffman is a farmer and the owner of a valuable piece of property of ninety-two acres, valued at $100 an acre. Eight years of his years were passed in Shelby county, but for over twenty years he has lived on his present homestead, which he has improved and brought to a high state of cultivation. He has been very successful as a farmer, and is one of the wealthy and prominent men of his section, a position won entirely by his own hard work. He is not a lodge man. In politics a Democrat, he is at present one of the supervisors of the township. Mr. Huffman was married in 1871 to Miss Sarah J. Halfaker, and to them two daughters have been born: Addie M., the elder, married George Heck, a farmer of Johnson county; and Eva is the wife of A. Heck, likewise a farmer. Both daughters have been given good educations, and they are musical in their tastes, having been well trained; each is organist in a church.

The parents of Mrs. Sarah J. Huffman were Charles and Violet (Buchanan) Halfaker. The father came from Virginia and settled first in Bartholomew county, and later in Johnson county. He cleared land there in the early days, lived in a log cabin and farmed in summer, while in winter he was the shoemaker for the whole neighborhood. He was an industrious and energetic man, and was very prosperous. He was a German by descent and his father came from the region of the river Rhine. Charles Halfaker was the father of six children: Sarah J., Mrs. Huffman; Elizabeth, deceased; John H.; Zerelda S.; Charles, deceased; and Martha. Mrs. Halfaker died in 1861, and her husband in 1880, aged seventy-two. He was a Democrat, but took no active part in politics.

PHILLIP LEACH, late a farmer and plasterer by trade, who was residing in Alexandria, Ind., at the time of his death, May 2, 1907, was born in Henry county, Ind., Nov. 4, 1833, the son of John and Nancy (Moyer) Leach.

The Leach family is an old one, dating back to Colonial days in Virginia. Walter, grandfather of Phillip, was born on the east side of the Blue Ridge mountains, in the Shenandoah valley, and he remained there till well into manhood. During the war of 1812, he served in the army. He was quite famous as a wagoner, and made six-week trips, hauling goods in a big wagon drawn by six horses, from Baltimore to Ohio. He finally settled in the latter State, in Clermont county, dying there when nearly 100 years of age. His children were as follows: Sarah, wife of Jacob Moyer; Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Beehimer; Nancy, who married a resident of Clermont county; John; William and Samuel.

John Leach was born in Virginia and remained there till after his marriage to Miss Nancy Moyer. Mrs. Leach was born in Pennsylvania, of old Dutch stock, and was brought by her parents to Virginia, where she grew up. The newly wedded pair went at once to Clermont county, Ohio, where they settled on rented land, some years earlier than the elder Mr. Leach's removal to that point. There they remained till 1832-33, when John Leach moved his family to Henry county, Ind., intending to settle there. He was not satisfied, however, and after only one year returned to Clermont county, rented land in the bottoms around Ten Mile creek, and made his home there for thirty-nine years. When quite advanced in years he left his farm, moved to Shelbyville, Ill., and there at the home of his son Edgar, he died at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife had died in September, 1888, aged seventy-five. They were members of the New Light Church. Originally a Jacksonian Democrat in politics, Mr. Leach was a strong Union man, and after his own sons joined the army he voted for Lincoln. There were nine children, namely: Susannah; John Walter; Charlotte; Phillip; Andy, in Company B, 80th O. V. I., who enlisted for a year and was shot and instantly killed by rebel sharpshooters during a skirmish on Kenesaw Mountain; Louise; Lafayette, who was in many battles as a Zouave in the 14th Illinois regiment; Ellen; and Edgar.

Phillip Leach was the only one of the family born in Indiana, but he was reared in Ohio, his parents returning there when he was but five months old. During the winters he was able to attend the little log school for some weeks each year, but his education was very limited and most of his time was spent in work on the farm. So expert did he become in cutting wood in particular that at the age of sixteen he could cut and stack eight cords of cord wood in a day. He remained at home till he was twenty-one, doing considerable teaming as well as farm work, while for four years he regularly drove a four horse team to Cincinnati. On July 3, 1850, Mr. Leach was married at Pleasant Hill, near Batavia, Clermont county, to Miss Malissa Behymer, who was born at that point Sept. 25, 1842. They remained in Clermont county, renting a farm, until the war broke out, and then Mr. Leach enlisted, although he was obliged to leave his wife with their two children dependent on her.

On Aug. 11, 1862, Phillip Leach enlisted as a private in Company B., 89th O. V. I., to serve three years. After leaving Camp Denison, he was on duty in Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia, and participated in the battles of Camp Taylor, Fayetteville, Flat-top Mountain (Va.), Nashville, Nashville Pike, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga, on the Cumberland River, and in a cavalry charge on the bottoms of the Tennessee river, besides many skirmishes. He was once struck in the neck by a bullet, but it only cut the skin. At Chickamauga his whole regiment, which had gone to the front with its full complement of 1,000 men, but which was then reduced to only 150 officers and men, was captured, and there began a long period of suffering for Mr. Leach. The prisoners were first taken to headquarters to be shown there, and were confined meantime in a log house in the woods. They were next taken to Atlanta, Ga., where they were marched through the city to be gazed at by the populace, and then after three days they were loaded onto box cars and taken to Belle Isle for ten days, all this being merely preliminary to the real hardships which followed. Early in October the prisoners were taken to Libby prison, kept there two months and then removed to Danville. During the eight months in Danville the captives were confined in an old tobacco warehouse, several hundred on each floor. On going into battle just before he was captured Mr. Leach had left behind a blouse, coat, two shirts and a cap, and had only a dollar in money in his pockets. In prison, having no overcoat or blanket he suffered terribly from the cold, while the lack of food and water added to the misery. The daily rations were a piece of corn bread about three inches square, and a small scrap of mule meat, while at ten each morning a half cup of drinking water was given each man. Water for all other purposes was entirely lacking, so that the men could not even wash their faces. The prison was unspeakably filthy and soon scurvy broke out. Mr. Leach was one of its victims and having no medical attendance was fearfully reduced. About fifteen days before he was exchanged he was placed in the Danville hospital, and enjoyed once more the comforts of clean bedding, plentiful food and good nursing. He was taken to Richmond on a box car and from there to a fort, where he was at last exchanged. When he reached Annapolis he had become so reduced that instead of the 165 pounds he weighed on enlisting, he showed barely ninety-five pounds. He remained in a hospital in Pennsylvania, from Aug. 4, 1864, till he was finally discharged at Little York, May 25, 1865, having a splendid record for duty faithfully performed in every detail.

After the war Mr. Leach rejoined his wife and family in Shelbyville, Ill., and in a short time he rented land in Shelby county, Ill. He went next to Shelbyville, where he learned the plasterer's trade and worked at it nine years. At the end of that time he made his home for a while in Madison county, Ind., where he rented property, and then in 1899 came to Alexandria, bought a couple of lots there and built the home in which he was residing at the time of his death. He also owned about an acre of ground there. Mr. Leach was known as one of the good Republicans of the place, having voted that ticket since the days of John C. Fremont and of Lincoln. He was an honored member of Alexander Post, of the G. A. R. He and his wife were members of the United Brethren denomination, having joined that church in Shelby county.

Mr. and Mrs. Leach had three children, two sons and a daughter. (1) Alice, born Nov. 3, 1860, is the wife of Nathan Hall, a farmer in Madison county. Their children are: Maud; Adda; Delphia; Clara; Hugh; Melissa, who died aged seventeen; Ira; Earl; George D.; Philip; Charles and Bessie, who both lived only to the age of two years. (2) Alonzo is a plasterer and farmer in Madison county. He married Miss Leona Shelley, and has five children, James A. Logan, Evert, Edgar, Benjamin and Raymond. (3) John, married Miss Stella Tatman, of Alexandria. Their five children are named Edna Pearl, Leroy Kenneth, Carl Clifton, Edith Elizabeth and Westley Irvin. There is also one great-grandchild, Peter Leach, born Jan. 16, 1901.

The Behymer family to which Mrs. Malissa Leach belongs is of old Pennsylvania Dutch stock on both sides. The grandfather, Jacob Behymer, was a pioneer farmer in Clermont county, Ohio, where he became the owner of several hundred acres of land and was a man of importance in the community. He died at his home at an advanced age, a firm adherent of the Methodist Church. By his wife, Betsey (Warson) Behymer, he had seven children, Daniel, Elias, Adam, John, Solomon, Elizabeth and Judy.

Adam Behymer inherited seventy-five acres of land, clearing it from the woods. When the gold fever broke out, with three companions, Rufe, Ike Bowles and Lance Hill, he made the journey to California, riding across the plains on a mule. During his three years absence he engaged in mining and was moderately successful as he brought some gold back with him, and kept a share in the claim and prospects which the other two men remained behind to work. Mr. Behymer was killed accidentally on his farm when he was about sixty years old, and his wife, who was a Miss Susan Matox, died at the age of fifty-five. They had four children, Alonzo, Malissa, Missouri and Beaumont. Beaumont served in the Civil war as a fifer, as he was too small to carry a musket. He was only fourteen when he enlisted and was obliged to stand on his tiptoes to pass muster at Camp Denison. Alonzo Behymer served in the 5th Ohio Cavalry.

ANANIAS GUY, attorney-at-law of Arcadia, Hamilton county, Ind., and a brilliant member of his profession, was born at Noblesville, Ind., Sept. 1, 1845, son of William H. and Louisa (Thompson) Guy, born in Virginia and Delaware, respectively, and married in Indiana.

John Guy, father of William H., was a native of Scotland, who came to the United States at an early day, settling in Indiana. Later attracted by the possibilities of Indiana, he removed to this State, and here died. He had a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters, and of them William H. Guy was the third in order of birth.

but came to Indiana about 1838, and located at Noblesville. Being by trade a harness-maker, he found ready employment and lived honored and respected until his demise in 1850. His widow survived him until 1874, when she, too, passed away. Both were consistent members of the Methodist Church, and were thoroughly good and devout people. In politics, at the time of his death, the father was a Whig. Three children were born to William H. Guy, one, James C., who married and resides at Indianapolis, by a former marriage; and two by the mother of our subject: Ananias, and William H., who lives in Arkansas.

After receiving such an education as was afforded by the common schools of his neighborhood, in 1864, feeling the call of his country, Ananias Guy enlisted in Company B, 136th Ind. V. I., and served until the close of the war, gaining many experiences, and being in the quarter-master's department for the first three months. He was then made captain of a colored company, and participated in the battle of Nashville. At the close of the war, desiring to see more of the country he had helped to save, Mr. Guy traveled through the West from 1866 until 1871. This trip was a very interesting and exciting one, for much of it was done by wagon, and in open boats. In those years he went through Montana, California, Mexico, and the more traveled States, and gained a knowledge of them and existing conditions such as could not be obtained in any other manner.

Following this, he spent ten years at Noblesville, Ind., and then went to Nebraska, where he farmed for three years. However, he felt that Indiana was his favorite State, and returning to it, he settled at Arcadia, and opened a harness and hardware business, but selling it, served as justice of the peace and notary public with such success, that he began the study of law, and was admitted to the Bar, and has since distinguished himself as a brilliant attorney. He is a man who inspires admiration, and his townspeople are very proud of his natural and acquired abilities.

On March 15, 1871, Mr. Guy married Ruth J. Grishaw, a daughter of Madison and America (Rutledge) Grishaw, natives of Kentucky, who came to Indiana at an early date, and became farmers in Tipton county. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Guy: C. W., who resides at Arcadia; Edgar

M., of North Vernon, Ind.; George A., who died at the age of twenty years; Frank G., at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Guy are consistent members of the Methodist Church. In politics Mr. Guy is a very active Republican, and is numbered among the leaders in the county. Fraternally he is a member of the K. of P. and of the G. A. R. A self-made man, he appreciates the struggles those treading the same path are forced to endure. Without doubt, he is one of the most popular men in the county, and deserves the praise of man and the commendation of his own conscience.

JONATHAN JOHNSON, one of the very substantial men, influential citizens and successful farmers of Clay township, Hamilton county, Ind., was born May 2, 1838, in Stark county, Ohio, near the town of Marlboro, son of Robert and Milly (Stanley) Johnson, the former of whom was born in 1806, in Nansemond county, Va., and the latter in Ohio in 1808.

Demcey Johnson, grandfather of Jonathan, was a native of Virginia, which State he left in 1826 and removed to Ohio with his son Robert. He died there at the age of eighty years. His eight children have also all passed away. While his sympathies were with the patriot army during the Revolutionary war, he took no part in the actual struggle, being a Quaker, and thus precluded from taking up arms.

In 1853 Robert Johnson removed with his family to Howard county, Ind. There he died in 1892, and his widow two years later, both being eighty-six years of age. In politics he was a supporter of the Republican party, but he never accepted office. The eight children born to Robert Johnson and wife were: Fleming, a farmer in Howard county, married Rachel Bundy, of Henry county; Demcey, a farmer of Hamilton county, married Widow Smith; Jonathan, a carpenter and also operator of a cider and a saw mill, in Cass county, near Logansport, Ind., married Delphila Wickersham; Louis, a farmer near Greentown, Howard county, married Emily West; Elizabeth, deceased, married Simeon Mendenhall, a gardener in Howard county; Aseneth, married Benjamin Terrell, a farmer in Clinton county, Ohio; and William, a resident of Kokomo, married Mira Marsh.

Jonathan Johnson, our subject, accompanied his parents to Howard county, Ind., and lived there until 1865, when he began to work at the carpenter's trade and continued until 1871, when he removed to Kokomo and embarked in a hardware business until 1885, when he came to his present farm in Clay township. Here he has 144 acres, of which some 130 are under cultivation and some fine timber land. He has made all the substantial improvements here, and has put in 2,000 rods of tile, thus ensuring perfect drainage. He has engaged somewhat in dairying and has been very successful in raising Poland China hogs. His methods are those of the intelligent and progressive agriculturist, and, although he has worked hard, he has the most satisfactory results to show for it.

Mr. Johnson has been thrice married. His first union was to Talitha C. Wickersham, daughter of Calvin and Mahala (Lennen) Wickersham, of Henry county, Ind., where he followed the trade of carpenter, in the old fashioned way of those peaceful days, before industrial questions brought about labor difficulties. Mr. Johnson was married (second) to Lucy Bailey. In 1882 he married (third) Candace Newlin, daughter of John and Elizabeth (King) Newlin. Mr. Johnson had six children, four of whom are living: (1) Eliza R. died at the age of twenty years, (2) Nathan, now a hotel keeper in the State of Washington, the owner of a large claim there, has had a life of much adventure, far removed from the peaceful scenes of his boyhood. In his travels around the world, he was arrested in Russia, as a spy and had a taste of imprisonment in the dominion of the czar. He married Katie McLeod. (3) James S., assistant superintendent of an express company in Ohio, married Nellie Campbell. (4) Bailey is deceased. (5) Jesse R., who farms on the home place, married Bertha Kemp. (6) Arthur is engaged in the laundry business at New Castle.

John Newlin, father of Mrs. Johnson, came to Indiana from North Carolina with his parents, in youth, settling in Orange county. He was a son of Thomas and Candace (Love) Newlin, old family names in North Carolina. Mrs. Johnson is the second in her parents' family of five children, the others being: Mary, who married Philip Jones, who is a farmer in Douglas county, Kansas; Sylvester, who is the minister of the Friends Church at Westfield; Thomas, who is vice-president of Guilford College, N. C., married Olive Wilson; and Charles, an insurance agent, teacher and chairman of the Prohibition party, at Irvington, married Harriet Bogue.

Mr. Johnson has been very prominently identified with the Prohibition party in this part of the State, and was that party's candidate for member of the House of Representatives, and lacked but 100 votes of election, receiving 2,700. He has served in other offices, for three terms being trustee of Monroe township, Howard county. He is a member of the Society of Friends.

CHARLES H. CAMPBELL, one of the leading citizens and prosperous business men of Shelbyville, Ind., was born in Lexington, Ind., Nov. 28, 1853.

The paternal ancestors of Mr. Campbell were among the early Colonists of Virginia, and his grandfather was in that State, according to family records, about 1777. The family came to Indiana in 1823, settling in Scott county, where both the parents of our subject were born, Abram Campbell, Oct. 17, 1825, and she who later became the wife of Abram and mother of Charles, Mary J. E. Doolittle, June 27, 1825.

The education of Charles H. Campbell was attained in the public schools. In 1872 he engaged in railroadng, locating the following year in Shelbyville, which he made his headquarters until 1875, when he was transferred to Cincinnati. In 1876, he returned to Shelbyville, holding the position of ticket agent for the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis & Chicago railroad until 1890. In that year he embarked in the manufacture of hall furniture, and was so encouraged by his success, that he felt justified in organizing the Blanchard Furniture Company, of which he was elected secretary and treasurer as well as director. These offices he held until 1899, when he purchased the interests of the Blanchards, and in 1900, the firm name was changed to the C. H. Campbell Furniture Company, and Mr. Campbell became, and has since continued its president and treasurer. The specialty of the company is the manufacture of hall furniture. Employment is given 125 hands, and the business is a large and increasing one. The product is intended for a rich trade, and the market extends all over the United States and foreign countries. The wonderful success is due Mr. Campbell's executive ability and clear, keen foresight.

Mr. Campbell has been twice married. On Sept. 3, 1876, he married Lucinda M., daughter of William and Margaret (Chamberlin) Harding of Cleves, Ohio, by whom he had six children: Ada L.; George W.; Margaret M.; Ruth; Florence and Stanley R. His wife died July 31, 1899. On Sept. 10, 1900, Mr. Campbell married Angeline Gowers of Madison, Ind., and they had one child, Charles H., Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are very acceptable members of the Presbyterian Church of Shelbyville. Fraternally he is a member of Shelbyville Lodge, No. 239, I. O. O. F.; Shelbyville Lodge No. 57, B. P. O. E., and the Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Republican, and he served three years as a member of the Shelbyville school board, and although residing in a largely Democratic ward he was elected a member of the council on the Republican ticket, by a handsome majority. Influential politically, the head of a large corporation, and very popular socially, Mr. Campbell has had a successful career with the prospect of continued prosperity.

HENRY A. WATERMAN, for over twenty years a resident of Five Points, in Franklin township, Marion county, was born in Warren township, Feb. 2, 1859, son of Christian and Christina (Ostermeyer) Waterman.

Christian Waterman was a native of Germany, born in 1825; he came to America in 1849 at the time of the great gold excitement, and spent his first three years in California. Returning to the East he decided to make Indiana his home and settled in Warren township in 1853. He became in time the owner of 400 acres of land, which he improved, and by dint of hard work was well-to-do at the time of his death, although he came to America a poor man. He had a family of eleven children only one of whom has died. Mr. Waterman was a member of the Lutheran Church, and was a Democrat in political faith though never an active party worker. His death occurred Jan. 6, 1903, in his seventy-eighth year.

Henry A. Waterman has always followed the calling of a blacksmith, has all the best modern appliances for his work and does a large business. He owns a place at Five Points, covering two acres of land, upon which he has erected a fine house and made general improvements until his property is worth over $6,000. Like his father he has never given any special time to politics, but votes the Democratic ticket.

Mr. Waterman was married, in 1882, to Miss Louise Achgill, daughter of Christian and Christiana (Kruger) Achgill, natives of Germany. The parents were farming people and came here at an early day. Both died in 1892. Of their family of twelve children eight are living. To Henry A. and Louise Waterman five children have been born, namely: Lillie C., at home; Theodore, at work at home; Harry H., Clarence and Edwin. All have been sent to good schools and have been well educated. The family are all connected with the Lutheran Church. Long a resident of that locality, Mr. Waterman has earned a permanent place in the esteem and respect of his fellow neighbors.

C. S. BROWN, M. D., a prominent physician in New Bethel, Franklin township, Marion county, was born in the place where he still makes his home, March 17, 1858, son of Dr. S. M. and Mahala (Brady) Brown.

Dr. S. M. Brown was twice married. His first wife, Miss Mahala Brady, was the mother of nine children, namely: Henry J., a trustee of the township and a merchant of New Bethel; E. O., a farmer in Franklin township; Dr. C. S.; Arthur, an attorney; C. A., in the city engineer's office; Harvey, an attorney; Edward A., an Indianapolis physician; Frank T., an attorney; and Ruth, who lives with her father at New Bethel. Dr. Brown married (second) Miss Merilda McGaughey, daughter of an old-time settler in the county. In politics Dr. S. M. Brown is a Democrat.

The preparation of Dr. C. S. Brown for his professional career was very thorough. Beginning in the common schools he went afterward to Lebanon, Ohio, took a teacher's course as a preliminary to his two years at teaching, then attended college at Valparaiso, Ind., for a year, was next at Butler College, in Irvington, and finally he began the study of medicine at Central Medical College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Indianapolis. He was given his diploma in 1882, and returning to New Bethel has ever since been in practice there. Enthusiastic over his profession, thoroughly prepared, and ever in touch with the latest medical thought and discoveries, Dr. Brown has been most successful and has a large practice.

The same year that Dr. Brown began his career as a physician, 1882, he was married to Miss Anna Toon, daughter of Martin S. and Jane Toon, farming people and old time residents of the township, now deceased. Three children have been born to the Doctor and his wife: Mamie, Lulu (deceased) and Ethel. Dr. Brown and his wife belong to the Baptist Church. The Doctor himself is a Mason, belonging to Lodge No. 134, at Acton, Ind., and is a member of the Red Men, Lodge No. 266, at New Bethel. He is a Democrat, but has never taken an active part in public life, as the arduous demands of his profession leave him little time for participation in politics.

K. C. HERSHEY, M. D., one of the leading medical practitioners at Carmel, Ind., where he has been associated with his brother for the past seven years, was born July 28, 1856, in Clark county, Ohio, son of B. F. and Sarah (Helmer) Hershey, the former of whom was born Aug. 18, 1831, also in Clark county, Ohio.

Jacob Hershey, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Pennsylvania. In early manhood he settled in Ohio, engaged in farming and lived to the age of eighty-four years. His son B. F. continued to carry on the farm, married and reared these children: Dr. K. C., of this sketch; S. D.; Ella, in Clark county; J. Milo, treasurer of Hamilton county; Minnie, wife of Albert Gunn; and Dr. F. C., who married Dessie Crago. In 1859 B. F. Hershey came to Indiana and settled at Westfield, where he and wife still reside, aged respectively seventy-three and seventy years. He served in the Civil war, a member of Company A, 101st Ind. V. I., enlisting in 1862, and being mustered out in June, 1865. For some years he had lived retired, but still retains his interest in public affairs and local happenings, and regularly casts his vote for the candidate of the Republican party. For eight years he served as assessor. He is a member of the Dunkard Church, while his wife is a Friend.

Dr. Hershey was educated in the common schools at Westfield, and then entered the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, where he was graduated, March 30, 1877, and began practice April 16, 1878, locating at Gray, Ind. In 1896 he took a post graduate course at Chicago, and in May, 1899, at the Polyclinic College and hospital, in the same city. His brother, F. C., with whom he is associated, is also a graduate of the same college. For thirteen years our subject remained in practice at Gray, and then came to Carmel. His long professional service, of thirty years, has made him well known all over the county. He has been county coroner, but has neither time nor inclination to accept many political honors.

On July 28, 1884, Dr. Hershey married Olive Kinzer, daughter of Levi and Samantha (Haines) Kinzer, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Hershey is the eldest of their three children, the others being: Glenn, and Edna, deceased. Dr. and Mrs. Hershey have one daughter, Edith, born October 26, 1891. She is a student, a bright, intellectual maiden, with musical inclinations and ability.

Dr. Hershey is a Republican. Fraternally he is a Master Mason, a member of Carmel Lodge, No. 421; past grand in the order of Knights of Pythias, Lodge No. 355, Carmel; past grand in the I. O. O. F., No. 401; a member of the M. W. A., and of the Elks, No. 576, at Noblesville. In religious views, he is a Friend, and his wife has a birthright membership in the same body. Dr. Hershey owns considerable property in Carmel and a good farm, consisting of eighty acres in Clay township. He has met with professional success and enjoys the respect of his fellow physicians and the confidence of the public.

NEWBY. The following account of the Newby family was given by Dr. John C. Newby for the Biographical Record of Madison and Hamilton Counties, published in 1893, and is published here at the request of Howard H. Newby, of Sheridan.

The family traces its lineage to one of the heroes of the war of the Revolution, John Newby, the great-great-grandfather of Howard H., was born in Pennsylvania in 1756, and he served under General Marion in the Revolutionary war. At the close of the war he settled on his land grant in Kentucky, where he remained until his death. When more than ninety years of age, accompanied by a sister of about seventy years, he rode on horseback through the southern part of Kentucky, and on north to Hamilton county, Ind., on a visit to his son John W., who had long before settled there. When about to mount his horse for the return trip he disdained assistance, remarking "See what a man ninety years old can do," swung himself into his saddle, and rode away. This visit to Indiana covered a period of two or three weeks, and the entire distance traveled was more than one thousand miles. His brother William was also a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

John W. Newby, son of John, was born in Kentucky. He came to Indiana in 1824, spending a year in Owen county. In 1832 he brought his family to Marion county, whence after about four years he removed to the almost unbroken wilderness of Hamilton county, settling on government land in White River township. He cleared and improved the farm, and made his home there until his death. One of the reasons given for his leaving Kentucky was his hatred of slavery. His only brother Sutton inherited and lived on the old homestead received by their father for his army service.

Squire Newby, son of John W., was born in Kentucky March 4, 1828, one of a family of four sons and four daughters. He was a successful farmer, and has made his home in Jackson township, for the past twenty-five years. His wife, Mary Jane Colip, was born in Marion county, Ind., in 1831, and she died in Hamilton county in 1874. Hon. John Colip, her father, was born in Rockingham county, Va., and was a descendant of Conrad Colip, a Hessian soldier who served under Lord Cornwallis at the time of that General's surrender; a tradition in the family says that he was a redemptioner, that is, his services were sold under contract to pay his passage to this country, and he was obliged to serve seven years in Rockingham county to pay this money, but this, however, could hardly be true if he came with Lord Cornwallis's army as a soldier. It is also stated that he became a wealthy man in Virginia. The Colip family came to Indiana in 1820. Hon. John Colip was a local politician of considerable note and was a pronounced Abolitionist, and he served as justice of the peace many years. His brother Samuel Colip was an influential politician and served as a member of the Legislature. To Squire and Mary Jane (Colip) Newby were born nine children, three sons and six daughters: Dr. John C. is mentioned below; Sarah Ellen married Eli Rondybusch, and died at the age of twenty-eight, leaving two children (Both she and her husband were teachers); Margaret Jane married William H. Hines, a lumberman of Cincinnati; Nancy died at the age of ten years; William and Lulu died in infancy; John S. is an attorney in Oklahoma; Mary married James Driver, and died at the age of twenty-six, leaving two children; and Amanda married James Eyler, a farmer of Jackson township.

Dr. John C. Newby, father of Howard H., was born in White River township, Hamilton county, April 27, 1849. He received his education in the common schools, supplementing this with one year in Butler University. His early training was along agricultural lines, but in 1872 he began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. John M. Barber, of Arcadia. In 1874 he entered Bellevue, where he studied two years, and in 1879 he graduated from the Indiana Medical College. He began the practice of his profession in Boxley, where he remained sixteen years. In 1890 he located in Sheridan, where he continued to meet with unqualified success. Dr. Newby is a substantial business man, and is a director and stockholder in the Sheridan State Bank, president of the Sheridan Gas & Coal Oil Company, and is interested in many other enterprises, besides owning considerable real estate, including 400 acres in Hamilton county and in Arkansas. His fraternal relations are with the Knights of Pythias and the Masons. In politics he is a Republican.

Dr. Newby was married in 1869 to Mary E. Cluckner (name formerly Glochner), daughter of Joseph Cluckner, a mechanic of German birth. Four children were born of this marriage, namely: Howard H., Everett E., Phoebe C. and Alonzo. The family residence is one of the most attractive in Sheridan.

HOWARD H. NEWBY, son of Dr. Newby, was born in Arcadia, Ind., April 24, 1871. He accompanied his father on his removal to Boxley, and later to Sheridan, where he was educated in the public schools, including the high school. On completing his education he became a clerk in the drug store of C. E. Elliott, with whom he remained four years, and then represented his father in the Golden Rule Company. This company was incorporated and traded in general merchandise, Mr. Newby managing the grocery department. The business grew and gradually extended over two floors of the largest building in town, besides two warehouses. Dr. Newby was one of the largest stockholders, and Howard H. was a member of the board of directors. He remained two years and the property was then sold to Watson & McIntyre. After this sale was consummated he used the experience there acquired to engage successfully in business. In 1890-91 Mr. Newby rented his father-in-law's farm, and was appointed postmaster at Sheridan in 1900 by President McKinley, an office he has since continued to fill to the utmost satisfaction of the people. He has been active in the promotion of rural free deliveries, and established the first route from the Sheridan office, at a time when there were but three others in Hamilton county, and he has so enlarged the service that now Sheridan has seven rural routes.

Mr. Newby is a Mason, belonging to the Blue Lodge at Sheridan. He is also a member of the I. O. R. M., of which he is a trustee, and this lodge is now completing a substantial business building, with lodge room, the first lodge room to be erected in Sheridan.

On March 17, 1899, in Sheridan, Mr. Newby was married to Miss Lemma A. Farrow, born near Sheridan, in September, 1871, daughter of William and Aurelia (Horn) Farrow, the former a successful farmer and business man who came to this section from Switzerland county, Indiana.

CHARLES V. HARDIN, postmaster of Fortville, Vernon township, Hancock Co., Ind., a substantial citizen and veteran of the Civil war, was born Sept. 26, 1838, in Philadelphia, Pa., son of Philip and Mary (Freeborn) Hardin.

Isaiah Hardin, grandfather of Charles V., was of Irish descent and a resident of Delaware, although he died in Philadelphia, June 30, 1821, aged fifty-three years, four months, eight days. He married Margaret, and to them were born children as follows: William, born Dec. 7, 1796; Susannah, born July 28, 1798; Thomas, born Feb. 23, 1800; Isaiah, born Sept. 23, 1801; Philip, born Aug. 19, 1803; Mary A., born April 14, 1806; Elizabeth, born June 14, 1807; Margaret, born Oct. 26, 18—; Catherine, born June 23, 1812; John, born Feb. 9, 1816; and Jacob, born in 1819.

Philip Hardin was born in Delaware, and was but a boy when his parents removed to Philadelphia, Pa. He there engaged in the tobacco business with his brother William, but in 1839 removed to Huntsville, Ind., in wagons, the journey taking six weeks. He bought a farm of eighty acres near Alfonte, but only resided thereon for one year, there engaging in agricultural pursuits, removing to Huntsville, where he learned the wagon-maker's trade. He carried on a wagon-making and blacksmith shop for many years with his brother, John, and died in the faith of the Baptist Church, Feb. 5, 1878, at Huntsville. His wife passed away in April, 1887, in Pendleton, at the home of her daughter, Margaret. Mr. Hardin was married in Philadelphia, to Mary Freeborn, born April 22, 1822, daughter of Robert and Mary (Ingham) Freeborn, and to this union there were born children as follows: Elizabeth, Margaret, Catherine, Mary L. and Charles V., all born at Philadelphia, and John, William and Evelyn, born at Huntsville. Robert Freeborn, father of Mrs. Hardin, was of Scotch stock, was a seafaring man and captain of a vessel. He resided in New York City, where his children—Robert, Elizabeth and Mary—were born, but after the death of his wife removed to Philadelphia, where until his death he made his home with his daughter, Elizabeth.

In 1840, when about eighteen months old, Charles V. Hardin was brought to Indiana by his parents, and he was reared to manhood in Huntsville and educated in the schools of that place. He enlisted Aug. 12, 1862, at Alfonte, as a private of Company G, 12th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged on account of the close of the war, at Washington, D. C., June 8, 1865. He participated in the battles of Richmond, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Dallas, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Atlanta (July 20, 21, 22 and 28), Jonesboro, Savannah, Griswoldville, Columbia, S. C., Bentonville and Raleigh.

The following is an extract from Col. Reuben Williams' farewell address, June 19, 1865, to the regiment: "For more than four years the regiment had an existence. Many of you have been present during the entire period, and all of you have fought under the same battle-scarred colors for three long years. The regiment numbered 1,400 men in all; 900 were killed or died of disease, and their bones may be found in Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Louisiana, Mississippi, at Atlanta, Ga., and the two Carolinas and Virginia. They marched in every Southern State except two, Texas and Florida. They fought upwards of twenty distinct and bloody engagements and marched with knapsacks on their backs upwards of 6,000 miles. Thirty members of the regiment fell at Richmond. They were in the Atlanta campaign, and Sherman's March to the Sea. At Washington the regiment had the honor of leading General Sherman's grand army in the greatest review ever held upon this continent." Mr. Hardin was taken prisoner at Richmond, with others of his regiment, but was paroled the next day. He was a faithful, brave and cheerful soldier and bore the hardships of the army life well.

Before his enlistment Mr. Hardin had learned the trade of blacksmith, and on his return to Pendleton joined his wife and went with her to Alfonte, where he worked at his trade until 1874. At this time he came to Fortville and in 1891 was appointed postmaster by President Harrison, a position in which he served for four years, after which he returned to his shop. During McKinley's administration he was again appointed to that office, and he is still serving in that capacity. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln and has voted for every Republican candidate for president since that time. He is a member of Sol. D. Kempton Post No. 228, G. A. R. at Fortville, and in this he has held all of the offices, including that of commander for three years. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Fortville, in which he has passed all of the chairs, as well as representing his Lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State. He was a charter member of the local Tribe of Red Men, held the office of sachem, and represented the Lodge in the Grand Council of the State.

Before enlisting in the Union army Mr. Hardin was united in marriage, Jan. 19, 1860, to Cynthia S. March, born in Madison Co., Ind., daughter of David and Sarah Jane (Jordan) March, and to this union there were born children as follows: William D., who died at Fortville in December, 1904; Maude F., who married E. N. Gray, of Richmond, Ind., general agent of the Massillon Bridge Company; Jesse L.; Neva K.; Fred N., a clerk in Fortville, who married Grace Bills and has one son, Phillip N.; and John.

JOHN P. McCANN, a retired farmer, who has lived in Center township for the past seventy-five years, is said to be the oldest continuous resident of Boone county. In years he is almost a centenarian, for his birth occurred in 1813, on the 21st of December, in Nicholas county, Ky. His parents were James and Elizabeth (Cunningham) McCann.

James McCann was born in Ligonier Valley, Pa., and was only a child when his parents took him to Kentucky, then only beginning to be settled, and with the Indians still numerous. As he grew older he became a cripple, due to a disease known as white swelling, and being thus shut off from many active pursuits, he supported himself for the greater part of his life by being a shoemaker. As a young man he taught school for some years. In 1833 he went to Indiana, and settled in Boone county, where for fourteen years he held the office of county recorder. A member of the Christian Church (Disciples), as was also his wife, he was well acquainted with Alexander Campbell and many of the early reformers in the Restoration movement. He died in Boone county in his eighty-fifth year, and his wife survived him, dying when she was nearly ninety. They had four sons and four daughters, and the three still living are: John P.; Nancy, widow of Quartis E. Rust; and Mary, widow of Frank Williams, of Center township. The paternal grandfather of John P. McCann was John McCann. He married a Galbreath. John McCann was a native of Pennsylvania of Scotch-Irish descent, and was a tavern keeper in Kentucky, near Marysville. He was killed in middle life by falling from a tree, leaving a good sized family. His wife married again, had six children by the second marriage and lived to a good old age. She was a Presbyterian. The maternal grandfather of John P. McCann, was a native of Ireland, who came to America, lived for many years in Kentucky, and there died at an advanced age. He had two sons and four daughters.

John P. McCann was nearly twenty years old when he came to Boone county with his father. His education had been gained in the subscription schools in Kentucky, and from an early age he had worked on a farm, so that he naturally continued through life making farming his vocation. He lived with his father until the latter left the farm in order to serve as county recorder, when the place was divided and half of it given to the son. This eighty acres he afterward exchanged for 108 acres, which he improved and occupied for many years. He has now divided his land among his children and grandson, and makes his home with John Reynolds. Formerly a Whig in his political views, he went from that party to the Republican, which he has ever since supported.

Mr. McCann's first wife was Miss Jane Forsyth, a native of Kentucky; they were married Jan. 5, 1837, and four children were born to them: James and David H., the eldest and youngest, were killed in the Civil war, the former served three years, then re-enlisted in March, and in June, was fatally wounded in the battle of Kenesaw Mountain; the latter, only eighteen years of age when he enlisted, served in the last two years of the war, and died from fever contracted during his military life. Nancy, the third child, married the late Edward Reynolds, and had eight children, John A., James A., William, Harry E., Robert R., May, Stella and Charley (William died at the age of ten years). Elizabeth, the second child of John and Jane McCann, is unmarried and makes her home with her father with the Reynolds family, on one of Mr. McCann's former farms, a mile and a half north of Lebanon, which he has occupied since 1861. Mrs. Jane (Forsyth) McCann died in 1879, aged sixty-eight years. She and her husband were charter members of the Lebanon Christian Church.

In 1884 Mr. McCann married (second) Mrs. Ruth Edmundson, widow of Rev. Robert Edmundson, a minister of the Christian Church, to which she belonged. Her death occurred March 26, 1902, at the age of seventy-eight years. By her first marriage Mrs. McCann had had five children, one of whom died; the others are Monroe, George, Newton and Frank (Mrs. Matthew Kinsell).

Mr. McCann has seen the county grow from a wilderness to its present fine state of development. When he first came to Lebanon there were but two or three houses there, and in the growth of the region he did all in his power to assist the progress of civilization, and he worthily holds a place among the representative and prominent men of Boone county. From early life he has been a devout follower of the teachings of the Christian Church, and has been an elder in the Lebanon organization almost continuously for over twenty years.

PETER KLINGENSMITH. Among the progressive and public-spirited men of Pike township, Marion county, Ind., is Peter Klingensmith, who was born in the township. Feb. 21, 1859, son of Simon and Eliza (Hessong) Klingensmith, the former born in 1828.

Simon Klingensmith's father was born in Pennsylvania, and was a distiller by trade, as well as a farmer. Simon, himself, by trade was a millwright and carpenter, who came with his parents from Pennsylvania to Indiana. This was in the very early days, and hard work was required to reclaim the land from the wilderness, but he succeeded and became a wealthy man. In politics, he was a Democrat. He belonged to the Lutheran Church, and fraternally, he was a Mason. Later in life, he worked at his trade and became a large contractor. He had a family of four children: M., deceased; Frances, who married Jesse Dunn, a school teacher; Peter, our subject; Laura, who married William Artman, a farmer.

Mr. Klingensmith, the subject proper, has 101 acres of land, now worth $100 an acre, and his farm is one of the best in the township. He conducts a fine dairy, and raises Chester White hogs. All the improvements upon the place have been made by him, and he has put in 1,500 rods of four to eight inch tiling. He is industrious, enterprising and progressive, and a recognized leader in matters agricultural in the county. In politics, he is a Democrat, but usually votes for the candidate he believes best fitted for the office. Not aspiring to office, he takes but little part in politics, and belongs to no lodges, but devotes himself to his own affairs. Mr. Klingensmith and his brother-in-law also run a threshing machine as well as a shredder and operate all over their portion of Indiana.

In 1882, Mr. Klingensmith was united in marriage with Artensa Staton, daughter of George and Mary (Coble) Staton. Two children have been born of this union: Elmer, who graduated in the class of 1904; and Edith, who is taking music lessons, being possessed of a remarkable talent in that direction. The children are at home, and very intelligent young people.

AMOS D. McCORMACK. Few there are of the present inhabitants of Indiana, who have followed the development of the country through so many years as has Amos D. McCormack, long a resident of Indianapolis, but later of Lebanon, Boone county. Born in the former city Jan. 29, 1827, Mr. McCormack has watched the section round him gradually change from an almost unbroken region to a country dotted with thriving cities and villages.

The paternal grandfather was John McCormack, a Virginia farmer, of Scotch-Irish descent, and the father of a large family. He lived but to middle life, his demise occurring in 1837. He had moved westward from Virginia to Ohio, and there his son, James, father of Amos D. was born. A millwright by trade, James McCormack went from Ohio to Indiana among the early pioneers, and settled first in Connersville. Later, in March, 1819, he and two brothers, Samuel and John, went to Indianapolis and made that city their home for many years, John building the first house on Washington street, on the banks of the White River. James left Indianapolis for a year or more to try his fortunes in Rush county, but he returned and bought the land where Crown Hill Cemetery now is. In 1840 he moved across the river, and on the east side built a mill, which he ran for a few years. His next residence was in Hendricks county, where his death occurred in 1858, at the age of sixty-one. By his wife, Patsey (Perkins) McCormack, he had thirteen children, seven sons and six daughters, of whom five are now living, namely: John L., of Indianapolis; Amos D.; Ira Newton, of Jamestown; James William, of Bainbridge, Putnam Co., Ind.; and Kate, wife of William H. Eagle, of Frankfort, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. McCormack were both Baptists. She survived him until 1880, and died in Frankfort, aged seventy-seven. Mrs. McCormack was a native of South Carolina, daughter of Jacob Perkins, a native of that State also, and a dry goods merchant by occupation. He was one of the early pioneers of Indiana, and died on the family homestead near Rushville in 1837, in middle life. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Sailors, bore him twenty-one children, eighteen of whom lived.

Amos D. McCormack was reared in Indianapolis, and continued to make that city his home until 1866. He attended the subscription schools, and continued his education until he was sixteen years old, and then began learning the tailor's trade, which he has followed ever since. In 1866 he removed from Indianapolis to Lebanon, and established himself there permanently as a tailor. In 1892 he built his present home at No. 424 North East street.

On Oct. 2, 1851, Amos D. McCormack and Susan Koontz were united in marriage. Miss Koontz was the daughter of John and Hester Koontz. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McCormack: Harry and Luella, but both died in early childhood. Mr. McCormack and his wife are both members of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Republican—one of the staunch old party men who voted for Fremont in 1856, and he has continued steadfast in the faith.

J. J. KNOX, born Dec. 18, 1863, in New Madrid County, Mo., is a son of Silas and Frances (Seeright) Knox, the former of whom was a farmer who was born in Kentucky, but went to Missouri, at an early day. There he engaged in farming and became well-to-do. He had a family of three children: Lora, who married Al. Harland, a carpenter, who now resides at Indianapolis; J. J.: and James, deceased. Silas Knox died in 1881, and his wife passed away in 1869, having been a tender mother and faithful helpmate.

The education of J. J. Knox was gained in the public schools of Hamilton county, and after completing the same he worked in a store for eighteen years, and in 1900, he bought his present drug store, which he has very successfully operated, and met with unqualified support from the people of Zionsville and vicinity. In addition, Mr. Knox owns town property, and is recognized as one of the leading men of the place. When a boy, Mr. Knox lived upon a farm, and still takes an interest in farming matters, although he owns no farm property. Although his father was a Democrat, he is a Republican, and has served very acceptably as treasurer of the town for two years, and as a member of the town board for two years. Fraternally, he is a member of the K. of P., No. 251, Zionsville lodge.

In 1890, Mr. Knox was united in marriage with Nettie Smith, daughter of James and Sarah (Mower) Smith, of German descent, who came from Germany. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Knox; Doris, who is attending school, a bright young girl with a decided taste for music; and Grace and Harold, at home. Mr. Knox is favorably known not only professionally, but personally, and he has many friends in the community.

JOHN K. STIERWALT. Morgan county, Ind., is noted for its fine farms and pleasant farm homes. One of the well known citizens of that section is John K. Stierwalt, of Adams township, this county, who was born in the county, Jan. 6, 1855, a son of Hamilton and Phoebe (Kirkham) Stierwalt, natives, respectively, of Owen and Hendricks counties, Indiana.

Frederick Stierwalt, grandfather of our subject, was born in Germany and came to the United States in Colonial days. In the twenties, he came to Indiana, locating in Owen county, where he took up government land, cleared it, and made it his home until death.

Hamilton Stierwalt, father of John K., was born, reared and married in Owen county, but in 1852, he came to Morgan county, Ind., and located in Ashland township, buying wild land. Going promptly to work, he cleared off his property, and lived upon it until 1897, when he died in the month of July. The mother died at the home of her son, John K. She wove and spun in those early days, and worked as few women of today would be able. Both parents were members of the Christian Church, and he was a firm Republican. He was well and favorably known throughout the neighborhood as a successful man, and good citizen. Fraternally, he was a member of the I. O. O. F. Six children were born to Hamilton Stierwalt and wife, two dying in infancy. The others were: John K.; Frederick H., a farmer on the old place; Melinda B., who married John Risinger; Winfield S., who died and left a widow and four children.

John K. Stierwalt was well educated in the common schools and remained with his father until his marriage, when he took forty acres of his father's place, bought forty more, and built a house upon it, in which he resided until 1900, when he sold his farm, and moved to another, which he had bought in the meanwhile. He now has 200 acres of fine farming land, and carries on general farming.

In 1878, Mr. Stierwalt married Margaret H. Brown, born in Morgan county, daughter of Robert Brown, a farmer. She died in 1882. In 1882, he married Sarah E. Rodgers, born in Morgan county, a daughter of William and Margaret Rodgers, both of Ireland, who came to Indiana at an early date, and were married in Indiana. They became well known in this locality. Mr. and Mrs. Stierwalt have four children: Maggie P., Elmer H., William E., twin of Elmer H., and Mertie B., all at home. The young ladies are greatly interested in music, and the three eldest children are graduates of the common school. They are members of the Christian Church, and take an active part in its good work, and participate in its social life. Mr. Stierwalt is a Republican, but does not desire office. He has telephone connection with the city, and his home is a refined and happy one, well supplied with modern conveniences. His wife and daughters are charming ladies, interested in current matters, and leaders in the social life of the community.

SAMUEL MARION BROOKS (deceased), formerly a highly respected citizen and representative farmer, who was an honored veteran of the Civil war, was born Oct. 9, 1835, in Jefferson county, Ind., son of Madison and Nancy (Brooks) Brooks, who were pioneer settlers of Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, Indiana.

Madison Brooks was born in Stokes county, N. C., Sept. 5, 1814, and is the oldest man now living in Fall Creek township. He is also the largest land owner, and, after giving away 1,000 acres, still owns 1,850 acres. His parents were John and Sarah Elizabeth Brooks. John Brooks was a son of William, who came from English ancestors, and moved to Indiana in very early times, settling in Franklin county, where he died. His children were: John, Elias, William, Walter, Lottie and Malinda. It is believed that William was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. John Brooks was probably born in America, and it is known that he married, in North Carolina, Sarah Elizabeth Heath, daughter of Samuel and Lucy (Austin) Heath. The Heath family also originated in England. Samuel Heath was a farmer of Franklin county, who moved to Jefferson county, Ind., where he cleared a farm of 160 acres, on which he passed the rest of his life. His children were: William, Samuel, Edward, Sarah Elizabeth and Lucy.

The children of John and Sarah Elizabeth Brooks were: William, Baxter, John, Jane and Sarah. The children of his second marriage were: Samuel, Madison, Lucy, Nancy, Eli, Isaiah and several daughters whose names are not remembered.

John Brooks, the grandfather of Samuel M. Brooks, moved from North Carolina about 1814 to Franklin county, Ind., and two years later to Jefferson county, settling in the woods on an eighty-acre tract. Here he developed a fine farm and made an excellent home, but later disposed of it, probably very advantageously, and in the fall of 1832 he removed to Hancock county, and located on 160 acres of land he had previously entered. Before his death, which occurred at the age of sixty-five years, he had cleared about forty acres of this farm. He was a member of the Methodist Church. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat.

Madison Brooks received scarcely any education, in the old log cabin schools, because his boyhood was mainly occupied with hard work. Nevertheless, Mr. Brooks is a man of excellent judgment, and what he failed to learn in the schools he has learned by experience and by contact with his fellow men. When nineteen years old, Aug. 8, 1833, he was married in Jefferson county, Ind., to his cousin, Nancy Brooks, born in North Carolina, daughter of Walter and Charlotta (Martin) Brooks, the former of whom was a brother of John Brooks, father of Madison. He was a farmer in Jefferson county, where he owned 160 acres of land which he had entered for himself, and he also entered land for his children, the family owning many acres of fine land. Walter Brooks died in old age on his farm, survived for a short time by his wife. They had fourteen children, among whom were Martin, James, John, Wilson, Young, Thomas, Abraham, William, Annie, Sarah, Nancy and Betsey.

After marriage Madison Brooks lived for three years with his brother-in-law, David Llewellyn, in Switzerland county, and then bought 120 acres of land in Jefferson county, to which he later added, clearing it all and residing there nearly twenty years. He then lived on 120 acres in Switzerland county for one year, but in 1853 moved to Hamilton county, settling in Fall Creek township, and buying 149 acres, where he now lives. At the time of purchase eighty acres of this land was cleared and a log cabin had been erected. He finished clearing his land and built a frame house in the summer of 1863. In 1856 he had bought thirty acres south of his present farm and kept on buying at different times until he has now 650 acres in the home farm, and owns altogether 1,850 in Hancock, Hamilton and Madison counties. He worked hard and was a good manager and followed his own ideas in the rearing of his sons, making them all good business men as well as men of substance. It was his method to put his sons on land as soon as they were old enough, permitting them to go into debt in part payment, and having them pay themselves free. The children of Mr. Brooks' first wife were: Elizabeth, Samuel M., Eli, Robert, Clarinda, Christian, Melvin, Newton and one that died in infancy. His first wife died in 1854, and he subsequently married Mrs. Mary Jane (Hurlet) Hare, a widow, who had one son, Milton, who was a soldier in the Civil war. The children of the second marriage were: Melancthon, Israel, Augustus, Albert and a daughter that died young. He had four sons in the Civil war: Samuel M., Eli, Melvin and Robert, the latter of whom was a prisoner who was exchanged but died subsequently at Annapolis, Md. In 1837 Mr. Brooks united with the Methodist Church, and he has always been active in assisting it. He contributed largely to the building of the church in his neighborhood. In politics he is a Republican and he cast his first vote for President William Henry Harrison. Considering the deficiencies in his education, Mr. Brooks has been remarkably successful in his accumulation of property. His knowledge of arithmetic has never extended beyond addition, and he has little skill in penmanship, and what he has he taught himself. Although Mr. Brooks is nearing the century mark, he retains much vigor both of mind and body.

Samuel Marion Brooks was a small boy when he accompanied his parents to Fall Creek township. He attended the district schools and secured a good common school education, but was trained to hard farm work from his boyhood. Early in the days of the Civil war he decided to become a soldier, and enlisted in Hamilton county, Aug. 20, 1861, and was mustered in on Aug. 31, as a private in Company A, 11th Reg., Ind. V. I., under Capt. George Butler and Col. Lew Wallace, for three years, and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, on account of disability. He took part in the following battles: Fort Henry, Feb. 6, 1862; Fort Donelson, Feb. 15, 1862; Shiloh, April 7, Corinth, April 30, Port Gibson, May 1, 1863; Champion Hills, May 16, Siege of Vicksburg, May 20 to July 4, expedition to Jackson, July 5 to 8; and Opelousas, Oct. 21, 1863. On Feb. 1, 1864, he was veteranized, and after a furlough was assigned to the Second Brigade, 10th Corps, and participated in skirmishes in August, and early in September in the battle of Winchester; Fisher's Hill, Sept. 22, 1864; and Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864. His last engagement was at Vicksburg, Miss., and he was honorably discharged in October, 1864.

After his return Mr. Brooks resumed farming on his father's place, which he acquired as before related. The log house into which he moved is still standing. In 1880 he erected the comfortable two-story frame house. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle, and acquired considerable land, at one time owning 295 acres. He was married (first) Feb. 4, 1869, to Clarissa McKinstry, born Aug. 5, 1847, in Hamilton county, daughter of William McKinstry, and they had two children, Effie, who married Levi Denny, lives in Kansas; and Garretta, who married Lemuel Clark, lives in Hamilton county. Mrs. Brooks died on the farm, and Mr. Brooks was married (second) April 18, 1880, in Hancock county, to Amanda M. Denney, born in Hancock county, Ind., Dec. 3, 1850, daughter of Wyatt and Lydia E. (Moore) Denney. To this union were born two children: Ethel, who married Fred Johnston, resides on the home farm, and has one son Robert; and Vena is a graduate of the High School at Noblesville. Mr. Brooks died Feb. 18, 1898, on the home farm, where Mrs. Brooks and her daughters still reside. He was a member of the G. A. R., at Fishers Switch, and of the Masonic fraternity at McCordsville. In politics he was a Republican.

Wyatt Denney, father of Mrs. Brooks, was one of the best known pioneers of Hancock county. He settled on a farm of 140 acres in Vernon township, south of Fortville, which he entered and cleared. He married Lydia Moore, born in Rockingham county, Va., but reared in Hancock county, Ind. James Denney, grandfather of Mrs. Brooks, came from North Carolina to Rockingham county, and died on his farm there. The children of Wyatt Denney were: William, George, Elizabeth, Charles, Amanda, James and Lafayette. William and George both served in the Civil war, the former in the 2nd Indiana Cavalry for three years, and the latter in the 12th Ind. Infantry, for three years, and both survived. Wyatt Denney was a justice of the peace for a considerable period. From the age of seventeen years he was a member of the Baptist Church, and was always prominent in its work. He died July 14, 1865. Both paternal and maternal grandfathers of Mrs. Brooks were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and were also in the war of 1812.

LEONARD BURKHARDT, who since 1880 has been residing on his fine farm of forty acres, is a veteran of the Civil war, and one of Tipton's representative agriculturists. Mr. Burkhardt was born Jan. 20, 1840, on the river Rhine, Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, son of Mathia and Savilla (Schnable) Burkhardt.

Mathia Burkhardt owned a farm of eleven acres in his native country, and there he engaged in farming until 1854, when he came to this country, via Paris, France, landing at New Orleans after a forty-five days voyage in a sailing vessel. When he left Germany there were nine children in his family, but four of these died on the voyage over, and one in New Orleans. Mr. Burkhardt also died, and it is supposed that he was murdered, as $4,000 which he had in his belt was missing. Shortly thereafter the mother died from the shock of her husband's death and from cholera, and the children, left orphans, were placed in an orphan's home in New Orleans, except Leonard, who was taken charge of by his uncle, Fred Burkhardt, who had come to this country with the family. For seven weeks they stayed in New Orleans, whence they came in a steamboat up the river to Jeffersonville, Ind., to the home of another uncle, John Burkhardt, who had settled in Tipton county some years before.

Leonard Burkhardt had attended school for some years in Germany, as the law requires, and after coming to this country attended the district schools for a short time, although the greater part of his time was given to the hard work of his uncle's farm. He enlisted at twenty-one years of age, in Noblesville, Ind., and was mustered in at Indianapolis, Aug. 29, 1861, for three years or during the war, serving until honorably discharged, when he re-enlisted in Tennessee and served until the close of the war in 1865. His service was in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, South and North Carolina and Virginia, and his battles were as follows: Wild Cat Gap, Oct. 24, 1861; Mill Spring, Ky., Jan. 19, 1862; Shiloh, Tenn., April 6 and 7; Murfreesboro, Tenn., July 13; Richmond, Ky., Aug. 30; Munfordsville, Ky., Sept. 14-16; Perryville, Ky., Oct. 8, 1862; and Stone River, Tenn., Dec. 21, 1862; Ft. Donelson, Tenn., Feb. 3, 1863; Thompson's Station, March 4-5; Hoover's Gap, June 24; Liberty Gap, June 25, and Shelbyville, June 27, in Tennessee; Morgan's Raid, Ky., July 2-26; Chickamauga, Ga., Sept. 19-20; Wauhatchie, Tenn., Oct. 27; Mission Ridge, Tenn., Nov. 23, and Ringgold, Ga., Nov. 27, 1863; Buzzard's Roost Gap, Ga., Feb. 27, 1864; Red Clay; Rocky Face Ridge; Tunnel Hill; Mill Creek; Varnell's Station; Resaca; Sugar Valley; Tilton; Tanner's

Bridge; Adairsville; Rome; Kingston; Dallas; New Hope Church; Burnt Hickory; Pumpkin Vine Creek; Altoona Hills; Cassville Station; Burned Church; Moulton, from May 1 to May 31; Acworth; Kenesaw Mountain; Lost Mountain; Marietta; Big Shanty; McAfee's Cross Roads; Pine Mountain; Moser's Creek; Pine Knob; Powder Springs; Lattimore's Mills; Noonday Creek; Culp's House, Kenesaw Mountain (general assault); Lafayette, June 1 to 30; Nickajack Creek; Smyrna; Vining Station; Chattahoochee River; Stone's Ferry; Tallahoosa River; Auburn; Montgomery; West Point R. R.; Peach Tree Creek; Hood's first sortie; Courtland; Stoneman's raid to Macon; McCook's raid to Lovejoy Station; Ezra Chapel (Atlanta); Campbelltown; Flathead's siege of Atlanta; Lovejoy Station; Newman; Macon; Hillsboro (Sunshine Church), July 1 to 31; Utoy Creek; Decatur, Ga.; Dalton; Cleveland; Decatur, Ala.; Fairburn; Kilpatrick's Raid; Red Oak; Jonesboro; Lovejoy; Block House No. 5; Franklin, Tenn., Nov. 30; Murfreesboro, Tenn., Dec. 5, and Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 15, 16, 1864; Averysboro, N. C., March 16, 1865; Bentonville, N. C., March 19; Columbus; and West Point, Ga., April 16, 1865.

The 39th Ind. Inf. was mounted as the 8th Ind. Cav., and the record given above is that of the Army of the Cumberland, with which Mr. Burkhardt's regiment fought. He participated in every battle in which his regiment fought except those which occurred while he was a prisoner. He was captured at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., after having been shot in the left hip by a minie ball, which he carried for three days and three nights, or until the ball worked itself out. He was taken to the field hospital, where he lay with his wound undressed, and was then taken to Libby Prison, marching all of the way except when riding for a short distance in a cattle car, and here he was confined for eight days, his wound causing him much suffering. He was then sent to Annapolis, Md., for exchange, when he was sent home on a furlough of thirty days, and after his recovery rejoined his regiment. Mr. Burkhardt was again captured at Montgomery, Ala., while out on a foraging expedition, his horse giving out. He was surrounded by twenty-seven Confederates and was forced to surrender and was taken to the prison at Montgomery for a short time, thence to Selma, and later to Milan, Ga., where there was no shelter of any kind for the prisoners.

The men suffered greatly for want of food and water, the rations being less than a pint of ground beans and poor corn, and once a week a small piece of pork. At the time of his parole and subsequent exchange Mr. Burkhardt had become greatly emaciated, and on rejoining his regiment was given another thirty-days furlough. Although very weak, Mr. Burkhardt rejoined his regiment and served faithfully until the close of the war. A brave and gallant soldier, he was respected by his officers and greatly esteemed by his comrades, and his war record is one of which any man might well be proud.

After his services to his country, Mr. Burkhardt returned to Tipton county, Ind., and was married Aug. 1, 1866, in Cicero township, to Mary Ellen VanBuskirk, born in Henry county, Ind., Jan. 12, 1844, daughter of Gilard and Rebecca (Paul) VanBuskirk. Gilard VanBuskirk was a son of Joseph VanBuskirk, a Kentuckian of Holland-Dutch stock, and after his marriage to Rebecca Paul, daughter of Daniel and Leah (Swope) Paul, he bought eighty acres of land in Tipton county, on which he died, Sept. 8, 1901, aged eighty years, three months, twenty-eight days. His wife died May 22, 1890, when sixty-seven years old, and both were members of the Episcopal Church. Their children were: Thomas, Mary Ellen, George, Sarah, Amanda, Samuel, Emmet, Dessie and Robert. Of these children Capt. Robert VanBuskirk served in the Spanish-American war, and is now a civil engineer of Tipton.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Burkhardt settled after marriage on a farm in Tipton county, Ind., but later removed to Bourbon county, Kans., where they lived three years, then returning to Tipton county. Mr. Burkhardt located on his present forty-acre farm in 1880, which was then heavily timbered and little better than a swamp. By tireless energy Mr. Burkhardt cleared this farm, drained it scientifically, and has made it one of the finest and most valuable for its size in the township. He uses the latest methods in his operations and the most up-to-date machinery, and his buildings are well located and substantial.

Mr. Burkhardt is a member of the G. A. R., at Tipton. In politics he is a Republican, and he has always been a faithful supporter of the principles of the party. While a prisoner in Libby Prison during the war, a vote was taken among the men to see how each stood, and in this canvass Mr. Burkhardt voted for President Lincoln. Later he cast his vote for President Grant, and he has voted for every Republican Presidential candidate since. He is a good neighbor, is a public-spirited citizen, and is much esteemed in his community.

Mr. and Mrs. Burkhardt have had children as follows: Asher Bruce, born in Indiana, May 7, 1867, and now a blacksmith at Windfall, Ind., married Amanda Smith, and has six children, Lora, Clarence, Orville, Blanche, Marie, and an infant, unnamed; Maud Rebecca, born in Indiana, June 28, 1868, married Frederick Shawl, a farmer of Jefferson township; Tipton county; Ida Eldora, born in Kansas, Sept. 26, 1872, married George A. McCaula, a farmer in Howard county, Ind., and they have three children, Irie, Bonnie and an infant, unnamed; Dessie Amelia, born in Indiana, Sept. 26, 1877, married Charles Manish, a farmer and trader of Cicero township, and has one child, Geneva; Effie Paul, born in Indiana, June 15, 1880, married Lloyd Forkner, a farmer of Cicero township, and they have one child, Esther; Walter Otis, born in Indiana, Aug. 6, 1881, married Hattie Conway, and is a farmer of Cicero township; Oza, born in Indiana, Dec. 31, 1882, married Ora Wisman, a farmer of Hamilton county, Ind., and they have one child, Lester Glenn; Lotus Etric, born in Indiana, Sept. 27, 1884, resides at home; and Alta Nina, born Jan. 27, 1886, married Edward Webb, a farmer of Cicero township.

DANIEL PICKEL, of Buck Creek township, Hancock Co., Ind., is a practical as well as professional farmer. Nearly all the years of his life, except those spent in the service of his country, have been devoted to agricultural pursuits, and he is proud to be recognized as a member of the great brotherhood of hand workers. He was born July 29, 1839, in Lawrence township, Marion Co., Ind., son of George and Mary (Apple) Pickel.

The Pickel family are of sturdy Pennsylvania Dutch stock. George Pickel was born in Clermont county, Ohio, and was reared to the life of a farmer. He married Mary Apple, born in Ohio, daughter of Christopher and Julia Apple. Christopher Apple located as a pioneer in Marion county, Ind., near Oaklandon, in about 1835 or 1840, on 160 acres of land near Indian Creek, which he cleared from the woods, and upon which he built a log house. There he made a good home and reared the following family: John, Peter, Mary,

Peggy, Catherine, Betsy and Christopher. He lived to be an old man and died in Oaklandon, to which place he had retired in his latter years. He was a member of the Universalist Church, which he assisted in establishing in his community, and he was an honest and upright man.

After marriage, George Pickel and his wife came to Marion county, making the journey from Ohio in wagons, and locating on 160 acres of land in the woods, two miles northeast of Christopher Apple's tract. Mr. Pickel was engaged in clearing up his farm to make a home when his death occurred. He was a Universalist in his religious belief. Like Mr. Apple Mr. Pickel was a Jacksonian Democrat. To him and his wife these children were born: Mary, Catherine, Barbara, Sarah, Betsy, Julia and Phoebe, all born in Ohio, and Eliza, Henry, George, John and Daniel, born in Indiana. After the death of Mr. Pickel, Mrs. George Pickel married James Brown and they settled in Hamilton county, Ind., on Fall Creek, where they had one son—Lewis, who became a soldier in the Civil war, in an Indiana infantry regiment, and was killed in battle. Mrs. Brown died in 1861, aged about sixty-two years. She was a remarkable pioneer woman of great force of character, and died in the faith of the Universalist Church.

Daniel Pickel was reared among the pioneers. He is entirely familiar with the arduous labors incident to life in a new country, and has had ample experience of its extreme privations and annoying inconveniences. He attended school for three months in the winter terms, in the log school house, the benches and desks in which were of hewed puncheons, while the floor and fire-place were of dirt. His father having died when he was four years old, young Pickel stayed at home on the farm with his mother until he was seventeen years old, when he learned the harness maker's trade in Anderson, serving three years. He then started a harness shop in Oaklandon, in 1861, but the war breaking out at this time, Mr. Pickel abandoned everything to join the army in defense of his country.

Daniel Pickel enlisted in July, 1861, in Indianapolis, as a private of Company K, 11th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and re-enlisted as a veteran at Iberia, La., in the same organization. He was honorably discharged July 26, 1865, at Baltimore, Md., the war having closed. Mr. Pickel had enlisted as a private, but was first promoted to corporal, and on May 1, 1864, for faithful and meritorious services to sergeant. His discharge has a list of the following battles: Pittsburg Landing, Tenn.; Siege of Vicksburg, Miss.; Jackson, Miss.; Lake Tasse, La.; Hallsboro, Va.; Winchester, Va.; Fishers Hill, Va.; and Cedar Creek, Va. Mr. Pickel was never a prisoner, nor was he ever confined to the hospital, but greatly enfeebled by illness, was confined for some time in his quarters, and thus missed the battle of Champion Hills and one other. With these exceptions he was a participant of every battle in which his regiment engaged, as well as all the marches and skirmishes.

After the war, Sergeant Pickel opened a harness shop for himself in Oaklandon, which he conducted nearly twenty years. He was married Nov. 14, 1866, on the homestead where he now resides, to Rebecca Apple, of the same stock as her husband, but no relation. She was the daughter of Andrew and Mary J. Apple. Andrew Apple was the son of George Apple, a cousin of Christopher Apple, the maternal grandfather of our subject. Andrew Apple was a farmer of Jennings county, Ind., and settled in Buck Creek township, Hancock county, as a pioneer on the farm where our subject now resides. He entered seventy-two acres of land and bought forty more, and became a substantial farmer of his district, improving his farm, making a good home, and building the house in which Daniel Pickel now lives. He was a Universalist in his religious belief. In politics he was a stanch Jacksonian Democrat. He died in his seventy-ninth year, on his farm, in July, 1897, his wife having passed away ten years before. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Apple were as follows: Leonidas, Marcellus, Harvey, Rebecca, Alvado and Naomi.

Daniel Pickel settled on the farm in 1887, after the death of Mrs. Apple, and bought out two of the heirs, now owning forty-four acres which he has put in a fine state of cultivation. His worthy wife died Feb. 24, 1899, in the faith of the Methodist Church. She had been a faithful wife and an affectionate mother. In his political belief Mr. Pickel is a Jeffersonian Democrat. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Pickel: Annie M., who married John Cory, of Ingalls, and has children, Leona, Samuel, Elmer, Lettie and Rogers; Lettie, who married Edward

Day, the hardware merchant of McCordsville, and has one child, Jeannette; Allie, who married Melvin Hanna, a farmer of Buck Creek township, and has two children—Delos and Louie; Leroy, Andrew Jackson and Carrie, all of whom remain at home.

MOSES C. WHITE, who is engaged in stone and brick work in Anderson, Ind., is one of the city's reliable citizens and a survivor of the Civil war. He was born Oct. 2, 1848, in Cedarville, Greene Co., Ohio, son of Erasmus and Jane (Murphy) White, and grandson of John White, a native of Germany.

Erasmus White was born in Pennsylvania, and when a young man went to Ohio, where he married Jane Murphy, born in Pennsylvania Aug. 10, 1814, daughter of Jerry Murphy, who came from Ireland. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. White came to Delaware county, Ind., and here purchased and cleared a farm near Muncie, but later returned to Greene county, Ohio, where Mr. White died in May, 1872, aged sixty-one years. His wife passed way in Cedarville, May 12, 1904, in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. White was a Whig and later a Republican, and voted for Lincoln. He and his wife had these children: John C., George H., Martha J., Moses C. and James S. George H. of this family, now deceased was a private of the Civil war, in the three years' service, serving in the 10th Ohio; and John C., also of the three years' service, was in Company A, 185th Ohio.

Moses C. White was attending school at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and he made several attempts to enlist, but was refused on account of his youth, but finally succeeded when fifteen years old, enlisting in Cedarville, Ohio, in January, 1864, as a private in the 9th Battalion, Ohio Cav., for six months, and served more than his time, being honorably discharged Nov. 8, 1864, at Nashville, his service being about Nashville. The battalion was engaged in guarding trestle work and engaged in several skirmishes. He returned to Cedarville, and attended school until 1865, on Jan. 13th of which year he re-enlisted at Cedarville as a private of Company A, 185th O. V. I., for three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged Sept. 28, 1865, the war having closed. This service was in Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia, and his regiment received many Confederates who had surrendered. Mr. White was never wounded or sick in the hospital, and having been raised to the hard work of the farm made an excellent soldier, being able to stand all the hardships of a soldier's life. He was cheerful and faithful in performing his duties, and was a great favorite with his comrades and officers, being the youngest in his regiment.

After the war Mr. White returned to Cedarville, where he learned thoroughly the trade of stone mason, and engaged in contracting in stone work until March 18, 1891, when he came to Anderson, where he has since continued at his business. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church. He is connected with the G. A. R., and the I. O. F., and in politics is a Republican. While a soldier in Nashville Mr. White cast his vote for Lincoln, and, although not nearly old enough to be entitled to a vote, it was accepted because he wore the uniform. Mr. White is one of Anderson's substantial citizens and he is highly esteemed by all who know him.

On Sept. 12, 1872, Mr. White was married to Clarissa W. Randall, born April 11, 1854, daughter of Israel and Elizabeth (Thompson) Randall, and to this union were born children as follows: Jennie, born in Cedarville, Ohio, March 8, 1874; May, who married W. E. Rude, a machinist of Springfield, Ohio, and died very suddenly in Chicago, Ill., Dec. 21, 1904, the mother of two children, Raymond and Harry; and Lizzie Blanche, born in Cedarville, Ohio, June 7, 1880, who married Emile Gouze, a die setter in the employ of the Sifton Manufacturing Company, and they have one son, Fred.

GEORGE E. DUNGAN, for eight years recorder of Delaware county, Ind., and now President of the Board of Public Works, is one of the respected native-born residents of Muncie, and the son of one of its prominent pioneers. Having passed all his life in Muncie he has witnessed the growth of the place from a small village to its present proportions and thriving conditions, and has had the satisfaction of knowing that he has done the part of a good citizen in bringing about these results. Mr. Dungan was born in Muncie July 5, 1850, son of John W. and Edith (Dragoo) Dungan, and thus comes of pioneer stock of Delaware county on both sides. The Dungans are of Scotch-Irish stock, and the Dragoo family is of either Scotch or Irish ancestry.

There is a strong tradition in the Dungan family that there were five of the Dungan brothers who came from Ireland to America, and were the founders of the different branches of the family known to exist. It is said that they settled in North Kentucky, Indiana and Michigan. Castle Dungannan, in Ireland, was a possession of this family, and from there the clan spread. Our subject's paternal grandparents came west from West Virginia in an early day, and made a location in Franklin county, Ind., where the father of John W. Dungan cleared up a farm. This pioneer founder of the family in Indiana moved to Delaware county about 1839, and settled about three miles southeast of Muncie, in the woods, where he bought eighty acres, built a log cabin, and began to clear the land. Here he passed the remainder of his life, dying about 1850. He was one of the early Methodists in this region, and was a typical American pioneer. The children of this original Dungan family in Indiana were: Isaac, Joseph, John W., Elizabeth and Rebecca, all by the first wife, and a son Charles by the second wife. The first wife died when her children were quite small.

John W. Dungan was born in Fayette county, Ind., about 1825, and was between fourteen and fifteen years of age when he came to, Delaware county with his parents. He received the usual limited education afforded in the old-time log cabin school, and then was bound out to the pioneer blacksmith of Muncie, Thomas S. Neely, to learn that trade. He served a three years' apprenticeship, and sometime later started a shop of his own in Muncie. He continued to follow the trade for many years, and being an industrious and reliable workman was counted among the successful men of his day. Moreover, he was intelligent and public-spirited, was interested in politics, and took quite an active part in local affairs, in which he was very influential, being both popular and prominent among his fellow citizens. Originally an old-line Whig, he was one of the founders of the Republican party in Delaware county, voting for its first Presidential candidate, John C. Fremont, and later supporting Abraham Lincoln. In 1859 he was elected sheriff of Delaware county, and served continuously until 1863; was re-elected in 1878, and served until 1884. In earlier times, during the forties, he was tax collector for Delaware county, and rode horseback to make his collections throughout the country. Mr. Dungan was one of the early Masons of Muncie and one of the charter members of the I. O. O. F. lodge there, passing all the chairs. Being a strong Union man he made several attempts to enlist for service in the Civil war, but was rejected on account of his health. He finally enlisted in Muncie in 1864, for three years or during the war, and served until the close of the struggle, when he returned to his family (consisting of a wife and six children) in Muncie. The patriots of Indiana did not remain at home on account of their families, but went cheerfully to the front, a test of true patriotism not often required.

In 1848 John W. Dungan married, in Muncie, Edith Dragoo, who was born in West Virginia in 1828, daughter of Benjamin Dragoo. Benjamin Dragoo was a pioneer of Delaware county, Ind., where he arrived about 1839 from West Virginia, whence he had made the journey with horses and wagon. Settling with his family in Muncie, he was one of the prominent pioneers there. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. John W. Dungan made their permanent home in Muncie, and here reared an excellent family and passed their remaining days. They became the parents of the following children: Willie, who died in infancy; George E.; Leonidas; Cornelia, who died aged twenty-one years; Mary C.; Jesse F.; Walter, who died aged twenty-two years; and Harry.

Mr. Dungan became one of the best known of the pioneers of Muncie in the discharge of his duties as tax collector and sheriff, which took him all over the county, and his was a familiar figure. In his later life he was well-to-do, and was the owner of valuable real estate in Muncie. He died in 1903.

George E. Dungan was born in Muncie, July 5, 1850. He was educated principally in the old subscription schools. He first attended a private school conducted in a dwelling house by Nancy Berry, and later several schools of like character. Then he was a pupil at the public free school which was at that time first established in Muncie, and after this he attended school at Hartford City, Ind., for two terms. However, he never attended school after he was fifteen years of age. He was then in a drug store for one year, and afterward learned the harnessmaker's trade of John U. Dick, in Hartford City, serving a regular apprenticeship of three years, during which time he received his food and clothes, and at the end of his term sixty dollars in money. While learning his trade he made garden for his employer, cut the wood for household use, and did all the usual chores, which included keeping the shop clean and in order. After learning his trade he followed it for four years in Muncie, and then became a clerk in a grocery store there, for Burt and Kirby, with whom he continued for six years. Finally Mr. Kirby purchased the interest of Mr. Burt, and later Mr. Dungan bought out Mr. Kirby and ran the business six years on his own account. Following this he was in the livery business for about five years. When natural gas was discovered in Muncie he was the first to start a co-operative gas company in the State of Indiana, and was superintendent of same for several years; that company is still in existence.

In political opinions Mr. Dungan has always been a staunch Republican, casting his first vote for Grant. In 1898 he was elected recorder of Delaware county, and no better evidence of highly efficient and satisfactory service could be offered than the fact that his fellow citizens by re-election retained him in that office as long as the law allowed. He completed his eighth continuous year, the limit of service under the law, and to his credit it may be said that the opinion of his fellow citizens was amply justified in the condition of the office and the reputation of the incumbent. Fraternally Mr. Dungan is a Knight Templar Mason, belonging to Muncie Lodge.

Among the interesting events Mr. Dungan has witnessed in Muncie were those growing out of and incident to the Civil war. He can well remember the first company of volunteers when they left the town for the three months' service. As he recollects, the first volunteer to enroll his name in Muncie was a young school teacher who was very patriotic and enthusiastic, and was the first man from Delaware to fall in battle. During the war his father, who was very patriotic and held an official position, was accustomed to feed at his home all soldiers who needed it, and also assisted to feed the soldiers at the depot who were en route to the war.

Mr. Dungan married in Muncie, in 1875, Ida O. Kelly, who was born in Muncie in 1852, daughter of Hiram and Elizabeth Kelly. Hiram Kelly was a pioneer of Randolph county, Ind., and settled in Muncie early in the forties. Here he was engaged as a brick manufacturer and was a well known citizen. In 1885 he went to Illinois, and there died. Mr. and Mrs. George E. Dungan are the parents of the following named children: LaRhue, Arthur H., Earnest and Eva, twins, and Ralph. Of these La Rhue married Frederick Jewett, of Muncie, who is manager of the Ball Manufacturing Company. Arthur H., who is shipping clerk for the firm of Ball Brothers, at Muncie, married Pearl Davenport, and they reside in Muncie. All of the children have received good educations in the public schools of Muncie. Mr. Dungan is a Methodist in religious belief; Mrs. Dungan and the children are members of the Baptist Church.

COL. JAMES RITCHIE ROSS. In the beautiful Crown Hill cemetery at Indianapolis, Ind., sleeps Col. James Ritchie Ross, who during many years occupied a conspicuous position on account of distinguished services rendered in defense of his country.

Colonel Ross was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, Aug. 16, 1841, son of Thomas J. T. and Hannah (Ritchie) Ross. Thomas Ross was born on the Atlantic Ocean, coming from Ireland, June 17, 1811. His wife was born in Pennsylvania, Dec. 25, 1818. They had sixteen children, five of whom died in early childhood, the others, with the exception of Clara, reaching maturity. Thomas Ross was a cabinetmaker and furniture dealer at Crawfordsville, Ind., for many years, having moved there from Bellefontaine, Ohio. He moved later to Indianapolis where he lived for some years in retirement, dying there March 3, 1892, at the age of eighty-one years, his decease being the result of a fall. His wife survived until 1900, her death being caused by a street car accident, when she was eighty-two years old. Both Thomas Ross and wife were members of the Presbyterian Church.

James Ritchie Ross was a small boy when his parents moved from Ohio to Crawfordsville, Ind., and in that city he grew to manhood, attending the common schools. At the age of nineteen he testified to his loyal sentiments, by enlisting as a private, in the 11th Ind. V. I., this regiment being known as Lew Wallace's Zouaves. At the expiration of his three months term of enlistment, he re-enlisted for a period of three years, his valuable services being recognized by constant promotion until he became Major, on the staff of Gen. Lew Wallace. When he was captain of Company C, in the 11th Reg., he participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Port Gibson, Vicksburg, Champion Hills, Shiloh, Jackson, Miss., Romney, Va., and many skirmishes. His record as a soldier is one to excite admiration and elicited this high praise from Gen. Lew Wallace: "Colonel Ross was the most remarkable man I ever saw under fire. He was not excited, nor did he rush about as some staff officers would. The best word I can find to explain his appearance, is to say that he was transfigured; his eyes kindled, and his face, usually so immobile, kindled with a rare intelligence; by intuition he saw what should be done, and with perfect coolness did it. He was by nature the best soldier I ever had. Had he gone with the regular army at the close of the war, he would have been one of the finest soldiers in the United States."

It was in August, 1861, that he re-enlisted for three years, and then was made first lieutenant. In October, 1863, he had won his promotion to the rank of captain of the same company. From September, 1861, to September, 1863, he served on the staff of Gen. Wallace, returning then to his regiment, and remaining with it until 1864. Then he became an aide on the general staff of the army, and was again called to duty under Gen. Wallace, this gallant officer being in command of the middle military department. Here Col. Ross remained until the close of the war. It was during his service as major on the staff of Gen. Wallace that Col. Ross was connected with the events which brought about the celebrated controversy over the action of Gen. Wallace at the battle of Shiloh. Major Ross met an aide on Gen. Grant's staff, hurrying to Gen. Wallace with an order. Major Ross relieved the aide of the order, and made himself the messenger, and always asserted that he had delivered it.

His military career was always to him a matter of just pride, and among his most cherished possessions were the parchments showing his military commissions. He had them neatly framed and they covered the wall of his study in his home, and they are still valued by his surviving family. One of these commissions bears the signature of Abraham Lincoln, appointing him to the rank of major. Another, making him brevet lieutenant-colonel, bears the signature of Andrew Johnson.

The opinion of his brother officers was unanimous as to the efficiency of Col. Ross as a military man. In speaking of him, Gen. Carnahan said: "As a soldier in active service there was never one more faithful, more gallant, more patriotic. He never stopped to question an order, but obeyed it."

At the close of the war, Colonel Ross engaged in business in Chicago, later in Cincinnati, Ohio, but in 1873 he located in the city of Indianapolis. His business ventures were successful and he attained a comfortable competence. His taste for military affairs made him a valuable worker in the formation of the Indianapolis 2nd Light Infantry and he was commissioned lieutenant. On May 5, 1890, he was promoted to Captain of Company D, 2nd Infantry, Indiana Legion; May 23, 1893, promoted Colonel 2nd Infantry, Indiana National Guard, and mustered out May 27, 1897, his term of commission having expired. He was one of the first members of the Grand Army, joining upon its establishment in 1866, for many years was a valued member of George H. Thomas Post, and was also a member of Camp No. 80, Union Veteran Legion.

Col. Ross was very prominently identified with the fraternal order of Knights of Pythias. He was a member of Excelsior Lodge, No. 25, K. P., and of Division No. 2, Uniform Rank. On June 4, 1884, he was elected Brigadier-General of the Uniform Rank and served continuously until his death, a period of sixteen years, having been reelected for another four years, in June, 1900. As brigadier-general of the Indiana Brigade, Uniform Rank, K. of P., he attended the encampment in Detroit in August, 1900, although at that time he was in failing health. As senior brigadier of the United States, his rank entitled the Indiana commander to lead all parades, and it is related of him that on this occasion he displayed his military training, being the only brigadier who reported to Major-General Carnahan in true military style. He did not appear at headquarters until his entire staff had arrived, when, in full uniform, the whole staff formally reported. He attended every bi-annual encampment of the U. R., K. P., from the first, which convened at Toronto, Canada, in 1888, up to the time of his decease.

On Nov. 15, 1866, Col. Ross was married to Miss Thesta Alice Crawford, daughter of John and Sarah Ellen (Daniels) Crawford, who were pioneers at Crawfordsville, Ind. Mr. Crawford was born May 16, 1800, of Scotch ancestry, and died March 21, 1874, while Mrs. Crawford, who was of Welsh descent, was born in Kentucky, Oct. 19, 1809, and died Feb. 27, 1874. They had six children.

four of whom grew to maturity, and one of these still survives, John Albert Crawford. John Crawford, the father of Mrs. Ross, was a merchant in Crawfordsville. Both her parents were members of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

After marriage Colonel and Mrs. Ross lived for a period of five years in Chicago, during which time he engaged in business. In 1873 they moved to Indianapolis, and there Col. Ross later purchased for his home one of the finest residences in the city, its location being at No. 2007 Central Avenue. The one son born to this marriage was Fred Trow Ross, who is a well known resident of Indianapolis. He married Miss Dorothea Augusta Schramm, and their one son bears the name of his distinguished grandfather, James Ritchie Ross. In his religious faith, Col. Ross was a Presbyterian, and Mrs. Ross and her son Episcopalians. Mrs. Thesta A. (Crawford) Ross died Oct. 23, 1901, beloved by all who knew her.

After an illness of several months' duration Colonel Ross passed out of life on Oct. 27, 1900, and two days later the impressive funeral ceremonies were held at his late residence. Upon this sad occasion the honorary pallbearers were: Gen. Lew Wallace, Gen. R. S. Foster, Gen. Fred Knefler, Gen. George F. McGinnis, Judge Daniel Wait Howe and David M. Parry. The active pallbearers were: Major-Gen. James R. Carnahan, commanding the U. R., K. P.; Brig-Gen. George W. Powell, Adjutant-General U. R., K. P.; Col. Frank Bowers, Assistant Adjutant-General Indiana Brigade, U. R., K. P.; Col. E. L. Siver, Chief of Staff, Indiana Brigade, U. R., K. P.; Col. H. B. Smith, commanding Second Regiment, Ind. N. G.; Col. John M. Paver, commanding G. A. R. Post; Col. B. A. Richardson, Q. M. G., Ind. N. G. The services at the grave were performed by Excelsior Lodge, No. 25, K. P.; George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R.; Indiana Commandery, Loyal Legion; and the 1st Reg. Ind. Brig. U. R., K. P. The new burial service, written by Gen. Carnahan, of the Uniform Rank, K. P., which was adopted by the Supreme Lodge at its last convention, was used here for the first time. The service was conducted by Gen. Carnahan, Gen. Richardson, Gen. Powell and Gen. Stanley, and was both beautiful and impressive.

"My acquaintance with Genl. Ross extended over a period of twenty years, both in civil and military life and the friendship between us was of the closest nature. As a citizen he had the keenest sense of his duty as such and measured up to the requirements thereof. As a business man he was enterprising, prompt and safe and the very soul of honor, 'his word being as good as his bond.' As a soldier and officer I can best express my estimate of his military career, by quoting Alexander Hamilton's definition of a Perfect Officer. 'He who combines the genius of the General with the patient endurance, both mental and physical, of the private; who inspires confidence in himself and in all under him; who is at all times the gentleman, courteous alike to inferior, equal and superior; who is strong and firm in discipline, without arrogance or harshness, and never familiar with subordinates, but to all is the soul of courtesy, kind, considerate and just.' I ministered to him in his last hours, and as with deepest sorrow I saw him expire, I turned from the scene feeling I had lost a friend tried and true."

ALBERT N. CRECRAFT, editor and publisher of the Franklin Democrat, of Franklin, Ind., was born Dec. 3, 1850, in Reily, Butler Co., Ohio, son of Albert John and Evelina (Ross) Crecraft, natives of Ohio.

Benoni Crecraft, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Maryland, and an early settler in Ohio. Being attracted by the possibilities offered in the latter State he took up government land in Butler county, about the year 1808, and followed teaching and agriculture. His death occurred at the age of eighty-five years. He left a large family. His father, the great-grandfather of Albert N. Crecraft, was a native of England, who came to America, settling in Maryland, where he died at an advanced age, and he, too, had a large family. The maternal grandfather was James Ross, a native of Ohio, whose ancestors came from New Jersey to that State. He was of the sixth generation from George Ross, one of the first settlers of Elizabethtown, N. J., who held a judicial position in that settlement and who was the father of a large family, whose descendants became settlers through New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York, and participated in the Revolutionary war. George Ross emigrated from England to Connecticut, but after England gained the territory now known as New Jersey he joined a colony that founded Elizabethtown and located there, most of the settlers transferring their residence from Connecticut.

James Ross, the maternal grandfather, lived in Butler county, Ohio, where he was a contractor and built the old dormitory of Miami University, at Oxford, Ohio. Here he died when in middle life. He was the father of two children, Evelina and William Ross. James Ross was a son of Carmen and Elizabeth (Fitz Randolph) Ross.

Albert John Crecraft, father of Albert N., was a teacher for a number of years, and later was engaged in farming in Butler county, Ohio, where he died in 1875 aged sixty-one years. His wife died in 1877, she being killed in an accident caused by a run-away horse. At the time of her death she was fifty-five years old. Both parents were members of the Methodist Church. Albert John Crecraft was a cousin of Prof. J. P. D. John, of Greencastle, Ind., who was president of DePauw University, and more recently has been in the lecture field. The mother of Albert John Crecraft was Asenath John, sister of Enoch D. John and Robert John, early pioneers of Brookville, Indiana, the latter being the father of Professor John. Enoch D. John married Lavina Noble, a sister of James and Noah Noble, mentioned further on in this sketch. The John family were originally from Wales, and came to this country, settling in Philadelphia. Ten children were born to Albert John Crecraft and wife, six sons and four daughters, seven now living: Miss Laura Crecraft, of Hamilton, Ohio; Asenath, wife of Clarence B. Morris, of Middletown, Ohio; John H., of Hamilton, Ohio; Albert N.; Luella, wife of Irenus Nelson, of Hamilton, Ohio; William H., of Hamilton; and Arthur L., of Oxford, Ohio.

Albert N. Crecraft resided in Butler county, Ohio, until he was nineteen years old, attending the district school in his locality, and later the National Normal University, at Lebanon, Ohio, where he took a scientific course, being graduated therefrom in 1878. When but sixteen years old he taught one term before going to Lebanon, and after his graduation he taught another year. At this time he entered Princeton College, N. J., and remained one year, then resumed teaching, first at Mount Carmel, Ind., then Fairfield, Ind. From Fairfield, he went to Brookville, the county seat, and here he was principal for four years. Later he served as county superintendent of schools of Franklin county for six years, and three years of that time he was a member of the State Teachers Reading Circle Board and the Young People's Reading Circle Board. While county superintendent, he purchased the Brookville Democrat, which he owned for two years and on Jan. 1, 1892, became the editor and publisher of the Franklin Democrat. Mr. Crecraft has been a Democrat since he cast his first vote, and he conducts his paper upon strict party lines, it having, on account of his wise management and intelligent grasp of affairs, a wide circulation and influence. His editorials are accepted as voicing the opinions of local leaders in the party, and the entire paper is conducted upon a progressive policy that makes it popular with all classes, aside from party lines.

On May 31, 1883, Mr. Crecraft was married to Miss Mary Luella Tyner, daughter of Richard Henry and Anna (Miller) Tyner. They have had three children: Earle Willis, Albert Tyner and Richard Tyner, of whom Albert Tyner died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Crecraft are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which they take an active part. Their son, Earle Willis, graduated from Franklin College in the class of 1907.

The parents of Mrs. Crecraft were natives of Franklin county, Ind., and had two daughters, Mary Luella and Rose Willis, the latter being the wife of Arthur A. Alexander, of Franklin, Indiana.

Richard Henry Tyner was the son of Richard and Martha Sedgwick Willis Swift (Noble) Tyner and was born in Brookville, Ind., Sept. 2, 1831. He was one of twelve children. His father, Richard Tyner, was a son of William E. Tyner, a pioneer Baptist preacher of Indiana, who emigrated from South Carolina and who built one of the first Baptist churches erected in the State, south of Brookville, in the year 1812. This building still stands. His wife was Elizabeth Hackleman, an aunt of Gen. Pleasant A. Hackleman.

Richard Tyner, his son, was one of the early settlers of Brookville, where he bore an important part in the business life of that community, carrying on an extensive mercantile establishment. Afterwards he went to Davenport, Iowa. His wife was a member of the Noble family, that emigrated from Virginia to Kentucky, thence to Indiana. She was the daughter of Dr. Thomas Noble, a surgeon in the Revolutionary war, who was related to Richard Henry Lee of Virginia, whence comes the name Richard Henry Tyner. She was a sister of James and Noah Noble. Noah Noble was one of the first Governors of Indiana and James Noble was one of the first United States Senators, serving from 1816 to 1831, when he died in Washington. The ivory-headed cane carried by James Noble while Senator, and afterwards by James N. Tyner, is now in the possession of Mr. and Mrs. Crecraft. Both were men of highest probity and of national reputation. Richard Henry Tyner, the father of Mrs. Mary Luella Crecraft, never held office, but always bore an active part in the business and political affairs of the community. He was a delegate to the First Republican State Convention in Indiana, and took an active interest in the organization of that party in this State. In his early life he was employed by a Cincinnati Banking Association to travel over Indiana during the period of "Wild Cat Banking" as an inspector or examiner. This was before the advent of railroads and when nearly all the travel was done on horseback through swampy regions and over corduroy roads. His duties required him to visit almost every part of the State.

His brother, James Noble Tyner, was Congressman from the Peru district in Indiana several terms, and was Assistant Postmaster General under President Grant, and in the latter part of Grant's administration he became Postmaster General and was afterward connected with the Postoffice Department during Republican administrations, either as Assistant Postmaster General or Attorney General, until shortly before his death. Another brother, General Noah Noble Tyner, was a brave soldier during the Civil war; and still another brother, George N. Tyner, of Holyoke, Mass., was connected with the Holyoke Paper Mills, and envelope manufacture, and in 1900 and 1901 was a member of the State Senate of Massachusetts. The Tyner family was one of the most influential and prominent in the country, and the nation owes much to the efforts of these men, who labored as public officials, army officers and private citizens to support the Union, better the existing plan of Government and further all measures tending toward the strengthening of the nation's relations at home and abroad and increasing its prosperity.

The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Crecraft was Albert Miller, a native of Maryland, who when a child was brought by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Miller, to Franklin county, Indiana, in pioneer days. Later he became an extensive stock dealer and in addition he conducted a general merchandise store at Fairfield, Franklin county, Ind., in partnership with R. H. Tyner, under the firm name of Miller & Tyner. Here he resided until his death at the age of eighty-three years. He was a prominent figure in the county's history, serving as a Democratic member of the State Legislature of Indiana. Mr. Miller was twice married and had a large family of children who grew to maturity to do him honor.

In these days, when people have to be proud of illustrious ancestors, Mrs. Crecraft is one to be envied in that on both sides of her family she can number so many whose names are connected with her country's history. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crecraft are people of unusual culture and refinement, and their home is a pleasant gathering place for their many friends.

CAPT. ALONZO I. MAKEPEACE, a well-known citizen of Anderson, Ind., who for the past thirty-five years has been engaged in a hardware business, is a member of an old English family. Captain Makepeace was born April 9, 1833, in Madison county, Ind., son of Alfred and Hannah (Irish) Makepeace, pioneers of that county.

The education of Captain Makepeace was secured in the pioneer schools of Madison county, and he was reared on his father's farm. Early in life he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until enlisting in the Civil war. On July 29, 1858, he was married to Margaret M. Robinson, daughter of Col. Nelson S. Robinson, and to this union there were born two children: Frank W. and Hattie, the latter of whom married Thomas Stillwell of Anderson, son of Colonel Stillwell, and she died aged about thirty-one years, leaving two children, Catherine and Margaret.

On July 5, 1861, Captain Makepeace enlisted as a private in Company A, 9th Ind. V. I., under Col. Solomon Meredith, the brigade being known as the Iron Brigade. He served nearly four years and was honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., in March, 1865. He was in the battles of Lewinsville, near Washington, Gainesville, both battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Rappahannock Crossing, Gainesville, second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Slaughter Mountain and Gettysburg, and all skirmishes and engagements of the Army of the Potomac. He was elected second lieutenant of his company, being commissioned July 29, 1861, and served in that capacity until promoted for meritorious conduct to the rank of first lieutenant, Nov. 11, 1861, and captain Feb. 10, 1862. He commanded his company in all of the battles in which they engaged except the first, at Lewinsville. He was slightly wounded on the left shin by a spent ball and had several bullets pass through his clothing. At the battle of Gainesville his company lost thirty-one men out of forty-two, the other members of the company being on detached service or in the hospital.

Captain Makepeace was captured at the battle of Gettysburg with six others of his company, and was taken to Libby Prison with 165 Union officers who were captured at that battle, and was a prisoner of war for twenty months. He was first taken to Danville, Va., then to Salisbury, N. C., from the latter place to Macon, Ga., and with 300 comrades, drawn by lot, to Charleston, who were to be held as hostages and so placed in the city that their presence would protect Charleston from the fire of the Federals. They were so placed, but their presence did not save the city, as the Union troops learned where they were located and so trained their guns as not to injure them. They were then taken to Columbia, S. C., then to Charlottesville, and later to Raleigh, N. C., being released under the general exchange at Wilmington, the war being practically over. He came through the lines March 1, 1865.

In Libby Prison, in Richmond, Captain Makepeace found the least disagreeable surroundings, as the water came into the building, an old tobacco warehouse, in pipes, and the building afforded shelter from the elements. He had no bedding, sleeping on the floor, and his rations consisted of boiled rice, peas and pork, these in very small quantities. At Macon, Ga., the prisoners were confined on the old fair ground, in a stockade prison, while at Charleston, S. C., they were confined in the negro workhouse. Captain Makepeace made several attempts to escape, the first being made from a car on the way to Macon, Ga., with a comrade, Lieutenant Barr of Michigan, who was wounded by the guard. The escape was tried just at nightfall, but the attempt was unsuccessful, as they were surrounded and forced to surrender. He made another effort to gain his freedom, and with several companions escaped from Camp Sorghum, so named because of the rations of sorghum and mush. They were out forty-eight days and nights and suffered many hardships, being a number of times pursued by bloodhounds, and would have probably starved to death but for the nuts, which, it being the month of November, had not yet been gathered. They were also provided with food by the friendly negroes of the field, the soldiers being loath to trust the house servants. Traveling at night with only the stars to guide them, and concealing themselves in the daytime in the cane brake or woods, they traveled probably 400 miles, binding leaves and small branches and twigs of pine trees to their feet to throw off the scent of the bloodhounds pursuing them. They were finally captured by means of the bloodhounds, however, in the Smoky Mountains, Ga., by two of Stonewall Jackson's men, to whom and thirty others, they were forced to surrender. Captain Makepeace and his companions were turned over to Captain McClure, who was raising a company in that locality and he took them to Athens, in the vicinity of which city he lived. He had been a Union prisoner, and, it is presumed had been well treated as such, as he took them to his home, where Mrs. McClure cooked good food for them. The prisoners were then marched ninety-eight miles and turned over to the Confederate authorities at Augusta, Ga., where their rations consisted of raw meat, and were then returned to Camp Sorghum, whence they had escaped. By this time Captain Makepeace had worn his clothing to rags. He had on a pair of pants which he had made from an old coffee sack at Charleston, and an old army blouse without any sleeves, these having become torn off. He had no shirt or hat, and for covering for his feet he had pieces of old shoes tied on. Captain Makepeace also escaped from Charlotte when sick, but after walking several miles the exposure proved too much for him, so that after several days he returned to the prison and gave himself up, preferring the horrible conditions that existed there to a death from starvation. While in Libby Prison he came near making an escape through Colonel Straight's famous tunnel, but owing to the crowd of officers awaiting to escape, one at a time, through a small hole in the ground, he did not get a chance, and, daylight coming on, he gave up the attempt.

After the war, Captain Makepeace returned to Anderson and engaged in carpenter work and contracting, but in 1872 bought an interest in his present hardware business, and with his partner, George Nichols, has built up one of the largest and best-known hardware businesses in Madison county. In political opinions Captain Makepeace is a staunch Republican, and although the county was Democratic by 1,000 majority, he was elected sheriff of Madison county in 1887-88 by 352 votes. He is an honored member of Major May Post, G. A. R., Anderson, having been the first commander thereof, and was a member of the staffs of Generals Veazey and Lawler of the Grand Army. He is also connected with the I. O. O. F. at Anderson.

HENRY B. TAYLOR, of Mooresville, is a descendant of an old and honored pioneer family of the State of Indiana. He was born in White River township, Johnson Co., Ind., May 23, 1839, and he was reared to agricultural pursuits in pioneer surroundings. He was taught the rudiments in a little old log school house, with primitive greased paper windows and a fire place which extended almost across one end, in order to accommodate the logs which not only gave heat but assisted in supplying light.

Mr. Taylor is a son of John (2) and Sarah (Brennemer) Taylor, the former of whom was born near Richmond, Va., and the latter in Alleghany county in the same State. The paternal grandfather's name was also John and he lived and died in Virginia. His children were: Richard, who died in Virginia; John (2), father of Henry B.; Luda, William and Polly, who all three died in Virginia; and Susan, who never married. The parents both died before their children reached maturity.

John Taylor (2) was reared in Virginia and learned the carpenter's trade there. Prior to his marriage he served in the war of 1812, marrying after its close. In 1828, after the birth of two of his children, he moved to Indiana, and entered 160 acres of land in White River township, Johnson county, and in addition, bought a small tract containing a cabin, in order to get a shelter for his family as soon as possible. In spite of malaria and drouth, those enemies of the early Indiana settler, Mr. Taylor remained upon his farm, cleared and improved it, and was granted a long life of eighty-seven years, his death occurring Jan. 2, 1882. He had witnessed the development of the country and, while enduring the necessary hardships, had done his part toward improving agricultural conditions. At that time much of the land was swampy, and its draining was a very serious problem at that early date. He was obliged to haul his grain to Lawrenceburg and Madison, receiving then but fifty cents a bushel and paying $3 per barrel for salt, with other necessities in proportion. Mr. Taylor was a reliable, sensible farmer and a self-made man. Not having had any educational advantages, he learned by practical experience, and often, in later years, excited wonder by the facility with which he could calculate without the aid of pencil, so necessary to many school-bred men. Prior to coming to Indiana he set his face against intemperance, and refused to allow spirits of any kind to be brought into his home, although it was the general custom to imbibe very freely. After he settled in Indiana he was forced to meet with some opposition on the liquor question, for, while he was always ready to assist his neighbors in rolling logs and building cabins and served them faithfully in every neighborly way, he would never accept whiskey or tempt others with it. The time came when those who opposed his resolution the most respected him all the more, and as the years passed the custom of carousal at these neighborly gatherings about died out. Few men in the neighborhood could be more confidently called upon in family bereavements or trouble, for his work never pressed him too hard, or his own affairs needed him too much, to prevent his going miles to help one in trouble, to care for the sick, or to assist in the burying of the dead. He was one of the men whose memory should ever be kept green in Johnson county. Mr. Taylor was a pillar in the Methodist Church, was a fluent talker and was a favorite class leader. He contributed as a Christian duty to its support, and he filled all the offices but pastor. Originally he was a Democrat in politics, but left the party on account of its attitude in regard to slavery.

Mrs. Taylor died Sept. 2, 1864. She was a daughter of John and Christina (Kesling) Brennemer, who came from Germany and settled first in Virginia, and in 1828 moved to Indiana. He operated a small grist-mill with water power. During the Revolution he served with the patriot army. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Both he and wife died in Indiana. Their family consisted of Sarah; Jacob; Anthony; Mary. Mrs. George Duke; Margaret, Mrs. William Dressler; and Charlotte, wife of Rev. J. L. Bramwell. Jacob and Anthony, with John Taylor and wife, Grandmother Smith, Kizzie

Paul and Grandma Tresler, seven faithful Christians, organized the first Methodist society in the neighborhood, which later developed into Shiloh Methodist Church. The children of John Taylor and wife were: Albert K., who died in 1896; James O., who died at the age of seventeen years; John W., a Methodist minister, who died in 1888, aged fifty-five years; Sarah J., Mrs. Throckmorton; Henry B.; Martha L., who died in infancy; and William L., who was killed at the battle of Thompsons Station in 1863.

Henry B. Taylor remained under the parental roof until June, 1861, when he enlisted with Col. William Wheatley, of Indianapolis, in Company E, 26th Ind. V. I., for three years. The first battle in which he was engaged was that at Newtona, from which place the regiment was moved and took part in the battle of Prairie Grove. Here Mr. Taylor was wounded in three places, a flesh wound through the calf of the left leg, one on the top of the head, and by a musket ball and buck shot above the left knee, the ball being imbedded in the bone. He fell to the ground and lay on the battlefield from that afternoon until the next day, and when found had fallen asleep with weakness. He was taken to the Fayetteville hospital, where from Dec. 7, 1862, until May 20, 1863, his life was despaired of. While in this precarious condition he was taken prisoner, and in an ambulance was hauled to Springfield, Mo. There he was met by a brother who took him home. Many months passed before he recovered, and he was obliged to use crutches for a long time. Although he received an honorable discharge, he was never exchanged. Mr. Taylor has never recovered his complete strength and in recognition of his services, the Government awards him a pension.

Unable to work for a long time, Mr. Taylor remained at home, and after the death of his mother in November, 1864, he married and settled on the homestead and took care of his father until the latter's death. By will John W. Taylor was left executor and administrator. Mr. Taylor rented his portion of the estate and moved to Franklin, where he lived two years in order to educate his children, but in 1884 returned to the farm. He served as assessor of the township and lived on the farm until 1892, when he moved to Mooresville and purchased eight acres of land adjoining the corporation. Here he has a comfortable residence and enough land to permit him to enjoy gardening and keep a few choice cattle in his pastures. He conducted a grocery business for about one year. Mr. Taylor has always been a Republican. In 1900 he was elected trustee of Brown township and he is filling this position with great credit. He has followed in the footsteps of his father in his faithfulness and usefulness in the Methodist Church, where he is steward. He was class leader in Banta, Johnson county.

Mr. Taylor married Miss Joanna J. McAlister, born in Jefferson county, Ind., in January, 1841, daughter of James A. and Freelove (Butterfield) McAlister, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of New York. The McAlisters moved to Jefferson and later to Morgan county, Ind., where they died. Mr. McAlister was an intelligent and enterprising man, was a school teacher, served as justice of the peace and was also a contractor. He assisted in the construction of the canal from Broad Ripple, and was a contractor in the construction of the old Madison Railroad from Franklin to Martinsville, and was well known in connection with public matters. He was a Whig in politics, later a Republican. For many years he was a worthy and active member of the Christian Church. His children were: Joanna, wife of Mr. Taylor; James, who died in Kentucky, a soldier in the 70th Ind. V. I.; Mary P., Mrs. McFarland; Martha, Mrs. M. Wentz; George, of Arkansas; and a son who died in infancy. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are: James R., who died in 1888, aged twenty-one years; Viola, Mrs. W. H. Dolan; Sally T., Mrs. E. Dolan; and Luda J., who died unmarried, at the age of twenty-four years. The family is all connected with the Methodist Church. Mr. Taylor belongs to the I. O. O. F. and to Post 278, G. A. R. This is the very incomplete record of a brave soldier, a most highly respected man and one of the leading and representative citizens of Johnson county.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS (deceased). For eighty-two years, the venerable William Williams, of Washington township, was a continuous resident of Morgan county, Ind., a son of pioneer parents, and a citizen who took a prominent part in the growth and development of this part of the country. Mr. Williams was born May 1, 1816, near Paoli, Orange Co., Ind., son of Jonathan and Celia (Silcox) Williams, who were the parents of nine children, seven sons and two daughters.

Jonathan Williams was born in Tennessee, and was a son of John Williams who came from that State to Indiana, as a pioneer, settling in Greene township, Morgan county, where he reared a large family, and where he died in advanced age. Jonathan Williams came to the State in 1815, and located for a short time at Paoli, in Orange county, where his son William was born, but soon removed to Lawrence county, in search of better agricultural conditions, and in 1820 reached Morgan county. In Clay township Jonathan Williams purchased eighty acres of land on the east side of the White River, it being the wise custom of the early settlers to secure land along the great waterways. Two years later he crossed the river, and on this side entered two tracts of land, of eighty acres each, this land being in Greene township, and here he spent the remaining years of his life. His death occurred in September, 1845, when he was aged fifty years. Mr. Williams was one of the leading men of Morgan county, and held many responsible positions. He served one term in the Indiana Legislature, was sheriff and collector in Morgan county for four years and was a very prominent politician, a devoted follower of Andrew Jackson, under whom he served in his first battle with the Indians. Mrs. Celia (Silcox) Williams was a daughter of Solomon Silcox, and was born in North Carolina. Mr. Silcox had a family of four children with whom he moved to Tennessee, where he died in advanced years. Mrs. Williams survived until she was about seventy-six years old. She was a Christian woman, a good mother, and a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church.

William Williams was about four years of age when his parents came to Morgan county, in 1820, and from that time until his death he was a continuous resident. He attended the subscription schools and took advantage of every educational opportunity afforded in those early days. His occupation through life was farming, and his intelligent development of his land resulted in well cultivated and productive acres. Until he was grown, he assisted his father in the clearing and placing of the land under cultivation, and at his father's death, he received a part of the homestead as his inheritance. For fifty years Mr. Williams resided at his late home, which consists of 140 acres, in Washington township, this being the old homestead of Mrs. Williams, on which she has lived for over seventy years.

On Dec. 31, 1846, Mr. Williams was married (first) to Miss Emma King, daughter of John King, and two children were born to this union, Howard and Celia Ann, both of whom are now deceased. Howard married a Miss Hasting and they had two children, the survivor being Flavius, who married Ida Langford, and has had three children, Howard, Horace and Hubert. Celia Ann married Perry Record, and they had two children, William and Alice, who are both married. Mrs. Williams died in 1853. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Williams married (second) Mrs. Martha Jane Lanpher, widow of Robert Lanpher and daughter of William A. and Rebecca (Clark) Major. (Extended mention of the Major family will be found elsewhere). A family of seven children was born to this union, namely: (1) Angeline, died at the age of eighteen months. (2) Frank, died at the age of forty-one years; he married Sarah Garrett, and they had four children, the three survivors being Harry, Otis and Charles. (3) Harry is in the real estate business in Idaho; he married Jennie Diehl, and has three children, Hubert, Callie and Genevieve. (4) Perry, died at the age of four months. (5) Dora, married Charles H. Wall, and has one child, Earl Vance. They now reside at the old homestead. (6) Genevieve, died in infancy. (7) California, married Otis DeVee, of Washington township, and they have children, Glendyn, Martha, Robert Dale, Frank and Major. By her previous marriage, Mrs. Williams had one daughter, Mary, who is the wife of James Graham of Martinsville, and they have one child, Robert Jefferson (who is married).

Mrs. Williams was born in Franklin county, Ind., near Brookville, May 13, 1828. Her parents moved to Morgan county in 1832 and settled on the farm which has been her home ever since with the exception of eighteen months, when she lived on Clear Creek. After his first marriage Mr. Williams lived on Clear Creek for about three years, moving then to his late farm. Mrs. Williams has long been a consistent member of the Christian Church. Like his father, Mr. Williams adhered to the principles of Jacksonian Democracy. In 1842 he was elected sheriff of Morgan county and served two years, and during four years was assessor of Washington township. Fraternally he was a Master Mason. Mr. Williams could recall many interesting events of the early days in Morgan county, and the story of his varied experiences, and the changes which took place under his own observation.

were very interesting. He was well known, as is his wife, and had a very wide circle of warm friends.

JOHN H. HOY, mayor of Lebanon, Boone county, Ind., who has done more perhaps than any other one man to promote the interests and prosperity of the town, is a well known business man, identified with the manufacturing of cigars, who has also been associated with other enterprises, to advance the welfare of the city and to attract capital from the outside. Mr. Hoy was born Feb. 8, 1862, in Rushville, Ind., son of Henry H. and Mary (Topp) Hoy, natives of Germany.

Henry Hoy, the paternal grandfather, came with his family to America and settled in Ohio near Cincinnati, where he for a time followed his calling of millwright and erected many mills in that vicinity. Later he gave up this calling and gave his attention to farming. The last part of his life was spent in Harrison, Ohio, where he passed away well advanced in years. His wife, Mary Hoy, bore him a large family.

Henry H. Hoy, was only a boy when he accompanied his parents to America, and he grew to manhood in Cincinnati. He learned the trade of cooper, and while still a young man ran a cooperage of his own, following that occupation for years, first in Rushville and later in Muncie, Ind., in which latter place he is now regarded as an old settler. He built up a large business, taking up heavy contracts, and for years made barrels for Kingan & Co., of Indianapolis, while at one time he supplied the State prison at Michigan City, Ind., with timber for its cooperage department. For the past few years he has lived practically retired in Muncie. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Hoy has been active in the political life of his town, and for several years was councilman for the First ward in Muncie. In 1890 he lost his wife, Mary (Topp) Hoy. She was the daughter of Adam and Maria Topp, and came from Germany with her parents in girlhood. Her father, a practical distiller, was employed in the distillery in Harrison, Ohio, and was accidentally drowned in the canal about the distillery when he was about sixty years of age. Henry H. and Mary (Topp) Hoy had six children, of whom three are now living: John H.; Catherine, wife of William Atwood, of Muncie; and Pearl, wife of William Richardson, also of Muncie.

John H. Hoy was about ten years of age when his parents moved to Muncie, and there he grew up and received his education, attending the public and high schools of that place. He learned the cooper's trade and followed it for some years, but afterward decided that cigar making offered greater opportunities, and so he took up that trade which he has worked at assiduously for the past twenty-two or -three years, and in which he has been most successful. He established himself in Lebanon in the fall of 1885, and opened his plant for manufacturing cigars, his main business interest since that date. His most active support has been given to every movement for advancing the city, and he was one of the chief promoters of the best advertising Lebanon ever received, the two carnivals of 1902 and 1903, which reflected the greatest credit both upon the city and the management. In 1903 Mr. Hoy edited at his own expense a paper known as "Hoy's Lebanon Hustler," devoted to advertising home interests and the city in general.

A man of most versatile abilities, Mr. Hoy is not only known as a prominent business man in Lebanon, but he has a reputation among musical circles all over the country, and has been connected with the show business till his name is familiar to the leading show people in every part of the United States. He is not only a fine violinist, but is a performer on all brass instruments. He was at one time a partner of Thomas Waldron, Jr., formerly the solo cornetist of Weber's famous Cincinnati band. Mr. Hoy took the only band from Indiana to the Democratic National Convention at Kansas City, in 1900, the City Band of Lebanon, and it made a great hit by playing the song "On the Banks of the Wabash," during the Convention in the hope thereby of booming the candidacy of B. F. Shively for the vice-presidency. Mr. Hoy has also been the manager of the Lebanon Opera House for several years.

Another sphere of action in which John H. Hoy is a familiar figure is the political arena. Always a staunch Democrat, he has been active in the party's councils since moving to Lebanon. He has several times been a delegate to the Democratic State Conventions, for two years was chairman of the Democratic Central Committee for Boone county, and in 1898 was elected city clerk of Lebanon, for a term of four years. On May 3, 1902, the people of the city offered him the highest honor in their power by electing him mayor, and he was given the majority of forty-one votes over a usual Republican majority of 211 votes.

On July 26, 1888, Mr. Hoy was married with Miss Annie Halfman, daughter of Jacob and Maria Halfman, and to their union have been born three children, as follows: Mary; Norma Lee, who died in infancy; and James.

Mr. Hoy's remarkable musical talent is inherited by his children, Mary, aged nineteen, who became very accomplished on the piano at the early age of ten years, having entertained many public audiences; and James, now eleven years of age, is a musical prodigy. The latter at the age of nine years appeared in public as a violin soloist, and now is first violin of the Grand Opera House Orchestra, of Lebanon, Indiana. He has appeared before immense audiences in Indianapolis and many other places, and received hundreds of the most flattering notices from the press of Indiana, and elsewhere. He plays from Tannhauser and many other classical selections.

The family reside at No. 517 N. West street, where Mr. Hoy owns a comfortable home. Mrs. Hoy is a Catholic in her religious faith, while her husband belongs to the German Lutheran Church. He is also connected with a number of fraternal and benevolent orders, being a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Red Men, the Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen, the Haymakers, the Orient, and also the Cigar Makers' Union. A broad-minded, generous, public-spirited man, Mr. Hoy is one whom Lebanon may well be proud to claim as a citizen.

RIFNER. The Rifner family to which Mrs. Cecilia (Rifner) Kelly, wife of President Kelly of Earlham College, belongs, is of substantial pioneer stock.

Peter Rifner, grandfather of Mrs. Kelly, was the son of a Revolutionary soldier, who was a landowner near Trenton, N. J. He was bound out when a child, and when a young man, about 1802-3, he removed to Ohio and entered a section of land, near Harrison and not far from the Indiana line. He cleared his farm from the heavy timber with which it was covered, and this property passed only recently out of the possession of the family. Peter Rifner married Elizabeth Rockefeller, born in Trenton, N. J., daughter of William Rockefeller, a pioneer farmer of that section.

To this union there were born nine children, as follows: William, Peter, Samuel, Allen, Milton, James, Martha, Mary and Angeline. Peter Rifner lived to be between seventy and eighty years of age, and died in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, in the work of which he had been very active, a memorial window in his memory being placed in the new church at Harrison, Ohio. He was a captain in the War of 1812.

James M. Rifner, father of Mrs. Kelly, was born in Harrison, Ohio, on his father's farm, Aug. 17, 1831, received a common school education, and in early life engaged in agricultural pursuits, later, however, embarking in a dry goods business, which he continued the rest of his life. He married in Cleves, Hamilton county, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1853, Martha Cilley, born May 28, 1832, on a farm in that town, daughter of Benjamin and Martha (McCormick) Cilley, the latter born in 1806 in Hamilton county, Ohio, daughter of Thomas McCormick, a pioneer of Scotch-Irish stock.

The Cilleys were of Austrian stock, and were pioneers of Nottingham, N. H., several distinguished men having been furnished from this locality, including Congressman Cilley of New Hampshire, who was killed in a duel by Graves. Jonathan Cilley, the father of Benjamin, was a Revolutionary soldier's son, and several other members of the family were prominently identified with the Revolution. Jonathan Cilley came, with many others, as a pioneer to Ohio about 1800, and settled on land ten miles northwest of Cincinnati, where he cleared up a large farm, also owning property in the city. He died suddenly, of asthma, on his farm, aged about fifty years, his children being: Joseph, Benjamin, Bradbury, Jonathan, Mary, Martha, Sarah and Henry.

Benjamin Cilley received his education in Haverhill, Mass., and went to Ohio when a boy, there marrying Martha McCormick. He settled on a farm on the Miami river, not far from Cincinnati, and became a wealthy man, dying at his home at about sixty-three years of age. His children were: Celina Dorcas, Elizabeth, Joseph, Martha and Cecilia. Mr. Cilley was a Presbyterian in religious belief, and a Republican in politics.

MAX SHIREMAN. Among the leading citizens of Morgan county, Ind., is Max Shireman, mayor of Martinsville, and president of the Old Hickory Chair Company, of that city. He was born in Washington township, Morgan county, Ind., April 30, 1869, son of Henry and Maria (DeTurk) Shireman, the former of whom was a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Pennsylvania. Ten children, five sons and five daughters were born to these parents, and nine members still survive, viz.: Mary, wife of Hiram Avery, of Washington township; Louisa, wife of Smith Lewis, of Washington township; William A., of Indianapolis; Ella, wife of John Caldwell, of Fallis, Okla.; Charles, of Washington township; Harriet, wife of Thomas Carroll, of Custer, S. Dak.; Max, of Martinsville; Flora, wife of John Percy, of Washington township; Eugene C., of Martinsville; and Isaac, deceased.

The Shireman family is of Dutch extraction. The paternal grandfather, Michael Shireman, was a native of North Carolina who came in pioneer times to Morgan county, Ind., where he died at the age of sixty-five years.

Henry Shireman, son of Michael and father of Mayor Shireman, came to Indiana in 1835, and settled in Washington township, making his home one mile northeast of Martinsville where he resided until his death. He died April 30, 1898, when more than seventy-three years old. His widow, Maria (DeTurk) still survives, and lives in the old home. She was a daughter of Isaac DeTurk, a native of Pennsylvania, of French Huguenot descent. In his native State he was a teacher, but after he came to Indiana in 1839, he devoted his life to agriculture, and he died in Washington township at the age of ninety-four years, leaving a numerous family. The family records show that it was founded in America by Isaac, great-grandfather of the late Isaac DeTurk, who settled at Esopus, N. Y., in 1707 and later moved to the Province of Pennsylvania.

Mayor Shireman was reared on the farm. His education was secured in the public schools of Martinsville, of which city he was elected mayor, in 1902, on the Democratic ticket. He is giving the city a clean, business-like administration. For the past three years he has been president of the Old Hickory Chair Company, a concern engaged in manufacturing all kinds of hickory chairs, their trade extending to all parts of the United States. They give employment to from seventy-five to one hundred men.

On Dec. 12, 1901, Mayor Shireman was united in marriage with Miss Martha Allen, daughter of John R. and Mahalia (Barlow) Allen, of Indianapolis. Mrs. Shireman is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Shireman has resided in the city since his marriage, but still devotes much time to farming. Fraternally he is connected with Martinsville Lodge, F. & A. M., and the K. of P. The high esteem in which he is held in his community has been shown by his election to the honorable office he now so capably holds.

SYLVANUS MAJOR, one of the substantial and prominent farmers of Washington township, Morgan county, Ind., was born April 26, 1849, on the farm where he now resides, son of Rev. Noah J. and Mary E. (Rudicell) Major, both of whom are natives of Indiana. [Extended mention of the family will be found in the sketch of Rev. Noah J. Major.]

Sylvanus Major was reared in Washington township and attended the local schools, and later the high school at Martinsville. Until he was twenty-three years old he resided with his father, assisting in the operation of the home farm, and started out on an individual career by renting one of his father's farms. After his marriage he received a present of sixty-six acres of land from his father, and to this he added, at various times, until his farm contained 520 acres. Mr. Major later sold 120 acres, but retains 400 acres of some of the finest and best improved farming lands in the township.

On March 21, 1872, Mr. Major was married to Miss Mary E. Hendricks, daughter of Thompson and Mary J. (Evans) Hendricks, and seven children were born to this union, three sons and four daughters, as follows: William Horace, who holds a responsible position in the Martinsville postoffice, married Catherine King; Jennie, died at the age of ten months; Zora Isis, Otis H., Mary J., Noah J. and Marguerite are at home. Both Mr. Major and wife are members of the Christian Church, in which he is one of the trustees at Martinsville. He has always been identified with the Republican party, and is a member of the township advisory board. Mr. Major has always been highly esteemed in his locality where he has been known from childhood. His friends are numbered by the score, and he enjoys the esteem of all with whom he has business relations. His family is one of the leading ones of Morgan county.

The parents of Mrs. Major were early settlers in Indiana, and they reared a family of eight children, the three survivors being:

Emily Jane, the wife of Isaac W. Nutter, of Martinsville; Dr. W. E. Hendricks, of Martinsville; and Mrs. Major. The father died in 1881, at the age of seventy years. The mother died in July, 1905, on the old Hendricks homestead, aged eighty-one years. Her father was Carson Evans, a native of Kentucky, who came to Indiana in its early days of settlement, became a prosperous farmer, reared a large family and died in old age.

WILLIAM N. HORNE, M. D., one of the leading physicians of Anderson, was born in 1853, in Yorktown, Ind., son of John and Isabella (Scott) Horne, and grandson of Rev. William Horne, a native of Scotland, who settled in the United States.

Rev. William Horne was a liberally educated man and was pastor of a church at Braehead, Scotland, and also had churches in his pastorate at Lanark and Cornwall. Several bound volumes of his memoirs are owned by his grandson, our subject, which memoirs are written in short hand. They bear dates as early as from 1800 to 1807 and shorthand was then in its infancy, none being acquainted with the art except educated men. Rev. William Horne married in Scotland, Mary Somerville, and they were the parents of three sons: Samuel, John and William, all of whom became educated men. Rev. William Horne came to America, and bought unimproved land in Canada in 1833, but remained in the latter place only one year, when he settled in Switzerland county, Ind., in a Scottish settlement, becoming the pastor. Here he built a church, which is still standing, in which he preached for several years, and he died in Yorktown, Delaware county, Ind., where two of his sons had settled as merchants. At the time of his death the Rev. William Horne was between seventy and eighty years of age.

Dr. John Horne, the father of Dr. William N., was born in Scotland in 1814, and received his education at the University of Edinburgh, which university he was attending at the time the infamous Burke was murdering men and sending their bodies to medical colleges for dissection, and which caused intense excitement at the time. Mr. Horne came to America with his father and family when he was about eighteen or nineteen years of age, and finished his medical course in the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated in 1836. He practiced medicine in old Columbus, Madison county, Ind., and also at Middletown and Yorktown, following his profession many years, and being well and favorably known. He died in 1880 at Yorktown. Dr. Horne married in Yorktown, Ind., Isabella Scott, born in Monongahela county, Va., daughter of William and Judith (Marchant) Scott. These families were both of old Virginia Colonial stock. William Scott was a captain in a Virginia regiment in the war of 1812. Dr. and Mrs. Horne were the parents of six children: Juliet, Mary, William N., Daniel (deceased), Caroline and John. Dr. Horne was both a Mason and an Odd Fellow. He was a respected citizen and a man of substantial worth. He was devoted to his profession and was a skilful and successful physician.

Dr. William N. Horne received his early education in the public schools and high school and then attended the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated in 1877. He began the practice of medicine with his father at Yorktown where he continued for seven years. The Doctor then went to Kingman, Kans., where he practiced five years, after which he returned to Indiana and settled at Anderson, where he established a good practice, becoming one of the leading physicians.

On Jan. 9, 1878, Dr. Horne married in Anderson, Louie M. Jackson, daughter of David and Susan (Craycraft) Jackson. David Jackson, was a pioneer, and his father, Andrew Jackson, was also well known as such, and in the early years held many of the county offices. He was an old-line Whig in political opinions, and at one time owned the land on which the south portion of Anderson now stands. David Jackson owned a flouring mill which he operated all of his life, dying in his sixtieth year in Anderson. Dr. and Mrs. Horne have one son, Blanchard J., a graduate of Anderson high school, the Indiana State University at Bloomington, and the law department of the latter institution (in 1900), and now the city judge of Anderson, Madison county. Dr. Horne is well known as a man of strict integrity of character, and is active and skillful in his profession.

HON. WILLIAM H. JONES, of Elwood, Ind., a leading lawyer of Madison county, and ex-judge of the court of Elwood, was born July 1, 1836, near Denton, Caroline county, Md., son of John and Maria (Colescott) Jones, and descended from both Welsh and English progenitors. His death occurred Jan. 25, 1907, when he was seventy years of age, honored and respected by all who knew him.

The Jones family was of straight Welsh stock, and the Colescotts were English. John Jones, son of Robert Jones, the pioneer of the family in America, was early left an orphan, by the death of both of his parents, and he was bound out and reared by strangers. He became a farmer in Maryland, where he married Maria Colescott, who had also been born there. In the spring of 1838, Mr. Jones moved his family which then consisted of his wife and infant son, William H., to Delaware, Ohio, where there was at time a large Welsh settlement. The journey was made with a one-horse wagon in which the party safely crossed the Alleghany Mountains. In the following spring he moved to Franklin county, Ind., where his wife's brother, Harrison Colescott, had settled. Mr. Jones settled at Brookville where he resided some years, during the building of the White Water canal, and then bought a farm of 260 acres of land, in the vicinity of Brookville. It was but partially cleared, but this he completed, made many improvements and built a comfortable residence and buildings suitable for carrying on large operations. He was successful in his business plans and amassed an ample fortune, owning land in several States. In appearance he was a man to be remembered, of great physical strength, of powerful muscular development and able to perform prodigies of manual labor. While his education had been necessarily a limited one, he was gifted with an active mind and an intelligent comprehension of all that goes to make a good citizen, an honorable man and a devoted husband and father.

In his early political views he was an old-line Whig and voted for Henry Clay. He was one of the first to enroll himself under the banners of the Republican party, and voted first and last for Republican candidates. He supported John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln. He was a great friend of education and he gave his children every possible advantage, all of them being graduates of Brookville College. Both he and wife were active members of the M. E. Church, which he assisted in founding in his neighborhood, was a constant attendant and was a consistent class leader and exhorter. His children were: William H., James Thomas, John Wesley, Richard Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, Anna Maria, (who died Nov. 2, 1874, aged twenty-three years), Oliver Pitt, and Charles Fremont. of this family. William H., Alexander H. and Charles F. enjoyed many educational advantages. Alexander H., was a graduate of Amboy University at Greencastle, became a lawyer and died Oct. 19, 1876, aged twenty-eight. Charles F., a graduate of Brookville College, died young, during the Civil war. Three of the brothers died within one week of each other with diphtheria: Oliver P. was first stricken and died aged seventeen years; James T. and John W., soldiers in the army, came home during his sickness, contracted the disease and died with it a few days later, Dec. 10, 1862, within thirty minutes of each other, James, aged twenty-three years, and John W. aged twenty-one. The stricken parents survived these heavy domestic blows, the mother living to the age of seventy-two years, dying in 1898, and the father surviving some years longer, dying aged eighty-four years.

William H. Jones was brought up along a path of hard work, being the eldest son. He had much to do in the first clearing of the home farm, and in placing it under proper cultivation. He learned to cut wheat with the old-fashioned cradle, and became very expert in this difficult work and it is on record that, with the assistance of one companion, he cut 160 acres in one day. His sturdy strength also made him an expert with the ax, and many giants of the forest fell as a result of his well-directed blows. Splitting rails was also an accomplishment in his day, but in this industry he was never able to equal his father.

Judge Jones obtained his first schooling in the little log school house which had a puncheon floor, while a huge puncheon was fastened to the side of the cabin, on which the pupils took turns in writing. In spite of its primitive equipments, Judge Jones recalls the hours spent in the pioneer school with pleasure. Later his father sent him to Brookville College, during the period when Rev. John W. Locke was its president, and George A. Chase was one of its professors. Afterward he attended college at Oxford, Ohio, and he remembers Calvin S. Brice, as a youth of seventeen years and one of his classmates, with few indications at that time of the prominent position he would one day reach in the public and financial world.

In 1858 Mr. Jones entered upon the study of law with Judge George Holland, an able man and distinguished lawyer of Brookville. The outbreak of the Civil war interrupted his law studies and, for a time turned his whole attention in another direction.

In September, 1861, he enlisted at Brookville, as a private soldier in Company H, 37th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. After a service of five months he was stricken with typhoid fever, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., and although he came near to death in the following six weeks, the care of his mother and friends brought about convalescence and he was taken home, and was discharged on account of disability in January, 1863. He continued disabled for one year, but later re-enlisted, at Oxford, Ohio, in the 86th O. V. I., of which Calvin S. Brice was then a private. He served as an orderly sergeant and was discharged as such. He again re-enlisted, at Brookville, Ind., in Company H, 134th Ind. V. I., was commissioned first lieutenant, and was soon placed in command of his company, as Capt. Allen, who was in poor health from wounds received at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, was disabled, and he served out his time and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, in 1864. During his second enlistment, in an Ohio regiment, his service was in West Virginia, and he took part in several small battles and skirmishes. During his third enlistment, he was in the battle of Owensboro, Ky., where he was in command of his company. Capt. Jones has a record which proves that he was always an active soldier and took part in all the battles and campaigns of his regiment and shared the hardships with his men. At the close of the war he was brevetted colonel on account of his meritorious conduct.

After his first marriage, in 1864, Colonel Jones settled at Brookville, where he remained until his wife's death. They had one daughter, Hattie, who married O. J. Walker, a lawyer, and died five days after the birth of her son, William Jones Walker. Colonel Jones completed his law studies with Judge George Holland, and was admitted to the Bar in 1867, and formed a partnership with Judge Holland and ex-Senator Charles C. Binkley, which continued ten years. His next business association, with John R. McMahon, continued five years, and then he became associated with his brother, this relation continuing until he came to Elwood, Aug. 19, 1895. Here he entered into partnership with Perry Behymer, which ran on until he was elected judge of the Elwood City Court, in 1899. He remained in office four years, and later, as a magistrate, tried cases. He was connected with many important cases in the United States Courts at Indianapolis, and the larger part of the important litigation at Brookville and Elwood.

Judge Jones was married at Brookville, Ind., in May, 1864, to Aurelia H. John, born in Brookville, daughter of Robert and Martha (Wiles) John. Robert John was probably of Welsh extraction, belonging to an old American family of Indiana. Martha Wiles was his second wife, and their children were: Samuel, a private in the 3rd O. V. I., was killed at the battle of Middle Fort Bridge, W. Va., one of the first victims of the Civil war; John P. was, in 1861, president of Brookville College; Thomas William was president of De Pauw University; Ellen married John G. Adair, a banker at Brookville; Martha married James S. Colescott, a farmer; Jane married John S. Dunlap, a wealthy resident of Indianapolis; Aurelia married Judge Jones; Florence resides with Dr. John, at Greencastle; Elizabeth married Judge George Holland, of Brookville; and Mary married a Mr. Corfu, of Cincinnati. The first marriage of Robert John was to a Miss Graves, and they had one child, Maria, who married John W. Hitt, a banker of Brookville, Ind., and who now resides in Washington, D. C., with her daughter, Mrs. Augustus D. Lynch, whose husband was formerly a U. S. bank examiner.

Judge Jones was married (second), June 29, 1898, to Virginia Barbee, of Elwood. Mrs. Jones is one of the leading members of the M. E. Church in Elwood, is a prominent club woman, active in civic improvement work and an accomplished and cultured lady. Judge Jones was also a member of the M. E. Church, and for more than twenty years was one of the trustees at Brookville. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity, being a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 11, Brookville, and the Royal Arch Chapter at Elwood. He was a Knight of Pythias, and Elk, and belonged to the beneficiary order of Eagles. He was a charter member of the G. A. R. post at Brookville, of which he was commander for eight consecutive terms, and at his death was attached to the post at Elwood.

In politics Judge Jones was always a staunch Republican, in fact was cradled in the party. His first Presidential vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln, and he was a member of the famous marching campaign body known as the "Wide-Awakes," who were such a prominent feature of the Fremont and Dayton campaign. They presented a very picturesque effect in a uniform of glazed cloaks, caps and torchlights. Judge Jones was but a youth of twenty years at the time, but took a very active part in the organization and on one occasion, he rode fifteen miles and return in order to attend a campaign meeting. Even at that day he made many speeches and displayed an earnestness and persuasive eloquence which caused those who heard him to predict success in his future at the Bar. His death brought deep grief to his host of friends, and there were heard many sincere expressions of high regard of his worth as a man and as a citizen.

EDGAR C. LOEHR, M. D., of Noblesville, Hamilton county, is the oldest physician there in point of continuous practice, and he occupies a high position among the members of the medical fraternity in that city and vicinity. He is devoted to his profession, to which he has always given the greater part of his time and attention, but he finds variety and pleasure in the excitement of politics, as a zealous worker for the Republican cause.

Jacob B. Loehr, the Doctor's father, was a native of Abingdon, Va., born Aug. 20, 1821, and tradition has it that his father was a tailor by trade and a German by birth, coming to the United States from his native land and dying in Virginia. Jacob B. Loehr received the education afforded by the public schools of his day, and came to Indiana before he was twenty, making his home in Hamilton county. He was married in Noblesville, in 1848, to Julia Clark, a native of Clarksburg, Va., daughter of Dr. Haymond W. and Almarine (Bond) Clark. Dr. Clark was one of the pioneer physicians of Indiana, coming hither about 1824, and he made the journey on horseback. He settled in Noblesville, where he passed the remainder of his busy life, practicing medicine for fifty years in all. Jacob Loehr began his career here as clerk in a dry-goods store, but he was ambitious and persevering, and quick to observe the needs of the growing community, and in time became one of the most active business men in Noblesville, of which he was considered a representative citizen, one who contributed his share to its advancement and prosperity. He engaged for some time in the cattle business, and later in the dry-goods business, and during the Civil war he bought mules for the United States Government. He was a staunch Republican, active in the workings of his party, and was chosen to several important public positions, serving ably as sheriff and treasurer of Hamilton county, and also as school trustee. During the Civil war he sympathized strongly with the Union cause, and was an effective worker for it, raising men and money for the successful prosecution of the struggle. All in all, he was deservedly looked upon as a man of ability and force, and wielded considerable influence in his locality, although he did not live to attain advanced age, dying June 5, 1873, when fifty-two years old. Mr. Loehr was an early member of the Masonic fraternity in this State, and was prominent and popular among his acquaintances in that body as elsewhere. In his day he was probably one of the best known citizens of this part of the State, both for the large amount of business he transacted and his activity in public matters. Mr. Loehr's family consisted of four children: Allie, who married Eugene Johnson and now lives in Piqua, Ohio; Haymond W.; Luna B., who married George S. Christian; and Edgar Clark.

Edgar Clark Loehr was born Aug. 6, 1850, in Noblesville, and with the exception of the periods of absence necessitated by the prosecution of his studies has passed his life here. He attended the Noblesville public schools in his boyhood, later becoming a student in the State University at Bloomington, after which he pursued his medical studies in the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, Ohio. He graduated from that institution in 1871, and at once settled in his native place for practice, in which he has continued to the present. He has won patronage and esteem by devotion to his profession and his patients regardless of other interests, his duties as a physician coming first. Though a comparatively young man he has the oldest practice in the place, and his prestige is questioned by none. Dr. Loehr has never relinquished study, but has always found time to keep abreast of the day in scientific matters, especially as regards research in medical lines, and he has made a specialty of surgery and women's diseases, in which lines he has an extensive practice. He has familiarized himself with the latest developments in these lines by post-graduate work in the best institutions of New York and Cincinnati, having taken five courses during the past thirteen years when science has made such giant strides, especially in surgery. Since his graduation he has been accumulating valuable medical works until he now has an excellent and comprehensive library, and he has been a liberal patron of the leading medical periodicals. His office is well equipped with modern instruments and appliances of various kinds. His ability has been generally recognized and he is surgeon for the Pennsylvania, Indiana Union Traction and the Big Four Railroads, and for the past sixteen years has been county health officer.

In political sentiment the Doctor is a strong Republican, and from early manhood has been a worker in the party. He has accepted no office except that of coroner, which he held for four years during the eighties, but he has directed the workings of the organization as a member of the State Central Committee and chairman of the County Central Committee and the City Committee. He is a Scottish Rite Mason, also belonging to the Mystic Shrine, and he is a member of the I. O. O. F., and the Elks.

Dr. Loehr was married, Sept. 18, 1873, in Anderson, Ind., to Alice Jones, who was born in Liberty, Wayne county, Ind., daughter of Dr. Thomas N. and Mary (Conwell) Jones. Her father was a pioneer physician of Madison county, where he was in practice for many years.

KIRBY. The name of Kirby is probably one of Danish origin, and was originally written Kirkby, from Kirke, meaning church, and bye, dwelling. The earliest use of the word is found in the name of one of the shires of Deira, a part of ancient Northumbria, very early usage of the word being found also in the names of several towns in the north of England, viz.: Kirkby Kendal, Kirkby Lonsdale, Kirkby Stephen, etc. Although originally written Kirkby, the name has long been pronounced as if written Kirby. The earliest appearance of the name as designating any particular family is found in the title given to the barons of Kirkby Kendal.

The first Baron Kirkby was John Taillebois, who came with the Conqueror, and who died without issue, the barony passing to the family of his brother, Gerard. In 1272 John Kirby was made keeper of the Great Seal, and soon afterward Bishop of Ely. In 1322 another John Kirkby (also written Kirby), was created Bishop of Carlisle. In the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries there were several families of Kirkbye and Kirbys living in various parts of England, as is shown by the visitations of Essex, Leicestershire, Yorkshire, etc. The Kirby names usually found in those visitations are: Richard, Roger, William and John, all Norman names. These are the names usually met with among the early Kirbys of New England, and this circumstance suggests the idea that the New England Kirbys were of Norman origin. Some effort has been made to trace their ancestry in England. The baptism of Michael Kirby, son of Humphrey, Sept. 22, 1622, found in one of the recovered sheets of the lost register of St. Mary's Church, in Warwick, England, shows that there were Kirbys living in that vicinity in the early part of the seventeenth century. It is possible that the ancestors of the New England Kirbys descended from Sir John Kirby, whose daughter Matilda married William Beauchamp, the first Earl of Warwick of that family (see "Visitations of Yorkshire," p. 245.) The arms of the Kirbys were as follows: Argent, two bars, gules, on the canton of the second a cross moline ("Visitations of London," p. 40).

There is a suggestion of good family descent in the provision made by John Kirby of Middletown in his will, that two portions should "not be sold out of the blood," but should "pertain to some of my children or children's children to the end of the world." This singular provision, especially its peculiar wording, is not easily intelligible without the pre-supposition that the testator was conscious of descent from a family of English gentry, and so was both proud of his "blood," and familiar with the entail of landed estate.

In 1818 Elisha Kirby of Middletown, Conn., Capt. Ralph Smith, of Haddam, Conn., and others, compiled a genealogical table of the first five generations of the descendants of John Kirby of Middletown. The manuscript copy belonging to Elisha Kirby fell into the hands of his grandson, Samuel H. Kirby, of New Haven, who published the same in 1890 under the title of "Kirby Family," a pamphlet folio of twelve pages. The "Kirbys of New England," from which this article is entirely drawn as far as the foregoing introduction goes, as well as the genealogy of Thomas H. Kirby, was begun with the purpose merely of correcting some errors in the "Kirby Family" and of bringing it down to date. This work is one of the best of the excellent genealogies that have appeared in the last decade. From it is learned that there is good reason for the belief that the Litchfield Kirbys are nearly related to those of Middletown, and some reason to believe that the descendants of Richard Kirby of Sandwich are also related to the Middletown Kirbys. That John Kirby of Middletown was the brother of Joseph Kirby of Hartford, the ancestor of the Litchfield Kirbys, is rendered highly probable by the discovery that the only surviving son of the former was known as Joseph Kirby, Jr. Besides this indication there are others which are significant, for, as John of Middletown named his son Joseph, Jr., so Joseph of Hartford named his only son John. Both also came from Warwickshire, England, and both were at Hartford near the time of its first settlement. Nor should the tradition preserved in both families, that the founders of the Middletown and Litchfield families were brothers, be left altogether out of the account. There is some reason for the belief that John Kirby of Middletown was the brother of Richard Kirby, of Sandwich, Mass. In summing up the origin of the Kirbys we find that while the name was of Danish origin, they were among those Danes who invaded and conquered Normandy in ancient times, becoming Norman French, and then came in the year 1066 with William the Conqueror to England and emigrated to New England in 1635.

Among the passengers of the "Hopewell," Thomas Babb, master, registered Sept. 11, 1635, as about to sail from the port of London, England, was Jo. Kerbie, aged twelve years. On the list of inhabitants of Plymouth, Mass., between sixteen and sixty years of age, who were enrolled in August, 1643, as able to bear arms, is the name of John Kirby. The Hartford records contain the following entry: "Elizabeth Keerbe, daughter of John Keerbe, was born eighteen of September, one thousand six hundred forty-six." It is believed that all of the above-mentioned records refer to one and the same person, who afterward was known as John Kirby of Middletown, Conn. John Kirby came from Warwickshire, England, for there is a deed of property made by him Sept. 3, 1654, to Richard Lord of Hartford, Conn., and recorded in manuscript copy of First Book, Colonial Records of Connecticut, pp. 272, 273, said property consisting of a house and land and situated within the bounds of the township of Ronnigton, in Warwickshire, England, which indicates that he was a native of that county.

Before April, 1645, John Kirby had become a resident of Hartford, Conn., for on this date it is recorded that "John Kirby and Seth Grant contracted to herd the Hartford cattle for a stated price payable at their houses in corn, pease, etc., on their demand." In 1647 he lived in Wethersfield, Conn., and that year recorded the "ear marks" for his cattle. Having joined the company for settling the planting grounds at Mattabesett, he became a resident of Middletown, Conn., some time between December, 1651, and Jan. 16, 1654, and remained there until his death. His lands in Middletown, which were recorded to him in the Town Book, Jan. 10, 1655, were located on the north side of the rivulet at "North Society," now the town of Cromwell, Conn. His homestead farm was situated in the extreme western part of the present town of Cromwell, on the bend of the river Mattabesett (Little River) where it turns and runs southeast. The bridge over the river just above the bend is called the Kirby bridge at the present time. Below the bridge is a small, but picturesque and wooded island. The house, the foundations of which are still to be seen, stood on higher ground, sloping gradually to the river, and here John Kirby, the first of the American line of which we write, lived, accumulated a good estate and reared a numerous family. He was made a freeman by the General Court of Connecticut at a session held in May, 1654. He died in April, 1677, leaving a will made on April 6th, and an estate valued at 551 pounds, the inventory of which was dated on the 27th of the same month. This was a good estate for those days. John Dwight of Dedham left, in 1661, an estate inventoried at 506 pounds, yet he was esteemed the wealthiest man in Dedham save the minister. It was even a large estate for Middletown.

The inventory enables us to form some idea concerning John Kirby's house, as well as his mode of living and his domestic arrangements. It is evident that the house was a one-story dwelling, containing three rooms, viz.: the "dwelling room," which also seems to have served for the kitchen, a small bed-room above the cellar, and a lean-to or "low room," and the chamber, or garret, was not divided into apartments. From such ancient houses as have survived even to the beginning of the present century, it is easy to form a still closer idea of the house and its interior appearance.

It faced south, as all the early dwellings did, and the chimney, which projected outside of the frame, was on the west side. By so building, two objects were secured which our forefathers deemed essential. The rays of the sun at noon, or at dinner time, shone on the side of the building and the living room was on the sunny, or warm, side of the house. It was, as we have said, of one story, and the chamber, or garret, projected on the east side over the lower portion. It was not built of logs, as is often erroneously supposed the houses of all the first settlers were built, but of hand-sawed, or hewn, planks, an inch and a quarter in thickness, and the frame was constructed of heavy timber. The seams in the boarding were filled with clay, and the floor was fastened to sleepers laid on the ground even with the lower edge of the sills. The thatched roof (or perhaps the curb roof of shingles), windows with small diamond-shaped glass, set in lead, and the slate door with a wooden latch, and string, complete the external picture of the dwelling. Entering at the southeast corner one was obliged to step over the sill, the entry floor being a foot lower than the threshold. In the entry was a ladder, or rude stair, leading to the chamber or garret. The great room, or dwelling room to the left occupied the whole of the west end of the house proper, and was about 18x16 feet in dimensions. The chimney projected into the room with no finishing boards around it. The fireplace was seven or eight feet wide and four feet deep, with an oven at the south end, and the mantel was five and one-half feet high. The hearth was laid with flat stones taken from the fields. The heavy sills projected into the room and formed low seats on three sides. The small glass windows were without curtains; the furniture consisted of a few rush-bottomed chairs, two tables, together with a "small table" and the kitchen utensils, the great pot, skillet, spit and frying-pan. On one side of the room were two large trencher shelves on which was displayed the pewter of the family, and which provided room for other things, such as the "Nine Bibles," which make an interesting item in the inventory, for the paternal as well as the religious feelings of John Kirby are displayed in this his endeavor to provide a Bible for each member of his numerous family. The bed-chamber above the "cellar," so spoken of because the floor was elevated a foot or more to give greater depth at this point to the cellar beneath it, occupied the northeast corner of the house. One had to mount by steps on the east side of the dwelling room in order to enter it. It was so low in the walls that a tall person could not stand upright in it and the bed must have occupied most of the space. At the time of the inventory, however, it seems to have been used merely as a store-room, for the bed is absent. It contained, among other things, the movable cupboard or buffet, and the arms of the family, two guns and swords, only two guns now, for the eldest son, John, only a few months before had been killed by the Indians. The "low room" or lean-to, on the north side, probably ran the whole length of that side of the house, and at the eastern end was the pantry with its trap-door leading to the cellar. It was used evidently at the time of the inventory as a bed-room, as well as a convenient place in spring for spinning. It contained a bed, a trundle-bed and three spinning wheels, one for "woolen" and two for "linen," for there were several daughters. In the cellar were four barrels of cider, still left from the winter store and twelve pounds of tobacco. There was a pipe, too, up-stairs, all of which clearly evinces that John Kirby, although he had nine Bibles, had also some human infirmities. In the "chamber" or garret there was a bed, with its "furniture," i. e., everything that belonged to the bed, including curtains and valances. The iron chest, also, with its goodly store, seems to have been kept there, and upon the floor were spread the seed, corn, wheat, rye, barley and maize, for further planting. Some of the corn, however, had already, April 27th, been put into the ground.

We have endeavored to describe the house and home of John Kirby, the settler, as it appears from the terms of the inventory taken at the time of his decease. If, in addition, we picture to ourselves the house as standing on rising ground, overlooking the clear and willow-fringed Mattabesett, not more than twenty rods away, and which, turning in its southern course and flowing eastward, sparkles beside, as well as before, the door of the dwelling, while beyond the river there rises the noble outline of Mount Lamentation and of many other distant elevations, we shall be able to form some conception of the homestead of the forefather of the Middletown Kirbys and of the beauty of its situation.

Concerning the wife of John Kirby, nothing is positively known except that her name was Elizabeth, that she married (second)

Abraham Randall, of Windsor, Conn., outlived her second husband, and died after 1697. It is believed, however, that her name was Elizabeth Hinds, that she was the niece of Sarah (Hinds) Cheplin, wife of Clement Cheplin of Bury St. Edmunds, County Suffolk, England, and afterward of Wethersfield, Conn., that she was born in Bury St. Edmunds, and accompanied, or followed, her aunt, to Wethersfield, Conn., and was married to John Kirby before 1645.

The terms of John Kirby's will show that his wife Elizabeth must have been a woman whose husband could safely trust her, for he left her the possession and use of all his estate during her life. And that she was worthy of such confidence is evident from her relinquishment of the estate so bequeathed to her, "that she might not be destitute of a comfortable subsistence," to her children after her second marriage. She married a second time, Oct. 27, 1681, Abraham Randall, of Windsor, Conn., son of Philip Randall, of Windsor, Conn., the son of Philip Randall, of Dorchester and Windsor. Mr. Randall died Oct. 2, 1690, in Windsor, and she returned to Middletown. In April, 1697, she had become a resident of Wethersfield, and probably died there.

The children of John and Elizabeth Kirby were: Mary, born in 1644, probably in Hartford, Conn., married Emanuel Buck; Elizabeth, born Sept. 8, 1646, in Hartford, Conn., married David Sage; Hannah, born March 2, 1649, in Wethersfield, Conn., married Thomas Andrews; John, born Dec. 18, 1651, in Wethersfield, Conn., was killed by Indians, in 1676, on the road between Wethersfield and Middletown; Eunice, born Dec. 18, 1651, in Wethersfield, Conn., twin with John, died in 1677, unmarried; Esther, born in 1652, in Middletown, Conn., married Benajah Stone; Sarah, born Jan. 16, 1654, in Middletown, Conn., married Samuel Hubbard; Joseph, born July 17, 1656, in Middletown, Conn., married Sarah Markham; Bethia, born Feb. 14, 1658, in Middletown, Conn., married John Andrews; Susannah, born May 3, 1664, in Middletown, Conn., married Abraham Crittenden; and Abigail, born March 6, 1666, in Middletown, Conn., married David Robinson.

Joseph Kirby (2), son of John, the only surviving son of John and Elizabeth Kirby, was born July 17, 1656, in Middletown, Conn. It is the family tradition that he was a wheelwright by trade, and this may account for his frequent change of residence. He resided in Middletown until after May, 1684. The following January he had become a resident of Southampton, L. I. In Town Records of Southampton, L. I., p. 113, is an abstract of deed from "Joseph Kirby of Middletown to Maj. John Howell of Southampton, of 320 acres of land in Middletown, Conn., bounded north by Sergeant John Warner, south by Samuel Hubbard, west by Elizabeth Randall, east by undivided land, which was bought of Elizabeth Randall, May 18, 1685." By November, 1687, he had returned to Middletown, Savage says, though we know not on what authority, that "he went to Carolina, but at the end of some years came home poor, and had a law-suit with the other heirs about his father's estate." It is certain that he was a resident of Milford, Conn., from July, 1706, until after June, 1708, and that in 1706 and 1707 he had a law-suit with his brother-in-law, Alexander Rollo, and David Robinson over the distribution of his father's estate. The records of the court of assistants, book 2, pp. 72-75, state that May 1, 1707, Joseph Kirby appeared to prosecute this appeal. It was taken by him from the distribution of his father's estate by the probate court to the court of assistants. In this suit Joseph Kirby appeared as his own attorney, conducted his case, and the appeal was practically sustained, the original distribution of the probate court being somewhat changed. An interesting fact connected with the recording of this suit is that he is twice recorded therein as Joseph Kirby, Jr. That he was engaged in the practice of law at this time is shown both by the circumstance that he appeared as his own attorney in the above suit and by the record of his admission to the Bar in 1709, under the law of 1708. In May, 1708, a law was enacted by which attorneys must be formally admitted to practice in the courts of law. The earliest admitted attorneys of Hartford county and of the state were Richard Edwards of Hartford and Roger Wolcott of Windsor, and in the same year Capt. John Wadsworth and Capt. Thomas Wells were both admitted, and in the following year others were admitted, among these being Joseph Kirby, Jr., of Middletown, the latter being the first one of his township.

Joseph Kirby was married (first) Dec. 10, 1681, in Wethersfield, Conn., to Sarah Markham; the names of her parents are not certainly known and there is some doubt as to the correctness of her name. Mr. Kirby was married (second) Oct. 17, 1704, in New Haven, Conn., to Mary Plum, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Norton) Plum, of Milford, Conn. The date of her death is not known, but she outlived her husband, who died Dec. 2, 1711, in Middletown, aged sixty-five years. Joseph Kirby's children by his first marriage were: Elizabeth, born Feb. 20, 1683, married James Brown; Sarah, born Aug. 10, 1685, married Samuel Baldwin; Deborah, born March 27, 1688; John, born Feb. 16, 1691, married Hannah Stowe; Mary, born June 10, 1693, married Benoni Stebbins; Joseph, baptized June 9, 1695, died young; Bethia, born about 1698, married Nathaniel Sanford. The children of the second wife were: Joseph, baptized July 17, 1706, died Dec., 1725; Susannah, baptized in December, 1706, died unmarried in 1733; and Margaret, born Sept. 2, 1709, married Capt. Nathaniel Wooster, of Oxford, Connecticut.

John Kirby, son of Joseph, was born Feb. 16, 1691, in Middletown, Conn., and inherited a third part of his father's estate, to which he added, purchasing of his sisters their share in the estate, and also lands which had formerly belonged to his grandfather, John Kirby. He resided on, or near, the grandfather's homestead in that part of Middletown, which until 1851 was called Upper Houses, and now is the town of Cromwell, where he became a large land-holder and influential man. His name is found in the list of taxable persons in North Society in 1715, and he was a member of the Second Church, organized Jan. 5, 1715. From the tenor of his will it would appear that he was a careful and conscientious man and given to detail and accuracy in business. He died in Middletown, April 25, 1760, aged sixty-nine years.

John Kirby was married March 3, 1718, in Middletown, to Hannah Stowe, born Feb. 11, 1696, daughter of Thomas and Bethia (Stocking) Stowe, of Middletown, and she died March 7, 1780, aged eighty-four years. Their children were: Joseph, born January, 1719, married Esther Wilcox; John, born Sept. 26, 1720, married Lucy Norton; Hannah, born in April, 1723, married Solomon Sage; Daniel, born in October, 1724, married Lucretia Porter; Sarah, born July 19, 1726, married Solomon Savage; Mary, born in December, 1727, married (first) Amos Johnson, (second) William Parmelee; Thomas, born Dec. 2, 1729, married Lucy Stocking; Bethia, born in December, 1731, married Daniel Stocking; Susannah, born Feb. 8, 1734, married Benjamin Bulkley; Jonathan, born in 1736, married Lucy Burgess; and Elizabeth, baptized Sept. 24, 1738, married Dec. 22, 1762, Joseph Tracy, of Middletown, Connecticut.

Thomas Kirby, son of John, was born Dec. 2, 1729, in Middletown Upper Houses, and was married Nov. 26, 1755, to Lucy Stocking, born June 10, 1737, daughter of Elisha Stocking by his first wife, Rachel Ranney. Thomas Kirby was a farmer, and lived in that part of Middletown which is now a part of Cromwell, where he died July 29, 1810, his wife surviving until Nov. 28, 1818. Their children were: Giles, born in 1756, died Aug. 7, 1776; Abel, baptized Feb. 26, 1758, died Nov. 5, 1775; Lucy, born Sept. 23, 1760, married William Hamlin; Thomas, born Feb. 7, 1762, married (first) Rebecca Hamlin, and (second) Jane Bower; George, born May 5, 1764, died at sea, Oct. 18, 1778; Zebulon, born Feb. 25, 1766, married Louisa Gibson; Reuben, born Sept. 5, 1768, married Molly Butler; Samuel, born Feb. 16, 1771, married Abigail Sage; Mary, born Jan. 10, 1773, married Ralph Smith; Grace, born Jan. 17, 1775, married Oct. 11, 1837, as his third wife, Miles Merwin, of Durham, Conn., and died Aug. 13, 1856, leaving no children; Giles, born June 16, 1777, married Lucy Spencer, and Betsy, born July 7, 1779, married April 3, 1816, as her second husband, Elisha Treat, of Middletown, Conn., and died July 8, 1861, leaving no children.

Zebulon Kirby, son of Thomas, of Stockbridge, Mass., was born Feb. 25, 1766, in Middletown Upper Houses. At first he followed the sea, and was a captain on a schooner in the West Indies trade. While on a voyage to these islands, he contracted yellow fever, from which he recovered, but thereafter abandoned a sea-faring life. In May, 1803, he removed with his family from Middletown to the Berkshire Mountains, buying a place about a mile and a half west of the village of Stockbridge, Mass. This property he subsequently sold and purchased a farm on the west margin of the mountain lake of clear, deep water, one mile wide and two miles long, at the upper end of the Stockbridge valley, in full view of the village of Lennox. It was an attractive farm to reside upon, and the family still retains it. Mr. Kirby was married May 3, 1795, in Middletown, to Louisa Gibson, born March 21, 1772, daughter of John and Joanna (Crowfoot) Gibson, of Middletown and Stockbridge. He died Aug. 16, 1821, at Stockbridge, and his wife Aug. 24, 1853, and both were buried at Middletown, Conn. Their children were: John, born March 24, 1796, married Lucy Shepard; Timothy, born Nov. 16, 1797, married Amelia Metcalf Hose; Zebulon, born Nov. 7, 1799, married Anna M. Bordhardt; Louisa, born Sept. 28, 1801, married Sept. 18, 1854, John Dresser (as his second wife), and died March 27, 1872; Martha Gibson, born July 4, 1803, married John Dresser; Thomas, born Dec. 25, 1804, married Sarah H. Tomlinson; George, born June 7, 1806, married Clarissa L. Tracy; and Elizabeth, born Oct. 26, 1808, died unmarried, Aug. 31, 1829.

Thomas Kirby, son of Zebulon, was born Dec. 25, 1804, in Stockbridge, Mass. When eighteen years old he removed to Richmond, Ind., and from there to Dayton, Ohio, but in 1830 he settled at Mustertown, now Muncie, Ind., where he entered into business. He was married July 15, 1832, to Sarah Hickman Tomlinson, born Feb. 8, 1814, in Guilford county, N. C., daughter of Judge John and Dolly Hill (Beville) Tomlinson, of Richmond, Ind. He died Aug. 14, 1879, in Muncie, Indiana.

Judge John Tomlinson was born May 29, 1789, and died April 16, 1853. He married Dolly Hill Beville, born May 9, 1786, died Sept. 18, 1873, daughter of Hezekiah Beville, of North Carolina, born May 27, 1744, and Anna, his wife, born April 1, 1745. Judge Tomlinson moved from Guilford county, near Gainsborough, N. C., in 1828, and settled in Richmond, Ind. His children were: Nancy A., born Oct. 12, 1809, married John Taylor; Philip Hill, born Dec. 7, 1811, died Dec. 13, 1824; Sarah Hickman, born Feb. 8, 1814, married Thomas Kirby; Gilla Scott, born Jan. 10, 1816, died May 10, 1845, married Jacob Powers; and Amanda Allen, born Dec. 11, 1817, died Nov. 11, 1865, married a Shoemaker.

The children of Thomas and Sarah Kirby were: (1) Thomas Hickman, born Oct. 8, 1834, married Anna S. Cassady. (2) Martha Ann, born Nov. 20, 1836, married April 8, 1875, Americus H. Hamilton, of Muncie, Ind., born Jan. 16, 1844, and had one child, Frederick Kirby, born Jan. 11, 1876. (3) John Marvin, born Nov. 6, 1839, married Mary F. Putnam. (4) Elizabeth, born Oct. 6, 1841, married Nov. 8, 1866, Julius Andreas Heinsohn, born June 10, 1837, in Neuhaus, Germany, and present proprietor of the "Kirby House" at Muncie, Ind. Their children are: Sarah Anna, born May 30, 1868, in Muncie, married June 1, 1898, John James Hartley, of Muncie; and Thomas Kirby, born March 17, 1871, in Louisville, Ky., married in Milwaukee, Wis., Mary Josephine Sprinkle, and has one child, Robert, born March 6, 1894, in Muncie. Mrs. Heinsohn is regent of the Paul Revere Chapter of the D. A. R. (5) Sarah Jane, born June 24, 1843, died July 4, 1875. (6) George, born Dec. 6, 1844, married Kate M. Whipple, and they have these children: Wilson W., born Sept. 13, 1867; Marion E., May 11, 1869; Louisa, Aug. 24, 1872; and John Marvin, April 8, 1878. Thomas Kirby died Aug. 14, 1879.

THOMAS HICKMAN KIRBY, son of Thomas, was born Oct. 8, 1834, in Muncie, Ind., which was at that time but a hamlet. He attended a subscription school which was kept by Mrs. Ethel, the mother of Nathaniel F. Ethel of Muncie. The Ethels were one of the pioneer families of Muncie and lived on the present corner of Main and Franklin streets, where they owned a large frame house. Thomas H. Kirby was only about three years old when he began attending this pioneer school. His father lived nearly a mile away and the child would be taken by him on horseback through the woods to Mrs. Ethel, who taught him the alphabet and also to read. After this he attended several district schools, some of which were kept in log cabins. As soon as he was old enough he spent the summers working on the farm, but attended school when possible in the winter time. He remained at home until he was about twenty-five years old, and then made a trip to Illinois, where, after engaging in some speculation, he returned to his home until the spring of 1860, when he went to Boston, where he shipped on board the fishing-schooner "Moonlight," under Capt. Nathan Blanchard, of Swampscott, which is a part of the old town of Lynn. They fished off Boston Harbor for the city market for a time, and he then shipped before the mast on the whaler "Chanticleer," a fore and aft schooner, under Capt. Silas Young. The whaler sailed for the channel ground and the gulf stream in search of sperm whales, cruised off the Bermudas, and although they were bound for the Azores did not go so far. They captured five sperm whales and some black fish, which also produce a considerable amount of oil, and after a four months' cruise they returned to Boston. This novel experience Mr. Kirby enjoyed. The officers were strict disciplinarians, but treated the men civilly and while rough sea-faring people, were just in their attitude to the sailors. Mr. Kirby spent the winter of his return—1860-61—on the farm.

In April, 1861, he enlisted at Muncie as a private in Company C, 8th Ind. V. I., Capt. Thomas J. Brady (afterward brigadier general). Mr. Kirby's enlistment was on the first call of President Lincoln for three months men, and Company C was the first in the State to report to Governor Morton at Indianapolis. His service was in West Virginia, and he took part in the battle of Rich Mountain, the first of the Civil war. On the expiration of his term of service he returned to Indianapolis with his regiment, where he was honorably discharged. Later he re-enlisted for the three years' service and assisted in recruiting Company B, 36th Ind. V. I., of which he was commissioned first lieutenant, and in which he served until his resignation was caused on account of disability, he having been injured during his first term of service. The government had not then the means of caring for the soldiers, and the commissary department was badly supplied and not well organized. Neither had the soldiers become accustomed to caring for themselves in the field, and were not yet hardened to exposure. As Mr. Kirby was one of the first soldiers to enlist, he suffered with the others, and endured hardships from which he has never recovered, and which caused him to become so disabled that he was obliged to resign during his second term of service. His army service having shattered his health he went to California in the summer of 1862, sailing from New York to the Panama on the Vanderbilt line, and crossed the Isthmus, went on to San Francisco, and first secured employment on a ranch. Soon after he went on to Oregon, and engaged in gold mining, and then to Virginia City, Nev., where he remained eighteen months engaged in gold mining. For three years he engaged in mining in Plumas county, Cal. In the fall of 1867 he returned to Indiana, and for the following seventeen years engaged in a grocery business at Muncie. He then turned his attention to the lumber trade, in which he has been interested ever since. He is a well-known, respected business man of this city, and has always been deeply interested in its welfare, having seen it develop from the time when its present busiest streets were only cow-paths. The building of the fine "Kirby" House was one of the enterprises of his father which was completed by our subject and his brothers. Mr. Kirby built his own substantial brick residence in 1874.

Thomas Hickman Kirby was married, in 1869, in Muncie, Ind., to Anna Sayle Cassady, born at Middletown, Montgomery Co., Ohio, June 30, 1842, daughter of William and Eliza (Van Horn) Cassady. The Van Horn family is of sturdy Holland-Dutch stock. William Cassady, father of Mrs. Kirby, moved from Middletown to Muncie in the early fifties, establishing a drug store which he conducted for many years. He died at Muncie, aged eighty-two years. For a long period he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, to which office his son, William, succeeded.

Two children were born to Thomas Hickman and Anna Sayle (Cassady) Kirby: Edith Elizabeth, born Jan. 21, 1872; and Edward C., born June 4, 1881. The former was educated in the public schools of Muncie, and attended the well-known classical school of May Wright Sewall, at Indianapolis, where she took a three years' course. On June 21, 1900, she was married at Muncie, to Robert E. Bornes, born at Denver, Colo., Aug. 29, 1873, son of James Purdie and Emily (Hott) Bornes, and a member of an old New York family. Mr. Bornes is a hardware merchant at Colorado Springs. They have had one child, Ann Cassady, born at Colorado Springs, Jan. 1, 1905, and died April 1, 1906. Edward C. Kirby is a graduate of Rose Polytechnic Institute at Terre Haute, Ind., and is an electrical and mechanical engineer, connected with the General Electric Company at Schenectady, New York.

Thomas H. Kirby is a member of the Masonic fraternity, a Knight Templar at Muncie, and belongs to the Scottish Rite branches at Indianapolis. He is a member of Williams Post, G. A. R., at Muncie, and a member of the Loyal Legion at Indianapolis, being chief warden of the State of Indiana. In politics he was one of the original Republicans, having voted for John C. Fremont, the first Republican candidate for President, and for every Republican candidate since that time. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

DR. ROBERT S. BYERS. Some one has said "the proper study of mankind is man" and it is certain that no science is so vitally necessary to mankind as that of medicine. What is not within the reach of the physician who has thoroughly perfected himself in his chosen profession, and who conscientiously does his full duty by those who call upon him in their dire need? Personal success and a good competency are assured, but the moral aspect of his work has to do with higher things. He is priest, lawyer and missionary all in one. He has the direction not of the body alone, but of the mind, the vocations, residences and even the lives of those who look to him for guidance and trust in his honor and ability. Dr. Robert S. Byers has long been known as a man who fully appreciates his moral duty to his patient, and as one who combines with far more than ordinary skill, a disinterestedness and honesty of purpose that have won the confidence and love of all who have called upon him in his professional capacity. He was born in Trafalgar, Hensley township, Johnson Co., Ind., April 10, 1852. His father was Benjamin Byers, of Kentucky, and he was one of five children, three sons and two daughters, of whom three are now living beside himself: John H., of Hidlago, Ill.; Matilda J., wife of William Raulings, of Franklin; and Isaac N., of Samaria, Indiana.

Benjamin Byers was by occupation a farmer. He came to Indiana when only two years of age, in about the year 1820, locating in Franklin township, where he grew to manhood and married, moving to Hensley, near Samaria, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres of timber land, and this he cleared and improved himself. To this spot of ground he added 240 acres, making 320 acres in all. He died in 1898, upon the home place, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife Nancy (Kelley) Byers, also of Kentucky, lived to be seventy-two years of age, her death occurring two years prior to that of her husband. Both were prominent in the Missionary Baptist Church, in which they rendered faithful services and were greatly beloved.

Henry Byers, father of Benjamin and grandfather of Dr. Byers, was known as "Major," having been a drum-major in the war of 1812, in which he served with great devotion. In business he was successful, rearing a large family and helping each child as he matured to a comfortable farm and home. He was well-known in Johnson county, having settled in Franklin township, where he entered land from the government. Henry Byers was born in Pennsylvania, moving to Virginia and later to Kentucky, thence going to Indiana, where he died in Franklin township at an advanced age. He belonged to the State militia and was in the engagement with the Indians at Fort Harrison, near Terre Haute. He was noted for his bravery and devotion to duty, and the drum which he carried in the war of 1812 is still preserved in the Byers family, a much prized heirloom. His father was George Byers, a native of Germany, from which country he ran away when a youth, coming to America, where he was afterward sold to pay his passage across the ocean. He located in Pennsylvania, and had five or six children when he died, his death occurring when all of them were of tender age. These children were afterward bound out, and the family that Henry Byers was bound to moved to Kentucky. The Byers family in this way were scattered for some twenty years before they were able to ascertain each other's whereabouts.

The maternal grandfather of Dr. Byers was Zachariah Kelley, a native of Mercer county, Kentucky, and an early settler in Indiana, where he located in Franklin township, Johnson county, taking up government land, and following up farming as an occupation. His family consisted of eight or ten children.

Dr. Robert S. Byers was reared on a farm in Hensley township, Johnson county, and attended the district schools in District No. 5, which is noted for the many prominent men which graduated from it. Remaining at home until grown, he then married and rented land, doing a general farming business in Hensley township, for some four years, when he moved to near Greenup, Ill., where his health failed him, and he accordingly came back to Indiana and took up the study of medicine. Graduating from the Indiana Medical College, he began practicing at Yale, Ill., where he remained about four years, when, his health again breaking down, he was obliged to leave a fine practice and return to Indiana. Here he settled at Samaria, and practiced about two years, coming then to Trafalgar, where he has since been a general practitioner.

On Nov. 6, 1872, Dr. Byers was joined in wedlock to Caroline McFadden, daughter of James and Emily (Gardner) McFadden, and to them was born one child, Eva, who married Dr. Claude E. Ragsdale, now the partner of Dr. Byers, and has three children, Daniel, Carrie and Carl.

Dr. Byers is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, while his wife in her religious belief is a Methodist. Both are highly esteemed in the church, and have done much to promote its welfare. Dr. Byers belongs to the Trafalgar Lodge, No. 413, F. & A. M., and is also an influential and highly esteemed member of Lodge No. 181, I. O. O. F., being Past Grand of that lodge. To these fraternities he also has added a membership in the Knights of Pythias, and is prominent in Johnson Lodge, No. 437, of that order. He belongs to the Court of Honor, and is its medical examiner. He is also examiner for the Iowa National Bankers of New York, the Prudential and the Mutual Life (N. Y.) Insurance Companies. Dr. Byers is a supporter of the Republican party, in the welfare of which he has at all times evinced great interest. President Harrison, recognizing his fitness for the position, appointed him pension examiner, to which position he was reappointed by President McKinley, being out of office during the Democratic administration of President Cleveland. For over ten years he has served as examiner, during which time his efficient work has been highly appreciated both by pensioners and Government.

In medical societies Dr. Byers has for many years occupied a prominent place. He is president of the Johnson County Medical Society, is a member of the Indiana State Medical Society, and also of the American Medical Association. He has won a name for himself in the medical world, which is not confined to Indiana alone, and is a recognized authority far and wide. Successful in his practice, honest and sincere always, he well deserves the high position which he occupies among the medical fraternity, as well as with those who know him best.

JOSEPH D. KINNARD, the present auditor of Madison county, Ind., and a prominent and influential citizen of Anderson, was born Jan. 30, 1847, son of John H. and Elizabeth (Dunwoody) Kinnard, and a member of a Scotch-Irish family which was early identified with the interests of Chester county, Pa., in which section it was founded prior to the American Revolution.

William Kinnard, grandfather of Joseph D., was a farmer of Chester county, Pa., and there married Mary F. Hannum, daughter of Col. John Hannum, of the Revolution.

John H. Kinnard, son of William and Mary F., was born in Chester county in 1823, and was there reared. He married Elizabeth Dunwoody, daughter of William Dunwoody, of English descent, and in 1858 removed to Fall Creek township, Madison Co., Ind., where he purchased 180 acres of land, adding thereto until he had 220 acres, all well-improved property. He died in November, 1891. A Republican in politics, he was one of the township's foremost citizens, and was respected and esteemed by all who knew him. His children were: Joseph D., William R., Mary F., Owen D., Charles S. (who died aged thirty-three years), George L. and Ellen (twins), John H. (who died in infancy), and Lewis D.

Joseph D. Kinnard was eleven years of age when his parents came to Indiana, and here he received a common and high school education, graduating from the Pendleton high school. He commenced business as a farmer in Fall Creek township, renting the home farm, on which he lived for several years, after which he purchased 120 acres of good land, to which he has added from time to time, now owning 240 acres. In 1902 the citizens of his community elected Mr. Kinnard county auditor by a majority of 1,100 votes, and he has ably filled that responsible office to the present time. Mr. Kinnard is a man of pleasing personality, and is greatly esteemed by all with whom he has had business relations.

On Nov. 2, 1872, Mr. Kinnard was married in Fall Creek township, to Sarah Hardy, born Dec. 7, 1849, in that township, daughter of Neal and Elizabeth (Russell) Hardy, natives of Chester Co., Pa., who came to Indiana as pioneers in 1830. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kinnard: Frank, who died at the age of twenty-three years; John H., and Morris H.

GEORGE W. CAMPBELL, the senior member of the firm of Campbell, Smith, Ritchie Co., manufacturers of furniture and dealers in lumber and all kinds of building material, in Lebanon, Boone county, is one of the wealthy and prominent residents of the city, whose name is known and honored not only among its financial magnates, but by those who are familiar with its civic management. As the name suggests, Mr. Campbell comes of Scotch-Irish descent, and his great-grandfather was born in Scotland. This same ancestor was the first to come to America, and he settled in the Susquehanna Valley.

The paternal grandfather of George W. Campbell was a native of Pennsylvania, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was McPeters. He came to Indiana in the early days, and was the first settler at Jefferson, Clinton county, where he entered land from the government. He and his wife died there well advanced in years, and leaving a large family.

Mark Campbell, father of George W., was also born in Pennsylvania, but followed his father to Indiana and settled in Clinton county, northeast of Frankfort, where he bought a farm and raised his family. Later he moved to a place north of Michigantown, Clinton county, and there spent the rest of his life. He died in 1870, lacking only twelve days of completing his seventieth year. His wife was Matilda (Gosshorn) Campbell, born in Pennsylvania in 1804, and deceased in 1854. Both were members of the United Presbyterian Church. Their ten children were as follows: William, of Frankfort, Ind.; James Y., of Rochester, Ind.; Nicholas, who died in Pennsylvania, in infancy; Robert G., of Burlington, Colo.; John B., who died in infancy; Sarah J., wife of Daniel Sill, residing near Frankfort, Ind.; Mark T., of Ozark, Mo.; George W.; Hannah A., deceased wife of John Hutchinson; Millard F., of Lebanon. Mrs. Campbell was a daughter of a Mr. Gosshorn, a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent, and a farmer by occupation. He and his wife both lived to a good old age, and were the parents of a large family.

George W. Campbell was born in Clinton county, near Frankfort, March 9, 1845, and grew up on his father's farm there. As a boy he attended the district schools, next farmed for a while on his own account, and then continued his education at the academy at Frankfort. For two years he taught school before entering on his business life. His first venture was in the drug store at Frankfort, where he remained two years, and then moved to Lebanon and continued in the same line there for sixteen years. In the year 1891 he became interested in the lumber business and opened the planing mill and furniture factory with which he has ever since been associated. The firm has done a most prosperous business, and employs about thirty workers.

Mr. Campbell was united in marriage May 22, 1873, to Miss Alice C. Paige, daughter of Frank and Martha (Bair) Paige. They have had three children, namely: Ethel, who married Frank Coombs, of Lebanon; Ivan, who lived only a little over three months; and Myrtle, the wife of Lester F. Jones, of Lebanon. The family are prominent socially, and all are active in various social and philanthropic works. Mrs. Campbell and her daughters are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Campbell is a member of Boone Lodge, No. 9, F. & A. M., and of the Knights of Pythias, and both he and his wife belong to the Eastern Star. In politics he is a Republican, and is an influential local factor in the party. He has served as county commissioner for one term, has twice been a school trustee, and has been elected a member of the city council. In every relation of life he has displayed conspicuous ability, and has met the demands of every position which he has filled with marked success. His residence is at No. 304 Meridian street, Lebanon, where he owns a handsome home.

LIEUT. JONATHAN W. ZEUBLIN, one of the highly esteemed residents of Pendleton, Ind., and one of the survivors of the great Civil war, in which he served as an officer, was born Sept. 24, 1838, in Chester county, Pa., and is a member of an old and honored family.

The name Zeublin, which, although the family lived for many years in Switzerland, is supposed to be of German origin, was originally spelled Zublin.

John Zublin, the great-grandfather of Jonathan W., and the founder of the family in America, came here prior to the American Revolution. His children were: Aaron, David, Jacob, John and Susan, and perhaps others.

John Zeublin, son of John, was born in Bucks county, Pa., April 1, 1774. He lived in Chester county, Pa., where he was a wheelwright and made spinning wheels, but in later life engaged in agricultural pursuits in East Nantmel township, Chester county, ten miles from Downingtown. He was a fruit grower and substantial citizen. Twice married, one child was born to his first union, Mary, who married Robert Porter, a clothier of Philadelphia, who finally settled in Portsmouth, Ohio. His second wife was Elizabeth Himes, who was born in Pennsylvania, July 25, 1777, and she was the mother of: (1) Judith, born Dec. 10, 1811, in East Nantmel township, married, Sept. 25, 1832, Miles Todd, who was born Jan. 11, 1810, in West Nantmel township. In early life he was a druggist in Philadelphia. He bought a drug store of the famous Dr. Thomson, the founder of the Thomsonian system of medicine. Later he became a local Methodist minister, and was licensed to preach by Bishop Levi Scott, in Goshen, Ind. Coming to Indiana and settling at Pendleton, May 1, 1852, he bought property on which he lived until his death at the age of ninety-three years, July 14, 1893. He was one of the prominent members of the Methodist Church at Pendleton. To Mr. and Mrs. Todd were born: Elizabeth, born July 1, 1833 (died May 27, 1839); John M., July 26, 1834; Nathaniel, March 4, 1836 (died May 7, 1836); Isaac N., March 4, 1837 (died May 14, 1860); Mary J., Nov. 24, 1838 (died in June, 1903); and Margaret B., Feb. 4, 1841. (2) Isaac Newton, born Nov. 25, 1812, is mentioned below. (3) John Milton was born April 8, 1813. (4) David was born Dec. 25, 1815. John Zeublin, the father of this family, died on his farm in his seventies, and his wife lived to be about the same age, both dying on the farm, and being buried in the Vincent cemetery, in East Nantmel township. They were close communion Baptists, and he was an excellent musician and played in the church. He was an accomplished German scholar, and a man respected and esteemed by all.

Isaac Newton Zeublin, father of Lieutenant Jonathan W., was born in Chester county, Pa., and in 1851 removed to Madison county, Ind., the journey being made by rail to Johnstown, Pa., thence by canal to Pittsburg, and by steamboat down the Ohio river to Madison, Ind., and then by railroad to Indianapolis, Ind., and from there, also by railroad, to Pendleton, Ind., where the family arrived Oct. 1, 1851. Jonathan Wynn, Mr. Zeublin's father-in-law, was at this time living about two miles east of Pendleton, and Mr. Zeublin made his home with him for a time, the same fall making a journey to Illinois. He returned that winter, however, and engaged in a mercantile business in Pendleton. Then becoming station agent for the "Bee Line," now the Big Four, at Pendleton, he continued thus for many years, at the time of his resignation being the oldest agent on the road. After leaving the employ of the railroad he engaged in land speculation and other enterprises, accumulating considerable property, including several farms and other real estate, but in his later years met with business reverses. In politics he was an old-line Whig, a Republican later, and always a staunch Union man. Both of his sons were soldiers in the Civil war. Mr.

Zeublin and his wife were Methodists, he being one of the most prominent members of the church at Pendleton; class leader, superintendent of the Sunday-school, a pillar of the church and liberal in his support thereof.

Isaac N. Zeublin was married to Rachel Ann Wynn, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Wynn) Wynn, members of old Quaker families, founded in the Colonies at the time of the coming of William Penn. To this union there were born children as follows: (1) Jonathan W. is mentioned below. (2) Mary E. was born July 29, 1840. (3) John Evans, born Oct. 2, 1842, was a soldier in the Civil war, connected with the Department of the East, in the telegraphers department, being in the Virginia campaign, and after the war served as telegrapher at Washington and Baltimore. He was killed in stepping from a railroad train July 26, 1900, at Bucyrus, Ohio. The father of these children died April 19, 1885, aged seventy-two years.

Jonathan Wynn, the father of Mrs. Isaac N. Zeublin, was a blacksmith and farmer and located in Indiana as a pioneer about 1840, settling on purchased land near Pendleton. He assisted to build and was a part owner of a flouring mill at Huntsville, Ind., as well as an oil mill. He was a local minister in the Methodist Church, preaching to the pioneers throughout his section of the county, and having a license to perform marriage ceremonies both in Pennsylvania and Indiana. He was a substantial citizen and a man of great determination. His old family Bible is yet preserved and is in the possession of Lieut. Zeublin. This interesting volume is nearly eighteen inches long, bound in calf skin, was printed in New York in 1822, the type is still clear and legible and the book is in a good state of preservation. Jonathan Wynn's children were as follows: Rachel Ann, Susan Jane, Thomas, Elizabeth Mary and John Evans. Mr. Wynn died in Illinois, while on a visit to his relatives in that State. Mr. Wynn lived on the old homestead, in Chester county, Pa., and it was on this historic farm that Lieut. Zeublin was born. This farm remained in the name of Jonathan Wynn from the date of entry from the Government until sold by the grandfather of Lieutenant Zeublin, every exchange of title being to a Jonathan Wynn.

Jonathan W. Zeublin received a common school education in Chester county, Pa., and in the Pottstown public school, his father being a resident of the latter place for several years.

He also attended the Methodist College at Fort Wayne, Ind., for several years, graduating therefrom at the age of twenty-two years. He was between twelve and thirteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to Indiana, and his boyhood was spent much as that of any pioneer farmer's boy, he also working in the warehouse with his father.

Mr. Zeublin enlisted Aug. 8, 1862, in Pendleton, as a private in Company B, 89th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and served until his resignation at Memphis, Tenn., March 29, 1863, having been disabled in the right hand in the line of duty. On the organization of his company he was elected orderly sergeant, and for meritorious services was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant. He was at the battle of Munfordville, Ky., Sept. 14 and 16, 1862, with the Army of the Tennessee, and was captured there, being paroled the same day. Lieut. Zeublin was home on furlough for three weeks, and was then at Camp Morton for two months, having been exchanged at this place, and sent with his company and regiment to Memphis, Tenn. Here he was taken sick with bone erysipelas, which resulted in the total disability of his right hand and he was near death. He was a brave and faithful soldier and a capable officer.

After returning to Pendleton Lieut. Zeublin became engaged in business with his father, but after his marriage, he engaged in the grain business until 1868, when he embarked in a mercantile line in Pendleton, which he gave up to become a farmer. He purchased 130 acres of land adjoining Pendleton, and now owns 160 acres in the same section. His substantial brick residence standing on an eminence overlooking Fall Creek, one of the most attractive localities of the section, is in full view of the Union traction trains and the New York Central railroad. Mr. and Mrs. Zeublin are both members of the Methodist Church, and in politics he is a staunch Republican. He is a member of the G. A. R., of Pendleton, belonging to Major Henry Post, No. 230, and has filled the office of commander three times. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F., Pendleton Lodge, No. 88, and has passed all the chairs in that lodge including that of Noble Grand; Sinai Encampment, No. 54; Daughters of Rebekah, No. 130; Canton Indianapolis, No. 42, I. O. O. F.; and he is permanent secretary of the 89th Indiana Regimental Association.

On Nov. 29, 1864, Lieut. Jonathan W. Zeublin was married in Lafayette, Ind., to Marietta Reed, born Dec. 14, 1840, in Tippecanoe county, Ind., on the Wabash river, six miles below Lafayette, who was a daughter of James and Rachel (Pontius) Reed, the former born Jan. 5, 1809, and died in Lafayette, Ind., April 13, 1865, and the latter born Nov. 17, 1815, died May 16, 1847, in Tippecanoe county, Ind. On Sept. 19, 1833, James Reed married Rachel Pontius, in Ohio, and shortly after their marriage they moved to Tippecanoe county. She was the daughter of Frederick and Catherine (Reedy) Pontius, the latter of whom was the daughter of John Francis Giltner, who married Catherine Webber, daughter of Wolfert Webber, third in descent from King William IV, of Holland. Mr. Reed cleared a farm in Tippecanoe county, and added to his land from time to time until he was the possessor of 1,400 acres. He and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Church in which he was a class leader and was superintendent of the Sunday-school. He was one of the founders of the Sand Ridge Methodist Church, and his house was often the home of the itinerant Methodist circuit rider. In political matters he was an old-line Whig, and fraternally he was connected with the I. O. O. F. at Lafayette, Ind. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Reed were: Milton, Easter Jane, Sarah Jane, Marietta and Eliza Miranda. After the death of his first wife Mr. Reed married (second) in Groveport, near Columbus, Ohio, Sarah E. Bunn, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Pontius) Bunn, second cousin of Mr. Reed's first wife. The following children were born to the second marriage: William, who died in infancy; Emma Josephine, who died aged about twenty-four years; Frank J., the traveling passenger agent of the Monon Railroad; and Clara E.

To Lieut. Jonathan W. and Marietta Zeublin were born two children as follows: Nellie R., born Oct. 1, 1865, died Sept. 6, 1867; Emma Lyle, born Sept. 26, 1869, married June 21, 1899, in Pendleton, Ind., William E. Morris, cashier of the Pendleton Banking Company, and they have one child, Mildred, born June 28, 1903. Lieutenant Zeublin is highly esteemed in Pendleton, not only as an honored veteran of the Civil war, but as a straightforward business man, and an honorable public-spirited citizen. He and his wife have a wide social connection in the city.

DR. ALBERT R. TUCKER, one of the leading physicians of Hamilton county, Ind., and a scout and soldier of the great Civil war, whom, tradition says, is of Irish descent, his ancestors having been among the early settlers of Colonial Virginia, was born March 24, 1844, a native of Indiana, son of Robert and Elizabeth (Reid) Tucker, the latter of whom was born in Indianapolis, and the former in Lexington, Ky., Dec. 22, 1803, son of James Tucker.

James Tucker was born near Jamestown, Va., and served as a major in the Continental army during the Revolution. He also participated in the war of 1812. He was among the early pioneers of Kentucky, settling near Lexington, where he cleared up a farm, later becoming a slave holder. His children were: Robert; William; Stephen; Jane, who married James Lockhart; Sarah, who married James Vandiver; Samuel and Harvey. Selling out his place in Kentucky, Mr. Tucker removed to about nine miles southeast of Indianapolis, in Marion county, where he opened up a farm. He owned 240 acres, and was in comfortable circumstances at the time of his death, which occurred when he was eighty-seven years old. He was a Missionary Baptist in religion.

Robert Tucker, son of James and father of the Doctor, did not come to Indiana with his father. He was a cabinet-maker and followed that occupation in Kentucky until 1822, when he came to Indiana, settling at the present site of Indianapolis. In company with William Luce, he opened the first cabinet-making shop in Indianapolis, and there he continued to follow that occupation until 1856-7. Some of his old partners were: Marion Hewey, A. J. Tilford and later James A. Ramsey, and he conducted an extensive business for those days. In 1857 he removed to near Colfax, Clinton Co., Ind., where he bought 160 acres of land, partly improved, and there he lived until his death, in August, 1872, when he was aged sixty-eight years and eight months.

Robert Tucker was married in Indianapolis, to Elizabeth C. Reid, born in that city, daughter of Archibald and Lavina (Ferguson) Reid. Archibald Reid was of Scotch descent, and he was a soldier of the war of 1812. He became a pioneer of Marion county, Ind., having a large farm near Indianapolis, and Reid street, Indianapolis, is named for him, running through what used to be his farm. He was prominent in State affairs, a member of the State Legislature when it was held at Corydon, Harrison county, and also when it was at Indianapolis, and was one of the early city clerks. He died on his farm, aged about eighty years. Archibald Reid and his wife had these children: Irvin, Wesley, Elizabeth, Julia, Erasmus and Mary. Robert Tucker and his first wife had children: Archibald; Corydon; Caroline; Albert R. and Alice, the latter of whom died in infancy in Indianapolis. Mr. Tucker's second wife was Mary Drum, and she bore him three children: George, Vinton and Virginia E. Mrs. Mary (Drum) Tucker died in 1860, and Mr. Tucker was married a third time, there being no children to the last marriage.

Dr. Albert R. Tucker was reared among the pioneers of Indianapolis, and can well remember them. He remembers when the land where the Union Station now stands was a wood lot, and his father pastured his cows there. When he was a boy there were but twelve houses between Washington street and the present site of the Union Depot. He remembers "Wright's Hotel," the first hotel in Indianapolis, and the old stage coaches that came into the city below the old house; and the first railroad that came to Indianapolis, this being the old Indianapolis & Madison Railroad, which was constructed of wooden rails and strap iron.

At his mother's death, Dr. Tucker, Corydon and Caroline were left forty acres of land, situated at the junction of Virginia avenue and Prospect streets, and in 1856 his father petitioned the Marion County Probate Court to sell the land, and to allow him to place the money at six per cent. interest, as of more value to the children than the rise would be likely to be by holding it. The land was sold for $2,000 to Grant McMahon, who used it for farming purposes until 1862, when it was laid out in lots by a company, and it became Ferd Wingate's addition to Indianapolis. An eleven-acre lot from the Doctor's mother's estate was platted and was sold in the fall of 1865 to Ferd Wingate for $13,800. Robert Tucker, father of the Doctor, bought, in 1822, the entire block where the old "Bates House" stood, for $25 and sold it a short time later for $37.50.

When a small boy the Doctor attended school in the Fifth Ward schoolhouse, on the bank of the Canal. There were at that time but five wards in the city. This schoolhouse was a one-story brick building, and here the Doctor attended two years. His father then removed to North Pennsylvania street, two and one-half squares north of Washington street, and the family resided in a frame house which is still standing. Here he attended the Second Ward school for two years, it also being a one-story building. Dr. Tucker's father then removed to Clinton county, where young Tucker attended school winters and worked on the farm in the summer months until the spring of 1861, when the President made his first call for troops. The Doctor was but seventeen years of age, but he enlisted as a private at Thornton, Ind., in Company B, 17th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. His first enlistment was for three months, but, the quota for these regiments being full, he was mustered into the service for three years. He remained with his regiment until wounded at the battle of Shiloh, being shot in the left leg. He was honorably discharged on account of wounds received in battle, and returned home, where he remained from the latter part of April until July 3, on which date he re-enlisted at Lafayette, Ind., as a private of Company D, 72d Ind. V. I., to serve three years, or during the war. He served three years, and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, July 18, 1865, the war having closed.

Dr. Tucker took part in the battles of Greenbrier, W. Va.; Shiloh, where he was wounded, and while with the 72d Indiana was in the battles of Hoover's Gap, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, Ringgold (Ga.), New Hope Church, Peach Tree Creek, and the battles in front of Atlanta. He returned with "Pap" Thomas and was in the battles of Rome, Dalton, the second battle of Franklin and Nashville. In the spring of 1865 he was in the Selma raid and battle, at the battle at Ebenezer Church, was at Montgomery, Columbus, Ga., and Macon, Ga., and on April 1, 1865, was wounded in the left groin. The Doctor's regiment, the 72d Indiana, was part of Wilder's famous brigade from its organization, in February, 1863, at Murfreesboro, Tenn. At this time young Tucker was detached as a brigade scout, and served as such during the Chattanooga campaign. At the beginning of the Atlanta campaign, his brigade was made a part of General Gordon Granger's cavalry. The 72d Indiana was mounted infantry from its organization, and served as such until the fall of Atlanta. When the scouts of Granger's Division, only seven strong, made a dash on Covington, Ga., where the Rebel troops, 300 strong were posted, the Union troops were three miles away. The Confederates, after firing, retreated, and the citizens after forming in the square, fired, killing two of the scouts, the remaining five returning the fire and killing and wounding eleven of the citizens. They held the place until the Union troops arrived, when Gen. Gordon Granger ordered the five scouts arrested for firing on citizens. They were kept in camp for three days, and in the meantime the matter had been investigated by General Sherman, who ordered them released, and to report to General Thomas's headquarters. They remained with Thomas until after the battle of Nashville, when Wilson's corps was organized to make Wilson's Raid on Selma. Young Tucker was transferred from General Thomas to General Wilson's headquarters, and was placed second in command of thirty scouts. He was in command of these scouts during Wilson's famous raid. On arriving at Macon, Ga., he was ordered by General Wilson to take 20 scouts and ride through the country to Andersonville prison, sixty miles away, and, as the prison guard was small, to attempt to release the prisoners who had not yet been removed. Young Tucker was with the first Union troops to reach the famous prison. The scouts were all dressed in Confederate clothing, and had no trouble until they reached the prison, where seventy-five Rebel guards were encountered, and about thirty shots were fired, the guard retreating. The Confederates were taken completely by surprise, at daybreak, Captain Wirz being captured in his tent, making no resistance, and Captain Taylor being killed. Captain Taylor's blooded hounds, twenty in number, were killed by the scouts. Three hundred prisoners were found in Andersonville, who were unable to move, the others having already been removed to Texas. The next day Wilson's troops arrived and took charge of the prison.

Young Tucker was also at the capture of Macon, and from there was ordered to Americus, Ga., and to deploy his scouts and scatter them through the country. About eight miles east of Americus, Ga., the party of scouts, still commanded by young Tucker, met an old colored man who said that he had met a party he described to the scouts as north of Irvingville going South. Believing from the description that the party was one of the distinguished Confederates going South, the scouts rode towards Irvingville, which was about thirty miles away. At the Ocmulgee river, the scouts fired upon troops which they believed to be Rebels, but which turned out to be a detachment of the 4th Michigan. The firing ceased on the scouts finding their error, and riding up to the Union camp found Jefferson Davis and his party, who had been captured not an hour before by the 4th Michigan. Young Tucker and his scouts saw Davis, and all of them deny that he had on a woman's dress, and no such story was there told by his captors. Dr. Tucker says he had on a long military coat, and that the story that he had on a woman's dress came out later and was false. Davis was guarded very closely after his capture, and no one was allowed to go very near him. There was a reward of $100,000 offered by the Government for his capture, and this was afterwards paid.

After the war young Tucker returned to his home. He was but twenty-one years old when discharged, and in the winter of 1865 he attended the Northwestern University, beginning the study of law with Major Gordon of Indianapolis. In the spring of 1866 he gave up law, and engaged in the study of medicine in Colfax, Clinton county, with Dr. Joseph E. Milburn. He remained with the Doctor for three years, and then attended Rush Medical College, Chicago, this being during the springs of 1867-68-69. He graduated therefrom in the latter year, and immediately began the practice of his profession at Colfax. In the spring of 1871 he removed with his family to Cicero, Hamilton county, remaining there until the fall of 1892 in the practice of his profession. In 1892 he was elected auditor of Hamilton county, and served as such until 1897. He then took a post-graduate course at Rush Medical College, and settled in Noblesville, being successful in building up a large and lucrative practice.

The Doctor is a member of the Hamilton County Medical Society, of which he was president for a time, the State Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association. He was a member of the U. S. Board of Pension Examiners under President Harrison for four years, and was re-appointed by President McKinley, serving ever since. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity of Cicero, and is a member of the I. O. O. F., having passed all of the chairs, including noble grand. He is a Lieut.-Col. in the Uniform Rank, K. P., 1st Regiment. He is an honored member of the G. A. R., and was one of the organizers of that patriotic body in Indiana, at Colfax in 1866-7. He has been State Medical Inspector of the G. A. R. four consecutive terms, and has been post commander two terms.

The Doctor was married Aug. 15, 1866, in Colfax, Ind., to Anna C. Benjamin, born in Rockaway, N. J., Nov. 24, 1849, daughter of Edward and Mary S. Benjamin, both deceased, the former of whom was a lawyer of Clinton county. Dr. Tucker and his wife are the parents of the following children: Harry B., a dentist of Noblesville; Frank W., who was a soldier in the Philippines for three years, but now resides in Noblesville; and Fred A., who is following in his father's footsteps as a physician and surgeon in Noblesville.

An incident of his war record is often spoken of by the Doctor, when recalling reminiscences of those troublous times. While he was serving as a scout, he was on one occasion captured by the Confederate troops at Atlanta, and, being suspected of being a Union man, was sent on a freight train, under guard, to Richmond, Va., to be identified. The Doctor, with a companion, broke away from the guard, and leaping into darkness from the moving train, finally made their way to the Union lines, many miles away. Dr. Tucker is very highly esteemed in Noblesville. As a soldier he proved his patriotism, and as a citizen he has proved his worth in many ways. He has also been an honest and efficient official when given positions of trust by his fellow townsmen, and his personal integrity has never been doubted.

MARTIN GALLIHER MOCK, of Muncie, Delaware county, Ind., is one of the old-established business men of that place and one of the most enthusiastic antiquarians of his section of the State. In both connections he is very well-known. He has been engaged in the furniture business since 1877, and has made a success that entitles him to rank among the most substantial citizens of Muncie, where he has lived from early manhood. He was born in Delaware county, where his father settled in pioneer times, and is of German descent, the emigrant ancestor of the family having come hither from Germany. It is believed that Mr. Mock's maternal great-grandfather was the first of his line to settle in America. His paternal great-grandfather was in sympathy with the cause of the Colonists and enlisted in the Revolutionary army, but as the war was then nearly over he saw little service. Only two of his children are remembered, Frederick, the grandfather of Martin G. Mock, and a sister who married Elijah Priest; Mr. Priest was a pioneer of Delaware county, Ind., where he settled in about 1836-40, two and a half miles east of Muncie.

Frederick Mock was born in either Pennsylvania, Virginia or Kentucky, probably Virginia. He was married in eastern Kentucky to Bathsheba Priest, whose father was a Revolutionary soldier under Washington and was at one time released by the General from the guardhouse. He had been placed there for seeking shelter behind a tent during a cold and very severe storm. This occurred at Yorktown. Mr. Priest was a Virginian by birth. In about 1816, soon after their marriage, Frederick and Bathsheba Mock settled in Ohio, making their home in Clark county, where he entered land in 1818, and where they passed the remainder of their lives. When they came into the region the Indians were still troublesome, and at one time the family were obliged to conceal themselves in the woods. Frederick Mock was a man of active and energetic disposition, and he made a notable success of life under unfavorable conditions, becoming one of the substantial men of his day. He was not only a good farmer, but a capable mechanic, able to make almost any of the implements in vogue at the time, and this quality served him many a good turn in the primitive surroundings among which his lot was cast. He began by clearing a tract of eighty acres, and afterward bought fifty more. The first home he put up on his land was a log cabin, and in 1824 he erected a two-story brick house, a fact which proves that he had prospered well. He was a man of rugged honesty and deep religious purpose, supporting the Christian work in his neighborhood with his means and influence throughout his life. He and his wife were among the early Methodists in that region, and the itinerant preachers of the day were ever welcome to the Mock home. Mr. Mock's name appears in the list of Methodist class-leaders as early as 1824. But he died at a comparatively early age, in 1830, in the home which he had built, and was buried in Honey Creek graveyard. Mrs. Mock survived him many years, passing away at an advanced age in 1864, on the old farm, where she had been living with her son Samuel. Mr. and Mrs. Mock had children as follows: Cassinda, Mrs. Wells, who settled in Wayne county, Ind.; Peter, who is mentioned further on; Julia, wife of William Shell, who settled on the home place; Samuel; Frederick, who married a Miss Helvey; and one daughter who became the wife of Dr. Peter Blue, in Clark county, Ohio, and later moved West.

Peter Mock, son of Frederick, was born Oct. 6, 1816, on his father's farm in Clark county, Ohio, and there grew to manhood. The facilities there afforded for education during his boyhood were not of the best, so he received comparatively little schooling, and, moreover, he was obliged to take up the serious work of life at an early age, as he was only fourteen when his father died. He was reared to farming, which continued to be his principal business throughout life, and he also understood broom making, adding considerably to his income by the pursuit of this trade. In the old home neighborhood he married Sarah Moore Ayers, who was born May 1, 1820, in Lawrenceburg, Ind., daughter of Caleb and Agnes (Ayers) Ayers, and the young couple settled on the Mock homestead, where they remained for about five years. At the end of that period they decided to try their fortunes in Indiana, and in 1843 they made the journey west with horse and wagon, their destination being in Delaware county, northeast of Muncie, where Mr. Mock had previously purchased forty acres of land in the timber and put up the necessary log house. This burned down in 1850, and was replaced by another on the same farm. In 1851 Mr. Mock bought a tract of 160 acres southeast of Muncie, which was nearly all in the woods, and upon which stood a hewed log house. In 1852 Mr. Mock built another log house thereon, part of which was standing in 1898, but it has since been torn down. He cleared this tract, and in 1863 bought twenty-five acres also lying southeast of Muncie, which land was then entirely in the woods, but is now included in the city. He cleared this, and in 1865 put up a large two and a half story brick house there—one of the oldest two-story brick dwellings now standing in Muncie. Mr. Mock worked hard and did well, and he was one of the prosperous and respected citizens of his day, well and favorably known among the early settlers of the region. He died in September, 1886, and his widow passed away in March, 1903. They were earnest members of the First Baptist Church of Muncie, and Mr. Mock was a Jacksonian Democrat in political sentiment.

The Ayers family, to which Mrs. Sarah M. (Ayers) Mock belonged in both paternal and maternal lines, is an old one in New Jersey, where her ancestor, Robert Ayers (born in 1650), bought 800 acres south of Cohansey creek in 1684. The next year he bought 22,000 acres six miles north and three and a half miles east of his first purchase. This Robert Ayers was a Seventh-Day Baptist in religious faith, and probably one of the founders of the old Shiloh (N. J.) Church which is still in existence; several churches have been built on the site of the original edifice. From this ancestor Caleb Ayers, Mrs. Peter Mock's father, traced his descent through Isaac (born in 1675), Caleb (born in 1697), Nathan (born near Shiloh in 1718), and Micajah (born near Shiloh in 1751). Caleb Ayers, son of Micajah, was born near Shiloh, N. J., in 1793, and was twice married, the first time, in 1816, to Agnes Ayers, who was of the same stock, but not closely related. They lived at Shiloh until 1818, in which year they drove out from their old home to some land near Cincinnati, Ohio, where they were settled for a couple of years. In 1820 they removed thence to Lawrenceburg, Ind., in 1826 returning to Ohio, where their remaining years were spent. For about a year after going back to that State they were located north of Cincinnati, on Muddy run, thence moving to Clark county, where Mr. Ayers bought a farm containing about 150 acres, which he improved, making a fine home there. He died at that place in 1838. He was a man of upright principles and high moral character, and was particularly strict in his observance of the Sabbath. His first wife died in 1832, the mother of two children, Micajah and Sarah M. (Mrs. Mock), and by his second marriage he also had two children, Dennis and one whose name is not remembered.

Martin G. Mock, son of Peter and Sarah M. (Ayers) Mock, was born May 1, 1848, in Center township, Delaware county, Ind. He was brought up among pioneer surroundings, and undoubtedly the interest attaching to the conditions of his early life provided sufficient stimulus for the researches which have been his hobby for so many years. His first schooling was received in a hewed log house of typical pioneer construction, with puncheon seats and a writing desk consisting of a plank fastened at the proper height along the walls. Mr. Mock has a photograph of this place which he took himself, and which he preserves carefully.

His first teacher was Mrs. Millie Rogers, a widow, the daughter of Elijah Priest. Mr. Mock attended this school but fifteen days. He next attended the Warren Stewart schoolhouse, a small frame building standing on the banks of the White river, along what is now the Burlington road, about two miles from his father's home. Here he was a pupil during the winter for eight years, the length of his attendance ranging from twenty to thirty days each season—a total of a little more than an average school year of the present day. Meantime he was gaining ample experience in the serious work of life, assisting at home with the farm duties, which were numerous and heavy. When he was sixteen years old he removed with his parents to Muncie, where he attended the Washington school, in the east part of that place, and later the high school. He left school when about eighteen, and when nineteen taught a winter term of three months in the old Warren Stewart schoolhouse—this being in the winter of 1867-68. He continued to live at home until his marriage, when he was twenty-two years old, and besides acquiring a thorough knowledge of farm work became quite skilful in the use of tools, as he is a natural mechanic, favoring his grandfather in this respect. For the first few months of their married life he and his wife lived in part of his father's house in Muncie, removing thence to a frame house standing on a lot which his wife's father gave them, on Walnut street. Mr. Mock improved this place greatly, and they continued to make their home there until 1886, with the exception of a few months during the year 1874, when they lived in a hewed log house on the corner of Ohio street and Macedonia avenue. This log house was the old "Franklin House," the same to which Mrs. Peter Mock, then a young girl of sixteen, came in 1836 with her brother Micajah. They were on their way from Springfield to visit their brother Dennis, who lived in Illinois, and stayed overnight, going in to Muncie the next morning. Mrs. Mock—then Sarah Moore Ayers—was told it was a mile to the town of Muncie, and she said afterward it seemed to her it was the longest mile she had ever traveled. The road was filled with hazel brush.

Mr. and Mrs. Mock continued to live on Walnut street until 1886, when their house burned down in a fire which destroyed a block of buildings on the east side of the street. Mr. Mock then traded for a lot and brick house on Seymour street, this dwelling being at present the oldest one standing in Muncie. It was built in 1842 by Warren Stewart, for a farm house, and was faced toward Walnut street, that being the main road. There they have since resided, in the enjoyment of all the comforts to which many years of activity have entitled them.

While living in the old "Franklin House," during 1874, Mr. Mock was engaged in making brick. In 1875 he embarked in the carriage business with his brother, James F. Mock, their location being at the corner of Seymour and Walnut streets. In 1877 he entered the business to which he has since devoted the principal part of his time and energies. He has met with steady success, and his store, at Nos. 516-518 South Walnut street, known as the World's Fair, has a comprehensive and varied stock, including furniture of all kinds, for household and business uses, carpets, stoves, crockery, tin and hollow ware, paints and brushes, trunks and valises, etc. His establishment is the most popular one of the kind in Muncie, and his customers have had their confidence in his honesty justified in many transactions. Mr. Mock has carried his interest in furniture beyond the commercial stage, being in fact a connoisseur and collector of no mean ambitions. His now famous museum, described at more length at the end of this article, contains a notable collection of old-time furniture of rare interest and value.

Mr. Mock is well known in his connection with various fraternal orders, in which he has been the recipient of many honors testifying to his value as a worker and his social popularity. He is a prominent member of the Improved Order of Red Men, belonging to Tribe No. 30, is past great sachem, and has represented his State in the Great Council of the United States for fourteen years in succession. He is a member of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, is past chancellor commander, and has represented his lodge in the grand lodge for several years; belongs to the I. O. O. F.; to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in which he is past master workman and past foreman of the State; and to the Haymakers, in which he is past chief haymaker and past State chief haymaker, as well as a member of the National American Association of Haymakers. Mr. Mock designed the official jewel of the Haymakers adopted by the National Association as the State emblem and the first one ever made was presented to him.

Though never active in politics Mr. Mock was interested in the early fortunes of the Democratic party, and originally supported its candidates. He was an admirer of Horace Greeley, and voted for him for President in 1872. He is a valuable worker in the First Baptist Church of Muncie, in which he has held various official positions, having served twelve years as deacon, and for a long time as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

On Oct. 19, 1871, Mr. Mock was married to Martha Druzzilla Langdon, who was born Sept. 5, 1855, at South Point, Lawrence county, Ohio, which is on the Ohio river opposite Catlettsburg, Ky. Her parents, Elijah J. and Lucinda (Yingling) Langdon, both belonged to pioneer families of Lawrence county, Ohio, the Langdons settling there in 1816. They were of English stock originally, identified with Virginia from Colonial times—settled in Montgomery county. There is a tradition in this branch of the Langdon family that they are descended from Lady Jane Grey, of England, and that there is in that country a large estate which rightfully belongs to them. Some attempt has been made to recover this estate by the American heirs, but it has never been fully carried out. Mrs. Mock's grandfather Langdon married Druzzilla Booth. The Yinglings, her maternal ancestors, were pioneer settlers along the Ohio river at Hanging Rock, Lawrence county, Ohio. Christian Yingling, Mrs. Mock's maternal grandfather, was a soldier in the war of 1812. He married Martha Lee, daughter of Rev. John Lee, a pioneer Baptist missionary preacher, the first of his denomination to journey down the Ohio river from Parkersburg to Cincinnati, establishing churches. Rev. John Lee was from Virginia, and belonged to the same stock as Gen. Robert E. Lee, the famous Confederate general, Martha Lee (Mrs. Mock's grandmother) being a cousin of the General. They are descended from a brother of "Light Horse Harry" Lee, a dashing soldier and Revolutionary patriot.

To Mr. and Mrs. Mock was born one son, Robert C., who resides in Muncie, where he is engaged as an electrician. He married Charlotte Van Matre, and they have one son, Robert Garlen.

Mrs. Mock, like her husband, is well known in local activities of a social and religious nature. She is a member of the First Baptist Church, and is prominent in the women's auxiliary of the Improved Order of Red Men.

She has taken the degree of Pocahontas, and is past great Pocahontas of the State; it is believed she was the second in the United States and the first in the State of Indiana to hold that office. She was presented, by the Red Men of the State, a handsome official jewel, as a token of esteem and affectionate regard, and a gavel now used by the State Great Council of Red Men, Pocahontas auxiliary. Mr. Mock designed the jewel of the degree of Past Great Pocahontas, a beautiful official emblem, and the first one made was presented to Mrs. Mock.

In May, 1885, Mr. Mock began to collect antiquities and curiosities on a large scale. He had long been an earnest student of archaeology, interested in the mode of life of the generations now past, and in preserving all the tangible evidences of that life. Now he has a museum of such proportions that it is the largest in the State of Indiana, and contains many rare and interesting relics of by-gone days. It includes the most comprehensive collection in Indiana of the remains of the mound-builders and more recent Indians. This collection is on exhibition at the World's Fair, his store in Muncie, and is one of the greatest attractions in that region. It is a matter of pride to the owner that the museum contains so many typical examples of old-time furniture that a rare opportunity is afforded visitors to compare the old with the new by contrasting the modern stock in his store with the specimens in the museum. He has spared neither time, nor effort, nor means, in gathering antiquities of real worth. We mention a number of interesting articles, which serve to indicate the variety and extent of the collection. There is a large brass door knocker of especial value; there are old flint-lock guns, four grandfather clocks. A stand made in 1743 is loaded with old books and papers printed during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, one of the papers giving the first account of the Boston massacre in 1770, another, dated Jan. 4, 1800, of the funeral of General Washington; the books are in German, Latin, Hebrew and English. On the same stand are two brass candlesticks, one made in England over a hundred years ago, the other given to a Catholic cathedral in Germany in 1690—a particularly fine specimen; also a pair of old German scissors, over two hundred years old; a pair of spectacles and case, made by some village blacksmith, over a hundred years ago; and an inkstand known to be over one hundred years old. Over the stand, on a wooden peg, hangs a gourd formerly used in Virginia for a water jug. Higher up on the same wall hangs a sword which was carried by Captain Riggins in the Revolution, and near it a double powder horn also carried in that war. On a shelf are many interesting objects, among them an old German pipe bearing on its bowl the date 1460, and a coat of arms (it was brought from Germany by a Mr. Tucha, a former resident of Muncie); an old German turtle shell back comb; a small knife and fork with silver handles, in a leather case dated 1770; a pocket knife which must have been destined for many uses, having a blade, saw and harness needle, and a heavy steel back which is supposed to have been intended to strike fire from stone, before the days of matches; the Chinese nation is represented on this historic shelf by an incense urn which rests upon a typical Chinese head, the whole fashioned of chiseled bronze, which indicates that it dates back to 1200; on the shelf are also a brass tray and candle snuffers, which glitter almost like gold from constant use for over a hundred years.

An old corner cupboard contains a fine display of ancient pottery. There is a "Washington teapot," showing on either side the likeness and name of the father of our country; a teapot that landed with the pilgrim fathers, from the "Mayflower," in 1620; various pewter plates and dishes; a brass kettle of 1741; and a skillet and other utensils almost as old. There is an old-fashioned steel dough scraper, used to scrape the dough out of the old bread-trough, dug out of an old log.

The collection includes several ancient door locks, a very curious and odd one of iron, and a wooden one with its large key; several glass door knobs; a watch with two cases and twenty diamonds; many old silver, copper and bronze coins, some of them of a period antedating the Christian era; Continental paper bills of various denominations made from 1760 to 1785; a warranty deed for the land on which the battle of Brandywine was fought, dated 1787, written on parchment and well executed; an old copper warming pan, and various other articles. Any of these things might have been found in a typical home of Colonial days.

Of miscellaneous articles the Indian relics are possibly the most interesting. There is a finely carved brass tomahawk, with peace pipe in the pole, steel edged, which was found in or near Muncie; it was undoubtedly the proud possession of some chief high in authority, and some claim was the emblem of authority of the noted chief Munsy, after whom the town was named. A shirt taken from one of the warriors who took part in the Indian ghost dance which preceded the battle of Wounded Knee, in South Dakota, in 1891, is also on exhibition. An old Moorish carbine could scarcely be recognized as the ancestor of modern quick-firing cannon and rifles; a pair of small flint-lock pocket pistols purchased by a naval officer in 1747, which descended to Mr. George Darracott, late of Muncie, are still in perfect order, and their equal can scarcely be found in this country; two other pistols and a sword which formerly belonged to Mr. Darracott are now also included in Mr. Mock's collection. There is a whaler's harpoon, procured in Boston, an instrument whose use, at any rate, is now almost obsolete. A suit of Zulu clothes, from southern Africa, brought to the United States by a returning missionary in 1886, is also in Mr. Mock's possession. The collection, as may be judged, has something of interest for every visitor. Mr. Mock has devoted years to its accumulation, and he takes the greatest pleasure in sharing the benefits of his labors with all who are interested in this line of research and study.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Mrs. Mock's father bought a second-hand piano in Cincinnati which was the first piano along the Ohio river from Cincinnati to Pittsburgh. It remained in the Langdon family for many years, and was sold in 1865, on their removal to Indiana, coming into the possession of Major General Thomas, of New York. It was finally placed in the museum in Central Park, New York City, where it still remains, one of the most antique pianos in the United States. The instrument was manufactured in London.

CHARLES HENRY WALL, a highly respected farmer of Martinsville, in which city and its vicinity he has passed the greater part of his life, is descended from one of the early settlers of the New World.

"Walter Wall was born near London, England, in 1619, and on Sept. 2, 1635, he and his older brother Theobald, embarked on a vessel called the 'William and John' commanded by Rowland Langram, bound for St. Christophers, one of the British West Indies, where they seemed to have arrived in due time." Conditions here proved unsatisfactory, and with a colony of English friends he located on the eastern shore of Manhattan Island in 1640, at a place called Dentil Bay, now part of New York City, where they called their settlement Hopton. An Indian outbreak in 1643 caused them to seek the protection of the Dutch fort at New Amsterdam, where they found the celebrated Lady Deborah Moody and her colony of personal friends who had arrived there that year from Lynn, Mass., having left the latter place owing to the religious persecution of the leaders there. Tradition says she was delighted to find others of her own countrymen, and the two colonies united. By invitation of Director General Kieft, Dutch Governor of New Amsterdam, they located near the southwestern shore of Long Island, calling the place "Gravesend" in remembrance of the English port of embarkation some ten years before. The first patent granted this colony was in 1643, and in 1645 a second patent was granted them, giving a larger tract of land, and guaranteeing the settlers "Liberty of conscience and freedom of worship." In 1645 they laid out the town of Gravesend in the form of a square, sixteen acres in area, the two main streets, called "Hye Wayes," crossing each other at right angles in the center of the town. The whole was inclosed with a palisade fence for protection against the Indians and wild animals. Lady Moody became a ruling spirit in the little colony, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of Governor Stuyvesant, as well as of the English, until her death in 1659. The town organization was formed in 1646. Old town records show that Walter Wall was granted a "planter's lot" Aug. 10, 1645, and on Aug. 22, 1653, he bought lands and buildings of Lawrence Johnson. On Sept. 24, 1654, he purchased Plantation Lot No. 14, from Enum Benum; on Nov. 9, 1658, Plantation Lot No. 1, from William Smith. About 1646 he married at Gravesend Ann (surname not known), and they had children: Rutgert, John, Maria (Mary) and Garrett. Early in 1665 Walter Wall, with others from Gravesend and from Rhode Island, removed to what is now New Jersey, obtaining a patent for a large tract of land from Governor Nichols. April 8, 1665, this including what is now the present county of Monmouth and part of Middlesex. The towns of Middletown and Shrewsbury were established. On Dec. 1, 1667, Walter Wall was awarded Lot

No. 4, in the first division of Middletown, and Lot No. 32, in the division of "out-lands," called Poplar Fields. In July, 1670, a settlement was made with the original settlers for purchase money to pay off the Indians for the land, all of which had been honorably purchased from them. Walter Wall and John Wall are mentioned as paying their shares and each was awarded a share of land. In that same year Walter Wall was given a fourth choice of meadow lands, this being Lot No. 35. He also owned a large tract of out-lying land near Middletown, formerly known as Wall's Mill, where Gen. Garrett D. Wall, who became a member of the United States Senate, was born. Gen. Garrett D. Wall was at one time a member of George Washington's staff, and Wall street in New York was given its name in honor of early members of this family.

Walter Wall's son Garrett is also named in the records of Monmouth county as a man of prominence in public affairs. On May 22, 1676, his name appears as a witness to a deed from Indian Chiefs to Richard Hartshorn for land at the Highlands of Nevisink near Sandy Hook. He served as town treasurer of Middletown in 1697 and 1698, and in 1700 was one of the leading citizens who resisted the unjust demand of the English Proprietaries. On Dec. 17, 1705, he and Obediah Bowne deeded four and one-half acres of land to the Middletown Baptist Church, of which he and his wife were members. This is said to have been the first Baptist Church established south of Rhode Island. He married Pauline Masters, daughter of Clement and Pauline Masters, of Shrewsbury. They had children: John, Humphrey, Walter Garrett, Mary, Anne, Deborah and Lydia. He died in 1711, and his wife April 12, 1732. They are both buried in the old Wall graveyard, located on his farm, about two miles west of Middletown, on the crest of a high hill, overlooking the Shrewsbury river and the lower Bay of New York, even to the coast of Long Island, where he was born. The old graveyard is well preserved and contains the remains of several generations of the Wall family.

The Wall family remained together in New Jersey until shortly prior to the war of the Revolution, when three of its members, James, Walter and Capt. John (great-grandsons of the emigrant Walter), migrated to Western Pennsylvania.

Capt. John Wall, born April 27, 1742, married in New Jersey (name of first wife not known), and had children: Catherine, born July 28, 1765; James, Dec. 26, 1766; Daniel, Sept. 7, 1768; Benjamin, Oct. 20, 1770; John, Aug. 13, 1772; and Jane, July 9, 1774. After the death of his first wife, he married (second) Hannah Ketcham, daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (Storer) Ketcham, who was born Feb. 4, 1750. He moved to what is now Washington county, Pa., in 1775, and settled in the vicinity of Peter's Creek, where he purchased large tracts of land from the State, on a part of which the town of Finleyville has since been built. At this place the following children were born: Garrett, Dec. 21, 1777; Samuel, Feb. 14, 1780; Stephen, April 13, 1783; and William Ketcham, May 19, 1786.

John Wall, son of Capt. John, born Aug. 13, 1772, was the great-grandfather of Charles Henry Wall, of Martinsville. He was a soldier in the war of 1812.

William Wall, son of John, was also a soldier in the war of 1812, serving his own time, and also later serving as substitute for his uncle, who was drafted, but who on account of sickness could not go. At that time the family lived in Urbana, Ohio. They moved to Indiana in 1822. William Wall married and became the father of: Eliza Ann, born July 14, 1817; John Stipp, Aug. 8, 1819; Mary Eve, Oct. 22, 1824; William, Feb. 25, 1827; Priscilla, Feb. 14, 1828; Benjamin Martin, May 8, 1830; and Garrett, Sept. 24, 1839. The last named, Garrett, who now lives at Casey, Ill., was first lieutenant in Company K, 21st Ind. V. I., and was wounded at New Orleans, still carrying a minie ball in his hip. His son Richard was a soldier in the Spanish-American war; he has a son Garrett—a favorite name in the family.

Benjamin Martin Wall, son of William, born May 8, 1830, married Sarah Ann Stafford, and became the father of ten children, of whom but two survive, Charles Henry and Noah.

Charles Henry Wall, son of Benjamin Martin, was born in Atchison county, Kansas, where his father was farming at the time. At the age of four years he was brought by his father to Clay township (of which township his father was a native). He attended the common schools and finished his education under private tutors. He remained on the farm until his marriage when he went into the harness and shoe making business. In 1892 he returned to farming, and has since continued that occupation. He has taken an interest in public affairs, and has served as township assessor for Washington township, including Martinsville.

On Oct. 26, 1881, Mr. Wall was married to Dora E. Williams (see Williams history elsewhere), and they have one child living, Earl Vance, who assists his father on the farm. Mr. Wall bears a high reputation for honorable and upright business methods, and he has many warm friends in the community.

MAJOR CYRUS J. MCCOLE, a highly respected retired citizen of Noblesville, Ind., and a surviving officer of the great Civil war, was born Oct. 25, 1831, in Marion county, Ind., within less than a mile of the city of Indianapolis, the site of his father's farm being near where Crown Hill cemetery is now located. Major McCole is of Scotch-Irish stock, and is a son of William and Ruth (McGuire) McCole.

It is a family tradition that William McCole was born on the Atlantic, and that his parents were the first of the name to come to America. He served in the war of 1812, and then went to Kentucky, where he owned land and subsequently married. In the early days of Marion county, Ind., he owned land where the city of Indianapolis now stands, from which he moved to the farm on which Major McCole was born. In 1835 he removed to Hamilton county, Ind., settling on a farm within half a mile of Noblesville, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits and also assisted in the construction of the canal. On that farm his life ended at the age of forty-seven years. After the death of his first wife, in 1834, William McCole married, in Indiana, and the issue of this marriage was one son, John, who died young. The children of the first wife were: Silas R.; Elizabeth; Harriet; Cyrus J.; Mary; Ruth; and Emily J. Silas R. McCole was a private soldier in the Mexican war, and served under Col. Jefferson Davis, who afterward became the famous Confederate leader. William McCole was a Democrat in politics. In religion he was a Presbyterian.

Major Cyrus J. McCole was reared among the hardships which attended pioneer life in the early settlement of Indiana. His education was obtained in one of the old log school houses, and he can still remember the puncheon floor and the greased paper which admitted the light. The whole period of school attendance did not exceed thirty days of each winter, and this irregular school attendance continued until he was about twenty-one years of age. Later he enjoyed one winter's opportunities at the Westfield high school, but the larger part of his education was secured by individual effort.

Major McCole was left motherless when a child of three years, and was bound out to Henry Metsker, in Hamilton county, where he had a good home, and where he remained until he was twenty-two years of age. Starting then on his own account he went to Iowa, where he taught school, and worked at farm work for about two years in Van Buren county, and after his return to Indiana in 1855, he became a clerk in his brother's store. In 1858 he was appointed deputy county clerk under James O'Brien. He was interested in military affairs even at this date, and had joined the Hamilton County Continentals, of which he was elected second lieutenant, this company being organized in the winter prior to the anticipated outbreak of the Civil war. Its officers were Capt. S. R. McCole, Lieut. John B. Evans and Second Lieutenant C. J. McCole. This company of patriotic young men was comprised of thirty-three members, and Major McCole is the only survivor. Having drilled and thoroughly prepared themselves by a study of military tactics, on the Sunday after the call for troops by Governor Morton, the officers of the company instructed Major McCole to tender the services of the company to the Governor. The offer was accepted and instructions were issued for the company to be raised to the full complement of 100 men, and so many responded that two full companies were formed in one day, which went into camp at Indianapolis, where they were organized as two different companies. William O'Brien was elected captain of Company D, 12th Ind. V. I., C. J. McCole, 1st lieutenant, and John F. Floyd, 2d lieutenant. As the quota for three months men had been filled, Major McCole's company was organized as one-year men, and sworn in in that way.

After serving out his first term of enlistment, Major McCole re-enlisted at Noblesville, in Company D, 75th Ind. V. I., of which he was commissioned captain, having recruited this company in Noblesville and vicinity. After reporting the organization at Indianapolis, Capt. McCole was commissioned Major. This was a three years' company, and it served until the close of the war, when it was honorably discharged June 10, 1865, at Indianapolis. Major McCole's services were in Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and South and North Carolina. He participated in the following battles: Hartsville, Ky., Hoover's Gap, Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Ringgold, Tunnel Hill, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Ney Hope Church, Big Shanty, Culpeper Farm, Kenesaw Mountain, Marietta, Chattahoochee River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Utah Creek, Jonesboro, Savannah, Fayetteville, Averysboro, Bentonville, Smithfield, Winchester, Martinsburg, and many minor battles and skirmishes, too numerous to mention. At one time he was wounded in the left thigh. His record testifies that he was always an active and efficient officer and performed his full measure of duty bravely and cheerfully. His only absence from his regiment was that occasioned by sickness. From the battle of Peach Tree Creek until that of Goldsboro, N. C., he commanded the 75th Ind. V. I., and was in command during the famous Atlanta campaign at the time the Union troops were under fire for nearly four months. He enjoyed with other brave soldiers the triumphal review at Washington, which has gone down in history as one of the most wonderful pageants of the century.

After the close of his arduous and patriotic services, Major McCole returned to Noblesville, and on Sept. 26, 1866, he was married in Hamilton county to Elizabeth Metsker, who was born there Jan. 6, 1845, daughter of Henry and Mary A. (Bunnel) Metsker. Henry Metsker was of Pennsylvania German stock, born in Butler county, Ohio, March 31, 1817, son of George and Hannah (Reed) Metsker. This name was originally spelled Metzker in Ohio, and still earlier in old papers Midsker. The father of Henry Metsker removed from Butler county, Ohio, to Hamilton county, Ind., in 1835, where he entered land which now adjoins Noblesville on the west. George Metsker entered at least five tracts of 160 acres each, and cleared up a farm of 320 acres, and at the time of his death, when eighty years of age, he owned 1,000 acres in Hamilton county, and 600 acres in other parts of the State. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and in religion a Lutheran. His children were John, Philip, Leonard, Henry and George.

Henry Metsker was a young man when he accompanied his father to Hamilton county, Ind., and shortly afterward married Mary A. Bunnel, who was born Aug. 22, 1818, in Ohio, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Ellis) Bunnel. Mr. Bunnel was long a resident of Marion county. Henry Metsker settled on 160 acres of land in the woods north of Noblesville, which he cleared up and developed into a good home. Here he built a fine residence, substantial barn and other buildings, and had one of the best cultivated farms in the county. He became one of the most substantial citizens of his section, at the time of his death owning 700 acres of fine fertile land. Henry Metsker and his first wife had these children: John born Feb. 13, 1842; Louis G., Nov. 22, 1843; Elizabeth, Jan. 6, 1845. Henry Metsker married (second) in Hamilton county, Ind., America Wall, and two children were born to this union: Hamilton, born in March, 1850; and Marshall, Nov. 13, 1853. In politics Mr. Metsker identified himself with the Republican party, and cast his Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. During the Civil war he supported the government, and two of his sons served in Indiana regiments, Louis G. and John R. Mr. Metsker was widely known, and is still remembered as an excellent business man, and also as a kind hearted and charitable member of his community.

After marriage Major and Mrs. McCole settled in Noblesville, where he embarked in a mercantile business, in which he continued until he retired from activity some twelve years ago. He has three sons: Walter W., who resides in Greenfield; Henry Hamilton, of Minot, N. Dak.; and George Malcolm, at home. With his family he is a member of the Methodist Church, in which he has been both steward and treasurer. He is identified with the Republican party, casting his vote for Fremont, later for Lincoln, and for every Republican candidate ever since. Fraternally he is connected with the Noblesville Logges, both Masonic and I. O. F., having passed all the chairs in the latter organization, including that of Noble Grand, and has been sent as a representative of his lodge to the Grand Lodge of the State.

JESSE BOSTON TAYLOR, a substantial and highly respected citizen of Pendleton, Ind., who has for a number of years been prominently identified with large business enterprises in this place, was born Sept. 12, 1858, son of Andrew Burns and Malvina M. Taylor.

Mr. Taylor was educated in the Pendleton public schools, and was sixteen years old when he went into his father's sawmill, where he remained until he had thoroughly learned that business. Then in connection with his father he engaged in a grain business, which was continued until the death of the latter, and he was chosen as administrator of his father's estate. For some eight months Mr. Taylor was then interested in a restaurant business at Pendleton, and then entered into partnership with William E. Brown, of Pendleton, in a grain and lumber business, with which he is still connected, and which is one of Pendleton's large enterprises.

On Oct. 19, 1881, at Pendleton, Mr. Taylor was married to Lavina J. Clark, born at this place, daughter of Joel R. and Susannah (McCallister) Clark. Joel R. Clark came from Virginia to Pendleton where he was the pioneer harnessmaker. For some years he lived on his farm of nearly 100 acres in the vicinity of Pendleton, and then returned to Pendleton, where during the latter part of his life he engaged in a loan business. He died at Pendleton, aged fifty-eight years. In politics he was a Democrat. In public esteem he was a reliable and practical business man and a good citizen. After the death of his first wife he married Mary Armstrong, and to this marriage was born one daughter, Fannie, who married Alonzo Ireland, agent of the Big Four railroad. His children by his first marriage were: Dallas K., Albert J., Elizabeth, Eugene, Lavina J. and Fannie.

After marriage Mr. Taylor bought the old homestead which property he still owns. The old residence which was built by his father still stands, solid and true, but Mr. Taylor has erected a more modern residence. He has prospered greatly in business and is one of the most substantial men in Madison county. Mr. Taylor's children—Jewel, Claude and Catherine—have all been well educated and given many social advantages. Jewel completed her education at Earlham College; Claude, after graduating from the Pendleton high school, took the complete course at the Anderson Commercial College, and is now bookkeeper for the Anderson Traction Co.; the youngest daughter is still a student at the Pendleton schools. Mrs. Taylor and her daughters are members of the Christian Church at Pendleton.

Mr. Taylor is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, belonging in the latter organization to Pendleton Lodge, No. 88, in which he has passed all of the chairs, has represented his Lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State, has visited the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and for the past twelve years has been degree master, in which capacity he has visited the greater number of Indiana lodges. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and at present is a member of the Pendleton council.

GEORGE LUICK, one of the oldest citizens in point of years of residence now living in Delaware county, is one of the practical business men of Muncie who have largely aided in its upbuilding and development.

Christopher G. Luick, his father, one of the pioneers of Delaware county, Ind., was a native of Germany, born in Stuttgart, Wurttemberg, and learned there the trade of carriage maker. Having broken his arm when young he was exempt from the rigorous military service to which all his able-bodied countrymen were subjected. He married in Germany Catherine Burkhardt, daughter of John Burkhardt, and they came to America about 1830, after the birth of their first two children. The voyage was made in a sailing vessel, and they were ninety days on the passage. Mr. Luick first located with his family in a small village in Lycoming county, Pa., and there followed his trade of wagonmaker. After a residence there of six or seven years he migrated westward to Muncie, Ind., making the trip by wagon, in the fall of 1839. Muncie was then a small village, and among the prominent citizens were Minus Turner, Thomas Neeley, William Walters (a blacksmith), Robert and Isaac Weeks (cabinet-makers), and Charles Rickard (a pioneer wagonmaker). Mr. Luick engaged in wagonmaking for himself. He made the first carriage built in Delaware county, this being for John Smith, a well-to-do farmer. He soon formed a partnership in the wagonmaking business with Charles Rickard. So primitive were the appliances at hand in those days, they split out the material for their wagons from the native timber, and turned out their wagon hubs by man power. Mr. Luick split his axle-trees out of black hickory logs and dressed them down with a broad ax, finishing them with drawing knives and planes. He obtained much of his timber for axle-trees from land now covered with residences, some of this land being owned by his son George. The wagons were of the most substantial kind.

The wheels were held onto the wooden axles by linchpins, and they were capable of carrying great burdens, and intended to last for a generation.

Christopher G. Luick lived in Muncie for five years, and then bought forty acres of land southeast of the village, and moved thereon with his family. Only nine acres of this land were cleared when he settled on it; the dwelling was a log cabin, and he built a log barn. He worked effectively and with great industry, and added to his original farm until he owned 120 acres of good land. As he prospered he improved the place by building a frame house and barn, and set out an orchard. He was a successful and substantial farmer and a good citizen, well known as a man of sturdy and reliable character, and he stood well among the pioneer citizens of the county. He died on his farm aged about seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. Luick were members of the Presbyterian Church in Muncie. In politics he was first a Democrat, but he later became a Republican, and voted for Grant. Mr. and Mrs. Luick were the parents of the following children: Catherine and Ann, who were born in Germany; John and George, born in Lycoming county, Pa., and Charles, Mary Jane and William, born in Muncie, Indiana.

George Luick was born April 25, 1835, in Lycoming county, Pa. He was four years old when he came with his father's family to Delaware county, and went with them to the farm six years later, in 1845. Thus he attended school in Muncie, in an old frame building (one term under a Mrs. Norris), and in the country in a hewed log house, which had slab benches and big sawed planks pinned up to the wall on each of two sides of the school house for writing desks, one for the boys and the other for the girls. Then there was a big fireplace made of brick that would take in a log four feet long. The boys would roll in the logs, and with the huge back, center and face logs, filled in with smaller stuff, the fire on a cold winter morning would cheer the coldest heart. Mr. Luick generally attended this school and others similar in equipment for about three months a year, during the winter time, working on the farm during the summer. However, there was not always money enough to pay the teacher, as it was raised by subscription, and frequently the settlers could not scrape up enough money to employ the teacher a full term. George Luick had the advantages afforded by these schools until he was about nineteen years old, preparing himself for the business of life by working on the farm and clearing land. He started out for himself when about nineteen years old, working for Thomas Kirby for $10 per month and board. He remained with Mr. Kirby about five months, at the end of which time he had only drawn $5, all the rest of his wages being due him. He then returned to his father's farm, and made a bargain with him, his father furnishing a team and giving George one-third of the crop. He continued in this way for five years, during which time he accumulated $700. He continued to live at home until his marriage, and the following year lived with his wife's father, who then gave the young people eighty acres of land, of which thirty acres were cleared. Mr. Luick bought then twenty acres more, on which were two log houses, and settled down to what proved a very successful farming career. By hard work and thrift he improved the farm and prospered steadily. He bought forty acres, all of which was in timber except ten acres, and he finished clearing this tract, thus bringing the area of his farm up to 140 acres. He then traded his first 100 acres to Washington Allison for 120 acres, also paying him $2,200 difference, and thus he had 160 acres of fine farming land, most of it prairie and burr oak flats, the best land in this region, and this he still owns. Mr. Luick devoted himself to its improvement until it was well tilled.

However, Mr. Luick had business ambitions which not even up-to-date farming could satisfy, and he was anxious to invest his growing capital in what he correctly judged to be a profitable field. About thirty years ago he had become the owner of seven lots and one house, on Hackley street and Kirby avenue. Later he bought residence property on Charles and Franklin streets, put up a stone front house on Charles street, and on the same lot a ten-room brick house. He then built a brick business block on Monroe and Kirby, a brick drug store, 20x65, and a brick meat market on Kirby avenue, 20x65. On South Walnut street, he built two business rooms: two sets of flats on Kirby avenue; a business room on the corner of Ebright street and Kirby avenue; a brick dwelling house on the same lot, and also fine stone and brick houses; on South Walnut street, a ten-room store and brick dwelling-house; and five more stone and brick houses on the same lot. These are all brick houses. Mr. Luick has also built and purchased several frame dwellings, but he prefers to build of more substantial material, though he has erected several frame houses on Liberty street and also on Franklin street. Mr. Luick ranks high as one of the practical builders of Muncie, and the success of all his extensive operations goes to show that a good reputation follows reliable work and honorable dealing. His standing with his old patrons is a guarantee of good faith to new ones.

Since settling in Muncie Mr. Luick has taken a public-spirited interest in the general welfare, as well as in the promotion of his own enterprises. He subscribed $1,500 to the Enterprise Company which raised $200,000 for the purpose of advancing the business interests of Muncie, such as securing the location of factories, etc., in which the company was very successful. As a matter of interest it is well to mention that Mr. Luick's old home farm of 100 acres, two and a half miles southeast of the courthouse and near the Ball Bottle factory, is rented to a canning company, and is usually all planted in peas and tomatoes, a large tract for such purposes. Mr. Luick's success is a remarkable example of what may be accomplished by grasping opportunities and the exercise of good judgment. He commenced in his present line at a period when the town was ripe for just such changes as he had the ability to foresee would be necessary and acceptable, and he has prospered accordingly. His high standing leaves no room for doubt that his methods have been above reproach, and his rewards well deserved.

Mr. Luick is independent in his stand on political questions. Originally he was a Democrat, but he voted for Abraham Lincoln on his second nomination, and has supported the Republican candidate for the Presidency since. In local politics, however, he votes for the man.

In July, 1859, Mr. Luick married, in his home neighborhood, Mary J. Hopping, a native of Center township, Delaware county, Ind., daughter of Joseph and Mary Ann (Madden) Hopping. Joseph Hopping was an early pioneer in the township, and owned 123 acres of land which he had cleared from the woods. Mr. and Mrs. Luick became the parents of one child, Willessa Jane, who was born in July, 1861, and died aged thirteen years, in 1874. However, they have given parental love and care to several children whom they have brought up, to all of whom they have given a start in life. To one, John Allen, they gave 160 acres of land in Kansas. To three nieces, they have given $1,000 each, in a house and lot; and to Addie Harter, whom they reared, a house and lot. Mr. and Mrs. Luick have a fine home at No. 401 South Franklin street, Muncie, and they are well known and liked throughout their neighborhood.

ALLEN MYERS, a capitalist at Carmel, Ind., and one of the highly respected residents of Hamilton county, a member of one of the pioneer families, was born in 1837, in Delaware township, Hamilton Co., Ind. His parents were Charles and Isabella (McGrew) Myers, the former of whom was born in 1800, in Pickaway county, Ohio. His ancestors were of German extraction.

On the maternal side the early ancestry was Scotch and French. William McGrew settled in Wayne county, Ind., when many Indian tribes still resided there. He married a Miss Chevalier, whose father was a French interpreter with the Indians. Mr. McGrew reared his family in the wilderness, and while he was not molested beyond endurance, his wife's brother fell a victim to the savages after killing six of the invading party.

Charles Myers settled in Wayne county, Ind., in 1832, but in the following year, came to Hamilton county and bought forty acres of land in Delaware township. He was a weaver by trade, and as those were days before any great manufacturing plants had been even thought of, he made a good living for his family. He married Isabella McGrew, who bore him eight children, namely: Lewis, deceased, formerly a farmer, later keeper of a toll gate; Neoma, wife of John Wise, one of the old settlers of this county; Allen; Melissa, deceased, wife of S. H. Moffitt, who owns 600 acres of land in this county; Charlotte, deceased, who married John F. Nutt, a farmer and blacksmith; Mary A., who married Pulaski Eller, formerly a soldier, and a farmer, now a merchant at Mattsville, Hamilton county; Amanda, wife of William Nutt, a carpenter and undertaker; and Ellen, who died at the age of fifteen years.

In 1872 Allen Myers moved to Marion county and engaged in farming. He began working for himself in 1858, when he had attained his majority. He can easily recall the days when he cut his wheat, first with a sickle, and later with a cradle, and when the invention of the self-rake and old wood binder were considered the very acme of invention in agricultural machinery. He now owns 480 acres in Delaware township, in the bottoms along the White river, where land is worth from $65 to $85 an acre. While he continued to farm, he raised fine crops on his fertile soil and owned a great deal of fine stock, including Poland China and Chester White hogs. In 1900 Mr. Myers removed to Carmel, Ind., and, in association with his son, entered into a banking business. This, like other enterprises to which he has given attention, is a very successful venture, and has already taken its place among the prominent financial institutions of the county. His large property and ample means have been accumulated through his own efforts. The greater part of his land is under cultivation, and is now rented advantageously.

In the spring of 1859, Mr. Myers was married (first) to Tasa Moffitt, daughter of Silas and Hannah (Wilkinson) Moffitt. They were North Carolina people who came to Hamilton county in 1822 and erected a little log cabin in the woods. The Indians still lived in this locality and there were few white settlers. The courage required to start a home and endeavor to rear a family in such a wilderness, and with only savages for neighbors, can scarcely be comprehended by the people of the present day. Everything worn and used was manufactured at home, and, primitive as was the housekeeping and simple the social exactions, the deprivations and hardships would seem intolerable to the descendants of these hardy people. The death of Mrs. Myers left two children motherless, viz.: Rev. Elmer L., now a resident of Hamilton county, who was educated at North Indianapolis, Marion county; and Artemus H., a farmer, who was educated in Marion county and the Carmel High School, and who married Eva Randall.

The second marriage of Mr. Myers was to Ellen Wright, widow of Isaac Wright and daughter of John Martin. The latter was born in Kentucky and moved to Washington county, Ind., where he died. One son, Charles, was born to this second marriage. He was educated at Mapleton, Marion county, and at Indianapolis and is now associated with his father in the banking business at Carmel. He married Miss Clara Davenport.

Mr. Myers is a Republican, holding the same political views as did his father, who was a strong Whig. During the Civil war he served as township trustee, from early manhood having been of reliable character, inviting the trust and confidence of his fellow citizens. Fraternally he is a Mason, and belongs to Carmel Lodge, No. 421. He is one of the leading members of the Methodist Church, and a liberal supporter of its missions and other benevolent work.

THOMAS ELWOOD BEALS, a prominent citizen of Cicero, Ind., and one of the present board of commissioners of Hamilton county, is a member of one of the oldest families of Pennsylvania, who were early pioneers of Indiana.

The Beals were of old English stock, and the first representative of the family in America was John Beals, who accompanied William Penn to Pennsylvania in 1682. He was an English Quaker and first settled in Lancaster county, Pa., where he married Mary Clayton, daughter of William Clayton, who had also settled at the same time in Pennsylvania, and was also a follower of William Penn. They had three children: John, William and Jacob.

John Beals, son of John, was reared in Lancaster county, Pa., and there was married in 1711, to Sarah Bowater, also of English stock. Their children were three sons and four daughters, namely: Prudence, who married Richard Williams; Sarah, who married John Mills; Mary, who married (first) Thomas Hunt and (second) William Baldwin, as it is written, but it is possible that the name was Ballard; Phoebe, who married Robert Sumner; John, who married Esther Hunt; Bowater, who married Ann Cookmyre; and Thomas, who was married to Sarah Antrim at Monocacy, Md., Sept. 12, 1741.

Thomas Beals, son of John (2), moved to near Winchester, Va., and in 1748 to Cane Creek, N. C., being then a young man. Some time afterward, with two companions, he removed to New Garden, now Guilford College, they being the first white people to settle there. They were soon followed by Richard Williams, Thomas Hunt, John Mills, Robert Sumner (brothers-in-law of Thomas Beals), and John, a brother of Thomas. In 1753

Thomas Beals, then thirty-four years of age, became a minister, and really was the founder of the Quaker Church at Guilford. Later he removed to Westfield, Stokes Co., N. C., where he set up a large meeting. From North Carolina he made several religious visits to what was then called the Northwest Territory, going as far as Fort Wayne, Ind. With his nephews, Bowater Sumner, William Hiatt and Durand Ballard, he went on a religious visit to the Shawnee and Delaware tribes of Indians, which then were established in the Clinch Mountains in Virginia. Their peaceful mission was not recognized, by the officers at the fort, who arrested them, accusing them of being confederates of the hostile Indians. When about to be put on trial, Thomas Beals asked permission to talk to the officers, and explain the cause of their visit to the Indians. Later he preached by invitation so powerful a sermon that the missionaries were allowed to proceed on their way without trial. A soldier in the fort came under conviction and attached himself to the Society of Friends, with which he remained connected into old age. Before proceeding on their journey, the attitude of the soldiers had changed entirely and the officers did everything in their power to speed the missionaries on their way.

Thomas Beals and his party then crossed the Ohio river, and held many meetings among the Indians in Ohio, resulting in great benefit to the savages and much satisfaction to the missionaries. Thomas Beals had a prophetic vision. He told his friends that he saw with his spiritual eye truth scattered all over that goodly land, the greatest gathering of Friends in the world to take place in this country, and this prophecy his descendants have lived to see fulfilled. It was made before any permanent settlements had been made in the northwestern wilderness, probably about 1775. In 1777 he attempted to re-visit the same tribes, but was arrested at the point where Pittsburg now stands by the authorities at Fort Duquesne and sent back. Later in the same year he made another attempt, but was again forced to return home, although he was permitted to hold a meeting for the soldiers. In 1781 Thomas Beals moved with his family to Blue Stone, Va., and there they suffered greatly for the necessities of life. His son-in-law, James Horton, was captured by the Indians and taken to old Chillicothe, now Frankfort, Ohio, where he was put to death. While at Blue Stone, Thomas Beals gathered about him some twenty or thirty families of Friends, enough to constitute a Friends' meeting, but this meeting was broken up when he returned to Westfield, N. C. In 1785, he settled with his family at Lost Creek, Tenn., where they lived eight years. In 1793 he moved to Grayson county, Va., where he set up several meetings of Friends, the desire of his life being to use himself zealously for the establishment of the principles of the Friends. In 1799 with his sons, John and Daniel, and his grandson, Abel Thornburg, he moved to Quaker Bottom, now Ross county, Ohio. There Thomas Beals died Aug. 29, 1801, and was buried near Richmond, Ross county, Ohio, in a coffin of regular shape, hewn out of a solid white walnut tree, which had been selected by him for that purpose while living. This coffin was prepared by his ever faithful friend, Jesse Ballard, assisted by Enoch Cox and others.

In the autumn of 1802 Sarah Beals, widow of Thomas, with her sons, John and Daniel, and their families, moved to Lee's Creek, in Highland county, Ohio, where she died July 7, 1813, aged eighty-nine years, and her burial was at Fairfield, Ohio. Thomas and Sarah (Antrim) Beals were the parents of five sons and eight daughters: Mary, born June 15, 1742; Mary and Sarah, twins, born Aug. 30, 1743 (Mary married Thomas Jessup); Thomas, born Oct. 29, 1745; Patience, born Dec. 9, 1747, married Benjamin Carr; William, born June 13, 1750; Daniel, born Feb. 15, 1753, married Susannah Jackson; Elizabeth, born April 25, 1755, married Samuel Bond; Margaret, born Oct. 12, 1757, married (first) James Horton, who was afterwards killed by the Indians, and (second) Daniel Huff; Hannah, born Dec. 13, 1759; Rachel and John, twins, born March 9, 1763, and the former married William Thornburg, and the latter Mary Carter; and Jacob, born Oct. 28, 1768. From Thomas and Sarah Beals have descended many of the most prominent ministers of the Society of Friends. In remembrance and recognition of these pious people, in 1868 and 1870, the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends at Richmond, Ind., ordered an appropriation made and had a stone wall built around the grave of Thomas Beals. At this time there were yet surviving, and present, some who still remembered this great missionary, one of these being Levi Coffin, the venerable, eminent philanthropist, who was a blood descendant.

John Beals, son of Thomas, was born March 9, 1763, and was the great-grandfather of Thomas Elwood Beals. He was a brick-maker as well as wheelwright, miller and general mechanic, and in each trade was a man of skill. In 1788 he married Mary Carter, born in North Carolina, not far from Westfield, and he accompanied his father to Lost Creek, Tenn., and from there to Grayson county, Va. There his wife died Oct. 11, 1799. In the same year he accompanied the other members of the family to Quaker Bottom. Ross Co., Ohio, crossing the Ohio river on Christmas Day, 1799. John Beals was married (second) to Mary Johnson Hiatt, widow of his cousin, William Hiatt. Later they accompanied his widowed mother to Lee's Creek, Highland Co., Ohio, and there John assisted by his son, Thomas, made the brick, and built the Quaker Meeting House at Fairfield, Ohio. In 1834 he removed to Hamilton county, Ind., and settled one mile west and one-half mile south of Deming, in section 7, Jackson township. Here Mr. Beals entered between 300 and 400 acres of land in the woods, building a log cabin for the first home and subsequently clearing up a good farm. He also built a rude grist mill, which at that day was called a corn cracker. The grindstone for the grist mill he fashioned himself out of granite boulders and these same stones are now used as door steps by his granddaughter, Candice Beals Barker. John Beals was one of the first Friends to settle in Hamilton county, and was one of the founders of the Friends' Church, Westfield. His death took place on his farm here, Aug. 5, 1848, his second wife having died in 1846. The children of the first wife were as follows; Nathan C., born Sept. 3, 1789, at Lost Creek, Tenn., married Elizabeth Chew, Nov. 11, 1820; Thomas, born Feb. 14, 1791, at Lost Creek, Tenn., died in Hamilton county, Ind., married Nancy Stanley; Abner, born March 6, 1795, in Grayson county, Va., and died in Indiana, July 6, 1796; Amy, born April 24, 1797, died Dec. 4, 1892, in Hardin county, Ohio, aged about ninety-five years, the wife of Joseph Thompson; Daniel, born March 25, 1799, in Grayson county, Va., married (first) a Hadley, and (second) Elizabeth Bray, and died in Lynn county, Missouri.

At the time that John Beals settled in Hamilton county, he was one of the earliest pioneers, but Indians were not numerous and dangerous in the section as in Ohio whence he had come. The following story which is recorded in the old family Bible of John Beals indicates this: On one occasion he was chased by a party of Indians and sought shelter in the high stub of a hollow tree and was followed into the hole by two small cub bears. The Indians came up and rapped on the tree but did not climb up and investigate the aperture where he was. They finally went away and he knew there was no more danger from them, but remained there still fearful until darkness. At this time the old she-bear returned to the hollow tree, which was her den, and came down into the hole backwards. John Beals seized her short tail, and held on so desperately that the bear climbed up inside the tree, with John still holding fast to her tail, and finally scrambled to the ground, when she went one way and he the other, not waiting to interfere with each other.

Thomas Beals, the grandfather of Thomas E., was born Feb. 14, 1791, at Lost Creek, Tenn. He had a fair education better than most of the pioneers of his day and became a school-teacher in Clinton county, Ohio, when a young man. He is remembered as being an excellent mathematician. In Clinton county, he married Nancy Stanley, born Sept. 16, 1790, in North Carolina, daughter of Samuel Stanley, a Revolutionary soldier who served under Washington, and was present at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. Thomas Beals continued to live in Clinton county until 1830, when he moved to Henry county, Ind., where he cleared up a good farm from the woods, consisting of 160 acres not far from Cadiz. In 1848 he moved to Hamilton county, Ind., settling on section 18, Washington township, where he bought 160 acres, about twenty acres of which had been cleared and deadened. There was a log cabin on the place, which the family occupied until the following year, when he built a two-story frame house. Both he and his wife were members of the Friends Church. He was an original Republican, voting for Fremont and later for Abraham Lincoln. His death took place on his farm. His children were: Lemuel, born Dec. 29, 1822; Mary, June 27, 1828; and Daniel, Dec. 5, 1830. His wife died July 18, 1870.

Lemuel Beals, father of Thomas E., obtained a good common school education, and accompanied his father to Hamilton county, Ind. His whole life was devoted to farming and during the later years of his parents' lives he showed a great deal of filial devotion. His death occurred April 26, 1892, on his own land. In 1849 in the Friends Church at Westfield, Ind., he was married to Emily Bray, born in 1828, in Morgan county, Ind., daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Bray. The Brays were an old Colonial Quaker family of English stock. The mother of Mrs. Beals was a Shelton, and they were of Scotch-Irish ancestry and Quakers in religion. Edward Bray was born in North Carolina, and came to Hamilton county, Ind., as a pioneer in 1836, settling in Washington township. Although he was a cripple from the effects of an accident, he cleared up a small farm, on which he died aged eighty years. His children were: John Edward Wilson; Rhoda; Mary; Emily; Susannah; and others who died in infancy.

After marriage Lemuel Beals and wife lived on the farm that he inherited from his father, consisting of 160 acres, to which he added land by purchase until he owned 800 acres in Hamilton county. He was considered an excellent farmer and was a man of strong and fine character. In politics he was a staunch Republican, voting for Fremont and later for Lincoln. The children of Lemuel Beals and wife were as follows: Thomas Elwood, born Nov. 7, 1850, on the present farm; Edward Newton, June 7, 1852; John Wilson, July 11, 1855; Milton C., May 22, 1858; Elizabeth Ella, April 26, 1856. The mother of this family, a most estimable woman in every respect, died April 27, 1904.

After completing a good common school educational course, Thomas Elwood Beals attended the Washington township high school for three years, and then settled down to farming. After his marriage he settled in Jackson township, on a tract of eighty acres inherited from his father, to which he subsequently added until he owned 558 acres in Hamilton county. He is also interested with his son, Homer H., in a mercantile business at Cicero and his son, Elias E., in farming and stock raising, paying much attention to polled Durlam cattle. Mr. Beals was married Nov. 12, 1873, in the Friends Church at Oak Ridge, Washington township, to Matilda Hodgins, born Feb. 13, 1852, in Hamilton county, daughter of Erastus and Lydia (Johnson) Hodgins. Erastus was the son of Elias and Matilda (Perkins) Hodgins, a native of North Carolina, who first settled in Wayne county, Ind., and then moved to Washington township, where he acquired eighty acres of land. He married the daughter of Jesse Johnson, and died aged sixty-four years, owning at that time 260 acres of land in Hamilton county, the larger part of which he had cleared himself. His children were: Rhoda, Matilda, Jesse E., Alva, Jonathan, Charles, Ira and Ivy, twins, and Oliver.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Beals were: Homer H., born Aug. 23, 1874, and engaged in a mercantile business at Cicero, married Mabel Lindley, and has a son, Thomas Elwood, Jr., born June 11, 1907; Elias Edward, born Oct. 9, 1875, and residing on the home farm, married Bertha Woods; Mary E., born Dec. 23, 1880, married R. M. Pettijohn, a merchant of Westfield, and they had one son, Ward Beals. Mrs. Pettijohn died Nov. 4, 1905. In politics Mr. Beals has always been identified with the Republican party, casting his first presidential vote for General Grant. For three years he has served as county commissioner of Hamilton county, and he commenced his second term of three years Jan. 1, 1908. Both he and his wife are members of the Hinkle Creek Friends Church, in which he was elder for twelve years.

ROBERT MANSFIELD BALL, manufacturer, of Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., is one of the substantial business men of that place and a typical representative of a family which has held an honorable place in this part of the State for many years. He is a life-long resident of Delaware county, having been born there Sept. 23, 1853, on his father's farm in Monroe township. His father, Samuel Ball, was one of the organizers of that township, where he had settled in 1834. Samuel Ball came to this section on foot from his old home in Perry county, Ohio, whither his father, James Ball, had migrated from Virginia, where the family has been prominent from Colonial days. Representatives of the name have been conspicuous by their success in professional, military, official, commercial, mechanical and literary life from the beginning of American history, the intelligence and enterprise which characterizes the Balls of the present day being found in one form or another in every generation.

It is believed on good authority that all the Balls in the United States of English origin are kindred, as the same general traits prevail, and there is a remarkable physical resemblance among them even to this day. Some writers maintain that there are two branches of the family, an English and an Irish, but the most thorough investigation shows that there is really but one, all the branches coming from England, and the earlier stock being probably Teutonic or Anglo-Saxon. The theory of an Irish branch, and the strong infusion of Celtic blood found in many bearing the name, are accounted for by the fact that several Balls who were soldiers in Cromwell's army settled with their families in Ireland after its conquest by the Protector and became the progenitors of the Irish representatives. In America they have been particularly numerous in New England, in the "Old Dominion," and in the Middle West, though they are now found in every part of the United States.

James Ball, the grandfather of Robert Mansfield Ball, and the earliest of his ancestors of whom he has positive knowledge, was born Sept. 5, 1777, in Virginia, in the region of the Potomac river. He had a brother, John Ball, born in 1773. After the death of his father, which occurred in Virginia, James Ball went to Perry county, Ohio, where he married and settled down to farming, passing the remainder of his life there. He died at a comparatively early age, passing away on his farm in Perry county Sept. 27, 1822. His religious faith was that of the Baptist Church. The land on which he located was bought from the government, and his possessions must have been quite extensive, as it is believed he gave 120 acres of land to each of his children. He was a single man at the time of his removal to Perry county, where he married, and he and his wife Anna had the following children, all born in Perry county: Elizabeth, born Nov. 1, 1800, married Lemuel Peterson, and died May 1, 1845; Oliver C., born May 16, 1803, married Sarah Chenoweth; Ann, born Jan. 18, 1805, married Ayers Peterson, and died April 5, 1854; Benjamin, born Jan. 20, 1807, married Martha Ann Kenton, and died Nov. 19, 1859; Isabella, born June 17, 1809, married John H. Skinner, and died Sept. 28, 1850; James, born May 11, 1811, married Eliza Vale, and died Nov. 3, 1842; Samuel, born March 11, 1813, married Rebecca Mansfield, and died May 17, 1891; Asa was born Dec. 17, 1815; and John W., born April 10, 1819, married Jane Hazelton, and died Aug. 18, 1890. The dates of birth and records of marriage are taken from the Bible of James Ball, Sr., which was first in the possession of his son James and later of his son Benjamin. The mother of this family was born Feb. 13, 1777, and died July 17, 1838.

John W. Ball, youngest son of James Ball, remained on his father's land, and added to his possessions until he owned 425 acres. In 1869, when the railroad invaded the locality, he sold out his coal lands for $325 an acre, retaining the best of his farming property. Much of the land was rough, and before the discovery of coal was lightly valued.

Samuel Ball, seventh child of James and Anna Ball, was born Thursday, March 11, 1813, in Perry county, Ohio. He passed his early life there, but not liking the rough land in that vicinity came out to Indiana in the year he attained his majority, 1834, making the journey on foot. He settled in what is now Monroe township, Delaware county, and part of his original holding is now owned by his son Arthur. His first purchase was a tract of forty acres, heavily timbered, on which he built a log cabin. He cleared this place and added to it, prospering steadily, and in time by thrifty management increased his possessions to 220 acres, in one farm. He not only aided in the material development of his section by clearing and improving his land, but was also active in the establishment of government in the community, being one of the organizers of Monroe township and one of its most useful citizens. The early religious movements in this locality also received his support. He was a member and one of the founders of the Christian Church in his locality, and in the days when the ministers of the Gospel traveled on horseback from one neighborhood to another, carrying their Bibles in their saddle-bags, his home was ever open to the faithful men who braved the dangers and hardships of pioneer times in their work of spreading the Word. Meetings were held at first in Mr. Ball's home, later in the school-house, and he assisted in the erection of the first Christian Church at Tabor (now Richwoods). Though he had little education self-acquired, Mr. Ball became a very well-informed man, and his intelligence and high principles made his opinion sought and valued by his neighbors, who respected him thoroughly for his many sterling qualities. He died May 17, 1891, widely lamented in the community where all his mature life was passed.

Samuel Ball was married, in Delaware county, Ind., to Rebecca Mansfield, who also belonged to early and prominent pioneer stock of that vicinity, the name of her father, William Mansfield, appearing on the tax list of Monroe township with that of Samuel Ball in 1840. Several members of the Mansfield family were pioneers of that township, John and James Mansfield coming hither from Wayne county, Ind., in 1826, and settling on the east side of Buck creek, where they afterward entered the land upon which they made a location. John Mansfield was one of the early merchants of Perry township, Delaware county. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, and was killed on the Santa Fe road by a party of Indians. On settling in Monroe township William Mansfield entered 160 acres, built a log cabin, and set about the work of clearing. Later he built a brick house, which is still standing. He was an able and energetic man, and he was prominent in the early history of this region, serving as one of the trustees of the township, and otherwise aiding in its government and advancement. In his younger days he was an old-line Whig, and he was one of the first to join the Republican party. In religious connection he was a member of the Church of Christ, and he was one of the founders of the local church of that denomination. He married Susanna Denning, and they had children as follows: Rebecca, Robert, John, Rachel, Margaret, Phoebe, Amelia, Mary and George. All this family were unusually well educated for the day, and Robert, Amelia and Mary became well-known school teachers of the county. Rebecca, who became the wife of Samuel Ball, was born in 1816 in Butler county, Ohio, and died Dec. 18, 1882. To Mr. and Mrs. Ball were born the following named children: Arthur D., John W., Andrew (who died when three years old), George M., Susan, James B., Samuel P., Robert M., Margaret M., and Rebecca (who died unmarried at the age of thirty-eight years).

Robert Mansfield Ball was brought up on the farm, and received the usual district school education, attending during the winter season until he was nineteen years old. Meantime he had assisted with the farm work at home, where he remained until twenty-one years of age, when he started out for himself as a merchant, engaging in business in Cowan, Delaware county. His original capital consisted of $250, in the acquisition of which he had early displayed his shrewdness and insight into business. When he was a boy his father gave him a calf, which he successfully raised and in time sold, by subsequent trades increasing his small savings until he had the sum mentioned. He remained at Cowan for a period of thirteen years, during which time, in addition to carrying on his mercantile business, he acted as railroad agent, express agent and postmaster. At the end of that time he embarked in the manufacture of washing machines, on a more pretentious scale than he had ever anticipated. In 1888 he moved to Muncie, building his factory there, on the line of the Big Four road. Within a short time he was the most extensive manufacturer in his line in this part of Indiana, a leadership he has retained to the present. His success is well deserved, for it has been won by hard work and the most honorable methods. In 1892-93 Mr. Ball built the Ball block, a modern structure which was a substantial improvement to the business section of Muncie, and which has proved an excellent investment to the owner. He is a self-made man, having attained his present status by following the impulses of wholesome ambition, and devoting himself to his work intelligently. He has always been known as a man of high principle, and is respected accordingly.

On Nov. 27, 1878, Mr. Ball was married, in Delaware county, to Ida Alice Bell, who was born Sept. 3, 1856, in Decatur county, Ind., daughter of Hiram and Mary Jane (Clark) Bell, the former an old settler of Decatur county. To this union have been born children as follows: Estella, Raymond B., Kathaleen, Bernice, Mary Bell, and June Irene. Mr. and Mrs. Ball are members of the Christian Church, and active workers in that organization. Mr. Ball serving at present as treasurer and trustee. He is a prominent Scottish Rite Mason, belonging to various Masonic bodies in Muncie, and also to the I. O. O. F. and the National Union. In political sentiment he is a staunch Republican.

JOHN WALLACE KINNAMAN, late a respected citizen of Pendleton, was born Dec. 17, 1840, at Anderson, Ind., son of Solomon and Mariah (Black) Kinnaman, and grandson of Walter Kinnaman, an old pioneer settler of this section of the State.

The Kinnaman family is an old Colonial one of Maryland, and there Walter Kinnaman, the grandfather of John W., was born and married. He was the first settler who came to Fall Creek township, Madison Co., Ind., and Andrew Shanklin, coming later, also one of the earliest pioneers, borrowed fire of Walter Kinnaman to cook his first meal in Madison county. Walter Kinnaman became a prominent man in his day and was one of the earliest adherents of Alexander Campbell, the founder of the Campbellite Church. His home was where the traveling preachers always stopped as they made their horseback trips along the frontier, and services were invariably held at the home of Mr. Kinnaman, as he probably had the largest house. In political sentiment he was a staunch Jacksonian Democrat. Before his death he sold out his homestead and removed to Clay county, Ills., where he died one year later, his son, Richard, purchasing this farm after his return from California. Mr. Kinnaman gave all his children, with the exception of Solomon, eighty acres of land, he receiving but forty. The children of Walter Kinnaman were: Hiram, Andrew, Henry, Solomon, Richard, Susan, Hannah and Barbara. The daughters all married substantial men of the neighborhood, Susan becoming the wife of Henry Swethere, Hannah of William Rutledge, and Barbara of Mayberry Wetchel.

Solomon Kinnaman, father of John Wallace, was born Sept. 10, 1818, in Maryland, and was but a boy when he accompanied his father to Madison county, Ind. He learned the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked for some time after coming to Anderson, but subsequently returned to Fall Creek township and settled on the farm which he had received of his father. In 1847 he came to Pendleton, where he purchased a sawmill, which he operated for about three years, and then engaged in carpenter work until he purchased a farm situated two and one-half miles west of Pendleton, where he passed the remaining years of his life. There he died aged sixty-four years, his wife, Mariah Black, daughter of John and Sally (Lewark) Black, surviving to the age of seventy-two years. Their children were: Ellen, Jane, Albert, Richard and John W. Mr. and Mrs. Kinnaman were first identified with the Campbellite Church, but later became Methodists. In politics Solomon Kinnaman was a Republican and held a number of township offices, one time serving as constable. For a considerable period he was also a justice of the peace. Both he and his father were early members of the Masonic Lodge at Pendleton.

John Wallace Kinnaman was reared in his native place and after receiving his education in the district schools learned the carpenter trade, at which he was working when the call came for volunteers to serve in the Union army. On Sept. 8, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company B, 34th Ind. V. I., and after serving through his first enlistment and being honorably discharged, he re-enlisted as a veteran at New Iberia, La., for three years more, and was honorably discharged from his second term of service, Feb. 3, 1866, at Brownsville, Texas. He took part in the battle of Magnolia Hill, where he was wounded and was confined one month in the James Hospital on the Mississippi river. After he returned to his regiment he participated in the siege of Vicksburg and in the battle of Jackson, Miss., and also took part in several severe skirmishes before he was detailed as a guard at New Orleans. His duty was the guarding of the prisoners and he received promotion for faithfulness to duty. He first was made duty sergeant, and after serving for six months as orderly sergeant he was promoted to this rank in December, 1865, and served as the same until the close of his enlistment. His record shows that he was a true, loyal and faithful soldier of the Union.

After the close of his military service he returned to Pendleton, where up to the time of his death, June 27, 1907, he was engaged in carpenter and contract work. In this city Mr. Kinnaman was married (first) April 7, 1867, to Olive Alselle Ball, born Oct. 14, 1844, in Hancock county, Ind., daughter of Andrew and Matilda Ball. She died in February, 1873, leaving these children: Clara and Richard Clyde, born Feb. 7, 1868; Kate, born Feb. 23, 1870, and Walter Scott, born Feb. 18, 1872, died in the same year. Mr. Kinnaman was married (second) at Pendleton, May 22, 1897, to Ann Elizabeth Walker Adkins, born in Lancaster county, Pa., daughter of James and Hannah (Baldwin) Walker. James Walker was a resident of Pennsylvania of old American stock and followed the trade of shoemaker. One of his sons, Charles Walker, was a soldier in an Indiana regiment during the Civil war. Mr. Kinnaman's daughter, Clara, married Charles Clark, and they reside in Pendleton; Kate married Robert Williams, a contractor in Pendleton, and they have two children, Luther and Wallace.

John W. Kinnaman was a valued member of Major Henry Post, G. A. R., of Pendleton,

He was a highly respected citizen and at his death was serving as a member of the town council. He passed away June 27, 1907.

ADOLPHUS WYSONG, a dealer in farm, field and garden seeds, in Lebanon, Boone county, and one of the prominent and influential citizens of the place, is descended from German ancestors, who on coming to this country settled on the Southern coast, probably in Virginia.

John Wysong, his grandfather, a native of Virginia, removed in his youth to North Carolina. Later, when well advanced in years, he came to Indiana in the early days of this State, and his death occurred but a few years later. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife also lived to a good old age, and they were the parents of a large family.

John Wysong (2), son of John and father of Adolphus, was born in North Carolina, and was a blacksmith by trade, but eventually devoted his attention to farming. About 1837 he removed to Indiana, and took up land in Union township, Boone county, improved a farm and there lived until his death in 1886, at the age of seventy-four. His wife, Jane (Beaty) Wysong, also a native of North Carolina, lived to the same age, and then passed away in 1893. Both were Baptists in their religious belief. They were the parents of six children, as follows: Elizabeth, wife of G. B. Dulin, of the vicinity of Whitestown, Ind.; William B., of Lebanon; Lucy, deceased wife of John D. Miller; Adolphus; John H., of Arkansas; and Alice, wife of John E. Broughard, of Missouri.

John Beaty, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Wysong, was born in North Carolina, and he became a farmer in that State. He died there when only in middle life, the father of a goodly family of children.

Adolphus Wysong was born in Boone county, Ind., Jan. 17, 1849, and has lived there all of his life. Until he was twenty-one he remained on his father's farm, and was educated in the public schools of the district. For two terms he taught school, and then left home to make his own way in the world. He went to Whitestown in 1871, and engaged in the hardware business, but after four years there he removed to Lebanon, and was in a similar business there until 1894. In that year he sold out and embarked in his present occupation of raising farm, field and garden seeds, a subject on which he was well-informed, as he had always combined practical farming with his business life. Whatever his occupation he has been uniformly successful, and his seed business is considerably increasing. He also has many other interests in the city, has been a director in the Bank of Advance, and has been president of the Citizens Loan and Trust Company, since its organization. In politics Mr. Wysong is a Democrat, but has had little time for any active participation in civic affairs, and has never sought or desired to hold office. His paternal ties are with Ben Adam Lodge, No. 472, I. O. O. F., and with Magnolia Encampment.

Mr. Wysong was married March 19, 1874, to Miss Florence Ross, daughter of Thomas M. Ross. To them have come six children: Ross, Grace, Roy, Charles and Mary (twins), and one that died in infancy. Mrs. Wysong is a member of the Methodist Church. The family residence is on East Washington street, a good substantial home built by Mr. Wysong. The family is popular and its members leaders in the social circles of Lebanon.

WILLIAM A. CAYLOR, of the firm of J. R. Ebaugh & Co., general merchants at Cumberland, Ind., was born in Hancock county, Ind., one mile east of Cumberland. June 8, 1858, son of John and Elizabeth (Arnett) Caylor, natives also of this State.

Aaron Caylor, the paternal grandfather of William A., was a native of Virginia, but lived for many years in Pennsylvania. He came to Indiana in an early day, and first settled in Wayne county, and then moved to Hancock county, where he owned 300 acres of land. At one time he represented that county in the State Legislature. He was a great stock buyer, and long before the days of railroads would drive his stock to the Cincinnati markets. From Indiana he went to Iowa, and all trace of him was lost. He was twice married. His first wife, who bore him a large family, died in Indiana. His second wife accompanied him to Iowa.

John Caylor, son of Aaron and father of William A., was a carpenter, school teacher and farmer. Though born in Wayne county, he early came with his parents to Hancock county, and there grew to manhood. He owned land there, and he at one time kept a toll-gate one mile west of Cumberland. He died there in 1891, at the age of sixty-one years. He was a member of the Universalist Church. In politics he was a Republican, and was in hearty sympathy with the Union cause, but took no active part in the war. He married Elizabeth Arnett, who was born in Indiana, daughter of William Arnett, a native of North Carolina, who came into Indiana among the early pioneers and settled on Buck Creek, in Hancock county, where his father took up land, and where he died before the Civil war, leaving a large family. William Arnett was a son of William, Sr., who died at the age of one hundred and four years. Mrs. Elizabeth (Arnett) Caylor is still living. She is a Baptist in religious faith. Two sons were born to John and Elizabeth (Arnett) Caylor: William A. and Charles of Cumberland.

William A. Caylor grew to manhood in Hancock county, on his father's farm. He attended the district schools, his father being the teacher. Until about 1892 he followed farming, but in that year he came to Cumberland and formed a partnership with Jesse R. Ebaugh, in the general merchandise business, and he remained with him until his death, when the son, Joseph R. Ebaugh, succeeded to his father's interest, and the firm name of J. R. Ebaugh & Co., remains unchanged.

Mr. Caylor married Martha J. Snodgrass, daughter of William and Sarah (Hawk) Snodgrass, and four children, three daughters and one son, have blessed this union, namely: Oresta, Leola, Bessie and Paul. Mrs. Caylor is a Baptist. Mr. Caylor belongs to Cumberland Lodge, No. 8146, Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Republican. On June 15, 1897, he was appointed postmaster at Cumberland, in which office he has given entire satisfaction.

LEVI GRESH, whose neat and well-appointed home on Section 4, Washington township, Marion Co., Ind., attests thrift and prosperity to a marked degree, was born in Berks county, Pa., Nov. 8, 1817, son of John and Sarah (Feary) Gresh, natives of Berks county, Pennsylvania.

John Gresh, grandfather of Levi, was a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. Farming was his life-long pursuit, and when he was seventy years old he passed away. He became the father of four children. The maternal grandfather of Levi Gresh was a farmer and distiller. He was born in Germany, and coming to this country after the war of the Revolution, settled in Berks county, Pa., where he died at an advanced age. In his family were one son and two daughters, Henry, Sarah and Beverly.

John Gresh, father of Levi, was a farmer, and was an early settler in Wayne county, Ind., where he did brick laying together with his farming. In 1847 he moved to Marion county, where he bought a farm a mile north of Irvington. There he lived a number of years, and also had his home both in Indianapolis and in North Indianapolis. His death occurred in Indianapolis in 1870, when he was aged eighty-seven years, and his remains were interred in Crown Hill cemetery. His wife passed to her rest in 1857. In their religious faith both were Lutherans. They were the parents of five sons and five daughters, and four of their children are now living: Levi; Samuel, of near Eagle Village, Ind.; John, of Indianapolis; and Catherine, who married Isaiah Porter, of Assumption, Ill. Charles, deceased, was of North Indianapolis.

Levi Gresh was about fourteen years old when he left Pennsylvania and came to Indiana with his parents. Here he attained manhood, and in 1847 came to Marion county to settle on the farm where he is found today. His first purchase was of eighty acres, to which he added from time to time, until in 1894 he owned 256 acres. Since that time he has given forty acres to five of his children, and given to his son Henry $2,300 in money. He has retained for his own home fifty-six acres of the old homestead.

Mr. Gresh was married in September, 1841, to Mary Ann, daughter of Phineas and Katie Pritchard. Four children came to bless this union: (1) Henry, who married Sarah Bradley, has four children living—Bell, Minnie, Nellie and Fannie. (2) Emma, who married (first) David Sutton, became the mother of two children by that union, Phila and one deceased; she married (second) Van Heron, by whom she has one child Eva. (3) Caroline married John Neiman, and they are the parents of five children, Mary, Charlie, Emma, Johnnie and Katie. (4) Myra, twin to Caroline, married George Heron, and both are now deceased. Mrs. Mary Ann (Pritchard) Gresh died in 1848, at the age of twenty-seven, and in 1850 Mr. Gresh married (second) Mrs. Juda Heron, widow of Benjamin Heron, and daughter of John Apple. To this marriage were born five girls, of whom two died in infancy. Jane, deceased, married (first) Allen Griffey, and became the mother of three children—Fred, George and Myra; she married (second) Marcellus Davis, and to them were born two children—Harrison and Orie F. Lizzie, deceased, married Frank Davis, and became the mother of six children—Edward, Bertha, Clinton, Louie, Emma and Ray. Ida married Marcellus Griffey, and became the mother of fourteen children, among whom were: Harvey, Carl, James, Jesse, Levi, Olie, Carrie, Harry, Lewis, Everett, Pearl and Myra. Mrs. Juda Gresh was a member of the Methodist Church and a woman of character and standing. She died in February, 1894, and Mr. Gresh married (third) on Oct. 22, 1894, Mrs. Catherine Essex, the widow of William Essex, and the daughter of Robert Johns. Mrs. Gresh was formerly married to Reuben Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Gresh are members of the Methodist Church, his membership being in the Bethel Church. He is a Republican, and he cast his first vote for General Harrison. Mr. Gresh has served on the grand jury, and has been supervisor of Washington township several times. He is a steward in the Methodist Church. For sixty years he has had his home on the present place, and here he has seen the country develop from almost a wilderness. Beginning life with an empty hand and a brave heart, during the long years he has grown well-to-do. When a young man he worked seven years for one employer, and as a boy made trips to Cincinnati driving through with loaded teams, when the journey required eighteen days. He was called the greatest boy in Wayne county.

THOMPSON HENDRICKS. For a long period the late Thompson Hendricks was a leading farmer and active business man of Morgan county, Ind., to which he came with his parents, when but fifteen years of age. Mr. Hendricks belonged to an old Pennsylvania-Virginia family which was later established in Tennessee, in which State he was born, in the vicinity of Nashville, in February, 1814, son of Thomas and Mary (Perry) Hendricks, natives of Virginia. The Hendricks family went from Pennsylvania to Virginia in an early day. They were people of prominence and were large land owners in Pennsylvania and Virginia and the family have produced many that were strong mentally and morally, a family of four daughters and five sons, one member still surviving in the person of Melinda, the widow of William Farr.

Thomas Hendricks, the father, was an early settler in Tennessee, whence he came to Morgan county, Ind., in 1829, where he purchased 160 acres of land in Washington township, which he succeeded in partially clearing and improving prior to his death in 1847, at the age of sixty-three years. He was married near Richmond, Va., to Mary Perry, and they had four daughters and five sons, Melinda, widow of William Farr, being the only survivor.

Thompson Hendricks was still a youth when he accompanied his parents to Morgan county, where he secured a meager education in the subscription schools. In early manhood he was engaged in the building of flat-boats which he used to transport goods and commodities of various kinds down White River to the Wabash, the Ohio and the Mississippi to New Orleans. His return was made by steamboat to Madison, and then by wagon or on foot to his home. He was a man of progressive ideas and opened a brick-yard which he operated in connection with his farming and other enterprises, furnishing here a product which he not only used for building purposes on his own farm, but also sold at Martinsville. After his father's death he came into possession of the home farm and lived on the old place during the rest of his life. At one time he owned 315 acres of land which he improved in a fine manner. At the time of his decease, Aug. 14, 1881, he had passed his sixty-seventh birthday. For many years he was a valued member of the Christian Church. He was a man of unquestionable integrity, one who, in every relation of life, commanded the respect of all who knew him.

On Sept. 19, 1844, Mr. Hendricks was married to Miss Mary Jane Evans, born near Maysville, Ky., of a noted Welsh family of Pennsylvania and Virginia, daughter of Carson and Mary (Mills) Evans. Nine children were born to this union, namely: Emily Jane, who married Isaac W. Nutter, of Martinsville; Horace, who died in 1864, aged seventeen years; Edward, deceased, who was a farmer and who married Sarah Jane Schaffner, and their surviving child is Iva; Walter E., M. D., one of the prominent physicians of Martinsville, member of the county and State medical societies, proprietor of the Home Lawn Sanitarium, who married Evangeline Hastings, and has children—Mary Eloise, Bessie Aline and Thompson Anderson; Mary E., who is the wife of Sylvanus Major and has six children; Charlotte, who is the widow of Albert Nutter, and has children, William Costello, Harriet Edith and Albert Hendricks; Robert Anderson, who was drowned at the age of twenty-one; Otis H., who died at the age of eleven; and Venus, who died at the age of two years.

The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Hendricks was John Evans, a native of Virginia, whose forefathers came from Ireland. He married Jane Trimble, and followed teaching and farming both in his native State and in Kentucky, where he died. The maternal grandfather was Edward Mills, also of Irish ancestry and Virginia birth. He was both a farmer and a miller, and also died in Kentucky. Carson and Mary (Mills) Evans, parents of Mrs. Hendricks, were natives of Kentucky, and they reared a family of seven sons and two daughters, among whom were: Mrs. Hendricks; James M. Evans, of Hoopeston, Ill.; Dr. Jesse W., of Varna, Ill.; and Dr. Perry M., of Minonk, Ill. Mr. Evans was a farmer and came to Indiana in 1837, and located in Washington township, Morgan county, where he died in 1842, in his forty-second year. His wife died at the same age, surviving him but two years. They were both devout members of the Christian Church. These families represent some of the leading citizens of this part of the State.

Mrs. Thompson Hendricks died in July, 1905. She was a devout member of the Christian Church, a woman of remarkably ability. When her father and mother died she was left a girl of seventeen or eighteen in charge of five younger brothers and sisters. These she cared for and she and her husband educated them.

DR. WALTER E. HENDRICKS was born on the old homestead farm of his grandfather and father, which farm the Doctor now owns, Nov. 16, 1852. He was educated in the township and Martinsville schools, read medicine with Dr. Benjamin Dodridge Blackstone, and graduated from the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1879. He came to Martinsville and became a partner with his preceptor in general practice for six years, when he began to practice alone. He continued alone until 1893, when he and Dr. C. A. Kessinger organized a company and built the Martinsville Sanitarium. They sold out this sanitarium in 1897, and purchased and rebuilt the Home Lawn Sanitarium. Dr. Kessinger retired in 1903 and since that time Dr. Hendricks has owned and managed it. The Doctor is a Scottish Rite Mason, belonging to the Knights Templars and the Mystic Shrine. In politics he is a Republican.

Dr. Hendricks has given considerable attention to the breeding of high grade stock, giving especial attention to horses, hogs and Jersey cattle.

CHARLES A. KESSINGER, M. D., formerly proprietor of the Home Lawn Mineral Springs, at Martinsville, Ind., and now acting as its consulting physician, was born Feb. 8, 1853, in Athens, Ohio, son of Joseph L. and Mary Elizabeth (Jewett) Kessinger, both natives of Ohio. A family of seven children was born to them, three sons and four daughters, namely: Delia, wife of C. L. Poston, of Athens, Ohio; Dr. Charles A.; William L., of Kansas City, Mo.; Edgar J., of Nelsonville, Ohio; Louise, wife of H. C. Crippen, of Nelsonville; Sallie, wife of Harry C. Elliott, of Columbus, Ohio; and Sophia, wife of Edward L. Leslie, of Columbus.

Joseph L. Kessinger was a resident of Ohio all his life. He was a son of Andrew Kessinger, a native of Virginia, who migrated to Ohio in the early days of its settlement, where he engaged in a milling and later a mercantile business. The close of his life was spent at Athens, where he left three sons and one daughter, one of these sons being Joseph L., the father of Dr. Kessinger.

Joseph L. Kessinger was a merchant at Athens for many years. During the Civil war he was quartermaster for three years, in the 40th Ohio, and from that time through the balance of his life he filled federal positions. For several years during the administration of President Grant, he was one of the efficient officers of the internal revenue service, and was one of the collectors at the time of his demise, in 1886, at the age of sixty-five years. Mr. Kessinger had also been sheriff of Athens county. In religious belief he was a Methodist. Fraternally he was a Knight Templar Mason. Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Jewett) Kessinger was a daughter of Edgar Jewett, a native of Ohio. He was a farmer all his life and lived to the age of eighty years. His family consisted of four daughters. Mrs. Kessinger died in 1884, aged sixty years. She had been a devout member of the Methodist Church for many years.

Dr. Kessinger was reared at Athens, Ohio, and secured his education in the public schools and at the Ohio University there. In 1873 he took up the study of medicine, and in 1876 he graduated from the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati. In 1883 he began practice in Martinsville, and has continued there ever since, becoming more appreciated each year. In 1892 in association with Dr. W. E. Hendricks, he established the Martinsville Sanitarium, which they sold in 1899, buying then the Home Lawn Mineral Springs Sanitarium. This great institution gained large patronage from the Middle West, and has many patients from all over the Union, its healing mineral waters effecting some marvelous cures. Its prosperity has been, however, not only the result of the waters, but much is due the medical skill of both Dr. Kessinger and Dr. Hendricks and the care they give to all who come beneath this hospitable roof. Dr. Kessinger retired in 1903, but at the request of Dr. Hendricks, the owner, he has since acted as consulting physician.

On Sept. 18, 1883, Dr. Kessinger was married to Miss Julia D. Blackstone, daughter of Dr. B. D. and Mary J. (Worley) Blackstone. Fraternally Dr. Kessinger is a Mason, and belongs to Lodge No. 74, Martinsville. In politics he is identified with the Republican party. His pleasant home is located at No. 127 South Main street, Martinsville. He is held in very high esteem in this city, is a man of education, urbanity and professional skill, and is connected with many of the substantial enterprises of this vicinity.

J. MONROE FITCH, one of the leading young members of the Indiana Bar, was born July 12, 1871, near Paintsville, Johnson county, Kentucky.

James Fitch, grandfather of J. Monroe, was a native of Virginia, and as a pioneer removed to Kentucky by horse and wagon, being one of the early settlers of Johnson county, where he purchased land of the Government. He also bought, and held for a short time, a claim to another property, but this he sold for a horse and six sheep skins, land having but little value at that time. He finally sold a large tract of land which he had cleared, retaining, however, a tract of between five and six hundred acres, this land still being in the possession of his descendants. He was well-known in his time, and was considered one of the good, public-spirited citizens. He lived to be over ninety years of age, and had these children: S., Henry, Jerry, Mahala and Sarah. James Fitch was a strong Union man, and served as a Union soldier in the Civil war.

S. Fitch, father of J. Monroe, was born about 1845, in Johnson county, Ky., and received but a limited education in the pioneer schools. He enlisted when but seventeen years old, in 1862, at Louisville, Ky., as a private of Company F, 14th Ky. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and he served until honorably discharged at the close of the war, in 1865. He participated in the battles of Antietam, Bull Run and others in which the 14th Regiment, Federal troops, engaged. There was also a 14th Regiment, Confederate troops, and these two regiments, having the same number, had many engagements, the latter being nearly exterminated at the close of the war. Mr. Fitch was taken prisoner and was held in the Andersonville prison for five months. On his return to his home after the war his health was badly shattered, and he died from the effects of army life in 1877, before he had finished the task of clearing his farm. He was married in Johnson county, Ky., in 1865, to Dorcas Daniels, born in that county in 1842, daughter of James and Betsy Daniels. To this union there were born children as follows: John C., who is engaged in business in Johnson county, Ky.; Henry; Charles P., a farmer in Kentucky; J. Monroe; and Columbus, who obtained an education in the schools of his native State and the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso, and is now engaged in the mercantile business at Willard, Ky., being also cashier of the Willard State Bank (he was one of the men who captured the Willard State Bank robbers, two of whom were killed while attempting to escape). The father was a Republican in politics. He was a member of and deacon in the Baptist Church.

James Daniels, father of Mrs. Dorcas (Daniels) Fitch, was born in Virginia, and came to Kentucky a short time after the arrival of the Fitches. He took a claim on a large tract of land, and was a slave-holder, although he favored Union sentiments on the outbreak of the war. He was about ruined by the war, Morgan and his men taking much of his live stock and destroying much of his property. He had two sons in the Union army, Jackson and Isham, the latter of whom was reported among the "missing." Mr. Daniels was a highly esteemed citizen and good agriculturist.

J. Monroe Fitch was reared on his father's farm, and was but six years of age when the latter died. His clothes, which were homespun, were made from the wool taken from the sheep on the farm, the clothing being made by his mother, who is still an expert spinner and weaver, using the old spinning wheel. All of the farm implements were of the crudest and most primitive design, the crops being sown and cultured with the hoe. The schools were also primitive, sessions being held in log cabins, with puncheon floors and benches, and were warmed by a large fire-place. The school attended by Mr. Fitch was two miles from his home and this he attended during winters, his entire term of schooling there probably not exceeding ten months. When he was but thirteen years of age he went to Tennessee, where he was engaged in railroading for a few weeks, but then returned to Breathitt county, Ky., working on a railroad for some time. His next occupation was at driving mules, continuing this for ten months, when he returned home, walking 125 miles through the mountains. Remaining at home but one night, he walked back to West Virginia, where he found employment on a railroad with his elder brother, John, for several months, and in 1891 went to Minnesota. Here he was engaged in farm work in Meeker county for two years, and in 1893 attended school in the Abbott district, working for his board for the county superintendent, Joseph E. Wining. He was encouraged to attend school by his patrons, and in the spring of 1893 went to Valparaiso, Ind., entering the Northern Indiana Normal School, when he took a full course, as well as the legal course, working his way through this excellent institution by waiting on table, cooking and acting as night police officer. Going to Chicago, he entered the Chicago College of Law, and was graduated therefrom in 1898, having saved the money for this course by the strictest kind of economy. He enlisted while in Chicago, in May, 1898, as a member of Troop F., 1st Ill. Cav., for three years, and served until honorably discharged Nov. 14, 1898, having been promoted to the rank of corporal for meritorious conduct. The war having closed before the troop was ordered to the front, it was disbanded and mustered out of service.

After his discharge Mr. Fitch came to Muncie with Charles A. McGonagle, who was one of his classmates. He at once engaged in the practice of his profession, and soon became well known as one of the most successful young lawyers of the Muncie Bar. Mr. Fitch is an excellent example of the self-made man. Through his own exertions and ability he has overcome many obstacles, and, from a humble birth in a Kentucky hill farm log cabin, has made himself a successful professional man and substantial citizen.

In his political belief he is a Republican, and in 1906 he was elected as a representative in the State Legislature. He is a Mason, being past master of Delaware Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M.; and he also belongs to the Red Men of Muncie.

ANDREW BROWN, one of the representative citizens of Fortville, Vernon township, Hancock Co., Ind., who is an honored survivor of the great war of the Rebellion, was born Nov. 21, 1842, in Hamilton county, this State, son of Henderson and Sarah (Hoagland) Brown.

Henderson Brown, father of Andrew, was born in McMahon county, Tenn., in 1812, son of James Brown, and when he was six months old his parents removed to Shelby county, Ky., where they raised one crop. They again moved, this time to Jefferson county, Indiana (then yet a territory), on the Ohio river, living there for two years when they bought land in Switzerland county, where they resided until 1827. On March 10th of that year, the family located in Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, Henderson entering eighty acres, although he continued to reside on his father's land until 1838, when he located on his own land. He married, Oct. 5, 1831, Sarah Hoagland, born June 22, 1810, and died May 14, 1892. She had moved with her parents to Franklin county, Ind., in 1821, and in 1830, to Hamilton county. After marriage, in 1838, Mr. Brown and his wife settled in the woods and proceeded to clear a farm from the timber and brush, and it was at the latter home that Mrs. Brown's death occurred. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown: James, Margaret, Mary Ann (who died young), William, Andrew, Catherine, Miney, Hiram and Elizabeth. Two of these sons served in the Civil war, Andrew and Miney, the latter being in the 124th Ind. V. I. He died at home from the effects of a gun-shot wound and from the exposure to which he was subjected while in the Confederate prison at Andersonville and elsewhere. Henderson Brown died Feb. 4, 1897. When he first settled on Fall Creek the place was one great wilderness, and no land had been entered between Fall Creek and the National Road, and Indians were still to be seen in numbers. The first year after his location there twenty-one Indians camped on his land along Fall Creek, hunting and trapping. Mrs. Brown at this time made seventy-five pounds of maple sugar and enough molasses to last a year, carrying all the sap and boiling it herself, in the meantime spinning flax while the molasses was boiling.

Andrew Brown was reared on the farm in Fall Creek and he received his education in the pioneer log schoolhouse. He enlisted at the age of nineteen years, at Fortville, Ind., Aug. 27, 1862, as a private in Company C, 79th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged June 7, 1865, being mustered out at Nashville, Tenn. He participated in the battles of Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain and the Atlanta campaign until the fall of Atlanta, when he was disabled by sickness and confined in the hospital at Nashville from December, 1862, until March, 1863, when he was sent further north, and finally given a furlough. He rejoined his regiment in July. He was ever a faithful and brave soldier, and did his duty cheerfully.

After the war Mr. Brown returned to Indiana, and was married (first) in 1868 to M. J. Clark, by whom he had two children: William D. and Otto M. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Brown married (second) Lydia J. Leavitt, who died June 8, 1884, without issue. His third marriage, May 14, 1886, was to Eliza Beaver, born in Hamilton county, Ind., daughter of George and Betsy Ann (Ammerman) Beaver. Until 1900 Mr. Brown lived on his grandfather's farm of sixty acres which he had inherited and to which he had added ten acres, but in the year mentioned he sold out and removed to Fortville, where he has been a leading citizen to the present time. He is a member of Fortville Post, G. A. R., and in political faith he is a Republican.

WILLIAM D. HILL, M. D., a prominent citizen of Martinsville, Ind., and a successful physician of the Homeopathic School of Medicine, died in March, 1904. He was born April 25, 1831, near Lawrenceburg, Dearborn county, Ind., son of John and Elizabeth (Daniel) Hill, natives of Virginia. Dr. Hill was one of a family of eleven children born to his parents, four of whom are still living, namely: Miss Vashti, who is residing on the old farm in Dearborn county; Elizabeth, of Canton, Ohio; Isabel, widow of Harvey Roberts, on the old farm; and Leah, wife of John Parks, of Hunt, Illinois.

Dr. Hill came of old pioneer stock, his grandfather, Eli Hill, being a very early settler in Dearborn county, where he cleared and owned a large extent of land. By birth he was a Virginian, but he died in Missouri, when about sixty years of age, having reared a large family. William Daniel, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Hill, was also a native of Virginia, and was an early settler on Wilson Creek, in Dearborn county. His death took place in the vicinity of Dillsboro, Dearborn county.

John Hill, the father of Dr. Hill, accompanied his father to Indiana and became a farmer in Dearborn county, securing a farm in Manchester township. This was still forest land at the time, and his remaining years were devoted to the clearing and improving of this property. His death took place in his eighty-seventh year, his wife having passed away at the age of forty-seven years. Both of the Doctor's parents were consistent members of the Baptist Church.

The boyhood of Dr. Hill was spent on his father's farm in Dearborn county, and he remained at home until past his majority. His education was obtained in the subscription schools, and subsequently he attended Franklin college, graduating from there in 1858. The next twelve years of his life were spent in teaching, first in the public schools in Dearborn county, and then three years at Vevay, two years at Ladoga, Montgomery county, two years at Franklin College, and three years at Huntington. The next four years were devoted to the study of medicine, enjoying the benefit of the lectures of the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio. The young physician settled for practice at Centralia, Ill., but one year later, after the death of his wife, he removed to Ladoga, Ind., and was located here for about four years.

Dr. Hill then removed to Greencastle, Ind., and remained in practice there until October, 1900, when he came to Martinsville, and made his home in this city with his daughter, Mrs. Norman. He became well known through the county as a skilled practitioner, and enjoyed a lucrative practice and the esteem of a wide circle of friends.

On Aug. 29, 1860, Dr. Hill was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Smith, daughter of Cyrus G. Smith, and four children were born to this union, namely: Valeria E., who married Grant R. Norman, a trusted employe of the postoffice and a respected citizen of Martinsville, had children, Esther, Horace, Lois and Marie, and died April 12, 1905; De Witt C., who is in the employ of the Cable Music Company at New Orleans, La., and who married and has one child, Doris; Arthur J., of Leland, Miss., publisher of the Leland Enterprise, who married and has one child, Burton; and Hattie, who died in infancy. Mrs. Hill, who was born July 24, 1833, died Dec. 2, 1872. She was a woman of the highest Christian character, and a devoted member of the Baptist Church.

On Feb. 22, 1877, Dr. Hill was married (second), to Miss Anna M. Oliver, daughter of John H. Oliver. No children were born to this union, and Mrs. Hill died Feb. 25, 1900. She was also a member of the Baptist Church. Dr. Hill was long connected with that religious body, and was its treasurer in Martinsville. In politics he was identified with the Republican party.

JOHN W. CREAMER, a highly esteemed citizen of Elwood, Ind., and a veteran of the great Civil war, was born March 9, 1844, eight miles north of Greensburg, Decatur county, Ind., son of Philip and Elizabeth (Trees) Creamer, and grandson of Daniel Creamer.

Daniel Creamer was born in Pennsylvania, and came west to Ohio between 1818 and 1820, making the journey with horses and wagons. He was an early pioneer in Decatur county, Ind., and cleared up a good farm of eighty acres, becoming a substantial citizen. He was a Methodist in religious belief, and a Democrat in politics, and his death occurred in Wabash county, Ind., at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Harrold. Daniel Creamer and his wife had children as follows: Philip; John; Mary Ann, who married Jacob Harrold; Sallie, who married Jordon Abbott; Patsy, who married Felix Whitehead; and one daughter who married John Waits and died in early married life.

Philip Creamer was born June 18, 1818, in Hamilton, Ohio, and he was ten or eleven years of age when the family located in Indiana. On the journey to this State the children drove the cattle, walking all of the way. Philip Creamer was brought up on the farm in Decatur county and helped to clear it from the wilderness, and when twenty-one or twenty-two years old he was married to Elizabeth Trees, born about 1820 in Rush county, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Trees. Peter Trees came from Ireland to America in a sailing vessel, and his family first settled in Rush county, Ind., in an early day, and then moved to Hancock county, and at Warrington, that county, Peter carried on a mercantile business, and there both he and his wife died advanced in years. Their children were: William, Sally, Ann, Elizabeth, John and Jedediah. For about eight years after marriage Mr. and Mrs. Creamer resided on the homestead in Decatur county, Ind., and then went to Madison county, settling on 160 acres in Van Buren township about 1851. Here Mr. Creamer erected a log cabin and started in to clear his farm, adding thereto, from time to time, until he owned 360 acres. He erected a comfortable frame residence and a large log barn. After the death of his first wife, who passed away in the faith of the Methodist Church, at the age of forty-five years, and who was the mother of all of his children, Mr. Creamer married Amanda Smith. He died old in years in the faith of the U. B. Church. His children were: William R. (a soldier in the Civil war), John W., Harvey, Henry, Simeon B. and Philip.

John W. Creamer was between seven and eight years of age when he came with his parents to Van Buren township, Madison county. He attended school in one of the first school houses in the township, at White Hall, two miles from home, he and his brother William R. boarding at a tavern kept by Johnnie Moon. Their father would come for them once a week and take them home on horseback, all three riding the same horse. He then attended school at two and one-half miles from home, but later a school was built on his father's farm. He was reared to the hard work of the farm, and was carrying on agricultural pursuits when, at the age of nineteen years, he enlisted, in the little school house on the farm, Jan. 1, 1864, as a private in Company K, 130th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and he served until honorably discharged, being mustered out at Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 8, 1865, having served his country nearly two years. His service was in Kentucky, Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia. Company K was recruited in Madison, Grant, Tipton and Wabash counties by Capt. Jesse Butler, first lieutenant William Dillon, second lieutenant Frederick Cartwright, and reported from Kokomo, Ind., when it was organized as a company, and mustered into United States service by Capt. H. K. Thatcher, 14th U. S. Inf., from Dec. 29, 1863, to March 16, 1864. They left via Indianapolis and Louisville, Ky., for the field in Tennessee March 16th; arrived in Tennessee March 19, 1864, after which they saw service in that State, Georgia, Virginia and North Carolina. The regiment was mustered out of service at Charleston, S. C., Dec. 2, 1865; left for Indianapolis, arriving Dec. 13th, when it was paid off and honorably discharged Dec. 14, 1865. Its battles were: Buzzards Roost, Ga., May 9, 1864; Resaca, Ga., May 15-16, 1864; Pumpkin Vine Creek, June 2, 1864; Lost Mountain, June 17, 1864; Kennesaw Mountain, Ga., July 2, 1864; Decatur, Ga., July 19, 1864; Siege of Atlanta, Ga., July 20, 1864, to its capture; Lovejoy Station, Ga., Sept. 6, 1864; Franklin, Tenn.; Nashville, Dec. 15-16, 1864; Kinston, N. C., March 9-10, 1865, and many skirmishes. Mr. Creamer spent one week in the hospital at Rome, Ga., but with this exception was in every engagement, march or skirmish of his company, and did his full duty as a brave, cheerful, willing soldier. After the war he returned to the homestead, and here he engaged in farming. He was married March 4, 1875, in Van Buren township, to Martha Jane Pearson, born near Cadiz, Henry county, Ind., Jan. 12, 1854, daughter of Moses and Elizabeth (McCormick) Pearson. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Creamer settled on his father's farm, where they resided for six years. He had bought forty acres in the woods in Van Buren township after the war, and this he cleared and lived upon for twenty years. He then sold it and bought a 110-acre tract in Henry county, on which he resided one year, when he bought property and located in Elwood, March 1, 1898. He is a member of Elwood Post, G. A. R., and he and his wife are connected with the Baptist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Creamer have had the following children: James Franklin, born Jan. 12, 1876; Minnie A., born Dec. 11, 1877, married in February, 1895, Croten E. Glass, a farmer, and has two children, John Alexander and Wesley Ebert; Alonzo Donald, born May 7, 1881, died Nov. 9, 1883; and John Oliver, born Sept. 13, 1886, died Oct. 31, 1888.

Moses Pearson, father of Mrs. Creamer, was born in North Carolina, and came with his father to Henry county, Ind., where the latter cleared up a farm. Moses, too, became a farmer. In Henry county he married Elizabeth McCormick, who was born there, daughter of Abraham and Rebecca McCormick, the former a pioneer of Henry county, who sold his farm there, moved first to Missouri, and then to Oregon, dying in the latter State when between eighty and ninety years of age. The McCormicks were of Scotch-Irish descent and the Pearsons of English, and both were among the early Colonial settlers in America. Moses Pearson cleared a farm of forty acres from the woods, and about 1856 moved to Van Buren township, Madison county, and bought and cleared a farm of eighty acres. His first home, a little log cabin, was later replaced by a substantial frame house, and he built a good barn, and became a well-to-do farmer. In politics he was a Republican, and was sheriff of Henry county in a very early day. He and his wife were orthodox Quakers. His death occurred on his farm when he was aged forty-five years. His wife died, aged sixty-eight years, in Arkansas, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Mary Ann Bragles. To Moses Pearson and wife were born children as follows: John, Mary Ann, Martha Jane and Cassinda Ellen.

JOHN HOWARD GROFF, M. D., a prominent physician and surgeon at Cumberland, Marion county, Ind., was born in Chester county, Pa., May 1, 1854, son of John and Susan (Beaver) Groff. His grandfather died in Pennsylvania when he was over seventy years old. He was a miller by occupation, and became prominent and wealthy, owning a large estate in Pennsylvania. He came of German descent. He reared a large family.

John Groff, the Doctor's father, was a native of Pennsylvania, and a prominent and wealthy farmer of Chester county, Pa., where he died in 1885, at the age of sixty-seven. He was a plain, honest farmer, never aspiring to public notoriety, and bearing himself through life as an honorable, industrious and upright man. His wife, also a native of Pennsylvania, is still living at Berwyn, Pa. She is a consistent and worthy member of the Baptist Church, with which her husband was associated for many years. They had a family of four sons and eight daughters, and seven of their children are yet living: (1) George G., now of Lewisburg, Pa., is a physician, and was brigade surgeon under General Miles in the invasion of Porto Rico, during the Spanish-American war. At the present time he is a teacher at Bucknell University, where he has had charge of the Scientific Department since 1879. For ten years he was president of the State Board of Health. (2) Charles A. is a resident of Chester Valley, Pa. (3) Dr. John Howard is mentioned below. (4) Mary Elizabeth is the wife of Isaac A. Cleaver, of Ardmore, Pa. (5) Deborah B. is the wife of Wilfield Rennard, of Beaver, Pa. (6) Sarah is the wife of A. A. Kelly, of Malvern, Pa. (7) Ulysses G. is a resident of Amherst, Massachusetts.

John Beaver, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Groff, was born in Pennsylvania, and came of Welsh and English lineage. He became prominent as a farmer, and died at the age of sixty years in Pennsylvania. Three of his sisters lived to be over ninety years of age.

Dr. John Howard Groff was born and reared in Chester county, Pa., where he secured his education in the public schools and at Norristown Academy, and he was graduated from Bucknell University in 1879. In 1882 he was graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary, and for ten years was a clergyman of the Baptist Church. While still preaching he took up the study of medicine, and in 1892, was graduated from the Indiana Medical College in Indianapolis. Since that time he has practiced medicine, giving his profession strict attention, and meeting with good success. He richly merits the confidence of his patrons and all his fellow citizens.

Dr. Groff was married July 12, 1882, to Miss Annie Dingley, of Jersey Shore, Pa., a lady of marked intelligence and culture, and a daughter of Funison and Margaret Dingley. To this happy union came four children: Susan Beaver, Charles Spurgeon, May Kinnerly and Howard Meredith. Mrs. Annie Groff passed away in September, 1887, at the age of twenty-eight years; she was a constant, devoted and faithful member of the Baptist Church.

On March 17, 1896, Dr. Groff married Miss Frances Merrill, a daughter of D. H. Merrill, and to this union have come two children, Frances and Helen. Mrs. Groff belongs to the Baptist Church, and is known as a devoted Christian worker. Dr. Groff is a working member of the Masonic fraternity at Millersville. At Shelbyville, Ind., he united with the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican. He came to Indiana in 1886, and had a pastorate at Lawrence, for six years, after which he removed to Cumberland. This was in 1897, and two years later he built his present home and office.

During the war of the Rebellion John Groff, the father of the Doctor, was very patriotic, and took much interest, not only in securing recruits for the front, but also in caring for the families of the soldiers. His was a family of small children and his means of support somewhat precarious, so that he felt himself hardly at liberty to go to the war, but he is gratefully remembered by the wives and children of the men at the front for his generous and deep interest in their welfare.

EDWARD RUDOLPH. The many attractions of Indiana's beautiful capital city make it a most delightful place of residence, and among the retired farmers who have taken advantage of these attractions and here established pleasant homes is Edward Rudolph. Mr. Rudolph is one of the honored veterans of the Civil war. He was born in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, May 26, 1839, son of Everhart and Mary A. (Galliger) Rudolph, the former of whom was born in Germany and the latter in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Everhart Rudolph came of stanch old German lineage, and was reared and educated in the Fatherland, where he remained until his emigration to America. In his native land he had learned the trade of millsmith, which he there followed as a journeyman for a number of years, traveling from place to place. Upon coming to the United States he located in Philadelphia and, being unable to find employment at his trade, forthwith began an apprenticeship to the bakery trade, which he there followed for a number of years, within which time he was married. He removed from the old Quaker City to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits for a few years, then disposing of his interests in this line and engaging in the operation of water carts about the city, supplying water for domestic purposes and building up a large and profitable enterprise. He was thus engaged until about the year 1848, when he removed to Decatur county, Indiana, and purchased a farm of 120 acres, near Greensburg, about thirty acres of the tract having been cleared, while the principal improvement on the place was a small log house of the primitive order. In this he established his home, and then set himself vigorously to the task of reclaiming and developing his farm, his industry and good management being effectual, for he made valuable improvements in the way of buildings and placed the greater portion of his farm under a high state of cultivation, being known as one of the progressive and successful farmers of that section of the State. There he continued to reside until his children had attained maturity and left the old homestead and until his devoted and loved wife, who had been a true companion and helpmate, was summoned into eternal rest, and he then left the homestead and passed the declining years of his long and useful life as a welcome guest in the home of our subject, where he was accorded the utmost filial care and solicitude. He died at Newport, Ind., in 1891, at the venerable age of eighty-two years. He was a man of medium height but of strong constitution, and was ever an ambitious and assiduous worker, striving to make his every effort prolific in results, while his genial and kindly nature won to him the regard and friendship of all with whom he came in contact, his every action being directed by the highest principles of integrity and honor. While residing in Cincinnati he accumulated a good property and he ever provided liberally and generously for his family, but his kindness and sympathy were so extended to those unworthy that he met with heavy financial losses through those whom he had aided. As a farmer in Indiana he accumulated a competency for his old age, while the home life was one whose memories are hallowed to his children for all time. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the United Brethren Church, and in politics he was a stanch Democrat, though never an aspirant for public office. His parents passed their lives in the Fatherland, but several of his brothers and sisters became permanent residents of the United States.

Mary A. (Galliger) Rudolph, mother of our subject, was born in Philadelphia, her parents having been of Irish lineage and both having died when she was a child, leaving her without financial resources to provide for her rearing. She was taken into the family circle of a wealthy German butcher of Philadelphia, and was kindly and considerably reared, being afforded good advantages. She had one sister, who became the wife of a Mr. Nelson, who became a resident of Indianapolis, where they both died, leaving one son Edward, who was for a number of years connected with the Evening News of this city.

To Everhart and Mary A. Rudolph were born six children, namely: Jane, who became the wife of V. Brown, both now deceased; Edward; William, who was a member of the 26th Indiana Battery during the Civil war, and is now a prosperous farmer near Greensburg, this State; Charles, likewise a Union soldier, now engaged in farming; Carrie, wife of Thomas Clark, a farmer of Decatur county; and Albert, a railroad man, making his home in Helena, Montana.

Edward Rudolph received his early educational training in the public schools of Cincinnati and was about ten years of age at the time of the family removal to Indiana. Here he attended the district schools as opportunity afforded, and early began to aid in the work of clearing and cultivating the homestead farm, remaining at the parental home until the age of twenty years, when his father gave him his time, and he forthwith began his independent career, continuing to be employed at farm work until the duties of patriotism enlisted a ready response from him. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted as a private in the 26th Indiana Battery, commanded by Colonel Rigby. This battery was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and proceeded to Harper's Ferry and thence to Winchester, Va., where about 11,000 troops had been mobilized, and shortly after the arrival of the battery the Confederate forces swept down and captured the entire command with the exception of the cavalry, which succeeded in cutting its way through, Generals "Stonewall" Jackson and Longstreet being in command of the Confederate troops. The members of the 26th Battery were released soon afterward, on parole, and the major portion of its members were sent to Chicago. A few days later several of the number, including Mr. Rudolph, took "French leave," and our subject returned to his home, where he remained until an exchange was made, when all the members of the battery met at Indianapolis and re-enlisted. The command was now assigned to the Army of the Tennessee and proceeded at once to the front, crossing the mountains with General Burnside and taking part in the capture of Knoxville, Tenn., after which the battery continued in the campaign which brought about the subjugation of the entire northeastern portion of that State. Mr. Rudolph's command was on patrol duty, and at one time was surrounded by Longstreet's forces, which nearly effected a second capture. Thereafter the command maintained its headquarters in Knoxville until the surrender of Lee, soon after which its members were formally mustered out. They proceeded to Indianapolis where they were honorably discharged.

After the close of the war Mr. Rudolph returned to Decatur county, where he was married in 1866, and he then rented a farm, to whose cultivation he gave his attention for several years, at the expiration of which he was able to purchase a tract in that county, and there he made his home for a long term of years, applying himself energetically and with discrimination to the improvement and cultivation of the farm and developing a valuable property, while a due financial success attended his efforts and he became known as one of the substantial and influential citizens of that section. In 1890 he left the farm and came to Indianapolis, where he was engaged in business about two years, within which time he disposed of his farm, and he then retired from active labor, and has since continued his residence in the capital city, where he has a pleasant home.

In 1866 Mr. Rudolph was united in marriage to Miss Mary Murray, a representative of an honored pioneer family of Indiana. She was born in Franklin county, this State, daughter of Coburn Murray, who was an early settler in that county and prominently identified with its development, becoming one of its successful and influential farmers and stock-growers and a man honored for his sterling character. He was a zealous member of the Methodist Church, and in politics was a stanch Republican. He died in middle life, on the old homestead, the father of seven children, namely: Seth, a farmer; Isaac, formerly a farmer, but now engaged in business; Olivia, who became the wife of a Mr. Hazzard, and died in Shelbyville; Mary, wife of Mr. Rudolph; Esther, the wife of William Murrah, a farmer of Illinois; Maria, the wife of C. Murrah, of Indianapolis; and Coburn, a farmer, of Elwood, this State. Mrs. Rudolph, who had proved a most devoted wife and mother and who held the love of a wide circle of friends, entered into eternal rest July 22, 1900, having been a sincere and consistent member of the Baptist Church. She is survived by two children, Charles and Carrie.

RICHARD HALL (deceased) was one of the old and venerable citizens of Indiana, long and prominently identified with the farming interests of his section of the State. He was born April 23, 1823, in Kentucky, opposite Madison, Ind., son of Zachariah and Mary (Hall) Hall, the father a native of New Jersey, and the mother of Kentucky. The father was a son of Henry Hall, and the mother a daughter of William Hall, although no relationship existed between them.

Henry Hall came of German parentage, and grew up in New Jersey, where he was reared a farmer. Coming to Kentucky at an early day, he subsequently moved into Indiana and entered land eight miles from Madison, which he converted into a good farm, upon which he lived and died. He reared a large family of children.

William Hall, the maternal grandfather of Richard, served in the war of the Revolution. He came to Indiana at an early day, locating in the vicinity of Madison. His children were: Henry, Squire, John, and Mary.

Born to Zachariah and Mary Hall were two children, John (who died unmarried), and Richard. Zachariah Hall and his wife were both members of the Baptist Church, and were among the most respected people of their community, where they were highly regarded for their Christian character and real worth.

Richard Hall, though born in Kentucky, was reared in Indiana, and after passing through a desolate childhood on account of the loss of both his parents at an early age, he served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade in Madison, Ind., and this trade was his means of livelihood for many years. For twelve years he worked at blacksmithing in Monrovia. He was a hard worker and economical, so that he gradually got ahead, and in 1872 was able to buy a 200-acre farm in the neighborhood of Bridgeport. To this place he afterward added forty acres, owning the entire property until his death. After buying his farm he gave up the blacksmith shop to devote his entire attention to his agricultural work, in which his career was eminently successful. Avoiding debt, he worked hard and lived frugally, and in time became a man of means. During his active years he dealt largely in real estate, handling farms and other property, owning some productive tenements in Indianapolis. Mr. Hall began his business career at the bottom of the ladder, without even the advice of parents, and deserved much credit for his large success in life. Unalterably opposed to debt, he made his way by honest industry and careful economy.

Mr. Hall was married in Monrovia to Miss Emaline Weisner, a daughter of William Weisner, of North Carolina, where she was born. She was but nine years old when she came to Monrovia, Morgan county, with her parents. Her father was a farmer and tanner, and engaged in those lines at Monrovia, living an honorable and useful life. He left the memory of an honest man who had led an industrious career. His children were: Josiah and John, both of whom are deceased; Micajah, of Indianapolis; Abigail, the wife of J. Coats; Elizabeth, Mrs. Cavenish; Millicent, Mrs. Hadley; Matilda, Mrs. McCollum; Emaline, Mrs. Hall; Jaben, deceased; Sirena; and Asa W. The Weisners were worthy members of the Society of Friends, and were very highly regarded in the community.

To Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hall were born the following children: William, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Solomon, who died at the age of fifteen years; Lucinda, who married John Fenton, and is deceased; Enos, a farmer, who is unmarried; and Abigail. The last named married James F. Smith, son of Jacob and Nancy (Bennett) Smith, and they have had seven children: Elva E., Zula N., Maud E., Owen L., Lawrence F., Lucile G., and Harold C. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Friends' Church. Her husband is engaged as a painter and paperhanger.

Mrs. Hall, who died April 11, 1902, was a member of the Society of Friends. Mr. Hall died Oct. 2, 1903. He was a Republican but he never aspired to any political offices. He and his wife were well thought of in the community, where their worthy spent lives won them universal respect.

DANIEL B. HOLMAN, one of the most prosperous business men of Indianapolis, Ind., is conveniently located at the corner of Market and Delaware streets, where he conducts a flourishing real estate, loan and insurance business. He was born in Bartholomew county, Ind., Aug. 9, 1849, son of James R.

and Isabel (Burnett) Holman, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively.

Martin Holman, the paternal grandfather of Daniel B. Holman, was a native of Kentucky, and died in that State when well advanced in years. It is very probable that he was a farmer. He and his wife Betsey reared a family of five sons and one daughter.

The maternal grandfather was William Burnett, who was born in Kentucky, but who was an early settler of Bartholomew county, Ind., where he cleared and improved a farm. His wife's maiden name was Witt. William Burnett lived to the unusual age of ninety-six years, but his first wife was considerably younger when she passed away. After her death he married again, the Christian name of his second wife being Melinda. By his first marriage he had eight children.

The children born to James R. and Isabel (Burnett) Holman were as follows: Elihu W., of Bartholomew county; Nancy J., married William Brumfield, of Kentucky; Daniel B.; James B. of Kentucky; and Sarah, who died at the age of seventeen years.

By occupation James R. Holman was a farmer. Coming to Indiana at an early day, he settled in Bartholomew county, where he engaged in farming. After his wife's death, he returned to Kentucky, where he died, aged over seventy years. Both he and his wife were Methodists. He held various township offices, and was one of the leading Democrats, being proud, however, of the fact that he never voted with the Knights of the Golden Circle. One of his warm personal friends was Governor Morton.

Daniel B. Holman, with his brothers and sisters, was reared in Bartholomew county, where they were afforded the educational advantages of the district schools. After he had finished his course in them, he went to the Quaker seminary at Azalia, and on returning home, began farming. Until he was thirty-five years of age, he worked upon the farm, and then embarked in general contracting, residing in Philadelphia, Ind., and furnished employment to many of the citizens of that place. In June, 1891, he came to Indianapolis, and located permanently, opening a real estate and loan office, which he still conducts, with remarkable success. Mr. Holman is manager of the real estate department of the State House Buildings Association, and the United States Building and Loan Institution, and also does a large insurance business. He is president of the Crescent Loan & Investment Company, and is otherwise interested in various realty enterprises.

On Aug. 29, 1872, Mr. Holman married Miss Nancy J. Fields, daughter of Christopher and Mary (Hughes) Fields. The following children have been born of this happy marriage: Grace died at the age of four years; Edward, a molder by trade, married Dony Ellenbaugh, and has two children, Fred and Will; Mary Isabel is clerk of Stout's & Shepherd's courts in Indianapolis; Cora married Milton McCord, and has one child, Ruth; William F. died at the age of ten years; Minnie, Goldie Bessie and Victor L. are all at home, bright, healthy young people. Mr. Holman is not identified with any religious denomination, but attends the services of the Universalist Church, and believes that churches are very necessary to elevate the moral tone of a community. Mrs. Holman is a member of the Christian Church. In politics, Mr. Holman is a Democrat, and he served as United States Deputy Marshal under President Cleveland.

The pleasant home of the family, owned by Mr. Holman, is at No. 715 Bates street, and he also owns considerable other realty throughout the city. For a number of years he and Mr. Hackedorn have been associated in real estate and other matters, and both are recognized as honorable, reliable and enterprising business men, and experts in all matters pertaining to real estate and its values.

ISAAC BRENNEMAN (deceased). Among the prosperous farmers of Perry township, Marion Co., Ind., one who was well and favorably known throughout the county as a man of energy, industry and thrift, was Isaac Breneman, who was born in 1826, in Lancaster county, Pa., son of Henry and Fanny (Weian) Breneman.

Henry Breneman, the father, was a native of Pennsylvania, as was his wife, and they came to Marion county, Ind., settling in Perry township, where they purchased a farm of 160 acres and made extensive improvements upon their property. Here the mother died when fifty years of age, and the father resided upon the farm until within three years of his death, which occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Heiny, when he was eighty-three years of age. Two children who lived to maturity, were born to these parents: Catherine, Mrs. Heiny; and Isaac.

Isaac Breneman took charge of the home farm a number of years prior to his father's death, and successfully operated it until his own death. The property is now owned by Mrs. Breneman, and is a very desirable farm, being located about three miles south of Indianapolis, and five miles northwest of Southport. This farm is in a fine state of cultivation, the dwelling and barns as well as other outbuildings are in a good condition, and modern methods are pursued in its cultivation. When the farm was purchased by Henry Breneman, almost all the land was in timber, all of which has been cleared away and planted in crops best suited to the soil.

In 1854, Mr. Breneman married Miss Eliza Whitford, daughter of Earl and Betsey (Ward) Whitford, and five children were born of this union: Henry, George and Isaac, and two who died in infancy. Henry died at the age of two years and two months. George passed away when in the strength of his manhood, at the age of thirty-two, after having been for years his mother's comfort and standby. Unlike many young men, he preferred his home and mother to outside pleasures, and his loss was a heavy one to her to whom he had shown such devotion. Isaac, the youngest of the family, and only surviving child, resides with his mother, and conducts her farm for her.

Mr. Breneman was a Democrat in politics, and was a hard-working, industrious man. In religious convictions, Mr. Breneman was not identified with any church, but was a kind-hearted, liberal-minded man, of sterling worth of character. Mrs. Breneman is a consistent member of the Methodist Church and a lady of high Christian character.

The parents of Mrs. Breneman, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Whitford, were among the early settlers of Marion county, having come to this locality from Saratoga county, N. Y. Mrs. Breneman was born near Saratoga Lake, in 1826, and a sister, Ellen C., two years younger, widow of Richard Webb, also resides in Perry township. Mr. Whitford died in July, 1854, aged sixty-six years, and his wife survived him several years, dying when about seventy-six or seventy-seven years old. In religious belief he was a Methodist, while she was a Baptist. The father of Mr. Whitford was a native of England, while the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Breneman was John Ward, a native of New York, who lived and died near Saratoga Lake, and who was a soldier in the war for Independence, serving as a life guard of General Schuyler.

In her beautiful home, surrounded by the comforts of life, Mrs. Breneman is enjoying a well-earned repose. She stands very high in the estimation of her neighbors as a most estimable lady and kind and generous friend.

JOSEPH B. SULGROVE is a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of Indiana, and a native of the capital city of the State, where he still resides. He also has the distinction of being a veteran of the Civil war.

Mr. Sulgrove was born in Indianapolis Sept. 6, 1843, son of James and Catherine Sulgrove. The parents were distantly related. The father was born in 1804, in Ohio, and was of English descent; the name was formerly spelled Sulgrave. The mother was a native of North Carolina, born in 1803, and their marriage was solemnized in Indianapolis, where James Sulgrove took up his residence in 1822, when that city was represented by a straggling and primitive village in the midst of the virgin forest, which surrounded it on every side. Here he and his brother Joseph, who came about the same time, became the pioneer saddlers and harness-makers, instituting operations on a modest scale but eventually building up a magnificent business, in manufacturing as well as wholesale and retail dealing. During the Civil war James Sulgrove, who had become the sole owner of the enterprise, held important government contracts, and furnished all kinds of equipment in the line of saddles, harness, etc. His wholesale department was located on Meridian street. In later years his sons had charge of the manufacturing branch of the business, but Mr. Sulgrove continued the enterprise himself until within a few years of his death, when he disposed of the same and thereafter lived retired. He was an able business man, and accumulated a large estate, being accounted one of the wealthy and influential citizens of the capital city. Essentially broad-minded and public-spirited, his influence was potentially exerted for the furtherance of the best interests of the community; he was kind and charitable, gracious in his personality, and imbued with the highest principles of honor and integrity so that he naturally commanded uniform confidence and esteem. In politics he was originally a Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward supported its cause, though never an aspirant for office. He and his wife were the pioneers of the Christian or Campbellite Church in Indianapolis, having been prominently concerned in the organization of the first church society of that denomination, while many of its early meetings were held in their home. They also contributed liberally to the erection of the first Church building on Kentucky avenue, and were recognized as pillars of the church, while their home furnished entertainment to the clergymen of the early days. Mrs. Sulgrove was a leader in all departments of the church work devolving upon the ladies, while Mr. Sulgrove was equally fervent in his efforts, holding many official positions, including that of deacon, of which office he was an incumbent for many years. When a new edifice became necessary for the accommodation of the growing society, he became associated with Ovid Butler and Dr. P. H. Jameson, in the erection of a substantial and attractive church at the corner of Ohio and Delaware streets, which they presented to the congregation, having personally borne the expense of its erection and furnishing. More noble and worthy examples of Christian zeal and living are not often seen than those furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Sulgrove. He died in 1875, and his wife Jan. 19, 1865. Of their ten children we have the following brief record: (1) Berry (deceased) was a man of fine intellectual gifts, and was the author of a valuable history of Marion county. He married Mary, sister of Dr. P. H. Jameson, and had four sons, two now living, Lester and James, both of whom reside in Montana. Lester is a librarian at Helena, and James is an attorney-at-law. Their mother died in Montana in 1906. (2) John M. died at the age of fifty years, unmarried. (3) Louisa A. is the wife of E. J. Martin. (4) Milton M., who was a soldier in the Civil war, died at Marion in 1903. He left two daughters. (5) Jerome died leaving five daughters. (6) Mary M. is the wife of John Reynolds. (7) James W. died in 1902, leaving two children. (8) Eli L. died in 1903, and is survived by four children. (9) Joseph B. is mentioned below. (10) Henry J. is engaged in business at Richmond, Ind., as a manufacturer of firemen's protective helmets. He resides in Indianapolis. All the children had attained their majority before the death of the mother, and all of the sons became identified with their father's business, becoming saddlers and expert harness-makers. Joseph Sulgrove, the uncle of our subject, was originally associated with his brother James in the business, but sold his interest to the latter after several years had passed, and then purchased a farm in Marion county, where he passed the remainder of his life, having been one of the successful and influential men of this section. He also married a Sulgrove, Alice Sulgrove, sister of Catherine, wife of his brother James.

In the public schools of Indianapolis Joseph B. Sulgrove received his early educational discipline, and as a boy he became identified with the business conducted by his father, gaining familiarity with all branches of the business and becoming an expert workman. In August, 1862, when nineteen years of age, he enlisted, becoming a private in Company E, 70th Ind. V. I., of which the late President Harrison was commander. The regiment was assigned to the 20th Corps, Army of the Tennessee, and Mr. Sulgrove continued in active service until the close of the war, participating in many of the notable engagements of the conflict and experiencing his full share of arduous service and hardships, though he was never wounded nor captured. He took part in the memorable Atlanta campaign and all others in which his command was engaged. The exposure and other hardships of his army career affected his health, and a sequel of the same was a partial stroke of paralysis which he endured a number of years ago and which compelled him to retire from all active work. At the time of Lee's surrender he was with his command in North Carolina, whence they proceeded to Washington, where they took part in the Grand Review and were mustered out in June, 1865. Mr. Sulgrove then returned to Indianapolis, where he received his honorable discharge. In recognition of his services and disability the government awards him a small pension.

As soon as he had recuperated Mr. Sulgrove became shipping clerk in his father's establishment, where he remained until the free mail delivery system was instituted in Indianapolis, when he became one of the first sixteen carriers appointed. After about three years of this work, he was obliged to resign on account of disability resulting from his army service, and he then resumed work in his father's establishment. About this time machinery for the manufacture of harness was being introduced and Mr. Sulgrove became an expert in the operation of the same, and in this connection invented and patented some valuable attachments. He continued to be identified with this line of enterprise as long as he was able to give attention to active business, but in 1893 he suffered a shock of paralysis which completely disabled him, and he has since lived retired. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and his religious views are in harmony with the faith in which he was reared. Fraternally he is identified with Robert Anderson Post, No. 369, G. A. R., and with Union Veteran Legion, No. 80, of Indianapolis. He resides at No. 2112 Prospect street.

In 1866 Mr. Sulgrove married Miss Mary Louisa Marchant, who was born in Cincinnati in 1845, daughter of Isaac and Eliza Marchant, the former of whom was for many years engaged in the hotel business in Cincinnati. There his wife died, and he passed the closing years of his life in the home of his son, Isaac, Jr., in Indianapolis; his other children were Charles, John B. (of the National Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio), and Mary Louisa (Mrs. Sulgrove). Mr. and Mrs. Sulgrove had two daughters, Alberta, wife of A. J. Rost, a business man of Indianapolis; and Mary M., the widow of Albert Brummer, residing in Indianapolis.

WILLIAM HENRY POTTER, a photographer at Indianapolis, is a past master of his profession, and one of those modern exponents of the science of photography, who have raised its productions into the artistic realm. He has been established in Indianapolis since 1875, and occupies a leading position in his line of work. Mr. Potter was born in Bedford county, Pa., Jan. 8, 1841, son of Jacob H. and Mary Ann (Mickle) Potter.

The family was originally from Virginia. The great-grandfather, John Potter, moved from that State to Pennsylvania, settling about forty miles south of Altoona. He was a farmer and miller by occupation, and lived to the ripe old age of eighty-five. He had a small family. The grandfather was a flour miller, but he ran a woolen mill and owned a farm in Bedford county. He died in middle life, from the effects of an accident; his wife survived him until 1864, dying when eighty-five years old. They had four sons and one daughter.

Jacob H. Potter was born in Pennsylvania. In his youth he was a singing master and also a millwright, but he later became a physician. He moved to Ohio, living first near Canton, later near Massillon and finally at Jeromeville. His death was a most untimely one, as he was killed when only thirty-five years of age in a railway accident near Akron, Ohio, in 1852. His wife died in 1867, at Mansfield, Ohio, aged nearly fifty-two years. Both were members of the Lutheran Church. Of their seven sons, only two are now living, William H. and Ezra John, of Mansfield, Ohio.

The maternal grandfather of W. H. Potter was Griffith Mickle, a native of Pennsylvania. He was a blacksmith by trade, a maker of augers and the owner of a farm near Bedford. He lived nearer Baltimore than any other market, and used to haul all his grain thither, bringing back household supplies. He reached the age of seventy-five years. His wife, Rebecca (Polk) Mickle, died at the age of sixty-nine. She was a cousin of James K. Polk, President of the United States. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters.

William Henry Potter spent his boyhood largely in the vicinity of Jeromeville and Hayesville, Ohio. He attended the district schools first, and later as he was ambitious for a good education, by working on farms during the summers and teaching school in the winters for a couple of years, he was able to attend the Vermillion Institute, at Hayesville. At the beginning of the Civil war he enlisted Sept. 7, 1861, in Company E, 3d Ohio Cavalry, and was in the service for a little over four years and four months. He served in the Atlanta Campaign, was in most of the battles in that region, was captured by Morgan's men Nov. 8, 1862, and was exchanged and returned to his regiment in the following March. Enlisting as a private he rose to the rank of captain. After the war was over Capt. Potter returned to Mansfield, Ohio, and resumed the ordinary duties of a private citizen. He had saved from his pay about $1,300 and with that he went into business with his brother Ezra J., as a photographer, but as the business was not remunerative enough for both of them, he resumed teaching for three years and also read law under Gen. Rolof Brinckerhoff. Later photography became a more lucrative occupation, and he joined his brother again, making a specialty of photographic chemistry and the artistic side of the business. In 1875 he sold out his interest to his brother, and he has since been in business for himself at Indianapolis. At present his studio is at 27 East Ohio street. He has brought the art of photography to a high state of perfection, and his work is of an unusually high order. Besides being favorably known among the business men of the city, Mr. Potter is prominent in the First Presbyterian Church, to which he and his wife belong, and he is a member of George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and of the Loyal Legion. In politics he affiliates with the Republicans. He is widely known among the photographers of the whole country, and was elected president of the National Photographers' Association in 1885. In 1887 the work he exhibited won him several gold medals, and his work is known for its high finish and general artistic treatment.

Mr. Potter chose for his wife Miss Pearl Parr, daughter of Andrew Parr and wife (whose maiden name was Donaldson). They were married July 18, 1866, and are the parents of four daughters: Lillian, the eldest, married Walter S. Whitten, now of Sioux City, Iowa, and has one son, John E. Anne C. married Nathan Garhart, of Indianapolis. Pearl married Charles Barkhurst, of the same city. Lucille is unmarried.

REV. WEBSTER O. MOORE, a Christian minister, whose home is at No. 2821 Kenwood avenue, Indianapolis, was born in Rupert, Vt., June 24, 1840, son of Seth, Jr., and Ruby (Harwood) Moore. Both were natives of Bennington county, Vermont.

Seth Moore, Jr., always a farmer, spent his life in a home a half a mile from his birthplace. His death occurred Nov. 10, 1880, when he was aged seventy-one years and two months. His wife, Ruby Harwood, died in 1856, when she was forty-two years old. She was a Congregationalist, and he was not identified with any church. Of the eight children born to them six—four sons and two daughters—are now living: Dr. J. M., of Rupert; Miss Rhoda A., of Rupert; Rev. Webster O.; Rev. Franklin H., of New York; Seth M., on the old homestead; and Cornelia, the wife of Martin W. Smith, a merchant at Aurora, Illinois.

Seth Moore, father of Seth, Jr., was a farmer of Connecticut, where he was born of English ancestry. When he died at Rupert, Vt., he was nearly eighty years of age, and the greater part of his life had been spent at that point. Joseph Harwood, the maternal grandfather of Rev. Webster O., was born in Connecticut, of English lineage, and was always a farmer. He died at Rupert, Vt., at the age of sixty-six, the father of five sons and three daughters.

Rev. Webster O. Moore was reared at Rupert, Vt., on his father's farm, and was a student in the Seminary at Manchester, and for two terms he attended Hiram College, at Hiram, Ohio. For a time he was a teacher at Constantine, Mich., and then attended Hillsdale College, completing his studies at the Northwestern Christian University. In 1866 he began preaching at Marilla, N. Y. Later he was employed at Cato, and at other points in that State, and in 1873 removed to Perry, Ohio, where he preached for a time, and was employed at various other places in that State until 1895. That year he came to Indiana, and took charge of a church at Martinsville, and later was engaged in Rensselaer. In 1897 he was called to Indianapolis, and here he remained actively engaged until his advanced years superannuated him. The Rev. Mr. Moore is not only a pulpit orator of ability and pronounced success, but his literary gifts are of a high order, and he writes for several religious publications, being a regular contributor to Dowling's "Our Young Folks."

Rev. Webster O. Moore was married Sept. 7, 1871, to Miss Annie Van Deusen, of New York, only child of James and Angeline (Ehle) Van Deusen. They have one son, DeWitt V., who is a civil engineer, and a partner in the Moore-Mansfield Construction Company; he married Miss Flora Mabel Berg, a niece of Samuel J. Compton, of Indianapolis, and she died Aug. 25, 1899, leaving one son, Berg DeWitt. In politics he is a Republican.

James Van Deusen and wife were both born in New York. He was a prominent shipbuilder, and was engaged in the building of the following vessels: "Monitor," "Great Eastern," "Fleet-wing," and "America," the last named vessel winning for this country the first cup in the race with England. He died in New York City March 8, 1866, at the age of forty-four years. His wife passed to her rest Oct. 26, 1859, at the age of thirty-six years, eight and a half months.

John Van Deusen, grandfather of Mrs. Moore, was born in New York, of Holland-

Dutch ancestry, and was a farmer near Palatine Bridge. His death occurred while he was still in middle life. He reared seven children. He was prominent in Masonic work. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Moore was John Ehle, who was born and reared at Canajoharie, N. Y., coming of Holland-Dutch ancestry. He was a contractor. His family consisted of four children.

Rev. Mr. Moore is one of the strong and popular preachers among the clergymen of the Disciples Church, and his ability as an orator is widely recognized. His writings are no less lucid; pungent and convincing. The son is a rising business man in Indianapolis, and his standing as a civil engineer in connection with the railroad service is remarkably fine and creditable.

LEWIS A. MILLER, who is one of the substantial farmers of Washington township, Morgan county, Ind., was born Dec. 16, 1833, in Westphalia, Prussia, Germany, where the family is one of age and respectability, son of Henry and Mary Miller, both of whom were born in Prussia.

Joseph Henry Miller, grandfather of Lewis A., was a mill owner, who spent his whole life in Prussia, dying there in old age, the father of three children.

Henry Miller, father of Lewis A., came to America in 1836, and worked at his trade of blacksmith for two years, accumulating enough money in this time to return to Germany and bring his family to America with him, in 1848, when he settled in Jackson township, Morgan county. There he bought 160 acres of land and lived upon it for about ten years, and then moved to Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he made his home during the balance of his life, although his death occurred at the home of his son Christian in Missouri, in 1866, when he was aged eighty-two years. Mr. Miller was twice married, four children being born to his first marriage, the last of these to pass away having been Louisa, widow of Peter Boling, and she died in 1907, in Jackson township, Morgan county, at the age of eighty-eight years. Mr. Miller married (second) Mary, the mother of Lewis A., and she died some years before her husband, at the age of seventy years. Four of the six children of this marriage are living: Charles, of Cedar Falls, Iowa; George, of Luverne, Iowa; Jacob, of Washington township; and Lewis A. Both parents belonged to the Lutheran Church.

Lewis A. Miller lived in Germany until he was fourteen years of age, and there received a good, common school education. Since coming to Morgan county he has followed farming, and his industry has resulted in his becoming the owner of one of the large, finely improved farms of Washington township. It has required much self-denial and hard work, but Mr. Miller is now one of the substantial farmers as well as most highly respected and useful citizens. His first money was earned by working by the month, and as soon as he had accumulated enough, he put it into eighty acres of land. He had operated a threshing machine for some time previously, and had made considerable money in this way. Mr. Miller found a purchaser for forty of his eighty acres, and then he bought 130, improving all the time, and kept on adding, until now he owns a very fine property of 223½ acres, in sections 23, 26 and 27, which is generally conceded to be a very valuable estate. He has been practical in his methods and careful in his calculations, and his success is in every way satisfactory. He gives his attention to the raising of wheat, corn and stock.

On Sept. 30, 1858, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Sarah Lawrence, daughter of Amos and Praxana (Kezar) Lawrence, the former of whom was a native of Fitchburg, Mass., a millwright by trade, who came to Indiana in 1836. He claimed relationship to the Abbot Lawrence estate in England, but never received anything. He was also a cousin of Rev. Isaac Fletcher, a farmer of Morgan county, Ind., but a native of Vermont and of the family of Fletchers who became pioneers of Indianapolis. The trip to Indiana was made by wagon, and he located about five miles from Morgantown, in Jackson township, and engaged in farming. He died there in 1881. His first wife, Praxana (Kezar) Lawrence, died many years before her husband. She was a daughter of Captain Kezar, a soldier in the War of 1812, and was born in Canada. Mr. Lawrence married (second) Naomi (Choate) Reader, who still resides in Jackson township. Five children of the parents of Mrs. Miller still survive, namely: Mrs. Miller; Harriet, widow of Charles Sanders, of Jackson township; Praxana, wife of Edward Sanders, of Jackson township; Amos, of the same township; and Ida, wife of Commodore Brown, of Martinsville.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Maria, who died aged three months; Alice, who died aged five years; Emma, who married John Skaggs, of Martinsville, and has three children, Frances, Hazel and Edwin; Henry, of Washington township, who married Gertrude Hess, and has six children, Howard, Helen, Harold, Dean, John and Mildred; Lillian A., wife of William Avery, of Plant City, Florida; William, a morman on an electric line in Indianapolis, who married May St. John, and has two children, Woody and Jack; Gertrude, a graduate of the high school at Martinsville, and formerly a teacher, who married William Hickman, a mail clerk, residing in Indianapolis; and Glenna, a graduate of the Martinsville high school. Mr. Miller has given his family educational advantages and they are recognized as intelligent members of society. Mr. and Mrs. Miller and daughters belong to the Presbyterian Church. In politics he is independent, while fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, belonging to Lodge No. 274, Martinsville.

JOHN B. HUFF. Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, Ind., is a part of the State particularly adapted to farming, and this being the case, a number of intelligent and progressive men have been attracted to the locality, and successfully carry on agricultural pursuits. Among them may be mentioned John B. Huff, who was born in Rushville, Ohio, Aug. 18, 1833, son of Daniel and Hannah (Turner) Huff.

During persecution in the seventeenth century members of the Huff family left England and went to Holland, representatives thereafter coming to America during Colonial days.

Jesse Huff, grandfather of John B., was in the War of 1812. Like the majority of the family, he was a farmer by occupation. His wife was Lydia Drake, and both were born in Pennsylvania.

Daniel Huff was born in Pennsylvania. He learned the trade of a cabinetmaker, but attracted by the promises of what was then the West, in 1843 came to Marion county, Ind., and located near Indianapolis, where he bought a farm and lived a peaceful, although hard-working life until his death in 1877. Success came to him as a result of his efforts, and popularity as well, for he was the only Democrat ever elected to office in Washington township. The good mother, Hannah (Turner) Huff, who was born in Rushville, Ohio, died in 1877. In early years the family had been Quakers, but later united with the Methodists. Eleven children were born to this worthy couple, seven of whom are still living, and of them all, John B. Huff is the eldest. They have all been successful, upright and honorable, and stand well in the several communities in which they make their homes.

As did the others, John B. Huff received a good, common school education. In after life, he took pleasure in buying the old log schoolhouse in which he first went to school, as well as the one in which his own children attended. Remaining with his father until he was twenty-eight, he married, and purchasing a small farm, went to work on his own accord. Receiving a good price for his property he sold and then rented until June 23, 1867, when he came to Fall Creek township, Hamilton county, and purchased eighty acres, partly cleared. He has added to it until he and his wife have 172 acres in Hamilton county, and his wife has twenty-seven acres in Marion county. Upon this property he carries on a general farming business. Of late years his son has taken charge of affairs, so as to relieve the father of undue responsibility, and the farm is now one of the best in the county.

On Jan. 22, 1863, he married Margaret E. Roe, born in Marion county, Ind., a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Moore) Roe, both of Ireland, who came to the United States, when young, and became well known and successful farmers. They had a family of seven children, of whom Mrs. Huff was the eldest. Mr. and Mrs. Huff have three children: Dora A., at home; Ella, at home, a very successful school teacher; David R., who married Edna Beal, and has two boys, Arthur A. and Russell B. David has a farm of his own, and also manages that of his father.

Mr. Huff is a Democrat, and has always been very active in party work. In 1878, he was the candidate of his party for the office of county commissioner, and ran ahead of the ticket 1,000 votes, but was defeated, on account of the large Republican majority. Once more, in 1888, he ran again for the same office, and once more was ahead of his ticket, on account of his great personal popularity. Neither time did he desire to run, but he was induced to do so to oblige his party, who needed a very strong man in what is a Republican section. As a farmer, politician and family man, Mr. Huff has borne himself in a manner to win the respect and confidence of all. His keen judgment, knowledge of men, and ability to foresee political situations, make him a wise leader of his party. In his farm work, he has ever taken advantage of improvements, and conducted his property according to modern methods. In his home circle he is a beloved husband and father, and his pleasant home is often the scene of happy gatherings, when he and his wife dispense a charming hospitality.

HENRY S. DAVIDSON, a substantial and highly respected citizen of McCordsville, and a veteran of the Civil war, was born in Clermont county, Ohio, Dec. 15, 1825, son of John and Fannie (Murphy) Davidson.

The Davidsons are an old Colonial family of Scotch descent, and John Davidson was born in Virginia, the son of Adonijah Davidson. Adonijah Davidson was an Indian fighter, and was captured by the Indians, being a prisoner for seven years, and, during this time, supposing that he was dead, his wife remarried. He lived to be an aged man, and died at the home of his son, John, in Clermont county, Ohio. The children born to him and his wife, so far as are remembered, were: John, Abednego, James, Sarah and Mary (who married (first) a Mr. Mattocks, and (second) a Mr. Gale).

John Davidson, father of Henry S., was born in Virginia, near the salt licks. When about eighteen years of age he enlisted as a soldier in the war of 1812, and after serving out his term of service, re-enlisted as a substitute for another man. He served under Gen. William H. Harrison. He was married in Clermont county, Ohio, to Fannie Murphy, born in Franklin county, Ohio, daughter of James Murphy, an Irishman, who owned a small homestead in Ohio, being a pioneer farmer of that State. James Murphy's children by his first wife were: George, John, Ross, Jacob and Fannie. The mother died, and he married (second) a Widow Turck, who bore him one daughter, Betsy. He died in Ohio, advanced in years.

In 1835 John Davidson and his family started on their journey through the woods to their new home in Hancock county, Ind. The journey was made by wagons, and two cows were taken along. No feed for the cows or horses was necessary, as they could be pastured along the journey, where the wild pea vines grew luxuriantly. John Davidson entered 160 acres of land, and had begun to clear and improve his farm, when he died, aged fifty-four years, ten months and three days. Mrs. Davidson lived on the farm with her children, our subject, Henry S., finishing the clearing of the land. Mrs. Davidson was born in 1799, and died in 1871. Being early pioneers the country was sparsely settled, the nearest neighbor of the family, John Brooks, living one and one-half miles away. When he first came to his new home, John Davidson built a log cabin. The first winter this cabin had no floor, the fire being built in the center of the cabin, on the ground. Mr. Davidson was very skilful with the broad axe and hewed out puncheons, making a smooth, tight floor, which his son, Henry, still remembers as excellent. Afterward Mr. Davidson hewed out puncheons and made a floor so tight, that after his land was cultivated to raise wheat, the floor was used as a threshing floor, the wheat being tramped out by horses. The wheat was then cleaned by being poured from a sheet on a windy day, thus being fanned. In the pioneer days there was no cheat in the wheat and it needed little cleaning. Although handicapped by an injury to one of his legs, John Davidson was a very skillful workman. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, and while in Ohio he was class leader. Mr. Davidson always had prayers, night and morning, and the Methodist circuit riders made his house their home. The children born to this sturdy pioneer and his wife were twelve in number, and of these there were four pair of twins: McGuire, born May 18, 1822; George; Henry S.; James S.; William; David; Jonas; Eleanor (twin to Jonas), who died at the age of twenty-nine years; Mary, who lived to marry and rear a family; Martha (twin to Mary); Nancy and Sarah, and all of these children were born in Clermont county, Ohio, with the exception of the last two, born in Indiana. Five of the sons of this family were soldiers in the Civil war, as follows: Henry S.; James S.; George; Jonas, who was killed in the Morgan raid in Meigs county, Ohio, and David, who died at Grand Junction, Miss., of typhoid fever. All of these brothers were in Indiana regiments.

Henry S. Davidson was nearly ten years old, when he came with his parents to Hancock county, Ind. He can well remember the journey, made by wagon, John Davidson riding the near horse. The older boys, the oldest of whom was thirteen years old, walked, while the others rode. Five days they were on the journey, sleeping at night in the wagons, and camping by the wayside. The family stopped three weeks at Indian Creek, while Mr. Davidson and some of the neighbors went ahead to the land he had purchased, and built the cabin. The friendly aid was given by the pioneers, as was the custom of those days, without a thought of being repaid. Henry S. Davidson was thus brought to live among the pioneers. He attended school in a log schoolhouse, two miles from his home in Hamilton county through the woods. Neighbors had built the little schoolhouse, which, for a window had a log, the length of the building, removed, the space being covered with greased paper to admit light. Hewed out puncheons were used as seats and the writing desk was fastened to the wall by pins. Mr. Davidson attended this school one winter, and learned to read, write and cipher, and could spell the elementary spelling book through. During the winter months, by the light of a shell bark hickory fire, the boys of the family would read the few books that they possessed, which they had brought from Ohio: the "Life of Daniel Boone," the "Life of General Francis Marion" and the "Life of General Washington," and afterward procured the "Life of Black Hawk," while the Bible was always well read. A pioneer preacher was a frequent visitor of the family, and although he could neither read nor write Nathan—or "Nat"—Barnes was a great favorite, and was greatly admired by the pioneers for his natural eloquence.

Henry S. Davidson learned to work as soon as he was old enough, in the clearing and cultivating of the farm. He was not yet twenty-one years of age, when his father died, he and his brother, George, at that time being in Clermont county, Ohio, where they were working in a brick yard, for their uncle, Jacob Murphy. On hearing the news they at once started home, walking the entire distance, 120 miles in three and one-half days. Having covered fifty miles the first day, they started late the next day making only eighteen miles. It was his father's wish, made before his death, that Henry S. should take charge of the farm, and this he did. He remained on the farm, caring for his widowed mother, for many years, and after the taxes had been paid would give her one-third of the income of the farm. He bought out the other heirs, purchasing from each all right, title and claim, and when his mother died the farm of 120 acres belonged to him, forty acres having been sold by his father.

Mr. Davidson was first married in Hancock county, to Jincy Ann Philpott, born in Hancock county, Ind., daughter of William and Celia (Martin) Philpott. William Philpott was a pioneer farmer of Connerville, Ind., and was a native of South Carolina. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson settled on the farm, and she died eighteen months later, leaving no children. Mr. Davidson's second marriage was to the sister of his first wife, Celia Philpott, and they were the parents of four children, Nancy, John, Austin and Clara. Nancy married Henry Bolinger, a farmer of Hancock county, and they have four children; John, a farmer in Hancock county, married Mary Wood, and they have one daughter, Edna. Austin married Ann Vallandigham, and they have two children. Clara married William Priest, a farmer of Hancock county, and they have had three children. Mr. Davidson's second wife died in 1865, in Louisville, Indiana.

On Sept. 27, 1865, Mr. Davidson was married to Margaret (Fletcher) Bills, born in Henry county, Ind., Jan. 1, 1831, daughter of Robert and Keziah (Tacket) Fletcher. Robert Fletcher was a pioneer of Henry county, Ind., and was born in Virginia, July 8, 1806, son of William and Margaret (Pickering) Fletcher. William Fletcher was a Virginian, and came as a pioneer to Indiana where he was killed by the fall of a tree in 1833, on the Wabash river. He had been a soldier, was captured by the Indians and for several years was a prisoner. His children were: Robert, James, William, Thomas, Andrew, Samuel and Jane. Robert Fletcher first lived in Ohio. He was bound out, as his father was a captive of the Indians, and worked thus until coming to Indiana. When about eighteen years of age he was united in marriage in Henry county, Ind., to Keziah Tacket, daughter of Lewis and Mary (Hickland) Tacket. The Tackets, as well as the Hicklands, were Virginians, and were pioneers of Indiana. Lewis Tacket was captured by the Indians when a youth, together with his mother, who had a baby in her arms. The mother was a small, frail woman, and her son, seeing how greatly fatigued she was, on coming to a river begged of the Indians to be allowed to carry her across the river. The Indian answered "Kin kin." Not understanding that the Indian meant "relative," young Louis said, "No, but she is small and will drown," and was allowed to carry her across. After this, seeing that the child was a burden to the mother and might wear her out and delay the march, one of the Indians deliberately killed the baby and scalped it. When eighteen years old, young Lewis escaped and later rescued his mother.

Robert Fletcher settled in Henry county, Ind., and cleared up a farm, by his thrift and industry accumulating a substantial property of 800 acres of land. When he had married he possessed only his axe and twenty-five cents in money. He was a member of the Methodist Church, in which he was steward. By his first marriage he had these children: Mary, Andrew, Margaret, Lewis, Aphor and Robert. After the death of his first wife Robert Fletcher married Elizabeth Messic, and by her he had three children: ———, Emma and Alice. Robert Fletcher lived to be nearly eighty-one years old, dying on his farm in Louisville, Ind. He had one son in the Civil war, Robert, the captain of a company of an Indiana regiment.

Margaret Fletcher was first married to William Bills, son of John and Margaret (Conrad) Bills. He was a millwright by trade and settled in Germantown, where he died aged about forty-one years, the father of Robert, Margaret, Rev. James, Oscar and Charles. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and a highly respected citizen.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Davidson settled on the farm, purchasing more land, from time to time, and now owning 184 acres. In 1890 they located in McCordsville, since which time they have lived a quiet, retired life. Mr. Davidson enlisted as a soldier in the Civil war, in July, 1861, in Indianapolis, Ind., as a private of Company A, 11th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged April 24, 1862, on account of disability. He was in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and did a great deal of work with the hospital corps, having been detailed to drive an ambulance.

Mr. Davidson and his estimable wife are both members of the Methodist Church, of which they have always been liberal supporters. In politics Mr. Davidson is a Republican. He was originally a Democrat and cast his vote for James K. Polk, but later became a Republican and voted for Abraham Lincoln. He is an honored member of the G. A. R. post at Fortville. He is one of the few original pioneers of Indiana, now living. He is a straightforward citizen, noted for his honesty and integrity, and as such, as well as a respected veteran of the great Civil war, who responded to his country's call in her time of need, Mr. Davidson is highly respected and esteemed by all with whom he comes in contact. The fellow townsmen of Mr. Davidson have shown their confidence in him by his election to a number of town and township offices, among which may be mentioned that of supervisor of the township, and like all other offices he has held, he dispatched the duties of supervisor carefully and conscientiously, earning the reputation of being an able and efficient public official.

REV. JAMES HUGHES. No vocation among men offers greater possibilities for philanthropic work of every description—the lifting up of those in distress and the guidance of all—than the ministry. The representative of the Church who is true to his noble calling, who forgets self and merges his being in his life-work for others, is worthy of all praise and gratitude. Of these earnest souls no abler nor more devoted representative can be found in Johnson county than the Rev. James Hughes. He was born in Crawford county, Ind., March 11, 1828, his father being James Hughes and his mother Rebecca (Wilkes) Hughes. Both were natives of Indiana and to them were born six children, three sons and three daughters, the Rev. Mr. Hughes being the sole survivor.

James Hughes lived at Leavenworth, where he was engaged in the cooperage business, at which trade he was highly proficient. He died Dec. 25, 1827, his wife surviving him and marrying again, her second husband being Elihu Puckett. She resided with him in Clay county about twenty-two miles south of Terre Haute, Ind., at which place they both died, his demise occurring in the year 1861 and hers Feb. 1, 1863. To them were born three children, of whom two are now living, Lewis and Jeremiah Puckett. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Hughes of this narrative, was probably a native of Kentucky. The maternal grandfather was Samuel Wilkes, who claimed Indiana as the State of his nativity, and was a farmer by occupation, dying in Wright township, Greene county, Indiana at a ripe old age, leaving a family of thirteen children.

The Rev. Mr. Hughes was but eight or nine years old when his grandfather died, and he lived with his grandmother Wilkes until he arrived at the age of twelve years, when he went to live with his mother, and continued with her until he arrived at the age of fourteen years. He then started out for himself in the general work of a farm hand for a Quaker named Siler, in Parke county, Indiana, in whose employ he continued for five years. He then removed to Carroll county where he married and worked upon the farm of Isaac Buckney for about eight years. Returning to Greene county he purchased an eighty-acre farm which he improved in many respects. In the fall of 1863 he was drafted into the Civil war, paying eight hundred dollars for a substitute, to raise which it was necessary to sell his land. About this time he entered the Ministry in the Methodist Protestant Church as an itinerant preacher, and traveled for the next twenty-one years preaching the Gospel. He then identified himself with the Missionary Baptist Church and has preached faithfully and with great ability ever since in that faith. Nearly five thousand people have been gathered together in the Church as the result of his efforts, and he has accomplished a great work throughout the section of the country in which he preached.

In 1866 he purchased a farm of forty acres near the county seat of Bloomfield, and farmed there for twelve years in connection with his preaching. He next removed to Shelby county, where he lived two years, and then returned to his home in Greene county. He afterward removed to Shelby county where he remained until 1900, coming at that time to Greenwood, where he purchased forty-two acres of land northwest of Greenwood on the Three Notch road, eight miles south of Indianapolis. This he still owns in addition to a fine home and lot in Greenwood where he now resides.

On March 8, 1849, he was joined in marriage to Caroline Cline, of Carroll county. She was the daughter of Ephraim and Margaret (Wilkes) Cline, and to them were born twelve children, three sons and nine daughters of whom four are now living: Mary, Christian E., Amelia and Elizabeth. Of these, Mary married (first) John W. Kidd, and had eight children: Cora, Clara, Ida, Allie, Stella, Beatrice, Horace D. and Charley; sometime after the death of her husband, she married (second) William Ball, by whom she had one son. Christian E. married Maggie Tyrrell, and they reside in Monroe county; they have nine children, among these being William R., Margaret, Lizzie Belle, James, Marshall and Bonnie. Amelia married Emanuel Mies, of London, Shelby county, and has two children living, Keturah and Ila Alfred. Elizabeth married Joshua Crook and now lives on the old home place near Bloomfield, Greene county; they have had seven children, among whom are Sophelia, John, Edgar, Charles, Clara and Clarissa (twins).

Mrs. Hughes died June 10, 1883, in Shelby county, and by her request was taken home and buried in Greene county. On Feb. 3, 1885, Mr. Hughes married Sophelia A. Copple, daughter of Daniel Copple. She died in 1897. On June 9, 1898, Mr. Hughes married Miss Sarah C. Owens, the daughter of William and Susan (Power) Owens, her father being a native of Kentucky, and her mother of Indiana. They reside in Sugar Creek, about forty miles east of Greenwood.

The Rev. Mr. Hughes has won the admiration and respect of all who have known him, and by his eloquence and charitable deeds has been a great power for good in the community for many years past. He is justly beloved by all, whether members of his fold or not, for his teachings have at all times been liberal and progressive.

WILLIAM ROUSE was one of the representative and progressive farmers of Clark township, Johnson county. Starting in life with nothing, save willing hands and a heart beating high with courage and hope, he rose step by step as the years rolled by, until he became a most important factor in the community.

He was born in Sugar Creek township, Shelby county, Ind., June 29, 1838, son of Nathaniel and Lucinda (Francis) Rouse, both natives of Kentucky. He was one of twelve children born to them, five sons and seven daughters, of whom two alone now survive: Thomas, of Indianapolis, and Elmira, widow of Elias Wright, also of Indianapolis. The father was a farmer by occupation, and was a pioneer in Shelby county, buying land there for $3.00 an acre, which is now worth $80.00 an acre. He died in Shelby county at the age of forty-four years, in 1844, his wife surviving him for many years, and dying in 1882 at the age of seventy-five. Both were earnest and influential Baptists and highly esteemed by all who knew them.

Samuel Rouse, the paternal grandfather of William Rouse, came from Kentucky to Indiana among the early pioneers, settling in Shelby county, and entering land from the government. He successfully reared a large family and lived to the ripe old age of four score years.

Upon his mother's side Mr. Rouse's grandfather was William Francis, who came from Kentucky to Indiana, locating in Sugar Creek township, Shelby county, near the Johnson county line. Here he cleared away the heavy timber and began work as a farmer. In those early days the Indians were numerous, and often a cause of uneasiness among the settlers, and wild game of all kinds was abundant. Deer, wild turkeys, squirrels and many other indigenous animals contributed largely to the food of the little colony. Mr. Francis spent the remainder of his life upon this farm of his own cultivation, dying at an even three score years. He had thirteen children, of whom only two are now living.

William Rouse was born upon the farm of his grandfather of whom we have last spoken, and there spent his boyhood days. When he reached the age of fourteen years, he moved with his mother to Johnson county, where he remained at home until about the age of eighteen years, when he went back to Shelby county and commenced working by the month, for his uncle Phillip Hoop. In that year he cut about forty acres of wheat with a cradle. He rented the farm which he later owned for two years, then went away for a like period, and then returned, purchasing this farm, containing 120 acres, upon which he built most of the present improvements, constructing a fine house and barn and other buildings upon it. He became the owner of nearly 300 acres of arable and highly productive land, and attained his substantial position solely through his own faithful work.

On Feb. 7, 1858, Mr. Rouse married Elizabeth Hoop, daughter of Ferguson and Nellie (Doble) Hoop, and of this union six children were born, five sons and one daughter, as follows: Oscar, Frank, Abner, Frederick and two children who died in infancy. Of these Oscar engaged in the elevator business in Indianapolis, meeting with success, but is now living on a farm at Acton, Ind., which belonged to his father; to him and his wife, formerly Lou Smith, were born two children, Freddie and Helen. Frank is a prosperous farmer in Shelby county; he married Emma Eastburn, and has two children, Myrtle and Harry. Abner for some years was a salesman for a Chicago publishing house.

Frederick is a farmer upon the home farm; he married Allyn Todd, and has one child Earl Radcliffe.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Hoop) Rouse died Dec. 29, 1889, at about the age of forty-seven years. She was an esteemed member of the Baptist Church in which she did much to promote its teachings. On July 3, 1893, Mr. Rouse married (second) Mary B. Laws, widow of Dr. Judson Laws, and daughter of George W. and Nancy (Bradley) Frances.

Mr. Rouse was a member of the Baptist Church, while his widow is a Methodist, both taking much interest in the work of their respective churches. For many years he was Church Treasurer and from the early age of fifteen taught in the Sunday-school. He was a member of Pleasant Lodge, No. 134, F. & A. M., also of Chapter No. 173, O. E. S., of Acton. To the latter his widow also belongs, being Worthy Matron and Past Matron in that lodge. Mr. Rouse early espoused the principles of Republicanism and always remained a staunch Republican. For several years he occupied the position of school director, and was also supervisor. He resided in his home neighborhood for almost seventy years, and had seen it develop from a wilderness into highly productive and beautiful farm land.

Truly the life of Mr. Rouse was one which the youth of today may well emulate. The keynote of it was always self-reliance, hope and courage to do each day what came to him and seemed best and right. He was entirely a self-made man, having no one with whom to divide the honors which came to him. Experience has shown that the men of his type are, almost without exception, well-rounded out and successful beyond their fellows, and Mr. Rouse was no exception to the rule. He died in January, 1908, at Acton.

JAMES L. WHITE. Probably no part of Marion county is so thoroughly representative of the best agricultural interests of the State of Indiana as that included in the township of Warren, and one of the prosperous farmers who has borne his part in the establishment of this prestige, is James L. White, born in that county, Dec. 12, 1838, son of George J. and Nancy (Martin) White.

Mr. White's paternal grandfather was born in Scotland, where he married and had a family of eleven children, six of whom are still living.

George J. White was born in Clermont county, Ohio, in 1801, while his wife was born in the same county in 1802. He came to Warren township, Marion Co., Ind., in December, 1838, and entered 160 acres of land from the government, at $1.25 per acre, and was obliged to cut a place in the midst of the woods to put up his log cabin. Success seemed to follow him, and later in life he entered 140 acres in Lawrence township, owning 300 acres of land, the greater portion of which was cleared at the time of his death March 23, 1882. While he was a good Democrat he never aspired to office.

James L. White was married, in 1866, to Martha McConnell, daughter of Joseph and Mary (McAdoo) McConnell, of Ohio, who came to Indiana at an early day, and had eleven children, five of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. White have had five children: Charles, who died at the age of thirteen years; Eddie E., who married Henrietta Wagner, and is a farmer; Joseph, deceased; Jenny M. and Nancy M.

In his business operations, Mr. White has been very successful, and has eighty acres, all under cultivation but fifteen acres. He raises Jersey cattle, and does some dairy farming. His farm is well ditched, and tiled with some 300 rods of tiling. The improvements are all of his own making, including his comfortable home and fine barn, and the entire premises denote the thrifty character of the owner. In politics, Mr. White is a Democrat, and has served very acceptably as supervisor, although he has not desired office. His connections with the Baptist Church are of the most pleasant nature, and he is very highly esteemed in that denomination. Throughout the entire neighborhood, Mr. White is highly regarded and his worth as an exemplary citizen recognized by a large contingent of warm, personal friends.

EDWIN H. WINGATE represents an old pioneer family of Indiana, and was himself born in the State, in Indianapolis, Jan. 5, 1830. He is a son of Joseph and Nancy Wingate, who arrived here Jan. 10, 1826. The father was born in Shelby county, Ky., in 1790, and the family is an old American one, its history in this country running back several generations.

Joseph Wingate was one of a family of four children of whom he and his brother, John C. Wingate, came to Indianapolis. John C. Wingate settled in 1835 in Bainbridge, Putnam county, Ind. The others of the family were: Susan, who married a Mr. Ball, and went to Missouri and lived near Independence until her death, and Mrs. Fanny Welsh, who removed to Alabama. All the family have passed away.

Joseph Wingate and his wife brought with them to Indianapolis eight children, and two more were born after their arrival in that city. Mr. Wingate was a tanner and currier by trade but when he arrived in the city he engaged in making bricks, and was among the first in the city to take up that work. The brick used in the building of many of the earlier structures in the city were made by him. In time he erected a tannery on the corner of Maryland and Pennsylvania streets, where he carried on business until his death, in 1834. Edwin H. Wingate was but a lad of four years when his father died, yet he had a very vivid memory of him.

Joseph Wingate married Nancy Wilson, who was born in Caroline county, Va., and was about the same age as her husband. Her father, James Wilson, was for seven years a soldier in the Revolution. He came of Scotch parentage. He married a Pickett, a member of the famous Virginia family of that name, and emigrated with his family from Virginia to Kentucky, where he passed the remainder of his life.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Nancy (Wilson) Wingate married Joshua Black, and she died in 1851. Of the ten children born to Joseph Wingate and his wife three only survive: Joseph F., of Greene county, Ind.; Sarah G., of Indianapolis; and Edwin H. All but two of the family lived to mature years. James died when he was about sixteen years of age; Robert lived to be twenty-five; Elizabeth married Samuel Jennison, and left a family; Agnes married Rufus Jennison; William L. died in 1899 at the age of seventy-nine years; Eunice died in childhood.

Edwin H. Wingate has passed all his life in Indianapolis with the exception of some seven years. His general occupation has been that of a merchant, in which he has been very successful. He has a pleasant home at No. 1634 College avenue. Mr. Wingate remembers when Indianapolis was but a straggling hamlet, and he has been identified with its growth and development through many years.

Mr. Wingate married Priscilla Shackelford, a native of Kentucky, and they have three sons and one daughter, Edward, Charles, Alexander and Elizabeth, the latter at home. Mr. and Mrs. Wingate are members of the Methodist Church, and his parents were among the members and helpers of that Church in the early days, the father being a class-leader. Mr. Wingate is highly respected in Indianapolis, where his useful years have been crowned with many friendships.

ALBERT BONGE, one of the prosperous and successful farmers of Cumberland, Marion county, Ind., was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 16, 1833, son of Charles and Catharine (Waltz) Bonge. His grandfather, who died in Germany, was a distinguished military representative of the name, and was of royal blood.

Charles Bonge was born in Breslau, Germany, and educated himself for the legal profession in that country, but came to America in 1828, making his home in Zanesville, Ohio, where he went into the pork packing business. In Cincinnati he was engaged as a confectioner, and in 1834 he located on a farm in Hancock county, Ind. There he remained ten years, when he took charge of a hotel in Cumberland. In his latter years he carried on a general store in that place, where he died in 1880, at the age of eighty-two years. He and his wife, who was also a native of Germany, had a family of six children, five of whom are now living: Albert; Emma, wife of William Amsbury, of Tipton, Ind.; August, who died in 1863, while in the army, being one of the first to enlist under Col. "Lew" Wallace; Mary and Edward, both residents of Cumberland, as is Nannie, who is the widow of Adam Buchanan. The mother survived until 1899, dying at the age of eighty-seven. Both parents were members of the Lutheran Church. While still a lad Charles Bonge took part in the last campaign of the Napoleonic wars in Germany. For several years he held the position of postmaster and long served as a justice of the peace.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. Bonge came to this country and settled on a farm near Zanesville, Ohio, where he died at an advanced age, leaving a large family.

Albert Bonge lived in Hancock county until he was eleven years of age, when his parents moved into Marion county, and here he reached manhood. In this county he has had his home continuously since 1844. Reared on the farm, he attended the old subscription schools, and remaining at home until he was twenty-three years old he worked for ten dollars a month. When he had saved enough to buy a team and get a start as a farmer, he rented a place, and for twenty years cultivated leased land, and then he bought a farm of thirty-six acres. At the present time he owns 115 acres, part of which is in Warren township, and the rest in Buck Creek and Sugar Creek townships in Hancock county. All his life he has been a farmer, and has extensively engaged in sawmilling and in threshing, it being said of him that he threshed out more grain than any other man in Warren township.

Mr. Bonge was married Dec. 10, 1856, to Miss Hannah, a daughter of Isaac Ullery. She died in 1864, at the age of thirty-three years in the faith of the Baptist Church. Mr. Bonge was married (second) Feb. 22, 1866, to Miss Margaret Sandford. To this union were born one son and five daughters: Olive, who married Fred Hitzman, of Hancock county, and has four children, Albert, Katie, Eugene and Mary; Hannah, who married Frank Wiesa, of Warren township, and they have two sons, Arthur and Anthony; Carrie, who married Christ Redmeyer, of Cumberland, and has two children, Harry and Lottie; Frank, who died at the age of six years; Kate, who married John Longenburg, of Cumberland, and has two sons; and Lillie, who married George Carr, of Cumberland.

Mr. Bonge is a Republican, was supervisor several terms, and is at present superintendent of the gravel road.

JAMES M. HIGGS, formerly postmaster of Ingalls, Madison Co., Ind., and a veteran of the Civil war, was born in Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind., July 19, 1842, son of William M. and Amanda (Fuell) Higgs.

The Higgs family are of English stock, while the Fuells are of Kentucky stock of English descent. William Higgs, grandfather of James M., was a participant in the war of 1812, came to Indiana, settling near Brookville, about 1820, where he cleared up a farm of 160 acres, and became a reliable citizen. To him and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Bannister, were born these children: William M., John, Stephen, George, Frances, Elizabeth and Sarah. Of this family Stephen was a soldier in the Civil war in an Indian regiment, serving for three years, and participating in many battles.

William M. Higgs, son of William, was born near Brookville, in 1818. Some of the children of his father's family crossed the mountains from Virginia, traveling on foot through North Carolina and the picturesque Cumberland Gap, with a horse to carry such goods as were necessary. The party one night camped at the side of a great rock, called the Point of Rocks, which projects so much as to afford shelter. Many years later, James M. Higgs, when a soldier in the Union army, during the war, with his comrades found shelter under the same great rock. After marriage William M. Higgs settled on a part of the old Higgs homestead, and here he passed his active life, a typical pioneer and a highly respected citizen. A man of true worth, throughout his life he has maintained his integrity of character and is highly esteemed by all who know him. To him and his wife these children were born: James M., Emma Elizabeth, W—— Scott, and Edwin.

James M. Higgs received a common school education, and enlisted at Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind., July 30, 1862, as a private of Company G, 68th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged at Nashville, Tenn., July 30, 1865. At Munfordville, Ky., he was captured with 4,000 Union troops, and paroled on the field, being afterward exchanged at Indianapolis at Parole camp. In Tennessee, Mr. Higgs was in many skirmishes, being a participant in many battles, including: Recaca, Hoover's Gap, Dalton, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, several days' fighting at Missionary Ridge and North of Knoxville, Dandridge, Strawberry Plains, Decatur, Ala., and Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Higgs was never wounded or sick, and was always an active soldier, doing his full duty promptly and cheerfully, and for meritorious and efficient service was promoted to the rank of corporal. He took part in all of the battles, skirmishes and marches in which his regiment figured, and was detailed a number of times on foraging expeditions, and while thus engaged was in several skirmishes in which his regiment was not engaged.

After the close of the war, having faithfully served his country, Mr. Higgs returned to Indiana, and settled down to farming on the old homestead near Brookville. He remained at home until 1867, when he married near Brookville, Sarah Jane Warne, born there Oct. 16, 1846, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Wilson) Warne, the former a descendant of an old American family of Ohio and son of Elijah Warne, a pioneer of Franklin county, Ind. Elijah Warne was the father of the following children: Elijah, Jr., William, John, Sarah, Annie and Catherine. Of this family, Elijah, Jr., served in the Civil war, being a comrade of James M. Higgs, and received wounds at the battle of Chickamauga, from which he died. Mr. and Mrs. Higgs became the parents of the following children: Lettie May, born July 25, 1868; John W., April 10, 1870; and Manda Elizabeth, April 20, 1880.

After marriage James M. Higgs and his wife settled on land near Brookville, where they lived six years and then removed to Fayette county, settling near Everton, where they remained ten years. They then removed to Decatur county, and after residing on a farm in the latter place for three years located in Marion county, and settled near Indianapolis, where they stayed three years, Mr. Higgs being engaged in teaming. Mr. Higgs then located in Indianapolis for two years, three years near Tuscola, Douglas Co., Ill., and then returned to Indianapolis and re-engaged in teaming. Returning after a time to Madison county, he was there employed in the glass and zinc factories, and in 1899 settled in Ingalls, where his wife died Oct. 29, 1902. Mrs. Higgs was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a woman of a strong, upright character.

Mr. Higgs was appointed postmaster, July 1, 1901, during President McKinley's administration, proving an efficient, reliable and popular public official. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In political opinion he is a stanch Republican. Fraternally Mr. Higgs has associated himself with the Modern Woodmen of Ingalls, and is popular in his capacity as a member of this lodge as he was in his public life. His record is that of an honest, reliable and straightforward man, and he is one of Ingalls' good citizens.

SPENCER LAWSON, a survivor of the Civil war and an honored resident of Anderson, Ind., where he is engaged in cultivating his 134-acre farm, was born May 10, 1841, in East Tennessee, son of Allen and Susan (Marris) Lawson.

Allen Lawson was born in Hawkins county, Tenn., where he engaged in farming, and he died in 1847. He married Susan Marris, and to them were born: William, who served in the Indiana Home Guards and participated in the skirmishes with the Morgan raiders; Mariah; Alfred; Spencer; Andrew; George W., a member of an Illinois regiment, who served six months, and was in several skirmishes; Dalzel, who served in the 16th Ind. V. I., who was mortally wounded at the battle of Vicksburg, and died three weeks later; and James K. In December, 1857, Mrs. Lawson with her children (except the eldest who was already married) came to Rush county, Ind., where her brother Dalzel Marris, a pioneer, resided in comfortable circumstances. The six-weeks' journey was made in a large covered, four-wheeled Conestoga wagon—the ends turned up like a canoe—and at night the little party camped by the roadside, Mrs. Lawson often remaining awake all night to keep the camp-fires burning. Although but a medium-sized woman she was very strong, and was a woman of many resources. At times but three miles a day could be made, the trip being made in the dead of winter, and the hardships many. At Jeffersonville, Ind., she traded one horse with the keeper of the penitentiary for a better one, and with this animal completed her journey to her brother's home. Her second marriage occurred about one year later, to Washington Hart, a widower who had come to Indiana from Tennessee in 1859. Mrs. Hart died at Stony Creek, Oct. 8, 1892, in the faith of the Christian Church.

Spencer Lawson was sixteen years of age when he came to Indiana with his mother, and after arriving in this State lived at home on the farm, receiving practically no education except a very meager schooling in Tennessee. He enlisted in August, 1861, in Anderson, as a private in Company K, 8th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and he served until honorably discharged at Indianapolis Sept. 1, 1864. He took part in the battles of Black River, Mo., Sugar Creek, Ark., Pea Ridge, Ark., Cotton Plant, Champion Hills, Miss., Baton Rouge, La., Carrion Crow Bayou, La., and all of the skirmishes and marches of his regiment except the time when he was confined to the hospital. He was sick with lung fever at St. Louis and confined to the hospital there for two months, and at Cotton Plant was injured, this causing him to remain in several hospitals in the South. He was finally sent to the invalid camp at Indianapolis, where he was engaged at guarding prisoners. After eight months he rejoined his regiment and participated in the battle of Helena, Ark., and at Lexington, Ky., at which place he was poisoned by drinking water, from the effects of which he was in the hospital for several weeks.

On June 12, 1858, Mr. Lawson was married to Charlotte Hart, born in Hawkins county, Tenn., Oct. 6, 1841, daughter of George W. and Martha (Marris) Hart, and to this union were born five children: Amos H., Alice, Effie L., Rosella and John Wesley. Mr. Lawson is a member and was at one time trustee of the Christian Church, in which faith his wife died. He has always been a liberal supporter of the church in his neighborhood, which he assisted to build. In political matters he is a Republican, and he is connected with Major May Post, G. A. R., at Anderson. He has always been an industrious, hard-working man, and he has increased the size of his farm from the twenty-three acres he owned in 1886 to its present size, 134 acres, all well cultivated. Mr. Lawson is highly esteemed in Anderson as a good citizen, and he has a war record of which any man might well be proud.

George W. Hart was born in Hawkins county, Tenn., and there engaged in farming until his removal to Indiana in 1843. He located in Rush county, and after some years moved to Madison county. He died aged fifty-six years, in the faith of the Christian Church. He was a Democrat in politics, and an industrious, upright man. To him and his wife were born the following children: James, Charlotte, Hezekiah (who was a soldier in the Civil war), William, Amanda, Jane, Hulda and Hiram, all now deceased except Jane.

JOHN WAGNER. Warren township, Marion Co., Ind., is located in one of the most fertile portions of the State, and there are many of the most substantial men of the Commonwealth engaged in agricultural pursuits. John Wagner, who is a successful farmer of this township, is justly included in this class. He was born in Center county, Pa., son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Dietz) Wagner, natives of Germany, the former born in 1813. Marrying in the thirties, these worthy people left their native land for Pennsylvania, and located in Center county, that State, but later moved to Indiana. Coming to Marion county in 1845, Mr. Wagner bought 160 acres, and won an excellent farm from the wilderness. Only two children were born to himself and wife: Christina, who married Adam Kealing; and John. In politics the father was a staunch Democrat, but did not seek office. He lived an earnest, upright life and was a faithful member of the Christian Church.

In 1869 John Wagner married Catherine Ellenberger, daughter of John and Harriet (Puder) Ellenberger, of German descent, and very worthy people. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wagner: Annie E., Catherine E., Henrietta L., John H., Cora M. and Flora L. (twins), Fred W. and Bertha R. All are married except Fred W., who at present is residing in California.

Mr. Wagner owns 109 acres of good land, all under cultivation, except nine acres of timber land. He carries on general farming, feeding his products to his stock. He raises cattle and Poland-China hogs, which he sells to the home market. While he is a Democrat in national matters, locally he votes for the man he deems best fitted for the position. His private concerns have been too numerous to permit him to accept office. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F., at Irvington.

Naturally Mr. Wagner is proud of his farm, a portion of which was cleared by him, and he has it all well ditched. He is constantly adding improvements, and is much interested in the progress made in agricultural matters, keeping himself well posted. His success is already marked, and he is making a constant advancement in his work. In addition to his standing as a farmer, Mr. Wagner is popular socially as are his family, and the hospitable Wagner home is the scene of many pleasant gatherings.

REUBEN M. ALFONT, a soldier of the Civil war, and a respected citizen of Green township, Madison Co., Ind., was born on the farm in Green township, on which he still resides, July 22, 1843, son of William and Elizabeth (Freeburn) Alfont.

William Alfont, father of Reuben M., was born in 1700, in France, and accompanied his father when a young man to New York City. He was fairly educated for his day and was a carpenter by trade. His wife Elizabeth was of Scotch stock, and they settled in Philadelphia, where he engaged in the sawing of mahogany for an importer of that wood. The father of Mrs. Alfont was born in Scotland, and was a seafaring man in early years, serving in the British navy. He married Frances Davis, and in 1832 settled where the village of Alfont now stands. Here he bought 160 acres of land on which enough clearing had been done to build a log house, in which he lived one year, and then built a story and one-half frame house, which now stands in the village of Alfont. When the line for the Big Four Railroad was first surveyed, it ran directly through this house, but the surveyors made a slight change and thus saved it. Mr. Alfont cleared up his farm and became a substantial citizen. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Alfont were: Robert, John, William, Mary, Reuben M., Elizabeth, Annie and Jane. Three of these sons were in the Civil war, Robert, John and Reuben M. Robert was captain of Company G, 12th Ind. V. I., was in the three years' service and took part in many battles. John was in the 2nd Ind. Cav., three years' service, and died in the hospital at Evansville, Ind. William Alfont, father of this family, died at his home Dec. 9, 1852, survived many years by his widow, who passed away at Fortville, Oct. 5, 1891, aged eighty-six years. Both were members of the Christian Church.

Reuben M. Alfont was educated in the pioneer log schoolhouse, and grew up on his father's farm. On Aug. 6, 1862, he enlisted at Fortville, as a private in Company G, 12th Ind. V. I., and served until honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., June 20, 1865, and was mustered out in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Alfont participated in the battles of Richmond, Ky., Jackson, Miss., and siege of Vicksburg, and was with his regiment employed here in holding the Confederate General Johnston in check. He was also at Missionary Ridge and was in the Atlanta campaign at the period when the Union troops were under fire for five months. He was also with his regiment on the battlefield of Resaca, at Kenesaw Mountain, and was at Atlanta on June 22, 1864 (where General McPherson was killed on July 22, when the general assault was made on Atlanta), and he participated in the battle at Jonesboro. Mr. Alfont is proud to have taken part in that greatest march in history, Sherman's March to the Sea, and subsequently in the backward march to Washington, through the Carolinas. The 12th Indiana had the post of honor at the Grand Review, leading the march which was reviewed by General W. T. Sherman and other famous officers. He was wounded at no time, neither was he made a prisoner, nor confined in any hospital on account of sickness, but at all times was at his post of duty, and has a war record of which his descendants may well be proud.

After the war Mr. Alfont returned to his home in Madison county, where he took care of his widowed mother until her death. On Nov. 8, 1874, he was married to Catherine L. Wynn, at Muncie, born June 9, 1852, on her father's farm in Vernon township, Hancock county, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Likins) Wynn. Joseph Wynn was born May 5, 1809, in Franklin county, Pa., son of Thomas and Lucretia (Wood) Wynn. The Wynns were of Irish stock. Thomas Wynn was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and participated in the battle of Long Island. Afterward he became a farmer in Franklin county, Pa., where he reared a large family by three wives. Joseph Wynn, son of Thomas, was also a farmer, and he married Mary Likins, born April 26, 1822, in Beaver county, Pa., daughter of Richard and Catherine (Bason) Likins. Catherine Bason was a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Keysecker) Bason, of Virginia, but of Dutch stock. Richard Likins was born in Washington county, Pa., and was an iron molder at Beaver, Pa. The Bason children were: Catherine, Elizabeth, Thomas, Peter and Mary.

Joseph Wynn came to Madison county, Ind., when a boy of fourteen years and lived with his sister, Mrs. Polly Hiday. Mary Likins came with William Bannon, who had married her mother. She was twenty-one years old when she came, and was married Jan. 14, 1848, to Joseph Wynn. He was then a substantial farmer, settled in Vernon township, Hancock county. His first wife had been Miriam Jarrett, and their children were: David, Charles, Elizabeth Jane, Mary Ann and Margaret Catherine. The children of the second wife were: Catherine L., John Marion, Isaac Richard, George and Addie. Joseph Wynn was a very energetic, hard-working man, and from his beginning in the woods with sixty acres he acquired 309 acres which he improved. Here he died in 1891, aged eighty-five years. Two of his sons were in the Civil war: David, a member of Company G, 12th Indiana, and Charles W., in the 8th Indiana.

After his marriage Reuben M. Alfont settled on part of his father's farm, on which he had built a comfortable frame house and further improved. Mr. and Mrs. Alfont are members of the Christian Church, in which he has been a deacon for twelve years. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and he voted both times for General Grant for the Presidency. Mr. and Mrs. Alfont are the parents of the following children: Fanny, William, Minnie, Walter, James, Clarence, Ernest and Dallas. Fanny married Otis Huston, a farmer of Vernon township, and their children are: Henry, Leroy and William. William, eldest son of Mr. Alfont, enlisted as a private in the 18th Infantry, U. S. Regular army, was promoted for gallant and meritorious conduct after a service of eighteen months, and is now in the Philippines, having participated in and survived seventeen battles in those islands. Minnie, the second daughter of Mr. Alfont, married William Swope, and died aged twenty-four years, leaving no children. Mr. Alfont has always been a hard-working, industrious man, has reared an excellent family, and is universally respected in the locality which has been his home all of his life.

SYLVANUS BARNARD (deceased) was for many years an influential and public-spirited citizen of Clay township, Morgan county. He was born April 11, 1830, in Ohio, son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Davis) Barnard, natives of Massachusetts, who had a family of eight children, all of whom have passed away.

Frederick Barnard was one of the early settlers in Morgan county, Ind., coming hither from Ohio. He bought land near Monrovia, and there spent the rest of his life, dying when about seventy years of age.

Sylvanus Barnard was a young man when his parents came to Morgan county, and for some years he lived near Monrovia. He then moved to Centerton, and entered the employ of his brother, Dr. Benjamin Franklin Barnard, as an office boy. Later he started a little store in Rockingham, a half mile from the present site of Centerton, also purchasing a tract of land in the vicinity. During the day he attended to customers in the store, and spent a part of the night in clearing up his farm. Mr. Barnard became largely interested in real estate, and at the time of his death, owned 1,300 acres of finely improved land in Morgan county, on which were seven dwellings and all necessary barns, granaries, cribs, etc. Mr. Barnard established the noted Barnard Sanitarium in Martinsville, where the mineral waters of this locality were first used for medicinal purposes, attracting patrons from all over the country. During the Civil war, Mr. Barnard, although a Quaker in religious belief, was too loyal a citizen to remain at home. He entered a company of cavalry and served though the war as its captain. In politics he was identified with the Republican party. Mr. Barnard died June 14, 1901, aged seventy-one years.

On March 25, 1850, Mr. Barnard was married to Miss Elizabeth Sims, born Sept. 11, 1831, in Martinsville, on the corner where the Tarlton drug store now stands and where her father kept a general store in the early days, in an old log cabin. Her whole life has been passed in Clay township, and she has been a resident of Martinsville for the past thirty-three years. Mrs. Barnard's father, John Sims, died in 1841, aged fifty-eight years, and her mother, Anna (Winters) Sims, died in 1870, aged seventy-four years. She was a daughter of John Winters and wife, the former of whom was a native of Switzerland, and the latter a native of Pennsylvania, but was later a resident of New Jersey.

The children born to the late Sylvanus Barnard and wife were: Benjamin, who died at the age of one year; Miss Nora, who lives with her mother; Jennie, who married James McCormick of Brownstown, Ill., and has children, Sylvanus, Marietta and Theodore; Henry, who married Bertha Hazelrig, deceased, and is a farmer in Clay township; and Frederick, who resides with his mother and manages the farm and the Barnard Sanitarium. The last named had charge of the settlement of his father's large estate, and now capably looks after all his interests. The family is a very prominent one in Morgan county.

DR. JOHN R. MOORE, a highly esteemed physician and progressive, public-spirited citizen of Lapel, Ind., was born April 7, 1862, in Hancock county, Ind., son of Henry and Eliza Ann (Barrett) Moore.

Dr. Moore received his early education in Greenfield, Ind., and after graduating from the high school entered the dental department of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, St. Louis, Mo., graduating therefrom in 1887. The next year he graduated from the medical department of the same institution, and immediately began the practice of his profession at Lapel, Ind. He soon established a large and lucrative practice, and here he has continued to the present time. The Doctor is a member of the Madison County Medical Society, and the Indiana State Medical Society. He keeps in touch with all of the latest improvements and discoveries by his subscription to the leading medical journals of the country, is a close student and careful, steady-handed surgeon, and he has won the confidence and trust of the community. In political principle the Doctor is a Democrat.

Dr. Moore was married May 10, 1899, at Fishersburg, to Henrietta Cook, born at that place, daughter of Dr. Daniel and Elizabeth (Walker) Cook, and to this union have been born these children: Rollin O., Frederick and Anna.

The Moores are of old New England stock, and were prominent in the early settlement of Massachusetts and Vermont in Colonial days. Paul Moore, grandfather of Dr. John R., was a physician and surgeon in the War of 1812, and his father was a soldier in the war of the Revolution. Dr. Paul Moore came early to Hancock county, Ind., and settling near Smithfield, cleared up a farm from wild land, and there spent the rest of his life, dying about 1845. He was the father of nine children, Rollin J., Julian, Sydney, Henry, Mrs. Eliza Walker, Mrs. Helen Smith, Mrs. Jane Barrett, Mrs. Christine Gant (of Greenfield), and Mrs. Charlotte King (of Fort Bragg, California).

Henry Moore, father of Dr. John R., was born at Minerva, Essex Co., N. Y., in 1825, and with his parents removed to Huron county, Ohio, in 1832. He received a good education, chiefly under his father, a highly educated man. He came with his parents to Hancock county, Ind., in 1836. Here he became a prosperous farmer, at the time of his death, Jan. 2, 1902, owning 400 acres of land. He moved to Greenfield in 1869, and engaged in mercantile business, and then in banking, becoming a director in the Greenfield Banking Company. He was one of the good citizens of the county, and for many years a member of the Methodist Church, being one of the founders of Methodism in this section, and for a number of years class leader and also the holder of other offices. He retired from active business in 1885, and from that time until his death lived a quiet life. On Nov. 14, 1847, Mr. Moore married Eliza Ann Barrett, daughter of Joseph Barrett, and to them were born these children: Paul, of Shelton, Neb.; Oliver P., of Lapel, Ind.; Dr. John R., of Lapel; Mrs. Louise Johns, of Lapel; and Mrs. Lucinda Scott, of Washington.

The Barretts were of Scotch-Irish stock, the family originating in Scotland. The founders of the American branch came in Colonial days and settled in Virginia. They early migrated westward, and made a home in Hancock county, Ind. Mrs. Eliza Ann (Barrett) Moore was born in Cabell county, West Virginia, Oct. 27, 1826, daughter of Joseph Barrett, and was seven years of age when her parents came to Hancock county, Ind. She was the youngest of a large family of children. Her marriage to Henry Moore took place as above stated in 1847, and in 1850 she and her husband became members of the Methodist Church, to the doctrines of which they remained faithful all the rest of their lives. Mrs. Moore died Nov. 23, 1899, aged sixty-three years, and twenty-seven days.

WILLIAM M. CARSON, who is one of the leading merchants and substantial and esteemed citizens of Greenwood, was born in Johnson county, near this city, March 17, 1844, son of John L. and Elizabeth (Brewer) Carson, the former of whom was a native of Tennessee, and the latter of Kentucky.

James E. Carson, the paternal grandfather of William M., was a native of Virginia and reared a large family. In 1830 he removed with his family to Johnson county, Indiana, taking up Government land, in Pleasant township, and there his life was spent in clearing his farm and improving it, until his death, at the age of sixty years. The maternal grandfather, Abram V. Brewer, came to Indiana from Kentucky, when in middle life, and settled on the edge of Greenwood, where he passed the balance of his life, clearing his property and rearing his large family.

John L. Carson, the father of William M., came to Indiana, with his parents, when but fifteen years old, assisting his father and also entered Government land in Pleasant township. When he married, he was obliged first to cut out a place in the forest then covering the land, where he could build his log cabin, and there he reared his two children, William M. being the only survivor. Mrs. Carson died in Pleasant township, after a life of industry, March 22, 1901, aged seventy-eight years, Mr. Carson's death occurring in 1889, at the age of seventy-four years. They had been pioneers in their youth and witnessed wonderful changes in the many years vouchsafed them. Both were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

William M. Carson was reared on the farm and remained there until the death of his father, in 1889, removing then to Greenwood and assuming the care of his mother. Soon after leaving the farm, he embarked in the furniture business and has successfully followed the same ever since. His education was obtained in the district schools, and through life he has had a good citizen's interest in them and has worked for their advancement. The furniture business so ably conducted by Mr. Carson is one of the leading lines of trade in the city, his large stock including furniture of all grades, stoves, pictures and frames, wall paper, window shades, carpets and undertakers' goods. His long experience has taught him the demands of the trade, and he notes among his customers, some of the most critical and fastidious buyers in the county. Mr. Carson still owns his father's old farm of eighty acres, and another, containing 102 acres, in the same locality. His farming operations are carried on by others, as his large business interests in Greenwood require his attention. He is reckoned one of the substantial men of the county and served as town treasurer for some years, and also as treasurer for the school board. For three years he served on the board and was active in the promotion of needed reforms.

On Sept. 8, 1864, Mr. Carson was married (first) to Miss Harriet H. Wheatcraft, daughter of Malachi and Sophia (Bradford) Wheatcraft, and two children were born to this union, namely: Minnie C., who married Thomas E. Kelly, has one son, William E., and lives on the home farm, east of Greenwood; and Albert L., who is a member of the business firm known as the Greenwood Lumber Company and Planing Mill, and who married Nora Todd, daughter of Isaac M. and Rachel (Brewer) Todd. Mrs. Harriet Carson died April 16, 1881, aged thirty-six years. She was a devoted and active member of the Presbyterian Church. On May 22, 1882, Mr. Carson was married (second) to Miss Mary E. Peek, daughter of Jackson and Susanna (Johnson) Peek, and sister of Grafton Johnson, Sr., of Johnson county, and one son has been born to them, Emerson, who is engaged as a partner in the store with his father. Mr. and Mrs. Carson are leading members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder and for sixteen years was Sunday-school superintendent.

In politics Mr. Carson is a Republican. He is one of the directors and the treasurer of the Greenwood Building and Loan Association. As a business man, Mr. Carson has combined the thrift of his Scotch ancestors with the industry of his Dutch ancestors and has prospered in an honorable and legitimate way, and enjoys universal respect and esteem.

MRS. ANN G. WILSON. The venerable lady whose name opens this record, is one of the most highly esteemed residents of Indianapolis, occupying a pleasant home at No. 526 South Senate avenue. She belongs to one of the honored old pioneer families of this section, and was born Feb. 29, 1820, at Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of Joseph and Isabella (Burton) Greer.

Both parents of Mrs. Wilson were born in Ireland, the father in County Armagh and the mother in County Tyrone. Joseph Greer came to America in early manhood and landed at Philadelphia. There he married and followed his trade of linen manufacturing, subsequently moving to Lancaster, and from there to Pittsburg and later to Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1822 he came to the little one-year old village of Indianapolis, determining to throw in his lot with the other pioneers. The trip hither had been one of great difficulty on account of the poor condition of the only available roads and high water in the unbridged streams. He found a log house hamlet, little more, and although the capital had been removed from Corydon to Indianapolis the outlook was not very promising for business, but he was optimistic and determined to have faith in the future of the town. At the first sale of lots he bought a block of ground on what was then South Mississippi street, but is now South Senate street, and on this same tract of land his daughter, Mrs. Wilson, resides.

Joseph Greer next purchased a double log house on Washington street, which he moved to the site he had bought, a great undertaking, as he had to cut a road through the timber to haul his log house to his ground. He cut down trees and made boards with which he covered the house, making it presentable and comfortable. At that time Washington street, now a handsome thoroughfare, was little less than a mud hole where traffic was continually impeded on account of its condition. Joseph

Greer paid $1.10 an acre for his land, and considered that a high price. In his native land he had been thoroughly instructed in the manufacture of woolen and linen goods, and after he settled at Indianapolis he opened a factory and wove woolen, cotton and linen fabrics, and became a successful and substantial citizen. In politics he was a Democrat and fraternally he was a Mason. For many years he was a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. His death took place in 1831.

Joseph Greer married Isabella Burton, daughter of Rev. Burton, who was a man of prominence and wealth in County Tyrone, Ireland. He was a liberal supporter of the Episcopal Church. His large family became scattered, and as the older ones had come to America, his wife with her twin daughters, Jean and Isabella, came also to this country in the hope of finding them. This hope was not realized, but they never returned to the old homestead, which is still in the possession of the family.

The children of Joseph Greer and wife were three in number, John, James and Ann G. John became an active business man, engaging in contracting and building, and having one of the first brick yards in Indianapolis, he made a part of the brick used in the construction of the old State House at Indianapolis and was concerned with other substantial citizens in many of the early enterprises of this city. He filled public offices at various times, and for a period was county commissioner. James Greer never married but became one of the capitalists of Indianapolis through wise investments in real estate.

On April 23, 1840, Ann G. Greer was married to Charles G. Wilson, who was born at Brookville, Ind., in 1815, before the admission of Indiana as a State. He was a son of John M. Wilson, and his grandfather was Rev. William Wilson, a Baptist preacher, who settled in Franklin county, Ind., and in 1792 bought a farm near Brookville. He was well known all over the Territory of Indiana, as he traveled back and forth as a pioneer preacher. John M. Wilson moved from Brookville to Connersville, and there Charles G. grew to manhood. John M. Wilson served as high sheriff of Fayette county. The children born to him and his wife, who was a daughter of John Vincent, of Hampshire county, Va., were three in number: Minerva, Charles G. and Alfred V. The daughter married James Calfee. Alfred V. Wilson was a jeweler by trade, and he settled at St. Louis, whence he went as a soldier in the Mexican War, and served with Donovan's expedition. He returned to St. Louis in 1849, went then to California, later was appointed on an Indian commission in the Northwest and he died at Walla Walla, Wash. John Vincent was born in England, and family tradition asserts that his father was a member of the English nobility. In boyhood John was kidnapped and brought to America where he was sold to a tailor in Virginia, and where he completed his apprenticeship. Later he was a soldier under Gen. Washington in some of the Indian wars, served through the Revolution, and after its close settled at Knoxville, Tenn. There he worked at his trade, and thus probably came into acquaintance with the family of Andrew Johnson, later President of the United States, a member of which he married. He came to the Territory of Indiana and subsequently acquired lands in Franklin county which are still held by his descendants.

John M. Wilson was a man of worth. For a long time he taught school and was interested in the educational advancement of the community. He platted the town of Marion, Franklin Co., Ind., and left many marks of his enterprise and public spirit.

To Charles G. Wilson and wife were born the following children: (1) Melissa, born in November, 1841, married Hugh J. Drummond a business man of Indianapolis and prominent Mason, and they had one son, James G., who has followed in his father's foot-steps; he married Eleanor Jameson (a grand niece of Dr. P. H. Jameson), and they have three children, Hugh J., Margaret and Helen. Mrs. Drummond is a member of the Daughters of the Revolution. (2) John McCarty married Martha Starr daughter of John C. and Elizabeth (Ward) Starr, of an old North Carolina family, and they have one son, Alfred V., now in the insurance business in Indianapolis. They live at No. 605 Woodruff Place, West Drive. (3) Charles G. (4) Gabriella. (5) Anna M. (6) James G. (7) Helen G. (8) Beauty. (9) Randolph. Mrs. Wilson has survived almost all of her children. She was, with her husband, a worthy member of the old Wesley Chapel. Mrs. Wilson attended the first Sabbath-school in Indianapolis, the gathering being convened in Caleb Scudder's cabinetmaking shop. For many years she was very active in both school and church, and was a leader in many of the charitable organizations of the infant city. Although the weight of years has settled on her, her memory is remarkable and she recalls in a most interesting way events of long ago.

BART SMITH, a descendant of a pioneer family of Indiana, a survivor of the Civil war and a most highly esteemed resident of Brooklyn, Ind., was born Feb. 5, 1837, in Owen county, Ind., son of Marcus and Malinda (Pearson) Smith, the former of whom was born in Indiana, and the latter in Bourbon county, Kentucky.

Samuel Smith, grandfather of Bart, was of Virginia, of English extraction. He removed to Ohio, and some years afterward came on horseback to Indiana. He entered a large tract of land near Gosport in Morgan county, and then returned to his Ohio home to make preparations for the removal. Before he could start for his new home, he died, leaving a widow and family. She carried out his plans, brought her family to Indiana in 1824, improved her land, bought a mill site and erected a grist mill, having good water power. This mill was a great convenience to the settlers for miles around, and the Smith family became widely known. This very capable business woman and estimable mother died in 1863. In Ohio her husband had been prominent in public life, and was treasurer of Muskingum county, a leading business man and a very influential member of the Whig party. The children of Samuel Smith and wife were: John, who died in this county; Lydia, who married Rev. J. Brown, a minister of the Christian Church; Samuel and Ira, who both died in Morgan county; Marcus, father of Bart; and James, who died in this county.

Marcus Smith was nine years old when his widowed mother moved to Owen county, and his youth and young manhood were spent in assisting her in managing and improving the homestead. He also worked about the mill, and remained at home until his marriage. He then settled on a place of his own. This was a heavily timbered tract and required hard work and much perseverance to place under cultivation. During his younger years he was prominent in all the events of his neighborhood, and as he was of strong frame and robust constitution, he was always a welcomed helper at the log rollings and cabin buildings which served to supply interest in the lonely localities. He made many trips to New Orleans on flat boats, marketing the country produce.

When he married he built a log cabin on his land, but could not obtain any lumber for a floor, and he and his bride began house-keeping with an earthen floor and a blanket hung over the door opening. He later hewed out puncheons for a floor and shaved logs for a door and thus made the little home snug and comfortable. Although game was plentiful, Mr. Smith considered his time better employed in cultivating his land than in hunting, but his brother John was a great sportsman, and he kept the family larder filled with bear and venison. Mr. Smith was a man of social instincts and kind manner, and for a number of years was a valued local preacher in the Christian Church. He was careful and honorable in all business transactions, and at the time of his death owed but fifty cents. His heirs assembled and settled up his estate without the assistance of any legal advice.

Mrs. Malinda (Pearson) Smith died in 1896. She was a daughter of Bartholomew Pearson, of Kentucky, who was a pioneer in Indiana. He served with General Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe, and later settled near Gosport, Ind., where he spent his declining years. He died at Paragon. His father, Shadrach Pearson, was of English extraction and served seven years in the Revolutionary war. At its close he settled in Virginia, was a frontiersman in Kentucky and became a man of affairs and wealth in his State. He was one of three sons born at one birth, all of whom grew into useful manhood. Their father gave them the Biblical names of Shadrach, Meschah and Abednego. The children of Bartholomew Pearson were: Malinda, mother of our subject; Milton, who died in Illinois; George, who died in Morgan county; Jane, Mrs. Peter Johnson; Mrs. Nancy Murphy; John, who died in Paragon; Sarah, Mrs. John Welch; and Albert, who died in the Cherokee Nation. All were members of the Christian Church. The children born to Marcus Smith and wife were: Bart; Samuel, a retired farmer at Spencer; Janet, Mrs. R. Percy; Presley, a prominent educator, a broad-minded citizen, and nominated by the Republican party for Joint Representative of Marion and Morgan counties; and Jesse, a teacher and farmer.

Bart Smith was born and reared in Owen county, and he remained at home, attending the local schools until the age of eighteen, when he went to Decatur, Ill., and for a time conducted a store and butcher shop. Later he engaged by the month in breaking prairie land, and remained there three years, going then to Lafayette, Ind., where he enlisted for service in the Civil war. With Capt. Cox, of Lafayette, he enlisted in the 10th Indiana Battery for three years and was consigned to the command of General Thomas. Mr. Smith served four years, re-enlisting at the close of his first term, at Chattanooga, Tenn., in the same battery, with which he continued until the close of the war. He participated in many of the most serious battles of the war, the first one being Shiloh; then Stone River; three days at Chickamauga; Lookout Mountain; Missionary Ridge; Resaca; Buzzard's Roost; Burnt Hickory; Big Shanty; Marietta; Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta. From there General Thomas took his troops to Franklin, Ky., and then to Nashville, where our subject was, at the time of Lee's surrender, suffering in a hospital with a cannon wound in the hip. He was detained in the hospital two months. At Chattanooga forty-two of his regiment were detailed to the 5th Indiana Battery, to go through the Georgia campaign; the remainder of the 10th Battery was put on a boat to patrol the Tennessee River. He remained there until he was mustered out, when he returned to Indianapolis and received his honorable discharge, in April, 1865. For several years after his return home he did little except trying to regain his health, but this he has never fully recovered. He was a true and loyal soldier, one who was always at his post, and he not only richly deserves the small pension his Government allows him, but the veneration and esteem of his fellow-citizens.

Before he enlisted, in 1861, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Mary J. Hancock, born in 1841, in Kentucky, daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Gilpin) Hancock, natives of Kentucky, who came to Indiana in 1846. Mr. Hancock is one of the much esteemed residents of Spencer, but his wife died in 1894. He is a Methodist. The children of Mr. Hancock were: Charles, a farmer; Mary J.; Maston, a farmer; Zachariah, a soldier, who received a head wound at Gettysburg, and on recovering, re-enlisted and lost his young life at Antietam; and Lewis and William, farmers. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bart Smith were: Odin, clerk of the Circuit Court of Morgan county, Ind.; Beatrice, Mrs. L. McNeff; Miss Bertha, who is deputy clerk of Morgan county; Rosa, who died aged eighteen years; and Lora H., managing the old homestead farm. Mrs. Smith is a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Smith's first employment after recovering from the hardships of his army life, was a short season on the railroad. Then he settled to farming near Paragon, remaining there eight years, and at the end of that time sold to advantage and purchased another farm near Hall, and on this farm he continued for thirteen years, improving and putting it into first-class shape. He was then elected sheriff, and removing to Martinsville served two terms in the office. During this time he sold the farm, but at the expiration of his official life, bought the one he now occupies, located two miles south of Brooklyn in the Whitelick Valley. It is a very desirable farm, well improved and productive. Mr. Smith carries on general farming and some stockraising, living an active and useful life, universally respected.

In politics he is an earnest Republican and very influential in his party. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic bodies, and to Emigration Post, Grand Army of the Republic.

HARVEY A. KIRK. One of the thrifty and representative farmers and successful stockraisers of Clay township, Morgan county, whose fine farm is located in Section 13, is Harvey A. Kirk, who was born Sept. 27, 1857, in Jefferson township, Morgan county, Indiana.

William Kirk, grandfather of Harvey A., came from Shelby to Morgan county, when a boy. There he was a farmer in Gregg township. Twice married, he reared a large family, and he died on his farm near Hall, Morgan county.

Daniel and Martha Ellen (Dow) Kirk, parents of Harvey A., were both natives of Indiana, the father of Shelby county and the mother of Morgan county. A family of thirteen children was born to them, the eight survivors being: Ella Mary, the wife of U. M. Hinson, of Jefferson township; Charles H., of Warren county, Iowa; Harvey A.; Mary E., wife of John Daily, of Monroe township; James E., of Jefferson township; Daniel P., of Washington township; Nathan F., of Jefferson township; and Benjamin A., of Monroe township. The father of this family spent his life in Morgan county, where he became a prominent farmer and landowner, possessing about 600 acres of land in Jefferson township. His death occurred there in 1901, when aged seventy-three years, and his wife passed away in 1891. Both parents were members of the Christian Church, in which the father was an elder. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Kirk, Nathan Dow, was a pioneer in Morgan county, owned land in Jefferson township, and there he died in middle life.

Harvey A. Kirk is a well known citizen of Morgan county, where he has spent his life. He was reared on the farm in Jefferson township, and was educated in the district schools. His interests have always been centered in agriculture, and he has been very successful in all its branches. Married at the age of twenty-one, for the succeeding ten years he operated rented land, and then purchased the 230 acres which constitute his present valuable and attractive home. Here Mr. Kirk has a handsome, commodious residence and other buildings necessary for the conducting of large operations, his improvements equalling any in the locality.

On April 18, 1878, Mr. Kirk married Miss Maggie Johnston, daughter of William and Elizabeth (White) Johnston, and twelve children were born to this union, namely: Charles, Mattie and Hattie (twins), Harry, James, Myrtle, Ida, Alice, Clarence, Clara, and two who died in infancy. In politics Mr. Kirk is a Republican. Both he and his wife belong to the Christian Church, in which he is a deacon, at Martinsville.

Mrs. Kirk's parents came from South Carolina to Indiana about 1840, and settled in Monroe county, where the father died aged about sixty-five years. The mother resided at Bloomington until her death, Sept. 3, 1903, at the age of eighty years. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston had four children: Mrs. Kirk; Cassie, wife of C. A. Junkin, of Monroe county; Alice, widow of Frank Marlin, of Bloomington; and Ida, who married Charles Brown, of Monroe county, and died April 5, 1904.

REV. EDWARD P. JEWETT, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mooresville, Ind., and a minister widely known for his effective fighting of evil and immorality, was born at Hagerstown, Wayne county, Ind., July 18, 1857, son of Parker and Jane (Bowen) Jewett, the former of whom was a native of Milford, N. H., and the latter of Lebanon, Ohio.

The paternal grandfather of Rev. Mr. Jewett was born in New Hampshire, and died in his native State. His trade was that of a nail maker, which he followed to old age. His three sons were Joshua, Nathan and Parker, the first named of whom, died in Massachusetts when sixty years of age; Nathan died in New Hampshire, at the age of eighty-one years; and Parker came to the West, in pioneer spirit, stopping first in Cincinnati, Ohio, and then proceeding into Indiana and entering Government land in Randolph county. Joseph Bowen, the maternal grandfather, was a native of Delaware, and came to Indiana, in 1822, entering land in Wayne county, but later moved to Lebanon, Ohio. Mr. Bowen was a pioneer Methodist preacher, one who blazed the path for others to follow. For many years he followed the self-denying life of an itinerant preacher, traveling all over the settled portions of Indiana. His worthy example was followed by his three sons, two becoming itinerants, like him, and the other a local preacher. Grandfather Bowen died at the age of eighty-four years, leaving seven children. His ancestry was Scotch, and he possessed all of the admirable traits of his nation.

It was about 1835 that Parker Jewett settled at Hagerstown, Ind., opening up a blacksmith shop. His trade was learned in New York City, and he had followed it in Cincinnati, and he continued to work at it until within five years of his death, which occurred April 12, 1873, when he was aged sixty-four years. The mother was born in 1820, and died Feb. 10, 1907, at the age of eighty-seven. In girlhood she united with the Methodist Church, but after marriage, with her husband, adopted the tenets of the Presbyterian Church, believing that it were better to have the family undivided. After his decease she returned to the religious faith of her youth, and, now, with her children, enjoys and supports the church of her choice. Mr. Jewett was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a man of rectitude and high moral character. The children born to them consisted of two sons and one daughter, two of this family now living, namely: Rev. Edward P.; and Alice, who married Lorenzo D. Farlow, and resides five miles north of Hagerstown, in Wayne county.

The Rev. Mr. Jewett, until the age of sixteen lived in Wayne county where he attended the common schools and graduated from the high school. In order to learn the trade of marble cutter, he went to Connersville, but returned to Hagerstown to pursue a higher course of study for a time. The young marble-cutter then went to Shelbyville and followed his trade, attaining great proficiency, and entering into partnership with J. H. Enos continued until 1881, when his partner dropped out and he operated the shop alone, having the largest establishment in his line in Shelbyville. His skill became great and he enjoyed much more than a local reputation.

All this time, however, from the age of eleven years, when he united with the church, through school and business success, the Rev. Mr. Jewett was conscious of a conviction which urged him to give up everything and enter the ministry. At length, in 1891, in Shelbyville, this voice could no longer be stilled, and in obedience, he sold his business at a sacrifice, put aside his promising worldly prospects, and in the fall of that year, joined the conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, although he had been given a preacher's license three years prior to this, having been class leader in the Shelbyville church for a long time. The license had been given him unexpectedly, as an exhorter, later as preacher, and thus, in a way, he was prepared for a wider experience in the conference. His first charge was at Paris, Ind., where he remained for two years, this pastorate being followed by two years at Kent, three years at Morristown, three years at Milroy, and in the fall of 1901 he was appointed to the church at Greenwood. In 1903 he went to Indianapolis, and in 1905 came to Mooresville. His labors have met with remarkable success; during his first winter, he was gratified to have thirty-four converts under his preaching.

On Oct. 18, 1882, Rev. Mr. Jewett was united in marriage with Miss Alma Aten, born in 1859, daughter of Abram and Eliza (Thompson) Aten, of Johnson county, where they still reside. Four children have been born to this union, namely: Charles W., Chester A., Mary A. and Russell P. In fraternal association, our subject is a Master Mason, and a member of Greenwood Lodge of Odd Fellows. In politics he has always taken an intelligent part and cast his first Presidential vote for Garfield, supporting the Republican candidates ever since. The Rev. Mr. Jewett is a close student, a tireless worker, a promoter and encourager of all worthy enterprises, and a powerful presenter of the truths of Christianity.

AARON ROSE, one of the well known and universally esteemed citizens of Washington township, Morgan county, who for many years was identified with the business and agricultural interests of this locality, was born May 29, 1829, in Sussex county, N. J., son of Andrew Dunham and Susan (Dickerson) Rose, both natives of New Jersey.

Andrew Dunham Rose, the father, was a son of Andrew Rose, who lived and died in New Jersey. He came West in 1838, and settled for a time in Blountsville, Henry county, Ind., but came to Martinsville in 1839. He bought land one mile north of the city, and continued to reside in Washington township the remainder of his life, occupying several different farms. Mr. Rose held the office of county commissioner at one time, and was for a long period a justice of the peace. His death occurred in 1880, when he was aged seventy-six years. His first wife Susan (Dickerson) Rose, died in 1856, from the effects of a runaway accident. Both parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the three children born to this marriage but one survives, Anson Hastings, of Minneapolis, Minn. The second marriage of Andrew D. Rose was to Mrs. Hannah (Hart) Coleman, a native of Sussex county, N. J., who survived until 1894.

Aaron Rose was nine years old when he accompanied his parents to Indiana. His education was commenced in the schools of Morgan county, and completed at Asbury, now De Pauw University. Mr. Rose then engaged as a salesman with the firm of Frink & Alsip, in Martinsville, with whom he continued for two years. In 1850 he made a trip to California, and during his three years residence there engaged in mining and dairying. In 1853 he returned to Martinsville, where he embarked in a general mercantile business, but suffered a fire loss which, on account of having had no insurance, rendered him almost penniless. Mr. Rose then turned his attention to farming, leasing his father's home farm north of the city, and this continued to be his home until April, 1904, when the death of his wife and foster daughter caused him to go to the home of his daughter to live. Mr. Rose's estate now owns this fine property, consisting of 219 acres. The improvements are valuable, and this is one of the finest farms in the vicinity of Martinsville.

On April 3, 1853, Mr. Rose married Mrs. Elvira Sophia Johnson, daughter of Jacob and Sophia (Walters) Welty, and to them were born nine sons and three daughters, the seven survivors being: Covosso Wharton, who is engaged in a grocery business at Martinsville, married Belle Fancher, and has one child, Francis Farragut; Charles Dunham, who is professor of mathematics in Wesleyan University, University Place, near Lincoln, Neb., married Cora Butler, and has children, Elizabeth, Walter Butler and Julia; Wilbur Erastus, a member of the dry goods firm of Branch & Rose, Muncie, Ind., and property owner in Martinsville, married Louise Taylor; Hannah Sophia, married F. T. Singleton, publisher of the Martinsville Republican and Daily Reporter, and has two children, Rose and Mary; Jacob Walter, manager of the American Beet Sugar Company's factory at Grand Island, Neb., married Mabel Shirley; Anson Daniel, a lawyer, married Linna Stone, and they have one child, Margaret; and Aaron Gilbert, in the insurance and real estate business, also mail clerk in the Martinsville post-office, married Bertha May Johnson, of Chicago, and they have three children, Bertha, Robert and Louise.

Mrs. Rose was a native of Pennsylvania and one of a family of thirteen children. Her death took place Aug. 3, 1902, at the age of seventy-four years. She was a devout Christian, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a zealous worker in the missionary societies and an earnest promoter of the principles of the W. C. T. U. After the death of Mrs. Rose, Mr. Rose had the devoted services of Miss Mary Ann Smith, as housekeeper. She was reared by Mr. and Mrs. Rose from childhood, and in his advanced years was able, by her tender care, to return his former kindness, and she was much appreciated by him and his children, who all have homes of their own. Miss Smith died April 16, 1904. Mr. Rose was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and served as trustee, class-leader, steward and Sunday-school superintendent. For sixty-eight years he was an honored resident of Washington township, and he died Feb. 23, 1908.

JAMES W. MARTIN, who died April 6, 1902, was the oldest resident pioneer in Morgan county who was a native of Indiana. He was born Jan. 1, 1811, in Harrison county, and was reared among pioneer surroundings.

John Martin, father of James W., was born in Virginia of Welsh descent, and the mother, Mary (Wright) was a native of Kentucky, where they were married. She was a daughter of Thomas Wright, who was of Irish descent, and a large planter and slave owner in Kentucky where his life was spent. His children were: William, Anna, Andrew, Elizabeth and Mary. John Martin removed from Virginia to Kentucky at an early day. In 1809, after his marriage, he came to Indiana, then a Territory, and located on an eighty-acre tract of land which he entered as soon as it was put upon the market. At this time all this fertile, arable land was a wilderness, the woods filled with wild animals and Indians, with no communication with the outside world except by horseback along blazed trails. Like many another pioneer of those days, he became inured to hardship. He sold this tract after improving it, and about 1820 penetrated farther into the wilderness, entering a tract of eighty acres in Brown township, Morgan county. Here he built a log cabin, settled his family, and began and continued the improvement of his land until it became a fine, productive farm. He engaged later in stockraising, and grew into one of the solid, substantial men of his locality. He died in this home at a good old age, respected by all who knew him. Originally a Whig, in 1856 he went with the Democratic party, but never aspired to office, desiring only to be known for what he was, a plain, honest farmer who valued honor and integrity beyond the emoluments of political place. He served his country in the war of 1812. For many years he was a leading member of the M. E. Church, a class leader and a liberal contributor to its support. With his estimable wife, he was one of the first promoters of Methodism in the neighborhood, and his home was long the haven of the pioneer preacher, and many early meetings for prayer and praise were held in his cabin. Mrs. Mary (Wright) Martin was thrice married. By her first husband, whose name was McNeff, she had three children, Nancy, Thomas and William. Her second marriage was to a man named Evans and two children were born to this union, Samuel and David. To her marriage with Mr. Martin were born four children, viz.: James W.; Willis, born March 21, 1812, a farmer in Iowa; Wesley, of Iowa, now deceased; and Jane, Mrs. W. Swearingen, also now deceased. The mother died Aug. 3, 1842, and Mr. Martin married (second) Widow Isabel Glascock, a sister of William Parks, and a member of a prominent county family. One child was born to this marriage, Mary, Mrs. McNeff, who resides in Clay township, Morgan county.

James W. Martin was nine years old when his father moved to Morgan county and he spent his life within its borders, becoming identified with its growth and wonderful development along agricultural and moral lines. His education was obtained in the primitive log school house of pioneer days, when greased paper took the place of glass in the windows, puncheons with pegs in served for seats and a very few books were made to serve for a large number of children. Mr. Martin recalled very clearly the days when it was no unusual event to secure a fawn on his present finely developed farm, game of all kinds being plentiful. Mr. Martin gained almost as much fame as Davy Crockett in his neighborhood, as a successful "coon" hunter, and he remembered the enthusiasm with which he and his associates hunted these sly animals. He assisted his father in the clearing and cultivation of the land and made himself very useful to other settlers in helping to build cabins and roll logs. In these days the young people of the land might not be satisfied with the sports which were enjoyed by the youths of Mr. Martin's early life, but they generally were of an innocent kind, and brought health and high spirits along with relaxation.

After his marriage at the age of twenty-two, he settled on land his father had entered in his name, and began domestic life in the woods. He soon managed to get his land opened to cultivation and his farm has ever since been self-sustaining. When he began to have a surplus, he hauled his wheat to Madison where he was paid fifty cents a bushel for it. Here he secured his supplies, one large item being salt, for which he was charged $8 a barrel. The trip consumed eight days, but it was regarded as satisfactory as it did not require as long a time as it did for those farther from market. At that time the beautiful city of Indianapolis was but a village, and no trading of any account could be done there. Its houses were built of buckeye logs and many of these presented a strange appearance, with sprouts growing from the sides of the cabins. The first newspaper published in that city fell into Mr. Martin's hands, a small sheet which, however, showed enterprise and progressiveness.

Mr. Martin was something of a politician for a great many years, and he cast his first vote for Andrew Jackson, some time before he attained his majority. In 1832 he had the satisfaction of repeating it, the ballot box in Clay township being a man's hat, which easily held all the votes cast. He was identified with the Democratic party ever after, taking an interest in public affairs but never wishing to hold office. Mr. Martin was a very successful farmer and stockraiser, and after the Rebellion he gave some attention to the handling of poultry. In securing plenty for shipment he made a trip to Iowa and spent about six months buying. He operated very successfully, and sold turkeys in New Orleans as high as $48 a dozen.

On Jan. 8, 1833, Mr. Martin married Miss Mary A. Harper, born in 1812, in Kentucky, whose family came to Hendricks county, Ind., at a very early day, later removing to Missouri, where the father died. His three children were: Lucinda, Jemima and Mary A. The latter was a faithful and loving companion for her husband for sixty-five years. She passed away March 22, 1898, aged eighty-seven years. With her husband she worshipped for many years in the Methodist Church. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Martin were: John W., who resides on the old homestead, and who cared for his aged father as long as the latter lived, who has never married; Mrs. Sarelda Griggs, who died in 1857; Jane, Mrs. C. F. Rooker, deceased; William, a prominent farmer in this township; George, who died in 1857; Mary, who married Jesse Rozier, who served in the Civil war, and after his death married John Burge, of Madison township; Lambertine, of Hendricks county; and Sarah, who died single.

Although Mr. Martin reached the age of ninety-one years and three months his mind was as clear as in youth and his many vivid recollections of early days would make a very interesting history. He was most highly esteemed in his locality and was affectionately known as "Uncle Jimmy" far and near. In every sense his life had been a success and his old age was cheered by the affection of dutiful children. His son, John W. Martin, inherited the old homestead, where he and his father had lived so long. He has thirty acres of the old farm. A nephew, Alonzo Rooker, and wife keep house for him. Alonzo Rooker was born in Madison township, son of Fletcher Rooker and Jane Martin. On July 3, 1900, he was married to a daughter of William and Emma (Wright) Martin. Mrs. Rooker is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Rooker have five children, John Millard, Agnes Irene, Gladys L., Emma Marie and William Fletcher.

REUBEN S. ALDRICH, deceased, a very prominent citizen of Waverly, Ind., and a worthy descendant of a well known pioneer family of the State, was born Oct. 9,* 1824, in Decatur county, Ind. He was reared among the pioneers and assisted in the clearing of the land, and was educated in such schools as the locality then afforded. His parents were Barlow, Jr., and Pheba (Smith) Aldrich, the former a native of Massachusetts and the latter of Adams county, Ohio. The family is of English ancestry.

Barlow Aldrich, Sr., grandfather of Reuben S., was a native of New York, a farmer by occupation. About 1814 he moved to the Territory of Indiana and settled in Decatur county, where he entered land and improved a fine farm from the wilderness. He remained there until 1833, and then removed to Morgan county and entered some valley land along the rich bottoms of the White River. Six years later he died at this home, leaving a large estate and a family of children. He was a Whig in his political faith, but was noted for his tolerance of the opinions of others, his kind neighborliness and his public spirit. His agricultural life was a success as he was a man of practical method, and he was well and widely known in his locality. His death in 1839, removed one of the pillars of Methodism. His children were: Mark, Luke and Esbin, who all three died in Posey county, Ind.; Paris, who died in Decatur county; Barlow, Jr., father of our subject; Hannah, Mrs. D. Ross; Alzada, who married Hiram Whetzel, and both died in Iowa; Doratha, wife of Benjamin Mills. Almost all of the family embraced the Methodist religion.

Barlow Aldrich, Jr., son of Barlow, was born in 1799, and came with his parents when they settled in Decatur county. He assisted in improving the homestead farm and grew to vigorous manhood, hardened by the deprivations and hardships of pioneer life. He went to Ohio to secure a bride, and then came back to Decatur county, and settled on his father's farm where he remained until 1833. He then preceded his father to the White River Valley, and bought from a squatter a small tract of land with a cabin and ten acres poorly cleared for cultivation. Six months later, his father and the family came and made a permanent settlement here. After the death of his father he continued in improvement and cultivation, and although he suffered many inconveniences, he became a man of ample means and of much repute in his locality. Produce was marketed at Lawrenceburg, Ind., where salt and other necessities could be obtained, but until the town of Waverly was platted, in 1840, going to mill was a long journey. The building of the State canal gave a fine water power to Waverly, and one of the most valuable improvements was the building here of a grist mill, and soon a very satisfactory milling and trading place was found here near home. At this time it looked as if Waverly would outstrip Indianapolis, as the latter was making but slow growth, had no railroads and was a poor market for many years. Mr. Aldrich lived to see the wonderful development which later took place, both in the city and country, and his efforts were always on the side of progress. He became a prominent man, a substantial farmer and stockraiser and one of the most valued citizens of the county. In the Methodist Church he was very prominent and beside liberally contributing to its work efficiently filled many official positions. He was a prime mover in the building of the first church here and hauled the logs with his own ox-team. He started the first Methodist society which soon bore fruit in a higher moral tone permeating the neighborhood and a greater regard for the rights of others. In politics he was a Whig. Prior to the time of county commissioners, he was one of the three township trustees to whom all business was referred. His death took place in February, 1872, his seventy-three years of life having been filled with good deeds and kind acts to his fellow men. His most estimable widow, Pheba (Smith) Aldrich, survived until 1891, she then dying at the age of ninety-one years. She was a daughter of Joel Smith, a native of England, who settled in Ohio and followed milling and farming. He was prominent in the Methodist Church. His children were: Jane; John; Clarinda; Elizabeth, Mrs. J. McCoy; Mrs. Sarah Thurston; Mrs. Susan Zurholt; Pheba; and Mary, Mrs. Isaac McCoy. The children born to Barlow and Pheba (Smith) Aldrich were: Reuben S.; Mary A.; Mrs. L. Holsapple; Luke, who died in Illinois; Sarah, who married George Holsapple, and died in Illinois; Mrs. Elizabeth Dressler; and Barlow, of this locality.

Reuben S. Aldrich came to Morgan county at the age of eleven years and remained at home until maturity. He then bought a small tract of land, farming for himself until the age of thirty-two years when he married and settled on his farm. Later he removed to the homestead of his father-in-law to take charge of the farming there. Some time afterward he bought an interest in this property, and continued to occupy it until his death, having remodeled and improved all the buildings. In 1869 he erected a most comfortable and attractive two-story brick residence, which is one of the very pleasant country homes of Morgan county.

In politics Mr. Aldrich was a staunch Republican, and was to be found among the party advisers. He most acceptably served as county commissioner and for half a century as justice of the peace, an office he filled with rare good judgment. He was one of the responsible, representative men of his section, esteemed and respected by all. In his youth he identified himself with the Methodist Church, and always held to its teachings. In fraternal life he was a Mason of high degree.

Mr. Aldrich was twice married. In 1856 he wedded Susan Wharton, daughter of Joseph Wharton, a native of Kentucky who was an early pioneer in Morgan county. He bought the farm on which Mr. Aldrich resided, of a squatter, but later he obtained a Government title. By trade he was a cabinet-maker, and was frequently of much service to his neighbors in constructing the coffins in which to bury their dead. His children were: John, Polly, Jesse, Eliza, Sarah, Susan and George. Mrs. Aldrich died without leaving issue. In 1873 Mr. Aldrich married (second) Miss Mary E. Province, born May 1, 1846, in Kentucky, daughter of Samuel and Nancy Province, the former of whom was born in Ireland but lived practically his whole life in Kentucky. After his death his widow left her native State, and went to Indiana and spent her last days with her daughter, Mrs. Aldrich. Both she and husband were members of the Methodist Church. Their children were: Dr. William, for many years a prominent citizen at Providence; Jane, who married Dr. Lindley, a prominent physician of Brooklyn; Rebecca, Mrs. B. G. Shufflebarger; Mary E., Mrs. Aldrich; and Daniel, of Missouri. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich, namely: Minnie S., Mrs. E. Morgan; Grace S., Mrs. E. F. Harvey; Mary P., Mrs. C. B. Comer; and Reuben O., at Indiana University. All are members of the Methodist Church. On Jan. 30, 1900, this family was called upon to mourn the loss of the beloved mother, and on Dec. 9, 1907, at the home farm, Reuben S. Aldrich, the father, also entered into rest.

WILLIAM H. MURPHY, M. D., one of the leading physicians of Morgan county, Ind., as well as one of the substantial and public-spirited citizens of Morgantown, and senior member of the medical firm of Murphy, Deer & Murphy, is a native of Indiana, born in Brown county, near Bean Blossom Postoffice, Feb. 26, 1859. His parents were William and Mary Elizabeth (Gray) Murphy, who were the parents of seven children, six of whom are still living, namely: Sarah E., wife of George H. Cramer, of Martinsville, Ind.; David L., of Wellington, Kans.; Dr. William H.; Andrew B., near La Crosse, Rush county, Kans.; Edward C., of Guthrie, Okla.; and Archibald S., of Tonopah, Nevada.

The ancestry of Dr. Murphy may be traced to North Carolina on one side, and to Kentucky on the other. William Murphy, his paternal grandfather, was born in North Carolina, of Irish parentage, and became a pioneer settler in Brown county, Ind., where he entered land from the Government, became a farmer, and died there aged sixty-six years. With his wife Mary, he reared six children. Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Gray) Murphy was a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Gray, natives of Kentucky. Andrew Gray settled in Monroe county, Ind., in 1820, but a few years later moved to Brown county, and died at the age of eighty-three years, on the farm he then entered. Mrs. Murphy was one of a family of twelve children.

William Murphy, son of William and father of Dr. Murphy, was a farmer in Indiana at the outbreak of the Civil war, and he was one of those loyal men who left farm and family and went to the defense of his country. In Company D, 82nd Ind. V. I., he served for three years, lacking a few days, and participated in such battles as Jonesboro, Kennesaw Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Peach Tree Creek, Shiloh and the Atlanta Campaign, and took part in all the twenty-one battles and the many skirmishes which attended that campaign and Sherman's march to the sea. After the close of the war, Mr. Murphy again engaged in farming, in Brown county, and lived there until 1873, when he moved to Martinsville. In 1880 he located in the vicinity of Harper, Kans., and later went to Guthrie, Okla., where he lived from 1898 to 1901, returning then to Martinsville, but only to die, passing away May 8, 1901, aged seventy-three years. Both of Dr. Murphy's parents were members of the Methodist Church, his father being a steward and class leader. The mother of the Doctor died in 1870, aged forty-two years. His father married (second) Mrs. Catherine Prosser, the one child of this union being David William, who resides at Guthrie, Okla., while Mrs. Murphy lives at Trevlac, Brown county.

Until the age of fourteen years Dr. Murphy lived in Brown county, working on the farm and attending the district schools. The family resided then for three years in Martinsville, where the high school afforded the youth fine educational advantages, and he later entered the Morgantown high school from which he graduated in 1880, still later taking a course in the Normal School at Valparaiso, and then taught school for three terms at Jackson township, living for three years at Nast's Chapel, in the latter township. Since 1882 Dr. Murphy has made his home in Morgantown. His medical reading began in 1880, under Dr. R. C. Griffitt, and in 1885 he graduated from the medical department of the University of Louisville, Ky., since which time he has been in active practice in Morgantown, immediately entering into partnership with Dr. Griffitt.

On Sept. 6, 1883, Dr. Murphy was united in marriage with Miss Lucetta E., daughter of Dr. Arnold S. Griffitt, of Nashville, Ind., a well-known practitioner, and his wife, Emeline (Anderson) Griffitt. The four children born to this union were three sons and one daughter, namely: Maurice G., Mary E., Merrill W. and Harry E. Mrs. Murphy died Feb. 12, 1895, aged thirty-one years, in the faith of the Methodist Church.

On Sept. 9, 1900, Dr. Murphy married (second) Mrs. Frances D. Coleman, daughter of John Paskins, of Johnson county. Dr. Murphy is active in the Methodist Church, being one of the stewards. In politics he is identified with the Republican party. Dr. Murphy is recognized as one of the solid men of this locality, owning a good home in Morgantown, city property in Martinsville, and is president of the Morgantown Telephone Company.

DR. MAURICE G. MURPHY, eldest son of Dr. Murphy, was graduated from the Indiana Medical College in May, 1907, and is now associated in practice with his father. He is quick and sympathetic, is well read, and is conscientious in his work, and it is safe to predict a great future for him in his chosen calling. He married Miss Erma Porter, of Morgantown.

WINFIELD TAYLOR DURBIN, former Governor of the State of Indiana, comes of that good American pioneer stock especially distinguished as lovers of liberty, justice and religious freedom. In every generation, from the earliest of which we have record, religious fervor and high principle have been marked characteristics of his ancestors, paternal and maternal, and the present generation has produced more than one notable representative. The Durbins are found among the pioneers of Virginia, Maryland, Georgia, Kentucky and Indiana, and later in other States; while one branch of the family went from Baltimore to Cambria county, Pa., with the Colony formed and cared for by the Russian prince, "Father" Gallitzen. One Richard Durbin settled near Youngstown, Ohio, where his descendants may still be found. There was a Basil Durbin, a soldier of the Mexican war, who took up land and settled in Texas, where he died. Many of the name have adorned the professions, particularly the ministry of the Methodist Church, among whom we may mention Rev. John Price Durbin, LL. D., the Governor's uncle, who was long a prominent divine of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was connected with several of the most noted educational institutions of that denomination, being for twelve years president of Dickinson College, was chaplain of the United States Senate, editor for a time of the "Christian Advocate," and an author of note. He died in Philadelphia, Oct. 17, 1876. His son, Alexander Cook Durbin, ironmaster, born in Philadelphia, Aug. 8, 1832, made the plates for Ericsson's first monitor, and he and his employees were therefore ordered exempt from military duty, that nothing might interfere with the work. There are soldiers and statesmen, doctors and lawyers and successful commercial men among the Governor's immediate and collateral relatives, and all are citizens of the kind that give strength and solidity to any community.

Regarding the origin of the name Durbin, there are many theories, some claiming that the family is Scotch, some that it is Welsh and others that it is Norman French. It is quite likely that the latter conclusion is correct, that the Durbans, or D'Urbans, came to England with William the Conqueror, and we know that one branch of the Durbins or D'Urbans moved from Wales to Scotland, and thence to the North of Ireland, with the Grants, Porters, Wallaces, Hays, Polks, Todds, Camerons, McKinleys and thousands of other Scotch and Norman families whose descendants subsequently emigrated to America. They settled in Virginia, Pennsylvania, Delaware, the Jerseys, Maryland, North Carolina, West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee and Illinois, and they and their descendants have contributed more to the upbuilding of American institutions than any other race. We find their names among our pathfinders, the Crocketts, Boones, Houstons and Bowies; and among our statesmen and soldiers, Washington, Gen. George Rogers Clark, Grant, Sherman, Logan, Lee, Scott, Wood, Jefferson, Jackson, Polk, McKinley and Roosevelt.

The original spelling of the name, D'Urban, was retained in England to some extent, and a distinguished representative of this branch was Sir Benjamin D'Urban (1777-1849), long prominent in the British army, who entered the service as cornet and rose to the rank of lieutenant-general. A somewhat lengthy record of his life and achievements appears in the English Dictionary of National Biography.

Elisha Durbin, of Kentucky, claimed that the family moved to that State from Baltimore. His sons, William and John Durbin, were educated for the medical profession in Philadelphia, and became prominent physicians. Dr. William Durbin owned fisheries on the Chesapeake, and his home "Blenheim."

Daniel Durbin, the first of the Governor's paternal ancestors of whom we have definite information, was born in 1729, and lived to the great age of ninety-eight years, dying June 29, 1827; he is buried near Claysville, Harrison county, Ky. His recollection was that the family was of Scotch origin. He was twice married, and had children by each union, but all have long since passed away.

In 1761 Daniel Durbin married Molly Johns (of the celebrated Johns family of Pennsylvania and Maryland), who died April 21, 1810. She had a nephew, Capt. Nathaniel Chow, a Revolutionary officer, who died at his plantation in Cecil county, Md., in 1827, in his sixty-ninth year. Daniel and Molly Durbin had children: (1) Cassandra, born May 14, 1766, died Sept. 25, 1852. She married Dr. Richard Sappington, a surgeon in the Revolution, who died in Harrison county in 1824. (2) Polly, born in 1768, married a Price, and died in 1798. (3) Rebecca was born Aug. 11, 1772. (4) John, born in 1776, died in 1811. (5) Nathaniel Giles Hosier, born in 1778, died in 1812. (6) Nancy Cole, born Oct. 28, 1779, married Zachariah Eastin, Oct. 17, 1798. (7) Sally married Gabriel Phillips in 1793, and died Sept. 10, 1852.

Nathaniel Giles Hosier Durbin, son of Daniel, and grandfather of the Governor, bore two names which have been prominent in Scottish history—Giles and Hosier. He was born in 1778, and on Dec. 29, 1798, married Elizabeth Nunn, who was born Oct. 1, 1781. They had children: John Price, born Oct. 10, 1800, who became a distinguished divine, educator and author; Samuel S., born in 1803, who died in 1834, in Grant county, Ky., where he is buried; William S., born Aug. 8, 1806, who died in 1889; Edmund N., born in 1809, who died in 1852; and Hosier J., born in 1812, who died Aug. 13, 1851. The last named was a brilliant young clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his death was caused by a falling tree limb, near Greensburg, Ind.; he is buried in the Madison City Cemetery, Lot No. 18, in Jefferson county, Ind. Old Methodist preachers claimed he was even more eloquent than his brother, John Price Durbin, who attained such distinction. In the minutes of the first Methodist Conference his name was written Hosier Durbin.

The father of this family died in 1812 of the cold plague, and for a time Mrs. Durbin's father, Ilia Nunn, looked after her affairs. On Oct. 15, 1817, she married Clement Theobald, of Grant county, Ky., whither they removed in 1818. By this union there were two children, one son and one daughter.

Ilia Nunn, the father of Mrs. Elizabeth Durbin, and great-grandfather of Governor Durbin, was a member of a celebrated family of Georgia, his native State, and was himself a remarkable man. He was the son of a rich planter, but was disinherited because he married to please himself. Born Oct. 1, 1750, he was reared in Georgia, and when a young man enlisted for service in the Revolution, taking part in the battle of King's Mountain. On May 27, 1779, he married Miss Jennie Scott, who was born Nov. 7, 1757, and died June 1, 1801. On Jan. 3, 1805, Mr. Nunn married Mrs. Jemima Watson, nee Adair, widow of John Watson, Esq.; she was born Sept. 2, 1776. For his third wife he married Mrs. McClure, a widow, who was also thrice married. By his second union Mr. Nunn was the father of two sons, namely: Edmund, born Dec. 27, 1805; and William, born Feb. 2, 1808, the latter the father of Mrs. Americus (Nunn) Clark, late of Millersburg, Ky. Ilia Nunn died March 2, 1838.

Rev. A. Howard M. Henderson, of Delhi, Ohio, under date of March 4, 1904, writes as follows concerning the Durbins and Nunn:

"I know nothing of the Durbin family beyond Hosea [sic], the grandfather of Governor Durbin. When a boy I often conversed with 'Uncle Sam,' an old negro who came from Maryland with the Durbin family. All I can recall is that they were well-to-do people from the Eastern Shore; that the father of Hosea was a Revolutionary soldier of the Maryland line; that they brought considerable substance with them to Kentucky, and a number of slaves. My understanding is that they were of Norman descent, came to England with William the Conqueror, but had been a long time in this country. Hosea was not thrifty, and went through with several fortunes. He married the daughter of Ilia Nunn. I knew William, John and Hosea Durbin. William was a very handsome man, had a fresh, florid complexion, was genial and hospitable—the best class-leader I ever knew. He was a gifted man, and had he entered a profession would have become distinguished. Old Mr. Nunn believed that all boys should learn a trade. William was a tanner, John a cabinetmaker, and I have in my possession two pieces of furniture made by him. They were not put to trades because of poverty, for Ilia Nunn was among the wealthiest men in the county. John was apprenticed to Kern's in Paris, eight miles distant. The apprenticed boys came home every Saturday night, their grandfather sending a negro with a horse to bring them. Mr. Nunn built a house for the Durbins in his yard. Hosea was the crossroads politician of the neighborhood, and was Sir Oracle to the swains of the countryside. Hosea, Jr., became a Methodist preacher in Indiana, and was killed while yet young by lightning, he having taken refuge under a tree from the fury of a storm. He was said to be more eloquent than John.

"Ilia Nunn was the son of a rich Georgia planter. Ilia displeased his father by marriage and was disinherited. With a few household goods and his wife, in a wagon, he went to Kentucky, entered a quarter section of government land, prospered, until he owned a blue grass farm of 640 acres, worth $75 per acre (1860) and a force of fifty slaves. Ilia fought as a private soldier at King's Mountain. I have killed many a squirrel with the rifle he used. He was a great Methodist, and had a camp-ground (Nunn's) on his farm. The great Cane-ridge revival started there, and was removed a few miles to Cane-ridge meeting house. William Nunn, granduncle of Governor Durbin, was my stepfather, and at one time was the richest farmer in Bourbon county, Ky. My mother married him when I was thirteen years of age (1849). He educated me, i. e., furnished the funds. He had one daughter, who married Charles Clark, yet living at Millersburg, Ky. She is dead. One of her daughters is the wife of Rev. N. Darlington, Covington, Ky., a gifted Methodist preacher of M. E. Church, South. William Nunn died in 1871 at Millersburg, Ky., a village about five miles from the old Nunn (Ilia) farm. He owned 1,000 acres ($100 per acre) that environed Millersburg like a horseshoe. He was for many years a magistrate. He was hospitable and liberal. His splendid home was one of the headquarters of the Whig party. Clay was a frequent visitor. The party leaders would assemble at Blue Lick Springs (thirteen miles north), ride in carriages to Forest Hill and hold their caucuses in the capacious parlors, 40 by 20 feet. The house was a palace, and cost $32,000.

"I have heard it said that the Durbins were of Norman-French extraction and that the name originally was D'Aubigne. I do not know this. They certainly were a 'first' family in Maryland, if old Sam was to be believed. I knew Governor Durbin's grandmother. She married a second time, a Mr. Theobald [sic]. I knew her daughter by the second marriage, Mrs. William Sayre, also Sanford Theobald, her son, of Grant county, Ky. John Durbin Sayre lives here, is a member of the Hartwell Furniture Company, of Cincinnati, a grand man, son of William Sayre and grandson of Clement Theobald. Dr. Roche wrote a life of John P. Durbin, published by Methodist Publishing House, N. Y., 1889. It might give you some information of the Durbin family, genealogy and correct name. It is Hosea, not Hosier, as you write it. As for the Ohio Durbins I know nothing further than that a General Durbin was very prominent in Ohio politics, but I think a Democrat, an orator.

"I remember a visit to William Durbin at New Philadelphia, Ind., when a youth of twenty, and recall Winfield, or 'Taylor,' as we called him. He was a handsome little fellow and sprightly. His mother was a splendid woman. The Governor came of fine stock. 'Blood will tell.'

"This letter will give you all I know about the Durbins. Forty-five years ago I could have told you much of old Sam's folk-lore and my stepfather's stories of the family, but memory fails to recall. Old Sam was a great aristocrat—was a Durbin in black.

"I send a sketch * * * which * * * will give you some impressions of life at 'Forest Hill,' an old baronial home of the South. Perhaps I should say that the Durbins were anti-slavery in sentiment—old Sam a radical. He claimed that his grandfather was a prince in Africa, a reprisal of war."

In "Methodism in Kentucky" (1868) we find the following concerning Ilia Nunn and his daughter, Elizabeth:

"Amongst the laity in our church, the energy and piety of many of the members shone conspicuously, prominent among whom was Ilia Nunn, the father of William Nunn, now residing in Millersburg, Kentucky, and the grandfather of the Rev. John P. Durbin, D. D. Mr. Nunn was among the earliest emigrants to Kentucky, having settled in the district about 1783. 'His first settlement was on the bank of a small creek, known as Clear Creek, near Lexington. Remaining there for two years he removed; he purchased a tract of land near Millersburg, which he improved, and which was widely known as "Nunn's farm," and on which he established a campground, which is still remembered by all the old citizens of Bourbon county. His house, one of the best in the neighborhood, was the home of Methodist preachers, as well as those of other denominations who chose to call on him—and for many years the only preaching place in the neighborhood. It was in the vicinity of his house that the Cane-Ridge Meeting was held, in 1801, and at it occurred the most remarkable revival meeting ever held on this continent. At this meeting he was an active lay member.' [Letter from Rev. A. H. M. Henderson.] He lived many years to bless the church, and then entered upon 'the rest that remaineth to the people of God.' "[Ilia Nunn died March 2, 1838, and was buried on the banks of the Kingston river.]

"The name of Elizabeth Durbin deserves a conspicuous place among the representative women of Methodism in Kentucky. She was not only familiar with the early struggles of the church, but for more than fifty-six years she was identified with its fortunes. She was the daughter of Ilia Nunn, and was born in the State of Georgia, Oct. 12, 1781. In 1783 her father emigrated to Kentucky, and settled in Bourbon county. Before he came to Kentucky Mr. Nunn attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in his devotion to its welfare and prosperity, displayed a remarkable zeal. Impressing upon the minds of his children the obligations of religion, his daughter, Elizabeth, when only about fifteen years of age, was awakened and converted to God. In her eighteenth year she was married to Mr. Hosier Durbin, who left her at his death, with five children, two of whom became distinguished ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1817 she was married to Mr. Clement Theobald, and removed to Grant county, Kentucky, where, after a long and useful life, she quietly breathed her last on the 20th of April, 1852.

"Among the distinguished women of the Methodist Church in Kentucky, no one presented a brighter Christian example than Mrs. Durbin. Devoted to the Church of her choice, as well as to the common cause of Christianity, she contributed the influence of a holy life and a liberal hand to promote the great ends of religion. Endowed with an intellect of a superior cast, with a heart sanctified by grace, and with an inflexible purpose to accomplish the highest aims and ends of life—whether by the bedside of affliction, or in her own family circle, or pouring out the devotions of her heart around the altars of the church—she was everywhere an angel of mercy. Through many years her house was consecrated to God, and beneath her hospitable roof the faithful minister of Christ found a welcome and a place of rest.

"In a brief biography, written by her pastor soon after her death, he says: 'Many there are who bless God that she ever lived. Her place in the church and family circle cannot be easily filled. In her death a pillar of Christianity has been broken, and a moral guiding light extinguished. Her children and society have sustained a loss that time cannot repair. She in an eminent degree trained up her children in the way they should go, and had the high satisfaction of seeing them all soundly converted, and exemplary members of the church, while two of them became eloquent ministers of the Gospel of Christ.' [Nashville Christian Advocate, July 15, 1852.]

"For several years she suffered from severe afflictions, yet her last attack, a disease of the throat, was brief. After a few days' illness, calmly and easily, she passed away. * * * Unable to converse during her illness, her entire life having shed a luster on her profession, her death could not be otherwise than one of victory. She passed away like the sun which sinks behind the western hills, 'giving a sure hope of rising in brighter array.'

"The following extract from a letter received from her son, the Rev. John P. Durbin, D. D., dated March 5, 1868, in answer to a letter of inquiry which was sent him, will be read with interest:

"I have no family records within my reach, and cannot therefore be precise in regard to any point. My mother was the daughter of Ilia Nunn, of Bourbon county, Ky. He was originally from Georgia at a very early day, when the Indians were in some parts of Kentucky. My mother was born quite as early as 1781, perhaps earlier. Her father's house was the church for their neighborhood. My mother early became pious. By her first husband she had five sons, of whom I was the eldest. Myself and my brother William (third son) are the only ones living. Her first husband died about 1814, and two or three years thereafter, she was married to Mr. Theobald, of Grant county, Kentucky. A son and a daughter were the fruit of that marriage. The son is dead, but the daughter, now Mrs. Sayre, of Grant county, is still living, and is the mother of a large family of children. My youngest brother, Hosier J. Durbin, after whom you inquire, was a traveling preacher at his death, which happened more than twenty years ago, in Indiana. He was killed in a storm by the limb of a tree falling upon him as he rode homeward. He was in the service of the American Bible Society at the time, and was an energetic man, and, I have been told, a powerful preacher. His widow and children (three girls and two boys) still survive.

"I forgot to say that my mother's house was a church, where the ministers preached and found a home, when passing or resting, during her second marriage. I wish I could write more satisfactorily about a mother whom I revered and loved so dearly."

The Nunn family is now almost extinct, though some of the name are still living at Americus, Georgia.

In "The Early Germans of New Jersey," we find the following in regard to them: "Thomas Nunn died about 1773; will dated Oct. 30, 1771, and probated Dec. 2, 1773. He married Elisabeth ——. Came from England about 1750; owned land at Schooley's Mountain, which, at his death, was, by arbitration, divided between his two sons, Thomas and Benjamin. Children (order uncertain): Joshua, eldest, Thomas (went to Canada), Benjamin, Bersheba, Ann, Elizabeth, Solomon and Ephraim (mentioned in Nitzer Ledger Sept. 3, 1763). Thomas's will mentioned also a grandchild, Catrin Nunn.

"Benjamin Nunn died about 1817; will probated June 17, 1817. He married Ann Carpenter; children: Elizabeth (who married a Thomas), Bethsheba (who married Jacob Sharp, son of John Peter I), Ann (who married a Wolf), Sarah (who married William McCray), Isaac and John."

In the official register of the officers and men of New Jersey in the Revolutionary war, we find the following entry: "Nunn, Thomas, Capt. Harker's company, Second regiment Sussex."

Going back to ancient history we find that Nunna or Nunn (who flourished in 710), King of the South Saxons, joined his kinsman, Ine or Ini, king of the West Saxons, in his victorious war with Gerent, King of British Dyvnaint in 710. He first appears as confirming a charter of Nothelm, King of the South Saxons, in 602, where he is also described as King of Sussex; to the charter the names of Wattus, King, Coenved, King of the West Saxons, and Ine are also appended. He was no doubt an atheling of the house of Ceawlin, and reigned in Sussex, which since the invasion of Caedwalla had been under West Saxon supremacy (659-689). The three charters of Nunna given in the monasticon and by Kenible, from the register of the dean and chapter of Chichester, are of doubtful authority. In the first, dated 714, Nunna grants lands to the monks of the Isle of Selsey, where he desires to be buried; the second, 725, is a grant to Eadbert, bishop of Selsey, and the third a grant of land at Pipering to a 'servant of God' Berhfrith, on condition that prayer should be offered there continually for the donor. [English Historical Society, V, 93,41,43.]

Also Marianne Nunn (1778-1847), hymn writer, daughter of John Nunn, of Colchester, was born 17 May, 1778. She wrote several sacred pieces, but is remembered solely by the hymn, "One there is Above All Others, Oh how He loves." This is a version adapted to a Welsh air of Newton's hymn beginning with the same line, and it has since undergone several changes at various hands; the original is printed in her brother's (Rev. J. Nunn) Psalms and Hymns, 1817, which contains other pieces of hers. A younger brother, William Nunn, 1786-1840, wrote several hymns, two of which, "O could we touch the Sacred Lyre" and "The Gospel Comes Ordained of God," are in occasional use.

William S. Durbin, the Governor's father, was born Aug. 8, 1806, in Kentucky, and on Nov. 2, 1828, married Eliza A. Sparks, a native of the same State, born in April, 1803. They had a family of eight sons and one daughter, six now surviving, namely: (1) John Weaver, of New Albany; (2) Samuel Weaver, of Chicago; (3) David Sparks, of Michigan City; (4) Hosier Hamlet and (5) Henry Clay, of Anderson; and (6) Winfield T., whose home is also in Anderson. Of the deceased, William Nunn, born March 12, 1838, died in 1898. Six of the sons served in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion, viz.: John W. as lieutenant in the 183d Ohio Infantry; David S. as lieutenant in the 13th Indiana Infantry; Hosier H. in the 18th Indiana Battery; Henry Clay in the 16th and 139th Indiana Volunteer Infantry; Winfield T. in the 16th and 139th Indiana Volunteer Infantry Regiments; and William Nunn in the 139th Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The father, William S. Durbin, was a tanner, and learned his trade at Brookville. While still a young man he had moved into Indiana, as did his brother, Rev. John P. Durbin, who afterward became eminent in his chosen calling. William S. Durbin removed to Lawrenceburg, Dearborn county, Ind., after he had learned his trade, and engaged in business as a tanner. In 1850 he located in Washington county, and he spent his last years in New Albany, where he died at an advanced age in 1893. His wife passed away in 1862. Both were Methodists and they were people of high standing in the community in which their peaceful and useful lives were spent. Mr. Durbin was an intense Union man during the Civil war, and was represented at the front by six of his sons.

Judge Elijah Sparks, the Governor's maternal grandfather, was (according to John W. Sparks, a cousin of Winfield T. Durbin) a native of Winchester, Va., born about 1770. At the age of nineteen he professed religion, and in 1792 he became a traveling preacher. In the autumn of 1799 he left Winchester and located in Bank Lick (near Fort Thomas), Ky., where he resided until 1805, removing thence to Lawrenceburg, Ind. Capt. John Weaver, his wife's brother (at one time sheriff of Dearborn county), was then a United States officer, with a small command occupying one of the blockhouses in what is now Dearborn county; he had command of blockhouses along the Ohio river. Upon his removal to Kentucky Elijah Sparks had taken up the study of law, and he began the practice of that profession in the fall of 1800, in Campbell county, Ky. He became one of the first territorial judges in Indiana, taking that office Jan. 16, 1814, and filling it until his death, which occurred in May, 1815, when he was making a journey back to Virginia on horseback. He was one of the first Methodist ministers in his section of Indiana, and Rev. Allen Wiley alludes to him as "one of the prominent instruments of the practicing, spread and symmetry of Methodism in this part of Indiana." Judge Sparks was married in Virginia to Elizabeth Weaver, a native of Pennsylvania, and sister of Capt. John Weaver, and they became the parents of six children: Hamlet, Helen, Norval, Eliza Ann, Green and America. Eliza Ann Sparks became the wife of William S. Durbin. Norval Sparks, the third in the family, born in 1800, married Jane Johnston, of Schenectady, N. Y., who died in 1855. Their children were: Margaret J., David E., Ann E. and John W., of whom David E., born in 1828, and John W., born in 1840, were in the grocery business at Lawrenceburg; David E. died in 1902. During the Civil war John W. was employed in the quartermaster's department under General Carr, in 1862. David E. also served in the army. He married Miss Josephine Beckel, of Philadelphia, daughter of Prof. J. C. Beckel, a music publisher of that city.

Governor Durbin was born May 4, 1847, in Lawrenceburg, Dearborn county, Ind., and reared in Washington county, at New Philadelphia. In his youth he attended the common schools and worked in his father's tannery. In 1862 he enlisted in the 16th Indiana Volunteers, but was not mustered into the service on account of an accident, though he participated in the first attack on Vicksburg and in the engagement at Arkansas Post. The following year he became a member of Company K, 139th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and rendered gallant and devoted service to the Union until the close of the war. He was a private throughout his term of service.

Returning from the war, Winfield T. Durbin resumed work as a tanner, and later taught school four terms. At the end of his labors as a teacher he came to Indianapolis, to connect himself with Murphy, Johnston & Co., wholesale dry goods and notions, and for ten years was in their employ, for eight years having charge of their main office. At Anderson, Ind., he was engaged in the banking business, being connected with the Citizens' Bank of that place, owned by N. C. McCullough & Co. Mr. Durbin in those years was also extensively engaged in manufacturing at Anderson, Elwood, Chicago, and other places, making not only iron goods, but paper boxes and paper novelties as well. His factories for these goods are in Chicago and Anderson. He also for a time operated a paper-mill.

Mr. Durbin was married Oct. 6, 1875, to Miss Bertha, daughter of Neal C. and Maria E. (Edgerly) McCullough. Their only son, Fletcher, attended Williams College, served in the Spanish-American war as a lieutenant in the 161st Indiana Volunteers, of which regiment his father was colonel, and is at present serving as general manager of The Evansville & Southern Indiana Traction Company, Evansville. Their only daughter, Marie, died at the age of nine years. The Governor and his wife belong to the Methodist Church. Their home has been in Anderson since the year 1879.

Governor Durbin is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being a thirty-third-degree Scottish Rite Mason, a prominent member of the Indiana Consistory, and associated with Mount Moriah Lodge, F. & A. M., of Anderson, Ind.; with Anderson Chapter, R. A. M.; and with Anderson Commandery, No. 32, K. T., of which he is past commander; he is past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Indiana. He also belongs to the Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, and Major May Post, No. 244, G. A. R., of which he is a past commander, and he holds a membership in the Traveler's Protective Association.

Mr. Durbin was elected Governor of the State of Indiana in the year 1900, and entered upon the duties of that responsible office Jan. 14, 1901. His administration marked him plainly as a man of ability, honor and integrity. While he is a staunch Republican, he takes a broad and just view of his duty to all the people, and moves upon the high plane of true statesmanship. In this connection may be cited his attitude in the recent troubles in the State over the race question and lynching, for which he has received the highest commendation from all quarters of the world. We quote the letter of President Roosevelt to the Governor:

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 6.

My Dear Governor Durbin:

Permit me to thank you as an American citizen for the admirable way in which you have vindicated the majesty of the law by your recent action in reference to lynching. I feel, my dear sir, that you have made all men your debtors who believe, as farseeing men must, that the well being, indeed the very existence, of the Republic depends upon that spirit of orderly liberty under the law which is as compatible with mob violence as with any form of despotism. Of course, mob violence is simply one form of anarchy; and anarchy is now, as it always has been, the handmaiden and forerunner of tyranny. I feel that you have not only reflected honor upon the State which for its good fortune has you for its chief executive, but upon the whole Nation. It is incumbent upon every man throughout this country not only to hold up your hands in the course you have been following, but to show his realization that the matter is one of vital concern to us all. All thoughtful men must face the gravest alarm over the growth of lynchings in this country, and especially over the peculiar hideous forms so often taken by mob violence when colored men are the victims, on which occasions the mob seems to lay most weight not on the crime, but on the color of the criminal. In a certain portion of these cases the man lynched has been guilty of a crime horrible beyond description; a crime so horrible that as far as he himself is concerned he has forfeited the right to any kind of sympathy whatsoever. The feeling of all good citizens that such a hideous crime shall not be hideously punished by mob violence is due, not in the least to sympathy for the criminal, but to a very lively sense of the train of dreadful consequences which follow the course taken by the mob in exacting inhuman vengeance for an inhuman wrong. In such cases, moreover, it is well to remember that the criminal not merely sins against humanity in inexpiable and unpardonable fashion, but sins particularly against his own race, and does them a wrong far greater than any white man can possibly do them. Therefore, in such cases, the colored people throughout the land, should, in every possible way, show that they more than all others in the community are horrified at the commission of such a crime, and are peculiarly concerned in taking every possible measure to prevent the recurrence and to bring the criminal to justice. The slightest lack of vigor either in denunciation of the crime or in bringing the criminal to justice is unpardonable.

Moreover, every effort should be made under the law to expedite the proceedings of justice in the case of such an awful crime. But it is not necessary, in order to accomplish this, to deprive any citizen of those fundamental rights to be heard in his own defense which are so dear to us all, and which lie at the roots of our liberty. It certainly ought to be possible by the proper administration of the laws to secure swift vengeance upon the criminal; and the best and immediate efforts of all legislators, judges and citizens should be addressed to securing such reforms in our legal procedure as to leave no vestige of excuse for those misguided men who undertake to reap vengeance through violent methods. Men who have been guilty of a crime like rape or murder should be visited with swift and certain punishment, and the just effort made by the courts to protect them in their rights should under no circumstances be perverted into permitting any mere technicality to avert or delay their punishment. The substantial rights of the prisoner to a fair trial must of course be guaranteed, as you have so justly insisted they should be. But subject to this guarantee, the law must work swiftly and surely, and all the agents of the law should realize the wrong they do when they permit justice to be delayed or thwarted for technical or insufficient reasons. We must show that the law is adequate with crime by freeing it from every vestige of technicality and delay. But the fullest recognition of the horror of the crime and the most complete lack of sympathy with the criminal cannot in the least diminish our horror at the way it has become customary to avenge these crimes, and at the consequences that are already proceeding therefrom. It is, of course, inevitable, that where vengeance is taken by a mob it should frequently light on innocent people; and the wrong done in such a case to the individual is one for which there is no remedy. But where the real criminal is reached, the wrong done by the mob to the community itself is well nigh as great. Especially is this true where the lynching is accompanied with torture. There are certain hideous sights, which when once seen can never be wholly erased from the mental retina. The mere fact of having seen them implies degradation. 'Tis a thousandfold stronger, when instead of merely seeing the deed, the man has participated in it. Whoever, in any part of our country, has ever taken part in lawlessly putting to death a criminal by the dreadful torture of fire must forever after have the awful spectacle of his own handiwork seared into his brain and soul. He can never be the same man. This matter of lynching would be a terrible thing even if it stopped with the lynching of men guilty of the inhuman and hideous crime of rape; but as a matter of fact, lawlessness of this type never does stop and never can stop in such a fashion. Every violent man in the community is encouraged by every case of lynching in which the lynchers go unpunished to himself take the law into his own hands whenever it suits his own convenience. In the same way the use of torture by the mob in certain cases is sure to spread until it is applied more or less indiscriminately in other causes. In the recent cases of lynching over three-fourths were not rape at all, but for murder, attempted murder and even less heinous offenses; moreover the history of these recent cases shows the awful fact that when the minds of men are habituated to the use of torture by lawless bodies to avenge crimes of a peculiarly revolting description, other lawless bodies will torture in order to punish crimes of an ordinary type. Surely no patriot can fail to see the fearful brutalization and debasement which the indulgence of such a spirit and such practices inevitably portend. Surely all public men, all writers for the daily press, all clergymen, all teachers, all who in any way have a right to address the public, should with every energy unite to denounce such crimes and to support those engaged in putting them down. As a people we claim the right to speak with peculiar emphasis for freedom, for fair treatment of all men without regard to difference of race, fortune, creed or color. We forfeit the right so to speak, when we commit or condone such crimes as these of which I speak; the Nation, like the individual, cannot commit a crime with impunity. If we are guilty of lawlessness and brutal violence, whether our guilt consists in active participation therein, or in mere connivance and encouragement, we shall assuredly suffer later on because of what we have done. The cornerstone of this Republic, as of all free governments, is respect for and obedience to the law. Where we permit the law to be defiled or evaded, whether by rich man, poor man, black or white, we are by just so much weakening the bonds of our civilization, and increasing the chances of its overthrow and of the substitution thereof of a system in which there shall be violent alternations of anarchy and tyranny.

Sincerely yours,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

We also quote a letter from Gen. Lew Wallace, the author:

Crawfordsville, July 29th, 1903.
Governor Durbin.

Dear Sir: I have been threatening for several days to go up to Indianapolis expressly to tell you how proud of you we all are, meaning lovers of law and order. Your treatment of the Evansville affair was perfect. When an official does his duty nobly, I think every citizen ought to acknowledge it. Here in this envelope I send you my thanks. The other day thinking of wars—I have been writing about them a good deal lately—it struck me that to us Americans they have not been unmix'd evils. Here, for example, is a fact well demonstrated; our best presidents and governors from Washington down have been soldiers who carried their military habits into civic life, distinguishing themselves for quick decisions and promptitude of action in emergencies. You are at liberty to make the application. Wishing you well, Governor, I am very truly your friend.

LEW WALLACE.

The following is from the New York Press of July 11, 1903:

In the turmoil of lawlessness by which the country, north, south, east and west, is torn, Governor Durbin towers a moral giant over the weak and dwarfed officials who have yielded and truckled to the mob element. This is a man on whom a flood of light should be turned from every intellectual quarter in the land, that it may be diffused through the darkness that is a shame upon American civilization. The Governor of Indiana turns out the militia to uphold the majesty of the law. He shoots down lynchers. But he does more. When it is proposed to make some concessions to the lawless by "railroading" the wounded murderer to the gallows, he rises once more to crush the spirit of mob rule which would deprive the wretch of his constitutional right of a fair trial by "due process of law." There will be no "railroading" any more than lynching in Evansville. "No compromise with the mob spirit" is the resolute stand of Governor Durbin. "The State," he says to the judge, "will be ready in the event of another outbreak to give further demonstration of its disposition and its ability to do with the rioters as they deserve." Governor Durbin has only fulfilled the obligation he took when the oath of his office was administered to him. But how many governors, in recent times, when the structure upon which law and order rests was rocked by the storm of the mob's fury, have risen to the stern and resolute performance of their plain duty? Durbin of Indiana has done nothing he has not sworn to do, nothing that he should not have done, yet he has made himself an enduring national reputation in a fortnight, for Durbin, of Indiana, has made a big name for himself.

During the Spanish American war Gov. Durbin served as colonel of the 161st Indiana Volunteers, and was assigned to the Seventh Army Corps, which saw service in Cuba.

GEORGE REAGAN, who is a descendant of an old pioneer family of Marion county, where he is a well-known farmer, was born in this county Dec. 4, 1845, son of Noah and Mary (Jessup) Reagan.

Reason Reagan, grandfather of George, was a native of Virginia, and was among the very early settlers of Marion county, Ind., where he secured several tracts of government land, converting them into valuable improved farms. In his later years he was engaged for a time as a merchant at Mooresville, where he died after a long and useful career. He was a worthy and respected member of the Friends' Society. In politics he was a Whig. He was a plain, honest man, highly esteemed in his community. His children were as follows: Noah; Lot, who became a physician; Amos, a physician, who is still living at Mooresville; Sarah, the wife of Dr. Mitchell; and Eliza, who became Mrs. Thornburgh.

Noah Reagan, father of George, was born in Virginia, and came to Indiana with his parents at a very early age. Here he was married to Mary Jessup, who was born in Indiana, and here he made a home near Bridgeport and spent his entire life, becoming a farmer and stockman. In politics he took a deep interest, being a leading Whig and later a Republican. His integrity and honor were above reproach, and his death, which occurred in January, 1880, was deeply felt. He was above the average man in size, and very active and industrious. Of a social and pleasant disposition, he enjoyed the friendship of many and was a liberal contributor to the sick and needy. To Noah and Mary (Jessup) Reagan were born these children: Worthington, of New Mexico; Sarah, who became Mrs. Gathany, and lived in Nebraska; Rachel, who became Mrs. Wilson; George, mentioned below; Reason, who was killed by the Indians in the West (unmarried); Joseph, who lives in Indianapolis; Mary, the wife of A. V. Conroe, a farmer of Bridgeport; and Noah, a trader and auctioneer of Bridgeport. Bred in the Friends' Society, he never affiliated with any other communion. Mr. Reagan was a charter member of the Bridgeport Lodge of Masons, and was a popular and esteemed worker in the mystic craft.

Mrs. Mary Reagan, who was the mother of all Noah's children, died in 1855. She was the daughter of Joseph Jessup, who was born in North Carolina, and became a pioneer of Indiana, while the State was still young. His occupation was that of farming, and his religious convictions and heredity allied him with the Friends' Society, of which he was an honored member. The children of Joseph Jessup, were: Jackson L.; Joel; Letha, who became Mrs. Poff; Jane, who married T. Jessup; and Mary, who married Noah Reagan.

After the death of his wife, Noah Reagan was married a second time, wedding Miss Catherine Patterson, who died without issue. For his third wife he married Mary Newman, who was a widow. By this union there was no issue.

George Reagan was born and reared near Bridgeport, where he settled after his marriage, and where he still lives. Growing up on his father's farm he was thoroughly trained as a farmer and stockman, an interest to which his life has been devoted. When he was seventeen years of age he went to the front to fight for the Union, enlisting as a member of Company D, 124th Indiana Vol. Inf., under command of Col. Burgess. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee under command of Gen. Sherman, and followed his lead through the long and bloody campaigns that broke the power of the Rebellion. Gen. Sherman's army encountered the hardest fighting commanders and soldiers of the South, and through all these exciting scenes passed the young soldier without a wound. He was at Roy Court House, North Carolina, at the surrender of Gen. Lee. With his regiment he was mustered out at Greensboro, N. C., and was sent to Indianapolis, where the members of the regiment who had survived the perils of the camp and battlefield were honorably discharged and given their pay.

George Reagan returned home and again took up farming. He engaged in stock dealing and settled where he still lives. In May, 1868, he married Esther J. Huffman, who was born at Bridgeport, Ind., Dec. 9, 1849, daughter of Peter M. and Emaline (Cravens) Huffman.

Mr. Reagan does not aspire to office, though in a strong Republican community, and only takes a good citizen's interest in political affairs. Though reared a Quaker he became a member of the M. E. Church. In the Masonic and Grand Army circles he is an active worker, and an appreciated and valuable member. Belonging to an old and honored family, the name Reagan needing no comments, he is, as are all the various representatives of the family, well-known in central Indiana.

Three children have come to George and Esther J. Reagan, as follows: (1) William, who was born Aug. 16, 1860, is now a lawyer in Marion county, and is prominently identified with Republican politics. He has represented his county in the General Assembly. (2) Bertha, born in May, 1871, is single and at home. (3) John, who was born Aug. 11, 1879, is now a law student, and is ready to enter upon a legal career. Mrs. Reagan united with the Methodist Church when she was seventeen years old, and her children are her followers in this belief.

Mrs. Reagan belongs to an old family in America, the Huffman name being of Revolutionary record. Sampson Huffman, grandfather of Mrs. Reagan, was born in Virginia of German parentage in December, 1795. He came to Indiana in 1828, and entering land near Bridgeport in 1830 received a title deed bearing the name of Andrew Jackson. These papers are held by Mrs. Reagan as valuable relics of a time long passed, and this land is still in the hands of the Reagan family. Sampson Huffman was highly thought of by the pioneers. In Virginia he received a liberal education and was for years a prominent educator in the State. He was also a successful farmer, and for many years was among the leading merchants of Bridgeport. After moving west from Virginia he settled at first in Butler county, Ohio, where all his children were born. In 1828 he removed to Indiana, accompanied by his wife and children. Sampson Huffman was a well known and popular man of his day in Indiana. His father before him had served in the War of the Revolution and died in Virginia, and Sampson, who was a Democrat in politics, was a loyal patriot. He married a daughter of George Huffman, and had five children, viz.: Ann; Sirena; Betty; Mina; and Peter, father of Mrs. Reagan. None of the daughters married. The death of Mrs. Huffman occurred before that of her husband.

Peter Huffman was seven years old when his parents brought him into Indiana, and here he was reared to manhood, and spent his entire life, dying March 19, 1900. In his active years he was both a farmer and merchant. For over thirty years he was a successful merchant in Bridgeport, treading in his father's footsteps, and repeating his honest and upright career. In his later years he retired from the store, and devoted himself entirely to his farming interests. He built a large and handsome brick residence and put up ample barns, where he lived and died, about a mile east of Bridgeport. He was a consistent and devout member of the Methodist Church. He was a man highly esteemed for his genuine manhood and upright character.

Peter Huffman married to Emaline Cravens, who was born in Indiana (her parents settling at an early day in Hendricks county, Ind.), the other members of her family being, Wesley, of North Carolina; Jesse; Jerry; W. Reese; and Malinda W., who was three times married, first to F. Reed, then to J. J. Turner, and lastly to T. W. Ingling, now a retired resident of Bridgeport.

Mrs. Peter Huffman was called to her rest in 1852, and Mr. Huffman never married again, but spent his declining years at the old homestead in care of his daughter, Mrs. George Reagan. Several children had been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peter Huffman, but Mrs. Reagan was the only surviving member. Mrs. Peter Huffman was a member of the Baptist Church.

FRANK E. THOMPSON, who is a descendant of an honored pioneer family of this State which originated in Scotland, was born Dec. 8, 1860, in Jackson county, Ind. His parents were John B. and Hannah (Wilson) Thompson, the former of whom was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Jan. 1, 1802, and the latter in Scott county, Ind., of Irish descent. Their marriage took place in Washington county, Indiana. The name of Thompson was originally spelled Tomzon. John B. Thompson was a son of Dugal and Lucy (McAlister) Thompson, both of whom were born, reared and married at Edinburgh, where Dugal was a prominent and influential man in Government affairs, as well as a titled gentleman. On account of some political troubles he left Scotland and came to America in 1808, sacrificing much of his wealth by this move. He settled in Switzerland county, Ind., and as he was known to have been a very large landowner, it is supposed that he at one time possessed the land upon which Vevay is located. He was a strong Democrat and it was on account of political differences that he again had trouble, this time more seriously, as he died from assassination. He left a family of small children orphans, the mother having died previously, and much of his large estate was dissipated before it ever fell into their hands. In religion he was a Methodist. His children were: John B., father of Frank E.; James, deceased; Daniel died at Royalton, aged eighty years; and Jessie died young.

At one time Mr. Frank E. Thompson had in his possession the documents and genealogical record of the Dowhard or Donthard family, a very ancient and powerful Scotch family. These papers were left by his grandfather, and showed him to be a direct descendant of Mary, Queen of Scots, through whom Dugal Thompson inherited his title and lands near Edinburgh.

After the death of his father John B. Thompson was reared and educated by Mr. Dowhard, who gave him a theological education at a Kentucky Methodist seminary, but the young man developed other tastes, and, while always a good and moral man, he did not enter the ministry as Mr. Dowhard had hoped. He became instead a skilled carpenter and later a contractor with a railroad company, going into different States and localities for supplies, for timber needed for ties and other construction work. His death took place at Cumminsville, Ohio, where he had resided but a short time. He was also a bridge carpenter, and erected many bridges and spent a long and arduous life in railroad work. His death took place Aug. 12, 1898. In physical make-up he was a large, powerful man, weighing over 250 pounds, and was of strong constitution. He was a kind friend to all in need, and a just and reliable man in every relation of life. Although reared in Democracy, he became identified with the Republican party, working for its success but not accepting office. In his family he was stern but always kind and just. In 1840 he married in Scott county, Ind., Hannah Wilson, who made a worthy wife and a devoted mother. She was born Nov. 20, 1824, and the other members of her parents' family were: William, a prominent Democratic politician of Little York; Dr. John, an early settler in California; Rebecca, Mrs. Joseph Cyfirs; and Vina, Mrs. Jesse Perdue. The children born to John B. and Hannah (Wilson) Thompson were: William E., served as a commissioned officer in the army during the Civil war; James D., served in the Civil war as first lieutenant of Company K, 30th Reg., 8th Cav., of Ind.; Mary J., Mrs. McCracken, deceased, mother of two children; Edward R., soldier in the Civil war; Jesse C., postmaster at Everton, Dade county, Mo.; John W., a railroad man at Richmond, Ind.; Daniel O. and Jasper died young; Frank E., of this sketch; and Charles W. died at the time of his father's death. Mr. Thompson was a Methodist, while his wife was a member of the Christian Church. She died at the home of her son, Frank E., July 5, 1894.

John B. Thompson was a patriotic citizen, serving in the Mexican war and was also a non-commissioned officer in the late Civil war, in the 87th Ind. Vol. Infantry.

Frank E. Thompson was reared in the woods, but obtained a good common and high school education. From the time he was fourteen years of age he assisted his father, his duties at first consisting of piling and accounting for each cord of wood, and from this work he went to making railroad ties. For thirty-three years he has continued in railroad work, having seven different kinds of employment. For a short time he was with the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, and then returned to the Pennsylvania Company. With this road Mr. Thompson was associated as inspector of supplies, his field of work covering Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Virginia, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, until April 1, 1907, since which time he has been coach foreman with the Big Four. While with the other road he filled the position of general inspector and lumber agent for the Eastern system. Mr. Thompson is a self-made man, and his record is one of ability in every position he has ever held. Although his leading operations have been confined to railroad work he has invested at various times in mining stock and is one of the board of directors of the Best Lode mine, the condition of which is very satisfactory. Although he is well and widely known for his sterling character and many admirable qualities, he has claims for affection and gratitude on the great number of poor, sick and afflicted children, who, in his home, have been nursed to health and restored to happiness through his generosity. This is a most unusual charity and one which should ensure the highest esteem of every right-minded individual.

On Aug. 15, 1879, Mr. Thompson was married in Darke county, Ohio, to Mary Dwyer, daughter of William and Amanda (Lindemuth) Dwyer, the former of whom was a farmer and builder of pike roads in Darke county. The family was of Irish extraction. These parents spent their last days with Mrs. Thompson, the mother dying March 28, 1903. The father was a helpless paralytic at the home of Mr. Thompson where he died in January, 1904. The Dwyer children were: Mark, deceased; Edmund, of Minnesota; Clara, Mrs. W. S. Hood; Mary, Mrs. Thompson; Sarah and L. S., twins, the former Mrs. J. Mehan, the latter an engineer of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Martha B., Mrs. J. Kitrell; Frank, deceased. The mother was a consistent member of the Christian Church.

The children of Frank E. Thompson and his wife are as follows: W. D., a machinist and locomotive engineer; Rolla A., who had his foot crushed while in the employ of the Big Four as switchman; Raymond, a brakeman on the Pennsylvania railroad; Frank E., Jr., in United States Navy; Grace I. and an adopted son, Daniel W., at home, he being adopted at the age of three years. Mrs. Thompson is a valued and consistent member of the Christian Church. Fraternally Mr. Thompson belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America, and I. O. O. F. He is a Republican in his political views.

WILLIAM W. KENNEDY, the popular postmaster of Martinsville, Ind., was born in Morgan county, Ind., five miles west of Martinsville, Jan. 16, 1843, son of Luke C. and Jane (Blackford) Kennedy.

Luke C. Kennedy came from Kentucky to Morgan county, Ind., in 1828, and on deciding to remain in this State, returned to Kentucky, married Jane Blackford, and with his bride again came to Indiana, making the trip on horseback. He settled in Lamb's Bottoms in 1831, and there continued to make his home. Seven children were born to this pioneer couple, six boys and one girl—Samuel, John, James C., Mary, Benjamin D., William W. and Daniel P., all of the sons except John, who was a physician, serving as soldiers in the Civil war. The Kennedy family originally owned allegiance to England, the grandfather of Luke C. coming from Ireland and his wife from England, and the father of Luke C. was of Virginia.

William W. Kennedy received such education as he could get in the primitive schools of his boyhood, attending from one to three months each winter. He remained at home assisting his father on the farm until he was eighteen, at which time he entered the army in response to President Lincoln's first call for troops, enlisting for three months in Company K, 7th Ind. V. I., under Capt. Jefferson K. Scott, and Col. Ebenezer Dumont, and took part in the battles at Philippi, Laurel Hill and Cheat river in Virginia. At the last named battle he saw Gen. Garnett killed—this was the first Confederate general to fall. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, he returned home and re-enlisted this time in Company H, 33d Ind. V. I., under Capt. James E. Burton and Col. John Coburn, for three years. Again he served out his time, and his third enlistment was in Company B, 8th U. S. Vet. Vol., Gen. Hancock's Corps; a man must have served two years, and received an honorable discharge, before he could enter this command. He continued in the army until the close of the war. He saw the notorious Capt. Wirz hanged at Washington in 1865 for his cruelty to the prisoners of war at Andersonville.

After the war he returned home, and for a time attended commercial school at Indianapolis, and in the spring of 1867 attended the high school at Martinsville. He then entered politics, and for three years served as deputy sheriff. In 1870 he was elected county sheriff, and was re-elected in 1872, serving until 1874. From that time he was deputy auditor until 1878, when he engaged in the furniture and undertaking business with H. J. Hinson. The firm met with great success and the partnership lasted for four years, when Mr. Kennedy engaged in a mercantile business first with T. H. Parks and later with J. A. Robbins. In 1885 Mr. Kennedy bought a farm south of Martinsville, in Washington township, which he still owns. During this time he served as school trustee of Martinsville, and as a member of the city council. In January, 1906, he was appointed postmaster of that city, and this position he is today capably filling. He has proved an ideal public servant, and has given to his various duties constant and faithful as well as efficient service. For fourteen years he was chairman of the Central Committee of the Republican party.

On Jan. 3, 1872, Mr. Kennedy was married to Miss Sarah A. Taylor, of Martinsville, daughter of William B. and Jane (Esslinger) Taylor, the former a farmer and pork packer. Five children have been born of this union, namely: Charlie, who died at the age of fourteen; Grace, who died in infancy; Mamie, who died in infancy; Lilly, wife of Newton Claypool, of Crawfordsville; Yacht, at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are members of the Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Kennedy is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having joined Lodge No. 74, in 1868. He has always been active in Blankenship Post, No.

77, G. A. R. To close this brief sketch no words are more fitting than those of Mr. Kennedy's old commander, Gen. John Coburn (for whom it was his sad duty to act as pall bearer), who wrote in 1907:

"William W. Kennedy, of Martinsville, is an excellent citizen and a man of fine moral character and an upright, honorable gentleman. He was a member of Company H, in my regiment, and a brave and intelligent soldier, faithful and always ready for duty. His record as a soldier is most remarkable and an enviable one."

PHILIP A. RABER, a survivor of the Civil war who is an esteemed citizen and business man of Brooklyn, Ind., was born Jan. 23, 1834, at Lebanon, Pa., and was there reared, and educated in the common schools. He is a son of John and Anna M. (Manbeck) Raber, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania and passed their lives there. The family is of German extraction, and for years was engaged mainly in agriculture, all of the name being honored and respected members of the communities in which they lived.

John Raber, the father, followed a tailoring business, a man of industry and integrity. He died in 1841. He was a faithful worker in the German Reformed Church. His wife survived him many years, kept the family together and looked after their education. She was a woman of intelligence and Christian character. She passed away from earth in 1882, at the age of eighty-three years. To John Raber and wife were born the following children: Elias, Henry and Jonathan died in Pennsylvania; William lived in Pottsville, Pa., and died at the age of eighty-four; David S. died aged seventy in Pennsylvania; Rebecca came to Indiana, and died unmarried, in 1899; Miss Sarah resides in Indianapolis; John died in infancy; Philip A.; Mary A. and Cyrus died young; Catherine died in infancy; and Samuel P. served in the Civil war, and resides in Denver, Colorado.

Philip A. Raber was about seven years old when his father died. At the age of sixteen, he was apprenticed to the cabinet-making trade. During his three years he was paid no salary, and as his mother could not assist him, he was obliged to go into debt to clothe himself, and also, to purchase tools when he started out as a journeyman. Every cent of his indebtedness was paid, although not before 1854, when he came to Indianapolis and secured a position which enabled him to save something. He worked first for James Greer, and then went to old Germantown, on the line of Hamilton county, and worked here a year with good results. In 1855 he married and settled down to housekeeping in a one-room cabin. His health broke down from hard work, and he finally decided to return to Pennsylvania where he arrived with a cash capital of $7. A whole year passed away before he managed to get the malaria out of his system so that he could again take up his work, and he was then employed by his old employer, continuing with him six years at Pine Grove, Pa. He then went back to the home of his father-in-law in Marion county, Ind., and worked at cabinet making and carpentering for a time, later leasing one-half acre of land and erecting a small home. Here he worked making furniture, and as undertaker, and continued to prosper for three years.

In 1864 Mr. Raber was drafted for service in the army. Only a few of his drafted neighbors went into the army, all securing substitutes, but Mr. Raber went to the front in Company D, 38th Ind. V. I., and was sent to Chattanooga, first on detached duty, later with the regiment after Hood. In the following spring he went to Morehead City, marched to Rolla after Johnston, and while at Martha's Vineyard, peace was declared. The regiment then went to Washington and participated in the Grand Review. Mr. Raber was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., and received his pay and honorable discharge. During his term of service he endured much hardship, but was never either wounded or captured. He had two sun-strokes and has never fully recovered from the nervous strain.

After his discharge, Mr. Raber went in search of his wife and child, who had gone to the home of her brother in Illinois. They then returned to Indiana, and he built a house at McCordsville, and engaged in work at his trade, mainly the making of coffins. Here he was very prosperous and remained until 1872, and then removed to Paragon, in Morgan county, and engaged in a general mercantile business for the succeeding fifteen years. By this time Mr. Raber was in a position to invest a large amount of money. He went to Hastings, Nebr., bought a fine home in the town and an adjacent farm, residing there for two years. Returning to Paragon, he disposed of a considerable amount of property he owned there, and located at Brooklyn, where he built the handsome residence in which he still resides. This was in 1887, and since then he has made large real estate investments here and owns much valuable property. After selling his Nebraska property to advantage, he bought a fine White River Valley farm of 167½ acres, well-improved and in a fine state of cultivation, which yields him a large income. He also owns property in Daviess county, Ind., and is one of the capitalists of this part of the State.

Mr. Raber's career shows the ups and downs of life, and the many discouragements which he has met and overcome. Its record is one to encourage others in similar situations. He is a man of intelligence, business capacity, a high standard of honor, and deserves the high esteem in which he is held. In politics he is a Republican, and he and his family belong to the Methodist Church.

Mr. Raber married Martha Kinney, born Jan. 9, 1837, daughter of John and Rachel (Wilson) Kinney, of an old settled family of Marion county, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Kentucky. They married in Ohio, and removed to Indiana where they became people of means and importance, and consistently supported the Methodist Church. The Kinney children were: Washington, deceased; Polly A., Mrs. T. McConnell; Wilson, of Illinois; John, who was drowned when young; Benjamin, deceased, late of Hancock county, Ind.; James, deceased; Martha; Henry; Malinda, who died young; and Margaret, Mrs. McCord, of McCordsville. Mr. Kinney married (second) Eliza White, but no children were born of this union.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Raber have had ten children, as follows: Franklin H. and Edward, who died young; Dr. Charles, a dentist at Junction City, Kansas; Clara, Mrs. J. Vickory, of Indianapolis; George, deceased; Nettie, Mrs. Marshall, of Indianapolis; Emma, Mrs. W. Griggs, residing on a farm near Brooklyn; Lillian, Mrs. E. Harman; Lulu, Mrs. C. Kerzy, who died March, 1904; and Mattie, at home. Mr. Raber was formerly a member of the I. O. O. F.; and while in Pennsylvania of the Cadets of Temperance, who after they reached the age of eighteen became Sons of Temperance. He ranks high among the best citizens of his vicinity.

ISAAC KNIGHT, a retired farmer, a notary public and a well-known and prominent man of Morgan county, residing in Morgantown, was born Oct. 16, 1830, near Norfolk, Va., son of Levin and Emily (Ellis) Knight, both natives of Virginia.

The Knight family is of English origin, the grandfather being a native of England who was for many years a farmer in Virginia. His family was not unusually large. On the maternal side Mr. Knight comes of Irish ancestry, his grandfather Ellis emigrating from Ireland to Virginia. His family consisted of three children.

Rev. Levin Knight, father of Isaac, was a farmer and also a preacher in the Baptist Church. In the fall of 1832 he came to Indiana from Virginia and lived for seven years in Monroe county, and then moved to Brown county. There he resided until 1857 when he removed to Lucas county, Iowa, settling near Chariton, and there he died in 1867, aged seventy-six years. He married Emily Ellis, and to them were born twelve sons and six daughters, among whom were: Margaret, wife of David T. Wright, of Crawford, Nebr.; Isaac; Caroline, wife of William Brown, of Dunlap, Iowa; Dr. James H., of Morgantown; Emily, wife of Mr. Blakely, of Luray, Mo.; Dempsey, of Morgantown; Joshua, of Mattoon, Ill.; Frank, of Iowa; Washington, of Chariton, Iowa; and Milton, of Winterset, Iowa. The mother was also a consistent member of the Baptist Church, in which faith she passed away in 1863, aged sixty-three years.

Isaac Knight was two years old when his parents came to Indiana, and he has made this State his home ever since. For eleven years he lived in Monroe county, passed eight years in Brown county, but the balance of the time has been spent in Morgan county. For five years he resided in Greene township, and for three years engaged in merchandising at Cope. He was reared a farmer boy, and his main business has been along agricultural lines. During the Civil war he was much occupied in trading. Seven of his brothers served in the war.

From Greene township Mr. Knight in 1859 moved to Hensley township, in Johnson county, and lived there until March, 1864, moving then to Morgantown, which has been his home ever since. He owns an excellent forty-acre farm one-half mile north of Morgantown, and twelve and one-half acres within the town limits. Mr. Knight has been a large land owner, at one time having 320 acres in Lancaster county, Nebr., and 240 acres in Jackson township, this county, but he has been liberal with his children and enjoys seeing them occupying farms of their own, retaining for himself only the tracts mentioned. In 1867 he built a fine home in Morgantown which remains the family residence.

On May 14, 1854, Mr. Knight was married to Miss Emily Brian, daughter of William and Rebecca (Flake) Brian, and to this union were born seven sons and three daughters, namely: (1) Benjamin, a farmer, in young manhood a teacher, and now in Lancaster county, Nebr., where he served four years as treasurer, married Ruth E. Green and has children, Jessie, Grace, James, William and Alina. (2) John W. was also a teacher in his early manhood, and has been a farmer, but now he conducts a lumber and coal yard, and an elevator at Walton, Nebr. He married Lizzie Blackburn, and they have children: Omar, Oltie and Ethel. (3) William B., a farmer in Lancaster county, Nebr., married Mollie Sprague, and they have children, Doris, Blanch and Alonzo. (4) Nettie married Jarvis Merriman, of Lancaster county, Nebr., and they have children, Ray, Bessie, Ira, James, Isaac and Lena Emily. (5) Anna May married James A. Moore, teacher of the high school at Trafalgar, Ind. (6) Alonzo, a farmer in Jackson township, married Novie Anderson, and they have one child, Russell. (7) Clarence, a teacher in Morgantown, married Dot Flint, and they have four children, three boys and one girl. (8) Lula is the wife of Fred Wemer, of Morgantown. (9) and (10) died in infancy. The mother of this family, died June 1, 1900, aged sixty-four years.

On Feb. 17, 1901, Mr. Knight was married (second) to Mrs. Mary Wemer, a widow of Fred Wemer, Sr., and daughter of Francis Anton and Theresa (Reichley) Rund, natives of Germany. Five children were born to this marriage, as follows: William Henry, who died at the age of seven years; Theresa C., who married Edward Anderson, of Morgantown and has two children, Ralph P. and Frederick; Mary L., who married Frank Martin, and they live at Owensboro, Ky.; Frederick Francis, a druggist in Morgantown; and Julius E., a resident of Indianapolis, who married May Shake. The parents of Mrs. Mary Knight came to America in 1849, and after living in Philadelphia, Indianapolis and other places finally settled in Brown county, Ind., where the father died aged eighty-one. The mother died aged fifty-one years. The second marriage of Mr. Rund was to Sallie Lee. The children of his first marriage were seven in number: Francis F., of Brown county; Mrs. Knight; August, of Columbus, Ind.; Louis, of Brown county; Harmon, of Brown county; Joseph, deceased; and Theresa Rund. The surviving children of his second marriage are: Flora, wife of Cass McDonald, of Georgetown, Ind., and Bert, of Brown county. Mr. and Mrs. Rund were Catholics in religious belief.

In politics Mr. Knight has been a lifelong Republican, and for three years was county commissioner elected on that ticket. His fraternal connections are with Morgantown Masonic Lodge, No. 258, and Lodge No. 358, I. O. O. F. Mrs. Knight belongs to the M. E. Church, but Mr. Knight is an elder in the Christian Church, and one of its leading supporters.

JOHN W. STEPHENSON, formerly a prominent contractor and builder of Indianapolis, died at his home in that city, after a busy and useful life. He was born in Hendricks county, Ind., Aug. 20, 1839, son of William and Sallie (Bradford) Stephenson, both of Kentucky and early settlers of that locality. They both died in Hendricks county, highly respected. The mother was a Missionary Baptist. Their children were: John W.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Ezra Stephenson; Frank C.; Washington I. The mother died when her youngest child was nine months old. Prior to his marriage with Sallie (Bradford) Stephenson, William Stephenson had been married and had children, as follows: Owen, residing on the homestead; Eliza, who died unmarried; Mary, unmarried; and Maylon.

In 1859 John W. Stephenson went to Missouri, and there married Malinda J. Beckley. After a few months he brought his bride to Hendricks county, Ind., where both had lived. He had been brought up to a farmer's life, but he also learned the trade of a carpenter, and after his marriage he became a carpenter and builder, and in 1862 located in Indianapolis, but after a short residence there returned to the country, and for five years worked at his trade, when once more he located in the city and became very prominent, taking large contracts, buying and selling property. Among his purchases was a desirable building lot upon which he erected a commodious brick residence where his death occurred. In his fraternal relations he was a prominent Mason.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson had a family as follows: Addison E. died at the age of twenty years; Minnie L. married Rev. M. Ingle, located at Harper, Kans.; Lena, Mrs. William Kenna, of Wichita, Kans.; Robert E., a machinist with the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad, at Indianapolis; Nellie, visiting Mrs. Ingle; Frank, foreman at the Sarvin wheel works, died March 10, 1892, at the age of seventeen years; George W., chief engineer of the Terminal Traction Building; Frederick and Edward, twins, of whom Frederick was killed while working on a railroad, and Edward died in May, 1904; and Leroy, a steel and iron worker, fell in the New Claypool hotel in 1902, and was killed. Mr. Stephenson was a consistent member of the Baptist Church, to which faith his wife also adhered, and he was a man highly esteemed by a wide circle of warm friends.

Mrs. Stephenson was one of the honored residents of Indianapolis, noted for her charities and many excellent qualities which endeared her to rich and poor alike. She was born in Shelby county, Ky., March 27, 1841, daughter of James G. and Elizabeth (Christa) Beckley, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. James G. Beckley was a son of James, who was born in Virginia, and an early settler in Kentucky, where he was a successful farmer. His children were: Delila, born Feb. 16, 1792; William, Dec. 16, 1800; John, Feb. 28, 1802; George, Sept. 19, 1803; Elizabeth, Jan. 11, 1805; Sallie, Nov. 15, 1806; Catherine, July 17, 1808; James G., Jan. 16, 1810; Mary, Dec. 5, 1812; Jane, March 15, 1815; Alford, Nov. 14, 1816; Wesley, March 15, 1818; Richard, Oct. 6, 1819; Mary, Aug. 19, 1820. The mother died in 1827, firm in the faith of the Independent Methodists.

James G. Beckley grew to manhood in Kentucky and then removed to Indiana, settling in 1845 among the pioneers, buying land and improving it from a piece of heavy timber to a well cultivated farm, when he sold it and purchased a larger farm and there remained until 1860, when he moved to Missouri and again bought land. However, the Civil war compelled him to return to Indiana and stay a year. He then returned to his Missouri farm and within a year disposed of it and located in Indianapolis, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1894. After finally locating in Indianapolis, he did some teaming, but later retired entirely. In religious faith he was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and he lived an honorable, upright life, filled with good deeds. His wife also died in Indianapolis, and she was an earnest Baptist. Her parents were William and Elizabeth Christa, the former of whom was born Aug. 23, 1786, and the latter March 23, 1788. Prior to his marriage with his second wife he was married to Sarah Miles, a sister of Elizabeth, and she bore him a daughter Mary, who died in August, 1833. His second marriage was blessed with children as follows: Balinda, Mrs. Thompson; Laura; Elizabeth, mother of Mrs. Stephenson; John; James; Sarah, who died at the age of nineteen years; William; Elisha, who is yet living; Isaac, who died in 1903; Israel; Eleanor, Mrs. F. Underwood. After the death of his second wife, Mr. Christa married Elizabeth Boyers, and had no issue. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church, and one of its pillars. The children born to the parents of Mrs. Stephenson were: Sarah A., unmarried; Elizabeth E., Mrs. J. B. Brinker; Malinda J.; Eliza, Mrs. Atkins; Mary, Mrs. Hamilton; Delila T., Mrs. Owens; Julia N., Mrs. Morgan; Henry L., of Hendricks county; James A., of Springfield, Ohio, a prominent business man.

NATHAN GILBERT, who entered into rest Aug. 23, 1875, is still remembered as a good friend, kind neighbor and upright citizen. He was a son of William and Ruth (Shirley) Gilbert, he a native of Virginia who early settled in Ohio and engaged in farming. To William and Ruth Gilbert were born: Nathan; Mrs. Sarah Hiatt; Griffith, who died in Indiana, leaving a family; John, who died in Indiana; William, Alexander and Benjamin, who died in Ohio; and Margaret, who married Joseph Cochran. Harvey was a half-brother of these children. The family was of the Methodist faith.

In 1845 Nathan Gilbert was married to Martha (Boyles) Dryden, who was born Aug. 26, 1816, in Ohio county, near Wheeling, W. Va., daughter of Thomas and Ann (Bonner) Boyles. She was the widow of Isaac N. Dryden, who died in 1840.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert came to Indiana, and in 1853 settled in Morgan county. He bought land and engaged successfully in general farming and stockraising. He became one of the solid, substantial men of the county, and was a representative of its very best class of citizens. He left a large property which he had accumulated, assisted by his most estimable and capable wife. In his early life he was a Whig, and a Free Soiler, but he later became a Republican. Personally Mr. Gilbert was genial and charitable, generous to the poor and needy, always ready to wait on the sick or help in times of trouble, and was beloved by all who knew him. Mrs. Gilbert still holds the old homestead farm which is conducted by her son Nathan, who resides on the place. She herself has retired to Brooklyn, where she has a beautiful and comfortable residence of modern architecture. She is surrounded by all that can make life pleasant, and is the center of a wide circle of affectionate friends. To Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert were born two children: (1) Anna, married John C. Comer, now deceased, who was bailiff of the Criminal Court at Indianapolis. (2) Nathan, born Nov. 13, 1850, is a prominent farmer and successful contractor, of Brooklyn. He operates the old homestead farm, and was extensively engaged in contracting, being interested in the construction of the Indianapolis & Martinsville Interurban Railway. He is prominent in the Masonic fraternity, and a consistent member of the Methodist Church, as is his wife. He married Miss Laura Major, daughter of Rev. Noah J. Major, extended mention of whom will be found in another part of this work. The children born to this marriage were: Earl O., county surveyor, who married Miss Belle Cramer; Don H. and Ralph M., both deceased; Floy; and Jessie B., deceased.

By a previous marriage, Mr. Gilbert had had seven children—two sons and five daughters—namely: Green N., who became a member of Company E, 12th Ind. V. I., in the Civil war; Robert, of the 15th Ind. V. I., who was killed within twelve feet of the breast works at the battle of Missionary Ridge; Mrs. Ruth Artheton; Isabel, Mrs. McDaniel; Nancy; Sarah; and Mrs. Lucy Harvey.

Mrs. Gilbert was five years old when her parents moved to Ohio, and there she grew to womanhood and married, in 1833, Isaac N. Dryden, who died in 1840. He was born in Ohio, son of William Dryden of Maryland.

who settled and died in Ohio, having had children as follows: Isaac N.; Thomas, of Kansas; Louisa and Sally, who died single; and William, who died in Kansas. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Dryden settled on a farm in Ohio where they prospered until the death of Mr. Dryden on Sept. 7, 1840. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Three children were left fatherless: (1) Nancy died unmarried. (2) Thomas F., who served for over three years in the Civil war, for many years was a prominent physician at Clayton, Ind., where he died. (3) W. H. Dryden is an insurance agent at Martinsville, Ind. He married Miss Mary E. Thornburg, daughter of Benjamin and Susan (Monical) Thornburg, members of two of the oldest families in Indiana and Morgan county. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dryden have four children: Ada Darle, who married Dr. E. M. Sweet, of Martinsville; Harry W., a graduate of Purdue, and now an electrician at Schenectady, N. Y., who married Mrs. Belle Coleman, of that city; Weley E., a fancy carriage painter at Martinsville, who married Sadie Horner; and Flora A., who married Homer Elliott, a mechanic at Indianapolis. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dryden are Methodists, and he is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was one of the first six soldiers in camp out of Morgan county, enlisting in Company E, 15th Ind. V. I., under Capt. G. Lamb and Col. George D. Wagoner. He was made duty sergeant, and was mustered out in June, 1864, at the expiration of his term of enlistment.

Thomas Boyles, grandfather of Mrs. Gilbert, was born in Ireland, and his wife Mary in Wales. They were married in America, and both died in Virginia. Their children were: James, Jacob, Jane (Mrs. Beard) and Thomas, Jr.

Thomas Boyles, Jr., father of Mrs. Gilbert, was born in Maryland, and was married in Pennsylvania to Ann Bonner, a native of that State. They settled on a farm in Ohio county, W. Va., and lived there until after the birth of all their children, except the youngest. In 1821 they moved to Adams county, Ohio, having traded the West Virginia farm for the one in Ohio. The latter comprised 250 acres and was divided into three tracts, with three cabins, and was evidently intended to be occupied by three families. Mr. Boyles did not need three homes, and he moved them all to one place, making a comfortable dwelling which was occupied until he had time to build a more commodious residence. He succeeded well in his enterprises, became the owner of much property and stock and was widely known and respected as a man of honor and integrity. Near the close of the War of 1812 he entered the army, but saw little service. Like many others, the great military genius of General Jackson attached him to the Democratic party as his follower, although he was opposed to slavery. He was a man of such intelligence and responsibility that he was frequently called upon to fill public office, and his honest service was given upon every occasion. In religious belief he was a Presbyterian, and was through life a consistent Christian gentleman. His wife died at the age of seventy-seven years, but he survived to the age of ninety-two. His children were: William, who lived and died in Ohio; Mary, Mrs. John Saulsbury, of Brown county, Ohio; Sarah, Mrs. A. Henderson, who lived and died in Illinois; Jane, Mrs. A. Cropper, who lived and died in Ohio; Margaret, who married James Connor, and settled in Ohio, and died there; Thomas, who died young; James, who in Ohio; Eliza, who married E. B. Kelly; Martha, who married Nathan Gilbert; Emeline, Mrs. William Guthrie; Anna W., Mrs. A. Brownfield; and Lucinda, who died near the old homestead in Ohio, the wife of Lawson Watson. The last named had six children, all of whom were born on Sunday, and the first death in the family was that of Mr. Watson, who passed away at a ripe old age.

RUFUS B. SMITH, a descendant of one of the old and honorable families of Morgan county, is a prominent and representative farmer and stockman in his native locality. He was born Oct. 16, 1845, in Harrison township, Morgan county, Ind., where he was reared and educated in the common schools.

James Smith, grandfather of Rufus B., removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and then to Indiana, becoming an early settler of Morgan county. He served in the War of 1812, was a loyal soldier, a good farmer and an honest, high-minded man, devoted to his country, family and religious beliefs. He married a Miss Orberon, who was born in Ireland, and who came to America when six years old. She survived him many years, dying aged ninety-nine years. Their children were: Andrew, a prominent man, who served as deputy sheriff of Marion county; John, who died in Illinois; Sally, Mrs. Stotts; Mrs. Mary Morgan; Nelly, Mrs. Cushiner; Robert, father of our subject; and James, who died leaving two children.

Robert Smith, father of Rufus B., was born in 1804, in Ohio, and accompanied the family to Indiana in 1822, settling south of and near Waverly, Morgan county. He remained at home until marriage and then settled down to farming and stock raising, a business he continued until death. He served as superintendent in the construction of the old canal. In early days he took produce on flat boats, by way of the White River, on down to New Orleans and other sections of the South. After marriage he settled on the homestead and took charge, paid off the indebtedness which his father had incurred, and thus acquired the farm. Later he added largely to the farm and became a very prominent landowner and substantial citizen. Until 1856 he was a Democrat, but upon the organization of the Republican party, found he could most conscientiously support its principles. During the Rebellion, Governor Morton found in him a wise adviser and a loyal supporter. He was made county commissioner and faithfully assisted the widows of the soldiers. He was a most worthy member of the Methodist Church. His death took place April 14, 1897, at the age of ninety-three years, honored and esteemed by all who knew him. His wife, Cynthia A. E. (Stott) Smith, died in April, 1893, equally respected and beloved. She was a daughter of old pioneers of the county. The children born to Robert Smith and wife were: Rufus B.; John C., who died young; Isabel, Mrs. John Shuffelbarger; Harriet A., Mrs. William Dorman; Sarah A., Mrs. A. Swaringen; Mrs. Clara Kelly; and James, who died young.

Rufus B. Smith has made Morgan county his home during the larger portion of his life, leaving the paternal roof for the first time in the spring of 1865, when he enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering Company E, 148th Ind. V. I., and was first corporal and acting sergeant under Col. Nick Ruckle of Indianapolis. He saw considerable heavy service looking after bushwhackers, guarding bridges and watching the movements of Gen. Hood. At the time of the surrender of Gen. Lee his regiment was stationed near Columbia, Tenn., and he was mustered out at Nashville, returned to Indianapolis and received his honorable discharge in September, 1865. Mr. Smith then resumed farming and when ready to begin life for himself, made an arrangement with his father by which he operated the homestead farm for some years. In 1869 he married and settled on the farm his father owned, paying rent and later buying the property to which he has since added until he owns 472 acres of as fine land as can be found in the county. It is mainly situated in the White River Valley. The family home is a commodious, two-story residence, which, with all necessary outbuildings and barns, is located on a natural bluff overlooking the valley, with ornamental and fruit trees surrounding. Mr. Smith is engaged in general farming and stockraising and is one of the successful and practical farmers of this part of the State.

In politics he is a strong Republican, but has had no aspirations for political preferment, although he is in every way qualified to fill responsible positions.

In February, 1868, Mr. Smith married Miss Harriet P. Paxton, who was born in Tennessee, a daughter of William Paxton, and accompanied her parents to Indiana. Mr. Paxton made no permanent settlement in this State, but later, with his brother, pushed farther West and since that time she lost sight of him. She soon after was bereaved of her mother, and grew up and was carefully reared and educated in the home of John Shuffelbarger. Her one brother was lost sight of in Illinois, many years ago. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith were the following: Anna married George Champlin, a blacksmith at Waverly, and has one child, Rosa Bell; Dora, Mrs. Park, is now at home, and has a son, Fred S.; Nelly married Calvin Thacker, a farmer, and has two children, Crystal F. and Fleeta I.; Walter married Miss Effie Hays, has five children living, Ralph, Glenden, Esther, Helen and Gail, and is farming on the homestead; and Bertha, Mrs. I. Hays, died, leaving no children.

IRA H. JORDAN, M. D., a successful physician and surgeon, of Indianapolis, was born in Rosedale, Parke county, Ind., Oct. 7, 1877, son of Dr. John S. and Elizabeth A. (Fisher) Jordan, both natives of the same county.

Dr. John S. Jordan is a physician of long standing and fine reputation in Indiana, and comes of one of the most prominent professional families of the South, his grandfather being the founder of the Kentucky State Medical College, and his father being one of the founders of Greencastle College, which has since become De Pauw University. Dr. Jordan has been a man of marked ability in his day, and has made and lost several fortunes, but in spite of reverses is hopeful of retrieving his losses, and is actively at work at his profession. Dr. Ira H. is the youngest of his two sons. The other, DeWitt Jordan, M. D., is located at Anderson, Indiana.

Dr. Ira H. Jordan was educated in the high school and business college, and obtained his professional education at the Central Medical College in Indianapolis, having graduated from that institution in March, 1901. Before completing his college course he entered the United States service during the Spanish-American war as assistant surgeon in the field hospital, and his experiences in this connection have proved invaluable to him, being of more practical value than many years in the school room. He belongs to the fraternal society of his Alma Mater, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World, in which he is local examiner.

Dr. Jordan was married Feb. 22, 1901, to Miss Louise May Hemery, of Louisville, Ky., who was educated in St. Joseph's Academy. Dr. Jordan is a young man of bright promise and high aspiration in his chosen profession. He is a member of the Methodist Church, while his wife is a Catholic. Both the Doctor and his estimable wife have won a high social standing in the community. They have many friends, and their future is promising.

BARTLEY SELLERS, late of Brooklyn, a prominent and representative farmer and stockraiser and a successful business man of Morgan county, was born Oct. 20, 1830, in Johnston county, N. C., son of Jordan and Elizabeth (Mason) Sellers, both natives of the same State. He died June 1, 1906.

Jordan Sellers, the father, was a son of Arntil Sellers, a native of Ireland, who came to America during the Revolutionary war and acted as a scout for the Patriot army. After the close of the war he settled in Johnston county, N. C., and there married, reared a family and acquired so much land along the Cape Fear River that he was able to leave all his children provided with farms. In politics he was an ardent Whig, and he was elected to many responsible positions in his county and township. He was a worthy member of the Primitive Baptist Church. His children were: Mary, Mrs. John Murrow; Martha; Samuel;

Gurley; Bennett and Jordan. The four sons all owned adjoining farms and all were large slave owners. Later they started to make a settlement in Alabama, taking with them all their possessions, including their slaves. Three of the brothers continued on to Alabama, and eventually became very prominent men in that State.

Jordan Sellers, father of our subject, accompanied his brothers as far as Jamestown, a gold mining town in North Carolina, and he decided to stop and try the mining business. He sold his slaves to his brothers. After mining for some twelve years and losing heavily, he sold out, and in 1851 moved to Indiana and settled near Mooresville. Here he rented land and operated it, but was never able to regain what he had lost in the mining venture. In politics he was first a Whig, and later a Republican, but was never much of a politician. Mr. Sellers was an honest and upright man and had much sympathy in his misfortunes. He was a worthy member of the Primitive Baptist Church in his old home, but later, he became associated with the Methodist Church and lived up to its teachings in the fullest degree. In 1857 Mr. Sellers lost his first wife, and was married twice afterward. He survived his wives, and spent his last days among his children. He died at the home of a daughter in Missouri, in August, 1898, he having attained the age of eighty-nine years. In his native county and State he married Elizabeth Mason, a daughter of Richard Mason, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, a prominent slave owner and one of the largest cotton planters in Johnston county. Mr. Mason died on his own plantation, and was carried to his last resting place by his own slaves who sincerely mourned the death of so kind a master. He was a Primitive Baptist in religious belief. Among his children were Elizabeth; Sarah, Mrs. Hopkins; and Richard, a slave trader in Alabama. The children born to Jordan and Elizabeth Sellers were: Martha, Mrs. Joseph Allen; Bartley; Abijah, of Hendricks county, Ind.; Peter, who died at Mooresville; John, a Quaker preacher, who died in Hendricks county, leaving seven children; Mrs. M. Elliott, at whose home the father died; Richard, who served in the Rebellion, and is a business man in Indianapolis; and Elizabeth, Mrs. S. Allen. All came to Indiana and married here. Abijah, Peter and Richard served in the Rebellion, and Abijah was wounded.

Bartley Sellers was nine years old when his father moved first, stopping at Jamestown, and he was soon able to assist around the mines, first as a kind of messenger boy. He remained mining and farming in that vicinity until 1852, when he joined his father's family in Indiana. He had remained in North Carolina in order to assist a Quaker in his efforts to get thirteen slaves across the Ohio River into freedom. After coming to Indiana, he worked as a farm hand until 1853, providently saving his earnings so that he was justified in getting married and founding a home of his own. He rented some land, and two years later bought the farm he had been working, and continued to prosper. He engaged in a general line of farming and did much stock raising, mainly hogs, feeding for market. He became one of the largest shippers in his section and was also successful in pork packing. Later he took in as partner, J. C. Ferguson, a well-known pork packer and business man of Indianapolis, who had large financial resources. This partnership continued a number of years and was very profitable to all concerned. During this time Mr. Sellers became intimately acquainted on the Board of Trade in Indianapolis, and was identified with such capitalists as W. H. English, the Mansurs and the Yandeses. After dissolving partnership, Mr. Sellers continued alone in the business. He bought and sold both stock and lands for many years and was regarded as a safe and careful man of business whose advice was well worth following. Mr. Sellers continued his agricultural life until 1885, when he built a brick block in Brooklyn, into which he moved a store which he had been conducting on the west side of the creek, and this he conducted as a grocery until 1900, when he retired from active business. After a long and useful life he reaped the rewards of early industry, and his last years were spent in the enjoyment of the fruits of his early toil.

Mr. Sellers built a commodious and comfortable home in the midst of large grounds, and there the evening of his life was spent. He had been one of the most active and progressive business men of Morgan county and had been of the greatest value as a citizen. He brought much capital into the county by his operations and worked hard to advance conditions through the farming communities which would better repay the hard labor of the farmer. Mr. Sellers cast his first Presidential vote for Fremont in 1856, and he always afterward advocated Republican principles, taking an active interest in all public questions, but never aspiring to public office. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. For a number of years he belonged to the Methodist Church.

Mr. Sellers married Aug. 2, 1855, Mary A. Wright, born April 14, 1837, in Morgan county, a kind and cheerful helpmate. She is a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Blunk) Wright, both natives of Southern Indiana. Andrew Wright was born in Harrison county, Aug. 8, 1808, and was a son of William and Mary (Inyard) Wright, of Pennsylvania and Kentucky, respectively. William Wright served as lieutenant of his company in the war of 1812, and came from Kentucky to Indiana in 1807. It was then a Territory, and he was one of the first settlers in Harrison county, where he entered land, improved a farm and reared a family of ten children. Andrew Wright was born and reared in Harrison county and in 1834 married Elizabeth Blunk, daughter of Amos Blunk, and ten children were born to them, of whom Mrs. Sellers and James Wright are the only survivors. Mr. Andrew Wright moved to Morgan county in 1836, and settled in Madison township, where all his children except William (born in Harrison county, Ind.) were born. He first bought a tract of 160 acres of land and later added eighty to it, making a good farm which he improved from the rough timber land. He died April 8, 1893, well known and highly esteemed. He was prominent in the work of the Methodist Church. He was reared in the Democratic faith, but during the latter part of his life was a Republican, casting his first Republican vote for Lincoln in 1860.

Mr. Wright was married thrice, his first wife being the mother of Mrs. Sellers. Her brother James resides on a portion of the old homestead. The second marriage was blessed with two children, the survivor being Emma, wife of William Martin. There was no issue of the third marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Sellers had no children of their own to survive infancy, three babes passing away. Then they took to their home and hearts two orphan children, Mary Elizabeth Sellers and John Spores. The former was but a month old and an orphan daughter of Abijah Sellers. She grew to attractive womanhood and married William P. Bragg, but is since deceased. John Spores was four years old when kind Fortune caused his adoption by Mr. Sellers, who generously permitted the child to retain his birthright name and to insert that of Sellers. John Sellers Spores was reared and educated by Mr. and Mrs. Sellers just as one of their own blood would have been, and he has attained prominence as a physician in Brooklyn and gave a son's devotion and affection to his foster parents, and now lovingly looks after the welfare of Mrs. Sellers, who survives her husband and makes her home in Brooklyn.

H. C. SCEARCE, a descendant of an old and honorable pioneer family of Hendricks county, Ind., and a prominent lumber and grain dealer at Mooresville, was born Sept. 25, 1866, son of George W. and Sophia (Chamberlin) Scarce, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Madison, Indiana.

George W. Scarce was a son of Ezra W. and Elizabeth (Shepard) Scarce, natives of Virginia and early settlers in Kentucky. Both paternal and maternal families were of English extraction. Ezra Scarce moved to Hendricks county, Ind., in 1842, and there bought a farm which was slightly improved. He spent his life in its cultivation. In early years he was a Primitive Baptist, but later became a convert to the Universalist faith. His children were: John, who established and for many years ably conducted the Hendricks county Union, died at Danville, Ill.; W. W. gained distinction in the Civil War as lieutenant-colonel of the 51st Ind. V. I.; George W.; and Joanna K., died unmarried.

George W. Scarce was eight years of age when he came with his parents to Indiana in 1842. He attended the public schools and engaged in farming in young manhood, and in 1885 was half owner in the Mooresville flouring mill, which he later entirely acquired and operated until 1889, when he sold it. Although he always had his home on the farm, he carefully looked after his other interests, and is a very capable business man. He is public spirited, too, and was one of the promoters and organizers of the Hendricks County Fire Insurance Company, a number of years its secretary and later its president, his management making it one of the leading companies in insurance in this locality. In politics Mr. Scarce is a Republican. During the Civil War he proved his loyalty to his country through three years of faithful service, with the rank of captain in the 51st Ind. V. I., his record being one of honor and distinction. He was wounded at the battle of Nashville.

He accompanied Gen. Streight in his famous raid and with him was sent to Belle Isle. His brother, Col. W. W. Scarce, was also captured and with Gen. Streight and others sent to Libby prison. He assisted in the making of the tunnel through which the party escaped and were succored by a Union lady of Richmond, who supplied them with provisions and arms. Mr. Scarce is a leading member of the Methodist Church and has filled many of its official positions; he is also an active member of the I. O. O. F., and of the G. A. R., and is an enthusiastic temperance worker. With his wife he resides on the old homestead, surrounded by all the comforts of rural life. The latter is a daughter of George Chamberlin, an early settler at Madison, Ind., who was a boot and shoe maker by trade. Later he moved to Danville, Ind., and there he conducted a shoe store and died in that place, one of its most respected citizens. He was a member of the first Odd Fellow lodge of Indiana, and continued his connection with the order through life, one of the oldest members in the State. In religious belief he was a Universalist. His children were: Sophia, mother of our subject; Maria, Mrs. J. McCoy; John, of Iowa; and George, who was killed by a convict, while he was on duty as guard at the Jeffersonville prison.

The children born to George W. Scarce and wife were: H. C., of this sketch; Edward A., a farmer; Miss Martha L., a competent and popular teacher; Grace, who married C. Z. Cook, a bookkeeper at Danville; and Miss Bertha.

H. C. Scarce was born and reared on the home farm in Hendricks county and obtained a good, common school education. In 1885, at the age of nineteen years, he came to Mooresville and took charge of his father's interest in the mill, and has made his home here ever since except one year spent in Kentucky in the lumber business. Upon his return to Mooresville he successfully engaged in the grain and elevator business, alone until 1892, when he took into partnership Mr. Comer, and added lumber to the business. He operated very extensively in both lumber and grain, and in 1902 the business was incorporated under the name of Scarce & Comer Company. They own their elevator plant and ground, and do a very large business. Mr. Scarce is secretary of this company, and was for several years connected with the local telephone company. He is a progressive and capable business man, one who is identified with the leading interests of this section. Politically he is a Republican.

In 1889 Mr. Searce was married to Miss Mattie Comer, born Nov. 30, 1867, at Mooresville, daughter of Mathew and Adela (Harris) Comer, the former of Wayne county, and the latter of Randolph county, both families being early settlers in the State. Mathew Comer was a pioneer sawmill man and operated mills many years, and later retired to Mooresville where he died in March, 1901. He was a very active Whig, later a Republican. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and a leading spirit in the moral life of the community, supporting all movements looking toward the benefit of this section. He filled all the official positions in the church and was universally esteemed. His wife died in March, 1881, leaving behind the record of a good, Christian woman, church member and devoted wife and mother. Their children were: Mary J., who married W. C. Mitchell, a banker and prominent citizen of Martinsville; Sarah A., Mrs. H. E. Branch; Levi C., of Los Angeles, Cal.; William C., of Los Angeles, Cal.; Minnie, Mrs. W. W. Wolf; and Mattie, Mrs. Searce. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Searce includes one daughter and one son, Helen A., born May 16, 1890; and George Comer, born July 25, 1905. Mr. and Mrs. Searce are both members of the M. E. Church. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and in 1900 was elected Grand Patriarch of the Grand Encampment of Indiana, also serving the order as Grand Representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge in 1902 and 1903. He is also a Knight of Pythias, and a member of the Hoo Hoos, a lumbermen's social organization. In 1905 he was elected president of the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association of Indiana and in the same year resigned to accept the secretaryship of this association, which position he holds at present.

PARKER E. BUGBY, the engineer on the Big Four road whose accidental death, Aug. 21, 1906, was a shock to his many friends, was a man of wide and tried experience, having followed his profession for fully forty years. Born at Aurora, N. Y., he was the son of Lyman M. and Polly (Chadwick) Bugby.

Parker Bugby, grandfather of Parker E., was of Scotch extraction. For many years he made his residence in the State of New York.

Later he moved to Michigan, where, after many years of fruitful industry, he died. He was married twice, the second time to a woman by the name of Simmons. By the first marriage there were two sons: Lyman, who is mentioned below; and one who settled in Illinois, where he died. By the second marriage there were two daughters: Janet, Mrs. Cord; and Mary, who has never married, and resides in Michigan.

Lyman Bugby, a splendid business man, was for many years a prominent manufacturer of Indianapolis, being proprietor of one of the oldest hub factories in the State. Born in the State of New York, he there early entered a woolen factory, and becoming proficient in many branches of the industry continued his work in different woolen mills in his section for many years during his young manhood. Eventually, however, hoping to better his prospects, he moved West and settled at Manchester, Mich., where he opened a wagon and buggy hub factory. After several years of successful management he moved his plant to Pittsburg, Ind., and there continued the business. Being the first industry of its kind in the State—manufacturing hubs by machinery—it met with very good success, and for three years he continued the business in the same place; then he moved his plant to Indianapolis, locating on South Illinois street, and starting the first establishment of its kind in that city. Taking a partner, he ran the business under the firm name of J. R. Osgood & Co. for several years, increasing its output from time to time and meeting with most desirable results. Finally, however, he sold his interest to his partners, who continued the industry, giving the establishment the name of the Sarven Wheel Factory. Mr. Bugby now opened a soap and candle factory in the place, under the firm name of Bugby & Smythers, and turning out excellent goods and working up a large custom they continued the industry with marked success for many years. They had proceeded a long way on the road to fortune when a fire unfortunately destroyed their buildings, entailing a heavy loss. Mr. Bugby now courageously took up the battle of life anew, embarking in the elevator and grain business, and making his headquarters on South Pennsylvania street. Here he carried on a large shipping business for several years, making partially good his previous loss. Finally, however, from over-exertion he incurred a spinal affection which unfitted him for work, and he retired from business altogether. He died after three years of invalidism, in January, 1863.

Mr. Bugby married, in the State of New York, Polly A. Chadwick, daughter of Elisha Chadwick, a New York farmer, who died while in the West on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Bugby. Mrs. Chadwick had six children: Luther, who died in Indiana; Archibald, who died in Missouri; George, who in his younger days prospected in the gold fields of California, and later returning East settled in Illinois, where he died; Polly A., Mrs. Bugby; Etna; and Lydia, who married L. C. Draper, a man of letters, who started what is now the choice and valuable public library at Madison, Wis. Of these children, Polly A. (Mrs. Bugby) died at St. Augustine, Fla., Sept. 21, 1900, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. To Mr. and Mrs. Bugby were born three children: Parker E., who is mentioned below; Lucy, who married C. Alden, of New Smyrna, Fla.; and Mary, who married E. D. Cully, who some time ago died at Indianapolis (she is now residing in St. Augustine, Florida).

Mr. Bugby possessed all those sterling traits of character that go into the making of a good business man—sound judgment, alertness and courage. He wielded a large influence in his various places of residence. A man of integrity and strong religious convictions, he was a deacon and liberal member of the Baptist Church for many years, and to this denomination his wife also belonged. In political affairs he at first affiliated with the Whigs and later with the Republicans.

Parker E. Bugby was only a small boy when his parents moved from New York to Michigan, and he was still young when they settled in Indianapolis, in 1851. In these different places of abode he acquired his education, becoming especially well grounded in mathematics, and to some extent in the sciences. After settling in Indianapolis he assisted his father for some years in business, and there, in 1862, he began firing an engine, on the old Bee Line Railroad, making his run to Union City. After sixteen months of faithful service he was enabled to run an engine, and for three years he took charge of a pony engine, running trains in and out of the Union station. Gaining in this time much proficiency in engineering, he was next assigned to a run on a freight train to Union City. Thoroughly trustworthy and competent, after three years he was promoted to engineer of a passenger train on the same route, and he continued in the passenger service uninterrupted until his death, making runs for five years on the Bee Line from Indianapolis to Dayton, Ohio; from Indianapolis to Gallion, Ohio, for six years; from Indianapolis to Bellefontaine, for two years; to Wabash, by way of Anderson, for one year; to Union City for five years, and then, on the same line, from Indianapolis to Bellefontaine, Ohio, where he continued, up to the time of his death. Being an exceptionally careful and reliable man, he was engineer until a few years ago on the Southwestern Limited and the Knickerbocker Special, but at the solicitation of his wife, because of his age, he decided to take a shorter run. He was said to have been the oldest engineer in the service on the Cleveland division of the road, on which division he had been engaged for forty-four years. During this period he made it a point to keep thoroughly abreast of all advancements in machinery, especially everything pertaining to his line of work. A most vigilant and careful engineer, he was remarkably free from accidents, having only two of a serious nature, the second being the one near Anderson in which he met his death. The first one, which happened just eight years previously, was the result of a collision with another train during a fog. Here he broke his collar bone and received some other slight injuries, causing him to be laid off for about six weeks, for recuperation.

On Aug. 21, 1906, shortly after seven o'clock in the evening, his train was derailed at the Taft siding, between Pendleton and Anderson, and hurled down a six-foot embankment, Mr. Bugby and his fireman meeting instant death. Giving his whole time and attention to his profession to the exclusion of all other business, he made a thorough success of it, and was held in the highest esteem by his employers. Some years ago he purchased a pleasant residence property at No. 1211 Cornell avenue, in Indianapolis, where he made his home.

Mr. Bugby married, in February, 1872, Clara Bateman, who was born at New Paris, Ohio, Dec. 20, 1851, and to this union there were born three children: Grace, who married E. Sherman, and resides at Seattle, Wash.; Cora, who married William Applegate, of Chicago; and Alice, married to Hiram Porter, of Indianapolis, where they reside.

Mr. Bugby was a man of great force of character and marked foresight, and possessed a large capacity for work. Throughout his engineering career he kept steadily at his post of duty, losing but two pay days. He was well informed, thoroughly up-to-date and took a keen interest in all matters of a public nature. Fraternally he stood high, belonging to the K. of P. and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In politics he affiliated with the Republicans. He was active in the Memorial Presbyterian Church, and his widow is a most highly respected member of the same denomination. Mr. Bugby's funeral was held from the Memorial Church, and he was laid to rest in Crown Hill cemetery.

William Bateman, father of Mrs. Bugby, was born in Pennsylvania. He embarked upon life as a saddle, harness and trunk maker, and settled at Attica, Ind., where he followed his business with success. Later he moved to Bellefontaine, Ohio, where in the steady pursuit of his trade he continued for the rest of his life, and there in 1881 he died. He married at Attica Phoebe Rhoads, who was born near Ellicotts Mills, Md., and after his death she married Jacob Horn, a prominent farmer, and a man of marked integrity of character. He belonged to the Lutheran Church. No children came to this marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Bateman were born eight children: Anna, who married A. Emmons; Clara, Mrs. Bugby; Charles, who died young; Lizzie, who has never married; Harry; George, who died leaving three children, among whom was a son Howard, who now lives with his aunt, Mrs. Bugby; Mamie, who died at the age of fourteen years; and Bell, who married H. Badcliff, of Detroit.

Mr. Bateman's well-directed business activities, as well as his many admirable traits of character, won him the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. A kind-hearted Quaker in religious sentiment, while residing in Warren county, Ohio, he frequently assisted poor runaway slaves to freedom and liberty. In political matters he affiliated with the Republicans.

CYRUS W. MacKENZIE, a descendant of an honorable pioneer family of Indiana, and a prominent and representative farmer of Morgan county, was born Aug. 23, 1853, at the old homestead where he still lives, son of William and Sarah M. (Whetzel) MacKenzie.

James MacKenzie, his grandfather, was born in Scotland, and he died in that country. He was a brother of Gen. John MacKenzie, who spent his life in military service, was with the army in India and Africa, and died in Scotland, full of honors. Another brother, Kennett MacKenzie, was a South Sea Island trader. James MacKenzie was a civil engineer of great skill, and he it was who built the fortifications at Marseilles, France. His father was an English officer who served the Crown faithfully in India, and there married a Hindoo princess. The MacKenzie family until this day stands high in the estimation of Great Britain, and has been represented in the military, political and professional life of that land.

William MacKenzie was born July 25, 1828, in Glasgow, Scotland, and was reared in his native land. He was liberally educated according to the laws of that country and he entered the merchant marine, sailing the sea for a number of years. He abandoned that life at New York, from which city he went to Philadelphia and there learned the boot and shoe business. Working at this trade he journeyed into Canada, and while there was made a Master Mason. In 1851 he returned to the States and drifted to Waverly, Ind., where he found people so enterprising and socially inclined that he thought this would be a desirable place to locate. In 1852 he married and in working at his trade and farming in the summers, passed the years until 1861. Then he entered the army, enlisting in the 33d Ind. V. I., Gen. John Coburn. His service covered more than three years, and he attained the rank of corporal, and for a time was in the commissary department. He suffered capture, and was imprisoned in Libby Prison, where it seemed as if human beings could not endure the shameful treatment given them; was finally exchanged, Sept. 19, 1864, received his honorable discharge and returned to his home. General John Coburn writes he was an excellent citizen and a brave and patriotic soldier, always ready for duty. He continued to farm until his death Sept. 5, 1891. Mr. MacKenzie was noted for his many sterling virtues, and was a man who would be missed in any community. He was reared a Presbyterian, and never departed from this faith, although not formally connected with any congregation. In politics he was a Republican. In 1852, he married Miss Sarah M. Whetzel, who was born on the farm where she was married in Morgan county, a descendant of the old Virginia Indian fighting family of the name. The Whetzel (or Weitzel as the name was originally spelled) family came to America about 1670, from Switzerland, where John Whetzel's father died. The mother, who had remarried, died on the passage to this country, the step-father selling the children until of age, on landing, to pay the passage. The eldest son, John Whetzel, was sold and his son John finally sttled in Virginia, where he reared his family, these children being: Martin, George, Lewis, Jacob and John. Later the father, Martin, George and John were massacred by the Indians. The surviving brothers vowed a vengeance on the savages which the history of the time and local-ity tells was carried out.

Jacob Whetzel was born in Pennsylvania, Sept. 16, 1765, and died July 2, 1827. He married Ruhama Shepherd (born Oct. 3, 1778, deceased Nov. 23, 1837), a member of the Shepherd family of Virginia, who later moved to the Kentucky frontier, and in 1811 moved to the Territory of Indiana, first settling in White Water township in Franklin county, on the site of the present town of Laurel. In 1818 he started still farther into the wilderness, expecting to build a boat and go down to Vincennes, and he and his son Cyrus notched out what is known as the Whetzel trail from Franklin to White River. When they reached the point where Waverly now stands they noticed the pleasant appearance of the country, and that the soil looked productive and decided that they had traveled far enough. Both Jacob Whetzel and wife are buried on the old homestead place at Waverly. Cyrus Whetzel bought the first lot of land taken up in the valley, later added to it, owned ninety acres, and became prominent and wealthy for the time. In politics he was a Whig, later a Republican, and became a leader, representing the county in the Legislature in 1858-9. He is recalled as a board-minded, intelligent man, a typical member of his family, possessing the courage, stature, weight and constitution which characterized this noted family of frontiersmen. In religious belief he was a Universalist. He was generous to all who needed his assistance, and few men commanded more respect and esteem than he did. He was born Dec. 1, 1800, and died Dec. 16, 1871. His wife died in 1804. She was a consistent Methodist.

Their children were: Sarah M., the mother of our subject; Francis M., Gabriel J. and Missouri, all died unmarried, and other children died in infancy.

The children born to William and Sarah MacKenzie were: Cyrus W.; Elizabeth, Mrs. H. H. Fletcher; Lewis W., a prominent farmer; Sarah M., deceased; Dr. W. D., a surgeon on the Salt Lake City & Los Angeles Railroad; W. M.; and Kenneth, who died in infancy.

Cyrus W. MacKenzie grew up on the old homestead and remained a faithful son to his parents during their lives. He was educated in the common and high schools of Hopewell, and spent one term at the State University at Bloomington. In September, 1876, he married and then settled on one of the family farms, three miles out of Waverly, where he lived three years and then moved to another farm in Johnson county, where he lived for two years. In the settlement of the estate, the original Whetzel homestead fell to him, and he moved upon it, there continuing ever since. The commodious residence is beautifully located on a bluff, and is surrounded by forest, ornamental and fruit trees. Not far away is the peaceful burying ground wherein rest the pioneer members of the family near the home which they succeeded in making such a beautiful spot. It is known all over the country-side as the old Whetzel homestead. Here Mr. MacKenzie has spent many years carrying forward the work started by his ancestors and is regarded as a very successful farmer and stockman. He is a strong Republican without being in any sense a politician, and has very ably served as justice of the peace.

The lady who became the wife of Mr. MacKenzie was Miss Mary S. Parks, born in 1854, in Iowa, daughter of Samuel and Mary (McKnabb) Parks, the former of whom was a son of William Parks of Kentucky, a pioneer to Indiana, where he died well known and highly respected. Samuel accompanied his parents thither, and after his marriage moved to Iowa, where his wife died a few years later and he returned to Indiana, followed farming and died in advanced age. His children were: William H. and John J., who died in Iowa; Mary, Mrs. MacKenzie; and Jeanne d'Arc, who died young.

The children born to Cyrus W. MacKenzie and wife were: Kenneth, who died in infancy; William W., farmer on the homestead;

Sarah M. and Dovey M., both at home. Mr. MacKenzie is fraternally connected with the Masons, Knights of Pythias and the Red Men. He is a most highly esteemed citizen and the family is very prominent socially.

WALTER E. NUTTER. One of the leading business citizens of Martinsville, Ind., is Walter E. Nutter, of the Martinsville Milling Company. He was born Nov. 20, 1856, in Jefferson township, near Martinsville, Ind., son of Clement H. and Julia A. (Craig) Nutter, the former of whom was born in Kentucky, and the latter in Indiana.

Huett Nutter, grandfather of Walter E., came from his native home in Kentucky, as an early pioneer in Indiana, locating in Morgan county about 1823. When he died, well advanced in years, he left a numerous family and a large farm. His wife was Susan Talbott, daughter of John and Hannah Talbott, the former a prominent man and extensive land owner near Lexington, Kentucky.

Clement H. Nutter was born in 1820 and accompanied his parents to Indiana, growing to manhood in the vicinity of Martinsville. With his two older brothers, he improved a farm in Jefferson township, owning about 300 acres in his tract, and there he reared his family and died in 1889, at the age of sixty-nine years. For a long period he was an elder in the Christian Church. He married Julia A. Craig, daughter of William H. Craig, of Kentucky, who settled as a pioneer in the vicinity of Martinsville, engaging in merchandising and farming. Mr. Craig died at the age of sixty-three years, member of the Christian Church. He was married four times and reared a large family. Mrs. Nutter passed away Feb. 13, 1867. She was a member of the Christian Church and a devoted mother of four children, namely: Sarah, wife of John T. Gurley, of Martinsville; Miss Mary, of Martinsville; Walter E.; and Miss Hattie.

It would cause the severance of many ties if Walter E. Nutter established a new home in any other locality, for he has resided in Martinsville and vicinity all his life. He was reared on the farm, attended the district schools and the public schools at Martinsville, and completed his business education at a commercial college at Spiceland. Until 1900 he was actively engaged in farming and still owns a fine estate of 125 acres in Washington township, although he has resided in Mar-tinsville since 1866. In 1900 Mr. Nutter went into the milling business, purchasing an interest in the mill formerly operated by Victor, Gamble & McNutt, the same which is now known as the Martinsville Milling Company.

On June 1, 1887, Mr. Nutter was married to Miss Luella Schnaier, daughter of William and Maria (Miller) Schnaier, and two children have been born to this union, Twanetta and Beryl. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nutter belong to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is connected with Anniversary Lodge, No. 89, K. of P. In politics he is a Republican, and for three and a half years served as county commissioner. Mr. Nutter is very highly regarded in Martinsville. His bearing toward others and his business methods having marked him as a man governed by high standards, he justly deserves to be regarded as one of the representative business men of the community.

JOHN N. GREGORY, an enterprising, public spirited citizen, who as a farmer and stock raiser, business man and public official, ever maintained a high standard of integrity, and at his death left behind him that priceless heritage to his family, an untarnished name, was born in North Carolina. He came to Indiana with his parents and settled among the courageous pioneers of this section, assisting his father to improve the homestead and easing the cares of his mother. He remained with his parents until his marriage, Jan. 21, 1846, when he settled on land provided through the generosity of his father. The tract contained eight acres and a cabin, all in rough condition, but here he began the founding of a large fortune.

William Gregory, his grandfather, was one of the earliest pioneers to the Territory of Indiana. He settled in Green township, Morgan county, where he acquired large tracts of land. After a number of years of successful farming, he opened a country store which he operated for a time, and then selling out moved to Iowa, where he also acquired much land. He was married four times, and was the father of twenty-nine children, and he also acted the part of father to four step-children. He was a consistent and worthy member of the Methodist Church.

Beverly Gregory, son of William and father of John N., married Polly McCracken, of an old North Carolina family which had moved to Morgan county, and settled on a farm. He died at the early age of thirty-two years, leaving three children: William, who died in Kansas; John N., and Stephen.

John N. Gregory, after marriage, settled on his land and converted the rough timber land into a good farm and remained upon it for twenty-seven years. He was a practical and successful agriculturist and was largely interested in stockraising. Mr. Gregory was a man of good judgment and intelligence, and naturally was selected by his neighbors for many positions of honor and trust. In 1873 he was elected county treasurer, and then removed to Martinsville, where he resided four years, serving two terms in this office with the greatest credit and to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. The confinement, after his active life on the farm, impaired his health, and he took some time in traveling through the South enjoying the scenery and gaining strength. Upon his return to the country, he settled on his farm, which by this time had, through additions, grown to a large acreage, making him one of the largest tax payers in the county. Later he engaged in a grocery business at Brooklyn, and also bought and handled grain, was a notary public, depot agent and postmaster, to which was added the duties of pension agent. It will thus be seen that Mr. Gregory was a man well equipped for a business life in almost any direction. He also dealt in real estate in Indianapolis, and during this time his estimable wife remained managing the affairs on the farm.

Mr. Gregory married Amanda Cox, who was born Dec. 15, 1829, near Centerton, Morgan Co., Ind., daughter of John and Anna (Matthews) Cox, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of North Carolina, their marriage taking place in Indiana. Mrs. Gregory in an unusual degree was a helpmate for her husband, his chosen adviser, and his able supporter in every crisis in his life. She possessed a faculty for business which is not always found present in her sex, and much of her husband's success may be attributed to her. Mr. Gregory erected a commodious and comfortable two-story residence at Brooklyn, which is Mrs. Gregory's pleasant home. There he died Dec. 9, 1892.

Mr. Gregory was widely known, and he commanded the respect of all who knew him as a man of integrity and honor. For many years he was a leader in the Republican party in this section and was always consulted as to its movements. Fraternally he belonged to the order of Odd Fellows. In the Christian Church, of which he was a member, he was a generous contributor to all its work and for many years was an elder and the church treasurer. In his death Morgan county lost one of its most useful and worthy citizens. Mrs. Gregory has assumed the care of her husband's large interests, and with rare good judgment handles it without trouble. She has purchased 110 acres of land since his death and she owns and manages 242 acres of fine farming land. She is now the oldest member of the Christian Church at Brooklyn, which she joined at the age of sixteen. The children born to herself and husband were: George A., who died aged twelve years; Mary A., born in 1849, who died in 1880, wife of J. M. Rinker, leaving two children, both now deceased; Beverly, born Oct. 6, 1850, who died Oct. 31, 1882, leaving two children, Nellie and Albert; Eli, who died young; Milton, born Dec. 12, 1854, who died in November, 1895, leaving children, Orren and Oscar; Samantha, born Nov. 11, 1856, and died April 19, 1902, wife of A. Humkee; Lavina, born March 9, 1859, now Mrs. William Marshall, of Des Moines, Iowa; Hiram, born May 6, 1861, and died April 28, 1894, leaving one child; Laura J., born Jan. 1, 1863, now the wife of L. E. Wetling, a business man of Lincoln, Nebr.; Oliver, born May 26, 1865, and died in 1867; and Otis, born Nov. 20, 1866, now manager of his mother's farms.

Alexander Cox, grandfather of Mrs. Gregory, was born in Pennsylvania, of German descent, and all of his children were also born in Pennsylvania. With his family he emigrated to Morgan county, Ind., as pioneers, and entered large tracts of land, improved them into fine farms and later divided his property among his children, settling them in life. Later he sold what he had retained, and removed to Iowa, where he died at the age of sixty-nine years. He was a consistent and worthy member of the Christian Church. His children were: William; John, father of Mrs. Gregory; Nancy, Mrs. Harrison Sailors; Elizabeth, wife of William Hardwicke; James; and Charles.

John Cox, father of Mrs. Gregory, married Anna Matthews, daughter of George and Delphi (Leggett) Matthews, who belonged to prominent North Carolina families, and who emigrated to Indiana and settled in the same township (Clay) in Morgan county as did Alexander Cox. John Cox became one of the well-known and successful farmers of Morgan county and these children were born to him and wife: Frank; Amanda; Marion, who died young; Mary J. and Julia, twins, the former Mrs. William Gregory, and the latter Mrs. William Leathers; and Anderson, who died young.

JOSEPH W. PAUL, of Waverly, Ind., is a worthy descendant of one of the pioneer families of this great State which was clearly identified with its early progress and development. He was born in Harrison township, Morgan county, Ind., Jan. 24, 1848, son of George and Eliza (Wharton) Paul, the former of Virginia, and the latter of Kentucky.

George Paul was a son of John and Keziah Paul, both of whom were born in Virginia, and there married. In 1816 John Paul, with his family, left the Old Dominion and started to find a new home in the recently opened Territory of Indiana. While en route, he died, and the bereaved widow had to continue her journey alone, finally reaching the farm which he had previously entered when on a tour of inspection. That she was a woman of courage must be acknowledged, for she settled the family and carried out her husband's plans, cleared and improved the wilderness into a fine farm and in the meantime kept her family together and instructed them in what book learning she could, taught them to be honest and upright, and set them an example of industry that none of her descendants could excel. There was no kind of work she could not do. She raised flax and sheep, she spun and wove cloth, she fashioned the family clothing, and managed, directed, saved, attended her few neighbors in trouble and sickness, and in every imaginable way was an ancestress of which her descendants may be proud. Neither did she neglect her church but was a most consistent and active Methodist. The children reared by this most devoted mother were: George; Jacob, lived and died in Illinois; Philip remained at the old homestead where he died, unmarried, aged eighty years; Catherine also remained unmarried at the old homestead, and died there Sept. 1, 1902, aged eighty-four years; and Sarah married John Brenton, removed to Iowa where he died, and she returned to Indiana and passed away at her old home. All of this family lived to advanced age, and all did credit in their lives to their estimable mother's rearing.

George Paul was a young child when his mother settled in the wilderness, and he was forced to assume a man's responsibility before his years justified it, but he grew up one of the most reliable and respected men of his day. His pioneer labors were rewarded, and the farm was producing crops and fat hogs before there was any nearer market than Madison. He disposed of his produce at that place and at Indianapolis, where he had his milling done, the great city then being a frontier village. Transportation was limited to oxen and horses, and it was not until the village of Waverly was started, in 1841, that the farmers had any better transportation facilities. Then the State built a canal, which waterway furnished water power, and a mill was built at Waverly, and was the means of building up the town, patronage coming from many miles distant. Although game was plentiful near the homestead, and many neighbors engaged in hunting, Mr. Paul was so busily engaged with his work that he found no time for even this recreation. He remained his mother's helper until he was twenty-seven years old, and then married and settled to farming on his own account. Later he received a portion of the homestead and added to it by purchase, and at death left a fine estate. He died Oct. 28, 1900, at the age of eighty-six years.

In his early days he supported the Democratic party, but later became identified with the Republicans. His interest in all public matters was constant, and he was frequently consulted concerning local affairs. His wife, Eliza Wharton, who died in 1880, was a daughter of Joseph Wharton, of the State of New York. In 1816 he brought his family to Morgan county, Ind., settling in Harrison township, and entering land in the White River Valley. Here he improved a wild tract into a fine farm, and here he died in 1852. He married in Kentucky and lived there until after the birth of all of his children. Like so many of the Indiana pioneers, Mr. Wharton was a man of large stature and robust constitution, and he possessed the kind and neighborly spirit which united our forefathers in a band of common union. He was a practical cabinetmaker and was also able to do a fine job of carpenter work, although his main business in Indiana was farming. A strong Whig, he cared nothing for political office, but lived the life of a good and public-spirited citizen. In religious belief he was a Methodist. His children were: George died in Illinois; John died in Iowa; Jesse of Harrison township; Sarah, Mrs. B. Harrell, both she and her husband dying in Clay county; Catherine, Mrs. Jos. Long; Mrs. Mary Taylor; Susan, Mrs. R. S. Aldrich; and Eliza, the mother of our subject. She also was a devoted Methodist. The children born to George Paul and wife were: Julia, Mrs. Merrick; John, a farmer of this township, who was a soldier in Company C, 33rd Ind. V. I., under Col. John Coburn, and was wounded in the arm; Joseph W., of this sketch; Mrs. Susan Throckmorton; Dine, Jacob, George and Frank, are all farmers in Harrison township.

Joseph W. Paul remained at home, engaged in farm work, and attending the common schools. His seventeenth year was celebrated by his enlisting for service in the Civil war, with Col. Nick. Ruckle, of Indianapolis, in Company E, 148th Ind. V. I., and in February, 1865, he was assigned to the army of the Tennessee under old "Pap" Thomas, a name which brings affectionate recollections to many a gray-haired man who once wore the Union blue. Mr. Paul was kept at garrison duty until after the close of the war, was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and received his honorable discharge at Indianapolis in October, 1865. Although never wounded or captured, exposure and hardship told on Mr. Paul, perhaps on account of his youth, and for a time he suffered much from chronic troubles. Until his marriage in 1872, he farmed on the homestead and operated some land for himself and then settled on a portion of the homestead, where he continued until he decided to go into farming and stock-raising on a much larger scale than possible there. With this intention he moved to a neighboring farm, and for twenty years dealt extensively in stock, and became one of the leading agriculturists of the county.

Mr. Paul has long been regarded as a party leader, and in 1886 was elected by the Republicans, sheriff of Morgan county, and at the expiration of his term was honored with re-election. During his official service, he resided at Martinsville and remained there during the succeeding year and then bought the productive farm of 174 acres where he has since resided. Mr. Paul is a very large stock-raiser and has purchased another farm which he uses for grazing purposes. He is widely known and is universally respected. Mr Paul belongs to Blankenship Post, G. A. R., of Martinsville, and is also connected with the I. O. O. F. Both he and wife are valued members of the Methodist Church.

In 1872 Mr. Paul was united in marriage with Eliza Jennie Nimen, born at Brownsville, Penn., Feb. 28, 1851, a daughter of William and Alice (Snowden) Nimen, the former of German and the latter of English descent. William Nimen was reared in Pennsylvania, a son of Patrick Nimen, who became a prominent farmer in Pennsylvania, where he died, also owning land in Missouri. His children were: William, father of Mrs. Paul; Mrs. Sarah Porter; Mrs. Eliza Ferguson; Mrs. Ellen Lindell, connected with the "Lindell Hotel" family of St. Louis. The children of William Nimen and wife were: John, of Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. Mary E. Rhodes, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Anna Levitte, of Texas; William, of McKeesport, Pa.; Mrs. Sarah Jones; Eliza Jennie, wife of Mr. Paul; and Mrs. Bell McMeans. The mother died at McKeesport, Pa., and the father at Brownsville, Pa. He was a steamboat pilot in which capacity he was highly valued on many waters and the great inland rivers. He was a Methodist in religious belief.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul, namely: Sheddie R., died Dec. 16, 1889; George N. is a farmer near the homestead; and William L. died Dec. 4, 1890, aged twenty-two years. George N. married Miss Artie M. Bishop, orphan daughter of Lewis and Ernestine (Stultz) Bishop, and the daughter, Lulu Ruth, born to this marriage, May 24, 1900, is the inheritor of an honorable name and a member of one of the leading families of Morgan county.

SAMUEL FRIESNER, for many years a prominent mechanic at Indianapolis, Ind., now a resident of Morgan county, was born Dec. 25, 1834, in Fairfield county, Ohio, son of David and Elizabeth (Spear) Friesner, both natives of Ohio.

Frederick Friesner, grandfather of Samuel, was one of three brothers who emigrated from Germany to America, two of whom settled in Ohio, the third never being heard from after they separated at New York. Frederick became a well known farmer and esteemed resident of his locality, where he was for a number of years a minister in the Dunkard Church, being one of the founders of that faith in Ohio. His children were the following: John, Henry, Frederick, Noah, David, Polly, Susan and Rachel, Susan marrying Rev. Albright, a leader in the Evangelical Church and a prominent man.

David Friesner, son of Frederick and father of Samuel, was born and reared in Ohio. He improved his farm of 160 acres and spent his life upon it, caring for his family, improving the moral tone of his neighborhood, and setting an example of sobriety and integrity of life. From Democracy he later changed to Republicanism. His religious belief was in accordance with the tenets of the River Brethren Church, in which faith he died in 1886. By two marriages he was the father of fifteen children. The children born to him and his wife, Elizabeth Spear, were these: Ephraim, of Allen county, Ohio; Eli, who served in the Rebellion and died at Atlanta; Catherine, Mrs. John Kekkir; David, who served through the Rebellion and died in Iowa; Samuel; Isaac, of Indiana; Lydia, Mrs. Spade; and Joseph, who died in the Civil war. Of these children, Eli continued in the faith in which he had been reared, but the others of the family joined the United Brethren Church. The mother of these children died in 1840, and the father was married (second) to Rebecca Seitz, and seven more children were born: Eliza died young; Absalom lives in Ohio; Lewis and Aaron are deceased; Bartlett resides in Ohio; Mary is Mrs. Kinkle; and Daniel died unmarried.

Samuel Friesner remained under the parental roof until his marriage, when he settled on a farm, where he remained until 1861, when he enlisted in the army for three years or during the war, entering Company A, 17th O. V. I., with Col. John A. McConnell. His regiment became a part of the Army of the Tennessee, was mustered in at Camp Dennison, and was sent to Kentucky, he participating in his first battle at Wild Cat. From there he went to Crab Orchard, and after hot skirmishing, marched to Fort Donelson and thence to Shiloh. Here he was stricken with typhoid fever, and while unconscious was sent to the hospital at Cincinnati. He was then given a furlough and later received an honorable discharge. When fully recovered he bravely offered his services again, volunteering in the 100-days service in Company F, 159th O. V. I., and was sent to Gun Powder Bridge, where the regiment was detailed for guard duty, and here he remained through the 100 days, at the end of that time receiving his second honorable discharge. He also received a first lieutenant's commission, in which capacity he served for over one year.

This loyal defender of his country then quietly returned to his farm, but in 1872 removed to Indianapolis in order to place his wife under medical care, and her health was greatly improved thereby. Mr. Friesner was a natural mechanic, and very soon found plenty of employment. He entered the works of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, and was regarded as one of their most proficient mechanics, and he continued with that firm until it closed its business in Indianapolis. He was then employed for eight years with the Moore Disc factory, and went through two fires there, losing all his tools in the last one, when he abandoned shop work. He then purchased a lot on Jefferson avenue, and erected a comfortable residence, but in 1897 traded it for a farm in Monroe township, Morgan county, where he now resides, in the enjoyment of ample means. Mr. Friesner was a patriot and a loyal soldier, and he has lived an honest life, has dispensed charity and shown justice to all men, and is most thoroughly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Friesner is a devoted and consistent member of the M. E. Church, and has capably filled all church offices. He has never been very active in politics, and has never aspired to any political office, although there is no doubt that if the offices were held by honest and honorable men like himself, there would be no complaints of party corruption.

Mr. Friesner was married (first) to Catherine Rinehart, a native of Ohio, daughter of Isaac and Sarah Rinehart, of German descent, prominent farmers and valued members of the United Brethren Church. The former died in Ohio, the latter in Indiana. They had these children: Catherine; Frederick; Mary, Mrs. J. Good; Casper; Jane, Mrs. Clem; Sarah, Mrs. Dobinmire; Isaac; Caroline, Mrs. Groff; Matilda and William. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Friesner were: Anna M., who died young; Lydia J., Mrs. Tobias; Sarah, Mrs. Hunter; Joseph, for seventeen years an employe of a Cincinnati factory; William, a railroad man; and Dora, Mrs. Ed. Perry, of Indianapolis. The mother of this family died Nov. 18, 1874, a devoted member of the U. B. Church. Mr. Friesner was married (second), Jan. 28, 1878, to Mrs. Mary Robinson, widow of John M.

Robinson, who left one daughter, Minnie, now wife of Alva Tuttle, and mother of two children, Maurice and Mildred. Mrs. Robinson was a daughter of Andrew and Lydia Peacock, both natives of New Jersey where they married and whence they migrated to Indiana at an early day. They settled in Wayne county, but later moved to the vicinity of Rochester, where Mr. Peacock bought land, improved a farm, and remained upon it until the death of his wife, when he came to Indianapolis and found a pleasant home with his daughter. He was a worthy member of the New Light Christian Church in which he was a class leader. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Peacock were: Sarah J., who married (first) William Warren, had five children, and (second) Dr. Peterson; Hannah A., Mrs. S. Peck; John L.; Ellen, Mrs. Mustard; Daniel; Mary; and Andrew M. One daughter has been born to our subject by this marriage, Adda, wife of W. C. Williamson, a railroad man on the Big Four.

Mr. Friesner and wife are among the most highly regarded residents of Morgan county, and are noted for their hospitality and kind neighborliness.

SAMUEL WATSON, a worthy descendant of an old and honored pioneer family of Indiana, was born at the old homestead in Morgan county, Jan. 17, 1871, and was educated in the common schools and reared on the farm. He is a son of Cyrus and Susan (Thornberry) Watson.

Thomas and Mary A. (Royston) Watson, grandparents of Samuel, were natives of Virginia and Tennessee, respectively, and of Welsh and Irish ancestry. They were married in Tennessee. In 1821, Thomas Watson made a prospecting tour of Indiana and entered 400 acres of land, bought two tracts, and built the first cabin in Madison township, Morgan county. In 1823 he brought his family thither and made here his permanent home. His land was fertile, as a great portion of it lay in the valley of the White River. Here he created a fine farm, and became one of the prominent and influential men of the locality, dying here in 1856. His widow survived him many years, dying in 1887, aged eighty-one years. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Watson served in the War of 1812, and through life supported the Jacksonian principles of the Democratic party. His excellent foresight was shown in his selection of land and his business ability was displayed on many occasions. He was considered a keen trader and he made a number of trading expeditions to Tennessee after settling here. He was able to give all his children a start in life, and he is held in affectionate remembrance not only by his descendants, but by the public as well. His children were: Cyrus became the father of Samuel; Alfred, Cicero and Benjamin, all of whom died in Morgan county, and Thomas B. is also deceased.

Cyrus Watson was born in Madison township, Morgan county, Aug. 17, 1829, and was reared among the honest sturdy pioneers of Morgan county, and spent his youth in assisting his father in clearing and cultivating the land. After his marriage he settled on a fine farm of 200 acres of river land, and here he became a practical and successful farmer and stockraiser. He was a man of robust health and much endurance, and was a hard worker, devoting his attention to his property. He was a staunch Democrat and held many offices of trust and responsibility in the township, serving four years as township trustee. Mr. Watson was fraternally connected with both the I. O. O. F. and the Masonic bodies, and lived up to the teachings of these brotherhoods. His memory was excellent and he was fond of telling of the early days and of the difficulties with which the pioneers had to contend in getting their milling done and in obtaining supplies. The building of the State canal was a measure of relief scarcely appreciated by the present day, with its transportation facilities so numerous on every side. His death occurred March 18, 1898, when he was aged sixty-eight years. His widow, Mrs. Susan (Thornberry) Watson, still survives, aged seventy-one years. She was a daughter of Daniel and Frances (Langyer) Thornberry, natives of Virginia and early settlers in Morgan county. They became prominent and wealthy farmers and reared these children: John; Mary, Mrs. A. Watson; Milton; Frank; William; Patrick of Brooklyn; Daniel, Jr.; and Susan. Cyrus A. and Susan Watson were the parents of one son, our subject.

Samuel Watson was born on the homestead farm which he occupies and where he is engaged in carrying on the work inaugurated by his father. He is a progressive, practical farmer and stockraiser, and keeps abreast of the times, using modern methods and machinery and reaping very substantial rewards. He owns a farm of 300 acres of fine land. Reared a Democrat, he has become a party leader in his locality, and has been a valuable township trustee. In 1906 he received the Democratic nomination for county auditor and came within fifty votes of being elected. He is fully qualified for almost any position in the gift of the party, and is regarded as a very available man for future preferment.

In 1891 Mr. Watson married Miss Rose Turley, born May 21, 1872, in this township, daughter of Harrison and Susan (House) Turley, the former a native of Kentucky, and the latter born at Mooresville, Morgan county, Ind. John House came to Indiana in 1837 and entered land in Madison township where he lived for many years, a successful farmer and respected citizen. Four years prior to his death, he removed to Mooresville, his wife dying two years later. The family was of German extraction and he was reared in the Lutheran faith, but late in life became a worthy member of the Methodist Church, and a liberal contributor to its work. His children were: Charlotte, Mrs. Chinofelt; George; Henry; Catherine, Mrs. William Beeson; Mary A., Mrs. D. Fansler; John; Sarah, Mrs. Y. D. Meredith; and Susan, mother of Mrs. Watson and wife of Harrison Turley.

Harrison Turley was born in Kentucky and came to Indiana when a single man, being an orphan and the architect of his own fortunes. He became a successful and substantial farmer, and a man who possessed the respect and esteem of all. Both he and wife were consistent members of the Christian Church. In politics he was a Democrat, and for many years served as justice of the peace. His death occurred in December, 1890. The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Turley were: Cora, Mrs. W. H. Paddock; Calona, who died aged twenty-two years; Leora, Mrs. J. W. Jackson; Kate, Mrs. H. Jackson; and Rose, Mrs. Samuel Watson. The mother of the above children married (second) G. F. Routon, who came to Indiana and lived many years in Indianapolis. He was born in Virginia, and learned the trade of carpenter, and later engaged in contracting. After leaving Indianapolis he bought a farm in Morgan county where his first wife died, leaving three children: Mrs. Lucy Taylor, Edward and John, all married prior to his second marriage to which no children were born. Mr. Routon died five years after his second marriage, his widow still surviving. She is an active worker and a valued member of the Christian Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Watson have had five children, namely: Katie, born Sept. 13, 1892; Cyrus H., Sept. 30, 1894; Ruth, Oct. 4, 1900 (died aged five years); Royston; and Naomi. Mr. and Mrs. Watson are members of the Christian Church. He is a Mason, of Bluff Creek Lodge, Waverly, Ind., and Osceola Chapter, No. 71, R. A. M., Martinsville, Ind. He also belongs to Lodge No. 508, K. P., of Waverly.

JOHN B. PASQUIER, a carpenter by trade, has for nearly half a century prominently identified himself with the building of Indianapolis, seeing it grow from a little place of eleven thousand inhabitants, with poor houses and sidewalks, to a beautiful city of over two hundred thousand inhabitants, with stately edifices and neatly paved streets. Born in France, March 23, 1829, he comes of a good old Roman Catholic family, who for several generations followed the carpenter's trade and contract building in their native land.

John Pasquier, grandfather of John B., a man of ability, lived all his life in France. He had four children, all of whom were carpenters by trade and had their homes in their native village, where they died: Charles, Eugene, Epolike and Nicholas.

Eugene Pasquier, father of John B., grew to manhood in his native home, and there received his training for life's activities. At an early age he learned the carpenter's trade, and becoming a skilled workman found no difficulty in securing a position, and as a young man followed this occupation with his brothers. For many years they carried on a most successful line of business, branching out in the industry from time to time. During his young manhood Mr. Pasquier married Mary J. Lehebrien, who was born in the same locality, and who after many years died there. By this union there were born four children: Alexis, who died at the home of his birth; John B.; Charles, who resides at his native village; and Lucius, who served in the French army, and died at Bethune, France.

John B. Pasquier grew to manhood in France, and there at an early age, by assisting his father, became a thorough master of the carpenter's trade. As a young man he continued this pursuit and for some time followed it in his native land, but in 1854, hoping to better his fortunes, he came to the United States, making the trip from Havre to New York, in fifty-eight days. He proceeded directly to Indianapolis, then a small, poorly built city, with the Union Station, then in process of construction, surrounded by mud holes. The neighboring country abounded in heavy timber, and in big game, and presented a very different aspect from the beautiful farming section of the present time. A skilled carpenter, Mr. Pasquier at once started out as a journeyman in the employ of Mr. Saltmarsh, of Indianapolis, with whom he remained some time. He then accepted a position with John B. Manny, a large contractor, who erected some of the most prominent buildings of the city. Continuing here for eighteen years Mr. Pasquier assisted in work upon the court house, the new station, the State House, and residences and building blocks galore. He has been industrious and has carefully invested his savings, and now is the owner of considerable city property. In 1857 he purchased a tract of land which extended somewhat beyond the city limits, but which is now a beautiful residence section. Here he erected a small house, part of which he has since greatly enlarged, and here he now resides. On the same ground he has erected two commodious houses which he rents to advantage.

In 1857 Mr. Pasquier married Margaret Climento Urbain, born in France Aug. 22, 1832, and to this union have been born six children: Eugene, now engaged in the grocery business in Indianapolis; Marguerite, who married R. Braden; Miss Julia; and Julius, John and Charles, who are all engaged in the grocery business in Indianapolis.

Throughout his residence in this country, Mr. Pasquier has evinced the keenest interest in our institutions, and is a most loyal and patriotic citizen. As a strong Republican he is interested in local affairs, but is not, however, an office seeker. Through the merited esteem of his fellow citizens, he has been appointed street inspector, a place which he has filled to the entire satisfaction of the city council. He is a man of irreproachable character, and possesses a high code of honor. His wife belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. He is a member of the F. & A. M.

John Francis Celestino Reuben Urbain, father of Mrs. Pasquier, was born in France, and there upon reaching manhood, settled and engaged in business, filling the office of government tax collector there for some time. In 1851 he came to Indianapolis, making the voyage to New Orleans in forty-eight days. Purchasing a farm in Lawrence township, Marion county, Ind., he there followed agriculture very successfully throughout the remainder of his active days. He died in Indianapolis while on a visit to his daughter. Mr. Urbain married Mary Margaret Buskin, also a native of France. She died at the farm near Indianapolis. To this union were born four children: John Francis C.; Mrs. Pasquier; Julius Augustus, who now lives at the family homestead; and Pauline, who died unmarried. Mr. and Mrs. Urbain were highly respected, prosperous farming people. They were reared in the Roman Catholic faith, and loyally adhered to it throughout their respective lives.

CURTIS C. PADDOCK, a conductor on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, whose residence is at Broad Ripple, and who has an enviable record as a successful railroad man, was born at Prairieton, Ind., April 29, 1849, only child of Washington and Jane (Payne) Paddock, both of whom were natives of Indiana.

Elijah Paddock, the grandfather of Curtis C., was a native of Indiana, and in his active life was engaged in farming at Prairieton, Ind. His family consisted of six sons and one daughter, and when he died he was over seventy years of age. Ebenezer Payne, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Paddock, was a native of Indiana, and engaged in farming in Vigo county. In his family were four sons and one daughter. When he died at the age of sixty years, he left a good property, and was regarded as a man of much force of character and solid worth.

Washington Paddock was a pork packer in Terre Haute, Ind., for many years, and when he retired in 1876, he moved to Indianapolis, where he died in 1882, at the age of fifty-six. His wife, who was born in 1819, died Dec. 21, 1900, being buried on her birthday. Both parents belonged to the Christian (Disciples) Church.

Curtis C. Paddock was reared in Terre Haute from the time he was twelve years old, having spent the most of his life before that age in Ogle county, Ill. His education was completed in the city schools of Terre Haute, and in 1871 he secured a position as a brakeman on a passenger train of the Terre Haute & Indiana Railroad. For two and a half years he was baggageman, and since Sept. 20, 1874, has been passenger conductor. This is a story of long and faithful service, and reflects credit upon the man and the management who can continue so long in amicable relations.

Mr. Paddock was married Jan. 25, 1876, to Miss Cora Sherburne, a daughter of Asa and Mary Sherburne. They had one child, Arthur Linn. He was employed at the Pan-American Exposition, in charge of a patent feed-box exhibit. Mrs. Cora Paddock, who was a devoted member of the Christian Church, and a woman of blameless life and character, died in 1882, at the early age of twenty-four years. Mr. Paddock contracted a second marriage, June 6, 1895, Miss Etta Scott, daughter of John and Margaret (Bainter) Scott, becoming his wife.

Mr. Paddock is a member of Greenville Lodge, No. 392, F. & A. M., and since 1876, has been a member of the Order of Railway Conductors. His home was in Indianapolis from 1871 to 1899, when he moved to his elegant home in Broad Ripple, though he still owns considerable property in Indianapolis. He has always been a staunch Republican.

John Scott and wife, Mrs. Paddock's parents, were natives of Ohio. To them was born the following family: Oscar F.; George A.; Belle, widow of Frank Ulm; Etta, Mrs. Paddock; and Lillian, wife of Lewis E. Budenz, of Denver, Colo. Mr. and Mrs. Scott had their home in Ohio almost continuously until 1809, when they moved to Broad Ripple, Ind., where they now live. In 1854 they lived a year in this State. In the War of the Rebellion Mr. Scott was standard bearer in the 60th O. V. I. His grandfather, John Scott, was a soldier in the War of the Revolution. William Scott, father of John, was a tanner, and he settled in Indiana, where he lived to be over sixty years old. His remains were interred near Marion. His ancestry was French.

John Bainter, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Paddock, was a native of Ohio, where he died at the age of seventy-eight. He came of Pennsylvania German stock, and was a farmer all his life.

AUGUST BRINKER. In the fall of 1847 a German lad scarcely out of his teens, reached Indianapolis. His parents had died and he crossed the ocean because he believed that this country offered better opportunities to the industrious and thrifty young man than did the Fatherland. Landing at New Orleans he tarried for a short time at St. Louis, then came to Indianapolis, where acquaintances from Germany had preceded him. The young man liked Indianapolis and settled there. His stay has been protracted through all the intervening years and today August Brinker, the emigrant boy, is one of the old and highly esteemed pioneers of the city, contributing to its growth and prosperity by a service of many years.

Mr. Brinker was born in Germany about six miles from Berlin in 1826, one of a family of seven children, four boys and three girls. The mother died when August was fourteen years of age, and the father, Frederick Brinker, died three years later. Our subject after leaving school began to learn the trade of miller and from an early age he has made his own way in the world. For nearly seven years he followed his trade in his native land, and in 1846 he came to America. At New Orleans, the landing place, he witnessed the selling of slaves at auction, and did not remain long in that city. Taking a small steamer for St. Louis, he arrived there in January, 1847, and found employment in operating a mill, the chief business of which was the grinding of corn for the slaves. Deciding to visit friends at Indianapolis he proceeded up the Ohio river to Madison, Ind., traveled by rail to Columbus, and thence walked to Indianapolis, arriving in September, 1847.

Soon after his arrival he purchased the lot on which he has since lived, and the next year he erected on his property a house, the first residence on the north side of what is now New York street. Mr. Brinker found employment at coopering, a trade which he followed for many years. It presented to him the means of advancement and he became the proprietor of a steam bending factory which he operated for several years, employing ten men. He next engaged successfully for several years in the grocery trade, and his later years have been spent in the deserved retirement from active life.

He married in 1851 Nettie Brown, daughter of Philip Brown, an old settler of Indianapolis. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brinker as follows: Emma, who married Mr. Harms and died leaving a son, August Harms, now foreman in the Indianapolis News office, who was reared by our subject; Mary, wife of Louis Fertig; Henry and Frederick. Mrs. Brinker, the faithful wife and devoted mother, died in 1886, and was buried at Crown Hill on Washington's birthday. Mr. Brinker has traveled extensively. In 1888 he visited Germany, with the hope of seeing many of his own family, but found surviving only one brother and one sister, the former eighty-three years of age, and the latter past seventy. They have since both passed away, and our subject is the sole survivor of the family. All died in Germany except the youngest brother, William, who came to America several years after the arrival of our subject and settled in Grant county, Ind., where he became a prominent and wealthy farmer, acquiring 460 acres of good land. He died on his farm, leaving seven children, three sons and four daughters.

In politics Mr. Brinker has always been a Democrat. For many years he has been a devout and prominent member of the Presbyterian Church. He is one of the best known pioneers of Indianapolis and one of its worthy and esteemed citizens, honored for his integrity and uprightness of character. The term of his residence in the city has exceeded sixty years, during most of which period he has been one of the active and substantial factors of its growth.

JOHN H. YOUNG, a prosperous and enterprising farmer of Ray township, Morgan county, was born in that county, son of Scott W. and Polly (Mathes) Young, natives, respectively, of Virginia and Kentucky.

Samuel Young, great-grandfather of John H., was a native of Virginia, of Scotch-Irish descent, and was a man of prominence in his community.

Charles Young, son of Samuel, lived and died in Kentucky, where he reared three sons and one daughter, all now deceased: George, who came to Indiana, and was murdered for his money at his home in Cloverdale; Scott W.; James F., who went to Illinois, and there died; and Elizabeth, who died in Kentucky. All the children were married and left families.

Scott W. Young, son of Charles, came to Indiana, in 1822, and located in Owen county, where he taught school until he took up government land in Morgan county, entering over 400 acres, and Mr. John H. Young has the old government deed to this property, upon which appears the signature of President Jackson. In addition to this 400 acres Mr. Young secured additional land until he at one time owned 1,000 acres. The family lived the life of pioneers, and had their privations and pleasures. The hunting was excellent, and their experiences with the game were exciting as well as dangerous. The good mother spun, wove and did all the housework, and they enjoyed a simple healthy life. Scott W. Young died Dec. 4, 1873, and his widow, Polly Mathes, whom he married in Owen county, survived until Oct. 27, 1881. Both were consistent members of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Young was a Republican, and for five years was a justice of the peace. The following children were born to Scott W. and Polly Young: Matilda A. is the widow of D. W. Gray; Evan H. is a resident of California; Eveline is at home; James B., is a resident of Kansas, where he is very successful; Harrison P. died in Boston in 1884; Hannibal died April 7, 1904, a successful farmer and a prominent teacher in public schools; Martha A. married L. Goss, who died a veteran of the Civil war, and she resides in Martinsville; Newton, a successful physician, was killed in 1885; John H.; Sarah is the widow of Samuel D. Gray, a resident of California.

Like his brothers and sisters, John H. Young had a good common school education, and then attended the Mooresville high school. Later he was graduated from Bryant & Stratton's business college at Indianapolis. At the age of twenty-one he went West, and employed himself teaching school, clerking in a store, and seeing something of the world. Returning home in 1873, he once more taught school, but when his father died, he and his sister bought the interests of the remaining heirs in the homestead, where he now resides when not elsewhere employed. The home farm consists of 241 acres, and he also owns eighty acres in Owen county. Both these farms are devoted to general agriculture. His home is a very pleasant one, supplied with telephone connection and is on the rural free delivery route.

COL. JEFFERSON KINGSLEY SCOTT (deceased), one of the leading business men of Martinsville, Ind., was born March 27, 1827, in Fayette county, Ky., ten miles from the city of Lexington. His parents were Vincent and Ann (Hutsell) Scott, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky.

The Scott family originated in Virginia, in which State Samuel Scott, the paternal grandfather of Col. Scott, was born, of Irish and Scotch parents. He married Fannie Francis, daughter of Thomas Francis, who was born in Wales, and was a sea captain. Samuel Scott removed to Kentucky, being one of the pioneers in Fayette county, where he died at the age of fifty years. The maternal grandfather of Col. Scott was John Hutsell, of German descent, who also lived in Virginia.

Vincent Scott, father of Colonel Scott, was born Dec. 24, 1799, near Wythe court house, in Wythe county, Va. He was a blacksmith by trade, and also engaged in farming. On Oct. 25, 1820, he married Ann Hutsell, and they settled on the Scott farm in Bourbon county, Ky., where their children were born as follows: Mary A. (wife of James M. Mitchell), Dec. 24, 1821; Sarah J. (wife of Dr. Benjamin F. Barnard), April 11, 1823; Rebecca, October, 1825; Jefferson K. March 27, 1827. Rebecca died in infancy. The survivors settled at Martinsville, Ind. In March, 1828, Mr. Scott sold his Kentucky farm and came with his family to Indianapolis. They arrived April 7th, after a two weeks' journey, and Mr. Scott bought a lot on the west side of the canal, fronting on Washington street. He prepared to build a house, and had the logs and shingles ready when he took sick, with bilious fever, dying Aug. 20, 1828, after only eight days illness. He was buried in the old graveyard, latterly called Greenlawn cemetery, then in the woods, on the banks of the White river, southwest of Indianapolis. His grave was marked but cannot now be traced. He was present at the laying of the corner stone of the old State house within whose walls his grandson, James V. Mitchell, forty-one years afterward responded to the roll call as the representative from the county of Morgan. His widow, not desiring to remain there, forfeited the lot, upon which they had made only a partial payment. And although she and her three children were all sick with bilious fever, she loaded all she had left into the wagon, and took up the solitary and mournful journey back home—to the house of John Hedges, her step-father, near Stony Point Church, in Bourbon county, Ky., at which place she arrived in safety, after a long, tedious and sorrowful trip. She lived with her step-father for two years, and then moved back to the old

Troutman Mill, in Fayette county, where she followed weaving table linens, coverlets, counterpanes, blankets, etc., which she sold, thus earning a support for herself and children, until she was married to Giles Mitchell, in the same house and room where she had married Vincent Scott, nearly fifteen years previously. Mr. Mitchell was a resident of Martinsville, Ind., and was visiting relatives in Kentucky. After loading her children, Mary A., Sarah J. and Jeff K., and plunder in a wagon, which was driven by a hired man from Lexington to Frankfort, where they took the steamboat "Argo" for Madison, Ind., the home of John S. Mitchell, son of Giles, which place they reached at the end of three days' travel, Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell rode through on horseback from Lexington, Ky., to Madison, Ind., arriving at the latter place on Monday, the next day after the arrival of the children. On the following Tuesday the plunder and the children were loaded into another wagon and driven to Martinsville. They were preceded by Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell on horseback. They arrived in Martinsville in advance of the children after two and one-half days' ride, stopping in Columbus one day with John M. Gwinn, son-in-law of Mr. Mitchell. The children arrived Feb. 4, 1835. After stopping for a short time at the "Crawford House," a tavern kept by James Crawford, on the northwest corner of the public square, in Martinsville, Ind., where the Union Block now stands, they commenced housekeeping in a one-story frame house, situated near the southwest corner of the public square. In 1836 Mr. Mitchell employed hands, and in nine weeks time he had erected, and they were occupying, a large two-story frame hotel on the ground formerly occupied by their dwelling, and which is now occupied by the "Mason House." They kept hotel there for eleven years, the house being known as the "Union Hotel." At the end of that time Mr. Mitchell sold out to James Cunningham and moved to his farm, one and a half miles south of Martinsville, where they lived a number of years. While on the farm Mr. Mitchell made the brick for and built a one and one-half story brick dwelling on Lot 6, Block 13, in Martinsville, into which they moved, living there until his death, which occurred July 5, 1862, after a long illness. Shortly after his death Mrs. Mitchell broke up keeping house at the old homestead and went to live with her son-in-law and step-son, James M. Mitchell, with whom she resided until her death, which occurred Sept. 17, 1889. By Mr. Mitchell she had three children, of whom but one survives, Thomas B. Mitchell, of Martinsville, Ind. She was a member of the Christian Church. Her first husband was a Baptist.

Col. Scott was the last survivor of his parents' family. After the death of his father he accompanied his mother back to Kentucky, and in 1835 returned with his mother and step-father to Indiana, as previously related. Mr. Mitchell became his guardian. His education was obtained in the Martinsville schools, and his first employment was in a tannery, for when quite young he was apprenticed to learn the trade. For a while he worked at Sharp's tanyard, in Monroe county, Ind., and then with John W. Sims, at his tannery in Martinsville. His health failing him in this vocation, he found employment with John M. Gwinn, then a merchant of Columbus, Ind., whose daughter he subsequently married. About this time Mr. Gwinn left his family and went to Florida. Mrs. Gwinn with Mr. Scott and his wife and her other children, then removed to Martinsville, where Mr. Scott found employment as clerk for J. M. & S. M. Mitchell. Then he was engaged as deputy recorder of Morgan county under Stephen McCracken, and later was deputy auditor under Barclay Burrows. He so conducted himself in these official positions as to become quite popular, so much so that his party, the Democratic, nominated and elected him to the office of clerk of the Morgan Circuit court. He held this position for four years, ending in 1859, after which he became deputy auditor of Morgan county under William J. Manker. In the meantime he had purchased a clothing stock, which was superintended by his father-in-law, John M. Gwinn, who had returned from Florida, and he was thus engaged at the breaking out of the Rebellion. He was in that business for thirteen years.

When President Lincoln issued his call for 75,000 volunteers, Mr. Scott was the first man in Morgan county to enlist, which he did on the 18th of April, 1861, and on the 20th he was commissioned captain of Company K, 7th Regiment Indiana Volunteers. He was in command of his company at the battle of Phillippi, W. Va., on June 3, 1861, the first engagement of the war; also at Laurel Hill and Carrick's Ford, and was mustered out with his regiment on Aug. 3, 1861, by reason of the expiration of his three months term of service. He re-entered the service Oct. 19, 1861, as lieutenant-colonel of the 59th Indiana Volunteers, which regiment was organized at Gosport, Ind., with Jesse I. Alexander as its colonel. This regiment served under Gen. Pope in the Army of the Mississippi. Colonel Scott served on the Mississippi until after the battle of Shiloh, when Pope's army joined that of General Grant. He served with Grant until after the siege and surrender of Vicksburg, after which he was with General Sherman, being with him on his "March to the Sea," and back through the Carolinas to the city of Washington, where he participated in the Grand Review. He then returned with his regiment to Indianapolis, where it was mustered out of service July 17, 1865. In 1864 he was commissioned colonel of his regiment, in place of Alexander, resigned. During his connection with the 59th he was in the following engagements: New Madrid; Island No. 10; Tiptonville; Siege of Corinth; Iuka; Corinth, Oct. 3-4, 1862; Port Gibson; Raymond; Jackson, Miss.; Champion Hills; Black River; Siege of Vicksburg; Missionary Ridge; all actions at Atlanta; Sherman's celebrated March to the Sea; the engagements at Savannah; and closed his military career at the battle of Bentonville, N. C., Feb. 18, 1865. Colonel Scott did not escape injury during his long and arduous service, the explosion of a shell at the battle of Champion Hills injuring him seriously and ultimately causing his death.

After the close of the war and the return to peaceful pursuits, Colonel Scott first engaged in the hotel business in Indianapolis, continuing this for eight years, and then returned to his boyhood home, where he opened an abstract office. After completing an abstract of titles to land in Morgan county he engaged in that line in Martinsville, also adding loan and insurance lines. There he continued to the end of his days, a man of many interests, prominent in public spirited enterprises, the owner of one of the finest of the city's homes, and of other valuable property. He was appointed receiver of the Electric Light plant. A stock company was formed and Colonel Scott, with others, purchased the plant (he himself becoming a large stockholder), which he managed until his health failed, and he sold the plant to the present company.

On Jan. 23, 1849, at Columbus, Ind., Colonel Scott was married to Miss Mary A. Gwinn, who was born March 1, 1831, at Columbus, daughter of John M. and Mary A. (Mitchell) Gwinn. Two children were born to that union, Mary Imogene (called Jennie) and William G., both of whom are deceased, the latter dying in infancy. The daughter was the wife of Henry C. Jones, of Richmond, Ind., machinist by trade, but who was clerk of the "Palmer House," at Indianapolis (then under the management of Colonel Scott), when he married Jennie Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Jones moved to Martinsville with her parents and Colonel Scott gave up the hotel business, and there he died in January, 1878, and Mrs. Jones died Dec. 25, 1878. Her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Scott, died Jan. 31, 1880, aged forty-nine years. She was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. On Dec. 21, 1887, Colonel Scott was married (second) to Miss Lizzie O. Callis, by whom he had no children.

Colonel Scott belonged to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which his widow is also a member. In politics he was a Democrat. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch Mason (had filled all the chairs in the Blue Lodge), a member of the K. of P., and of Blankenship Post, G. A. R.

Mrs. Lizzie O. (Callis) Scott has always had her home in Martinsville, though she was in Indianapolis for several years, during her connection with the Indiana State Library. She was born in Martinsville, daughter of Edwin Willard and Ellen Greene (Orner) Callis. Her father was a native of New Jersey, born near Fennington, and while in the East married Ellen Greene Orner, who was a native of New Jersey and of Holland ancestry, her parents being George B. and Elizabeth Ann (Osmun) Orner. They came out to Martinsville, Ind., in 1856, and Mr. Callis, who had learned printing and bookmaking in his young manhood, and had published a paper in his eastern home, engaged in the newspaper business, purchasing the Morgan County Gazette, which he edited for many years. It was established as such in 1854, and later changed to the Martinsville Democrat. He has been a practical printer and newspaper man throughout his active years, and still continues to work at the "case," feeling loath to bid adieu to his types. He is probably the oldest printer in the State of Indiana. At one time he set a Hebrew Bible.

Mrs. Scott has always shown decided literary talent and aptitude for the field in which she has been so successful. She is familiar with the practical side of the work as well, for she became an adept at type-setting in her father's establishment, and as previously mentioned was engaged on the Morgan County Gazette for a number of years. Meantime, however, in 1883, she was elected by the Legislature to the important position of State Librarian, and upon her devolved the responsibility of removing the State Library to the Capitol. Re-elected in 1885, she continued in the office, and the Legislature failing to name a successor in 1887 she acted as librarian until 1889, when Mr. Jacob P. Dunn took the office. Meantime, as recorded, she had become the wife of Col. Jefferson K. Scott, and she returned to Martinsville to make her home. Mrs. Scott has always taken an active and effective interest in local and State societies, and her culture and attainments entitle her to the high rank she holds among intellectual people in Indiana.

EMERY ALBERTSON, until July, 1907, senior member of the firm of Albertson & Hobbs, extensive nurserymen of Bridgeport, is a native of Indiana. He was born in Washington county, Aug. 15, 1858, and was reared to the business in which he was so successfully engaged, his father being one of the pioneer nurserymen of the State. His early educational discipline was secured in the public schools, and was effectively supplemented by a course of study in the Blue River Academy, maintained under the auspices of the Society of Friends, of which he is a birth-right member. Emery Albertson is a son of Oliver and Mary (Morris) Albertson, both of whom were born in Washington county, Ind., being representatives of sterling pioneer families.

Benjamin Albertson, the paternal grandfather, was born in North Carolina, whence he emigrated to Indiana Territory in 1816, settling in the midst of the forest wilds of Washington county. There he entered a tract of government land and eventually reclaimed a good farm. He was also a skilled physician, and was one of the pioneers in the practice of medicine in Indiana, his life having been one of signal honor and usefulness. He continued to reside on the old homestead until his death, and was a prominent and worthy member of the Society of Friends. His children were as follows: Charles, who died in Kansas City; Edmund, a physician who died in Washington county; Isabella, who became the wife of W. M. Trueblood; Sarah, who married N. Morris; and Oliver.

Oliver Albertson was born and reared in Washington county, Ind., and his early environments were those of the pioneer epoch in that beautiful section of the State where the Quaker colonists had planted their homes. He was ever true to the noble teachings of the Friends, and was an active and zealous worker in the Society. He received a liberal education, and continued his residence at the old homestead for many years, and established the nursery business (in connection with farming and the mercantile business) which was eventually developed into an enterprise of wide scope and importance. He established the nursery in 1840, and continued his active identification with the industry until the close of his life, in 1879. He conducted the most extensive retail nursery business in the State, and his progressive methods, careful attention to all details and his honorable and straightforward dealings gained him an enviable success, while he at all times retained the confidence and high esteem of those with whom he came in contact in the various relations of life. Mr. Albertson's health finally became quite seriously impaired, and while he continued to retain his interest in the business established in Washington county, and to accord a general supervision of the same, he removed to Bridgeport, Marion Co., Ind., in 1875, and there started a modest nursery, utilizing twenty acres of land, and later adding about as much more to its area, and here he had secured an excellent start in his from the sphere of life's activities, his death occurring in 1879. After his demise the Washington county business, which had been conducted under the firm name of O. Albertson & Co., was closed and the estate settled up. His wife, a woman of gentle refinement and noble character, was likewise born in Washington county, being a daughter of Benoni and Rebecca Morris, both natives of North Carolina and members of the Society of Friends. They were members of the little colony established in Washington county, Ind., prior to 1816, and her father improved a good farm and became one of the prosperous citizens of the State, having endured the vicissitudes of pioneer life, and having lived to enjoy the rewards of his earnest toil and endeavor. He and his devoted wife continued the journey of life side by side for sixty years, and he died at the age of eighty-nine years, while she lived to attain the venerable age of ninety-three. Their children were as follows: Thomas; Nixon; Catherine, Mrs. Morrison; Jephtha, who died in Washington county in 1902, at the age of more than eighty years; Joanna, Mrs. Parker; Robert; and Mary, mother of our subject. Mrs. Mary Albertson died in 1887, at the age of sixty years. Oliver and Mary (Morris) Albertson became the parents of four children, namely: Anna, who is the wife of C. M. Hobbs, who was associated with Emery Albertson in business, and of whom mention is made elsewhere; Albert, now a resident of Long Beach, Cal.; Emery; Frederick, who died in 1887 in his twenty-seventh year.

Emery Albertson early became identified with the practical work of conducting the nursery business, and from his youth has been a close student of scientific methods of cultivation, so that he proved an able successor to his father, who had established so noteworthy a prestige in this important line of industry. He accompanied his parents in their removal to Bridgeport, in 1875, and here assisted his father in the establishing of the new nursery, of which he assumed control at the time of his father's death, being ably assisted by his brother-in-law, Mr. Hobbs, with whom he became formally associated in carrying forward the enterprise, the partnership being formed in 1881, under the title of Albertson & Hobbs. The business association continued until July, 1907, when Mr. Albertson retired, Mr. Hobbs and his sons taking the business, and now carrying it on under the name of C. M. Hobbs & Sons. During the old firm's existence for more than a quarter of a century they pushed steadily forward and built up a business of magnificent scope and importance, as is evident when it is stated that the enterprise became the most extensive of the sort in the State, and among the most important in the entire Union, the firm enjoying a high reputation for absolute reliability and fair dealing, while their products were sold in the most diverse sections of the country, and their export trade showed a gratifying increase. The utmost care was given to all details of propagation and the nursery stock was invariably of the highest grade, including all lines of hardy fruit and ornamental trees, shrubbery, etc. When the firm assumed control of the Bridgeport enterprise the nursery comprised about twenty acres, and an idea of the expansion which was effected through their well-directed efforts may be gained when we state that when the firm dissolved they had more than 300 acres closely planted with young fruit and ornamental trees, while in addition to this they had a large eastern planting in Livingston county, N. Y., and another large plant, for supplying the western trade, at Topeka, Kans. In the Bridgeport nurseries employment was given to an average corps of about forty workmen, while in the shipping season this force was largely augmented, so that the enterprise was one of marked benefit to the town and county, as is its successor, C. M. Hobbs & Sons. Mr. Albertson at the present time is at Long Beach, Cal., whither he had gone on account of his wife's ill health, and he is somewhat interested just now in orange culture. He is a member of the National Association of Nurserymen, and has served as president, vice-president, and in other official positions, at present being special representative of said association. He also holds membership in three protective associations. In politics, though never an aspirant for office, he gives staunch support to the Republican party, and in his religious faith is a member of the Society of Friends, of which he is a birth-right member. He is a man of unswerving integrity and distinctive business ability, and has been known and honored as a representative citizen in Bridgeport.

In 1882 Mr. Albertson was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Ingling, a daughter of Thomas W. and Sarah (Hughes) Ingling, both of whom were born in New Jersey, where they were married. The former was a son of Jacob and Rachel (Taylor) Ingling, likewise natives of New Jersey, and Jacob was a son of Tent and Mary Ingling, who were born in France, whence they emigrated to America in the Colonial epoch, being numbered among the pioneers of New Jersey. The Taylor family is of English extraction, and it also was early established in New Jersey. Tent Ingling became the father of seven children, namely: John; Tent, Jr.; Thomas; Jacob; Sarah, Mrs. Inman; Nancy, Mrs. White; and Mrs. Frazier. Jacob Ingling passed his entire life in New Jersey, where he followed his vocation of farming, being a man of sterling character and one who was a faithful worker. He was twice married, and the children of the first union were as follows: Jacob; Lydia, Mrs. D. English; Rachel, Mrs. Haley; Thomas W., father of Mrs. Albertson. One son was born to Jacob Ingling's second marriage, George, who is now a resident of Ohio.

Thomas W. Ingling was born in Burlington county, N. J., on June 4, 1819, and was there reared to the honest toil of the farm, receiving a common school education. He was but three years of age at the time of his mother's death, and was thereafter cared for by relatives until his father's second marriage, when he again entered the paternal home. Only a short time later, however, his father met an accidental death, being drowned, and the home was perforce broken up, and after an interval of somewhat precarious existence, Mr. Ingling finally found a good home with a man named English, with whom he remained on the farm until he had attained the age of twenty years, when he started out in life on his own responsibility. After his marriage he continued to devote his attention to farming in New Jersey, until after the birth of his eldest child, when he removed to Ohio, where he was engaged in farming for five years, after which he passed a short time in Illinois, whence they returned to Ohio, where he continued to make his home until 1854, when he came to Marion county, Ind., and located on a rented farm near Bridgeport, preferring to devote his attention to farming, though he was a natural mechanic and a skilled workman in both wood and iron. He eventually purchased a farm in this locality and conducted the same until 1867, when he engaged in the general merchandise business in Bridgeport, continuing successfully in this line of enterprise for more than a score of years and becoming one of the prosperous and honored merchants of the town, where he was held in the highest confidence and esteem. He retained possession of a part of this farm until his death. In 1892 he was succeeded in the mercantile business by his son, John, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work, and following that time he lived retired in Bridgeport, dying in August, 1903. He had achieved a position of independence as the result of his own efforts and stood as a sterling type of the self-made man, while honor and integrity ever dominated and directed his course. He cast his first presidential vote in support of William Henry Harrison, later espousing the cause of the Democratic party, while eventually he became a staunch Republican, having been affiliated with the "grand old party" for many years, and having held minor offices of local trust, though never a seeker for political preferment. His wife was a daughter of Thomas Hughes, who was born on shipboard while his parents were en route from England to America, and they settled in New Jersey in Colonial days, Mr. Hughes remaining loyal to the English crown during the Revolution. He was a brick mason and contractor and builder, and erected many important buildings in New Jersey, where he continued to reside until the close of his life. His children were as follows: David, who died in New Jersey; Eliza, who became the wife of John Hughes; John, who died in New Jersey; and Sarah, who became the wife of Thomas W. Ingling. Thomas W. and Sarah Ingling became the parents of six children, namely: Apollis S., the only one of the children born in New Jersey, served four years as a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and is now a retired farmer of Bridgeport; Jacob, born in Ohio, now a railroad agent and farmer in Illinois, was also a soldier in the Rebellion; Ann died at the age of sixteen years; John H. is a representative merchant of Bridgeport and is mentioned elsewhere; Adaline is the wife of J. L. Stair, of Illinois; and Sarah E. is the wife of the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Sarah Ingling was summoned into eternal rest in January, 1897. She was a devoted member of the M. E. Church and a woman of gentle refinement and beautiful attributes. In February, 1898, Mr. Ingling married Mrs. Malinda A. Turner, whose maiden name was Cravens, and her parents came from North Carolina as pioneers in Indiana. She was first married to F. Reed. She has no children. Mr. and Mrs. Albertson have had a family of five children, namely: Morris, who was born in 1884, died in 1896; Mary, born in 1888, died in 1893; Mildred, born in 1892; an infant, born in 1896; and Ruth, born in 1898.

HENRY W. BENNETT, president of the Indianapolis Stove Company, has been a factor in the commercial and public life of that city from early manhood. Before attaining his majority he became connected with the manufacturing business of which he is now the executive head, and his prominence in political circles covers a long period. He has the requisites which make him both strong and popular among his associates for he has the mind and manner that would win him respect as being sound and wholesome in any body of men.

Mr. Bennett is one of the native sons of his city, having been born in Indianapolis Aug. 26, 1858, son of William Henry and Helen Louise (Root) Bennett, and grandson of Henry and Sarah Ann (Tracy) Bennett. The grandparents were both born in Albany county, N. Y. Henry Bennett studied law in the office of Aaron Burr, in New York City, and locating about 1830 in Toledo, Ohio, was one of the pioneer attorneys of that place.

Henry W. Bennett received his business training in the establishment with which his father was connected, the factory of D. Root & Co., stove manufacturers, who were succeeded in 1877 by the Indianapolis Stove Company. Mr. Bennett became secretary and treasurer of this concern when organized and succeeded to the presidency in 1891. This concern is the oldest of its kind in the State, having been established in 1850. It has expanded greatly since the organization of the Indianapolis Stove Company, thirty years ago, and Mr. Henry W. Bennett has, by a rare combination of executive ability and intellectual gifts, contributed in no small measure to its continued prosperity. He has the foresight and breadth of mind necessary to keep up with the progress of the day in business methods and in the products of his house, and his success in commercial lines alone would be notable.

However, Mr. Bennett has not been wholly a business man. Since 1890 he has been active in the councils of the Republican party, and from 1898 to 1906 he served as treasurer of the State Republican Committee. On Jan. 25, 1905, upon the recommendation of Senator Beveridge, he was appointed postmaster of Indianapolis. Mr. Volney T. Malott, the distinguished financier of Indianapolis, has expressed himself as follows regarding Mr. Bennett: "Mr. Bennett is one of our foremost business men. He combines rare executive ability with a judicial mind. While eminently successful as a business man his quick grasp of a complex problem, and facility of expression, would, it is believed, give him a high standing as a lawyer had he adopted that profession. He is a man of unquestioned integrity."

On Oct. 8, 1890, Mr. Bennett was united in marriage with Miss Ariana Holliday, a native of Indianapolis, and they have two children, Edward Jacquelin and Louise.

FRANK EMERSON CARLISLE, of Mooresville, is a citizen of Morgan county who has ever taken pride in the standing of his community, and has shown many substantial evidences of his intelligent citizenship. His town and county, on the other hand, have every reason to be proud of this native son, and he has received many marks of honor at the hands of his fellow citizens. His efforts in behalf of the public welfare have received cordial support and appreciation, from the best class of residents in the section, and if he has given liberally of his time and means to various objects intended to raise moral and intellectual standards, he may feel well repaid for the outlay in the success of his enterprises. He has been successful in business, conducting a furniture and undertaking establishment which would do credit to one of the larger cities. But he has found time for public service, and for the promotion of various causes which have appealed to him as worthy of the attention and sympathy of thinking men. His life has been busy and useful, and lightened with the rewards of well-directed labor.

Mr. Carlisle was born in Mooresville, Aug. 8, 1862, son of William Carlisle, a native of North Carolina, born May 10, 1805. William Carlisle's father entering the service as a soldier in the war of 1812, the son was early obliged to care for himself, and at the age of fifteen years he was working at the blacksmith's trade. He came to Indiana in 1833, first settling near Monrovia, in Morgan county. About one year afterward he removed to Mooresville, same county. His first wife, Lovey Jackson, lived only a few years, and he was afterward married to Delilah Dorrell, on Sept. 10, 1843. Mr. Carlisle was a man of very decided traits of character. He followed his convictions of right, but while differing sometimes from his friends he never forsook them, and was exceptionally faithful in all of his associations, especially in the church. In the year 1839 he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mooresville, of which he was a very active member, serving as a class leader about thirty years, and as steward for a number of years. He was always ready to perform any duty that was required of him in the church, and was much devoted to the stated means of grace. His death occurred Oct. 26, 1877, at which time he was the eldest male citizen of the village except the founder, Samuel Moore. His wife, Delilah Carlisle, the daughter of Redman and Elizabeth Dorrell, was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, July 7, 1819, and was but a child when her parents removed to Morgan county, Ind., settling on a farm near Martinsville. Here they remained some years, then going still farther west, to Missouri. At the age of fourteen she came to Mooresville, where for the first six years following she made her home in the family of Samuel Moore, founder of the town. After her marriage, Sept. 10, 1843, to William Carlisle, she stood by his side for thirty-four years, through the trials prevalent in life. Then came the husband's death, and her subsequent struggles as the head of the family perhaps took the bloom, as they will, from her face. But what was that in the brave efforts of devoted, untiring love for her family? The world has much to say of its grand old men, and something comparatively of its grand old women, but attention is called to the one who quietly, modestly and full of courage gave her life, her all, to the children she had borne and most tenderly nurtured. unremittingly, through many years, proving herself equal to the task of caring for them. When years brought physical weakness and dependence to her, she did not sigh for the appreciation of those for whom she had spent years of toil and sacrifice. Their expressions and tributes of love came to her to gladden her heart in the weary wandering down age's vale of tears. For two years the sands of life were gradually running lower, until, on the eighty-fifth recurrence of her birthday, the weary wheels of life stood still, while the spirit departed. Her children were dear to her, but in answer to the call she passed in peace from the land of her sojourn to the land of her abode.

Frank Emerson Carlisle attended the schools of the town where he was born until the death of his father, in 1877. Then, at the age of fifteen years, feeling the necessity of helping his mother to bear the burdens in the struggle of life, he started out to do something to repay his dear old parents for the care and good training they had given him. His love for horses and outdoor work up to this time attracted him to the farm. He cared for a physician's horses, afterward working on different farms and teaming. At the age of twenty-four years he went to Omaha, Nebr., working there one summer for a contractor, as inspector on improved streets. Returning home, he commenced the transfer business, in which he met with success, following this for six years, after which he sold his teams and wagons to his brother. Taking the money he had accumulated, and what he received for his outfit, he invested it in the furniture business in Anderson, Ind. After being in Anderson and New Castle about one year he sold out his business interests there, returning to his home town, and establishing a furniture and undertaking business which, as previously mentioned, would do credit to any of the larger cities. He erected the first business block with a large plate glass front, and had put down the first cement walk in the town—all indications of the progressive spirit which has characterized all his undertakings. His enterprise and business ability made his business prosper from the start. Losses never discouraged him, they only stimulated him to further effort. He has maintained a place among the foremost business men of the town to the present.

As previously intimated, Mr. Carlisle has had important relations to the community aside from his business interests. In political sentiment he is a Republican. He was treasurer of the town of Mooresville; in November, 1894, he was elected trustee of his township, assuming the duties of that office in January, 1905, and holding it five years and three months, after which he was elected as a member of the school board of the town, holding that office eighteen months; he resigned to take the office of county commissioner, to which he had been elected for three years in November, 1902, taking office Jan. 1, 1903, and was elected for the second term of three years in November, 1905, serving six years on the board of commissioners of Morgan county. His special efforts have always been directed toward promoting the cause of public education, and many of the most notable improvements in that line made in the last twenty years have been set on foot by him. He was one of the first trustees in the State to advance the idea of centralizing the township schools, which was made possible by transferring the pupils in a wagon from one district to another. While serving as trustee he was among the first to grasp the idea of combining the township and town schools in one, so as to enable towns of certain size to build and maintain modern school buildings. He even went before the Legislature and helped to get an amendment to the proportion of population, so as to benefit Mooresville, his home town, which was afterward successful in combining the schools of Mooresville and Brown township, now having one of the finest and best school buildings in the State outside of the largest cities.

Mr. Carlisle has always been instrumental in advancing the cause of temperance and while commissioner of his county was outspoken in his opinion as to the fitness of applicants for saloon licenses. He asserted that no man who would engage in the saloon business was of good moral character—which fact should be sufficient to bar him from receiving a license—and said he "would like to see the photograph of the court that would say he was." He stood by this conviction and remained in office to see his county cleared of every saloon in it. He never was defeated for any office for which he was a candidate, and he holds the esteem of all who know him. Mr. Carlisle is a member of the M. E. Church, and fraternally of the Free Masons, Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

In 1895 Mr. Carlisle was married to Ivalua Lawrence, oldest daughter of Thomas E. and Delfina Lawrence, and they have had these children: Irene Lucile, born Aug. 1, 1896; Milford Emerson, born Dec. 10, 1897; and Donald Dorrell, born Jan. 11, 1905. They live on East High street, and have one of the most modern homes in Mooresville, one of the nicest little cities in the State.

WILLIAM PIRTLE HEROD, attorney at law, surviving member of the well-known law firm of Herod & Herod, of Indianapolis, was born at Columbus, Ind., July 27, 1864, son of William W. and Susan C. (Rogers) Herod.

Mr. Herod's immediate ancestors have worthily borne their part in shaping the destinies of the present State of Indiana. The family has long been established in this country, and Mr. Herod's great-grandfather, William Herod, was an American soldier in the Revolutionary war. He passed his closing years in Bartholomew county, Ind., so that William P. Herod is a representative of the fourth generation of the name in this State. His grandfather, William Herod (2), was one of the most prominent citizens of Indiana in his time, represented his district in both branches of the State Legislature, served three terms in Congress during the thirties, and in numerous ways served his fellow citizens of Bartholomew county with great ability and fidelity. He settled at Columbus, in that county, in 1824, and there devoted himself to the practice of law until his death, in 1871, with the exception of the time spent in the public service. He was one of the foremost members of the legal fraternity in the State. Mr. Herod's maternal great-grandfather, General Wingate, served under General Harrison, and was known as a man of distinguished ability. William W. Herod, father of William P., was for over thirty years, until his death in 1906, an eminent member of the legal profession in Indianapolis, and prior to his removal to the city had made a reputation in his native town, Columbus. He established the firm of Herod & Herod in 1887, and was its senior member until his death. His wife was a member of the Rogers family, an old and prominent family of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Herod had two sons and two daughters.

William P. Herod was eleven years of age when his parents moved from Columbus to Indianapolis. His education was carefully looked after by his father. After attending the public schools he entered the Indianapolis Classical School, and from there went to Yale College, where he was graduated in 1886. His preparation for the Bar was gained in his father's office, and in 1887 he was admitted to practice in the county courts; in 1889 to the Federal courts; in 1890 to the Supreme court, and in 1905 to the Supreme court of the United States. He became associated in the practice of law with his father and has in a long career of uninterrupted success proved his title to a name which has been identified with that calling in Indiana for a period of over eighty years. Since its erection to Statehood Indiana has had many of the ablest lawyers of the country among its leaders at the Bar, and the ability to maintain high standing among such competitors betokens strength of mind and character as well. The representatives of the Herod family have never been found wanting in professional attributes or in the requirements of high citizenship. They have been noted for public spirit and the energy to work tirelessly toward ideals, whether of business, public or social life.

On June 5, 1890, Mr. Herod was married to Miss Mary Beaty Applegate, daughter of Bergen and Mary (Beaty) Applegate. Mrs. Herod's maternal grandfather, David Beaty, was a prominent lawyer at Indianapolis, a member of one of the early families, and her maternal great-grandfather, Dr. John Saunders, was one of the first physicians to locate in Indianapolis. John Applegate, her paternal grandfather, was of Scotch descent and was born in New Jersey. From there he moved to Cincinnati, where he was once a leading book publisher. Bergen Applegate, father of Mrs. Herod, was a wholesale grocery merchant at Indianapolis, where he settled in 1860 and died in 1896, aged fifty-five years. His wife died in 1888, while making a tour of Italy. Mrs. Herod was their only child.

Mr. and Mrs. Herod have an interesting family. Their tasteful home is situated at No. 1301 North Meridian street. They attend Christ Episcopal Church. Mr. Herod retains his college fraternity membership in the Delta Kappa Epsilon. In political opinion Mr. Herod is a Republican, and he takes an active interest in party affairs. He has ably filled a number of important political offices. He has served as United States commissioner and for a number of years was Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in the Central College of Physicians & Surgeons at Indianapolis.

CHARLES WARREN FAIRBANKS, Vice-President of the United States, was born May 11, 1852, in Union county, Ohio. Mr. Fairbanks is of American lineage, a descendant in the ninth generation from Jonathan Fayerbancke, who arrived in Boston only a few years after the town was settled. He came from England, where his family belonged to the farming class, became Puritans, suffered stoically the persecutions to which that sect was subjected, and bore arms under Cromwell in the people's cause. Eventually, in 1633, Jonathan Fayerbancke sought the promised haven of relief in the New World, bringing with him his wife and family—four sons and two daughters. He was destined to meet with disappointment. The Puritans, accustomed to defending their faith, countenanced nothing at variance with its stern doctrines, and though Jonathan Fayerbancke himself was a typical product of the times in his strong prejudices and iron determination he was not in sympathy with the dictatorial attitude of the congregation. Thus for a time he was not in good fellowship with his fellow colonists, and he was one of those who settled in Dedham in 1636. The following entry appears in the records of the church at Dedham: "Jonathan Fayerbancke, notwithstanding he has long stood off from ye church upon some scruples about publike p'fession of faith and ye covenant, yet after divers loving conferences with him, he made such a declaration of his faith and conversion to God and p'fession of subjection to ye ordinances of XT in this Xyt he was readily and gladly received by ye whole church 14d-6m.-1664."

A descendant of this emigrant ancestor in the eighth generation was Loriston Monroe Fairbanks, who was born in 1824 in Windsor county, Vt., son of Luther and Lucy (Lewis) Fairbanks. They came to Ohio in 1837, with their family, and settled on the Darby plains, in Union township. Luther Fairbanks was a farmer by occupation, but after following that calling for some years in Union county he returned East, living in Massachusetts for six or eight years. But he again came to Ohio, and died in Union county at the residence of his son Loriston, aged seventy-six years. His wife died before him. Loriston M. Fairbanks was only a youth when the family moved from his native State to Massachusetts, and he was employed in a woolen mill at Ware, Mass., but on moving out to Union county, Ohio, he took up farming. However, he went back to Ware and remained East three or four years, during which he learned the trade of wagon-making, which he followed in Union county, Ohio, after his return to that section, from 1844 to 1850, in Union township. He had settled upon a good farm, 220 acres of land, this being virgin forest, which he cleared. He was one of the intelligent citizens of his day, serving as trustee of the township and for a number of years as a member of the agricultural board. In politics he was a Republican. In 1846 Mr. Fairbanks married Mary Adelaide Smith, a daughter of one of the early pioneer families of the county, her parents being William DeForest and Almira (Gott) Smith. Mrs. Fairbanks was born in New York State in 1829. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks. Their son Charles Warren Fairbanks was born in a log house on the farm in Union county, and his early life was as typical of the times and the locality as the surroundings of his birth. The family was large, and in accordance with the customs of the day the sons were expected to do all the necessary work about the farm. The land was neither cleared from the forest nor from debt, and sufficient crops were only to be obtained by the most persistent and well-directed labor. Many tasks now made easy by modern machinery were then performed in the most laborious manner, requiring an expenditure of time and energy inconceivable in farm economics at the present day. Thus every member of the family was expected to do his share, and young Charles was no exception. But the limitations of a pioneer farm did not bound his ambitions, and the most persistent of these was his desire for an education. He attended the short terms of the local district schools, read all the books within reach, pursued his studies in the evening after working hours, and made up his mind to attend college. His family, true to the progressive instincts of their race, encouraged this disposition in every way. He was just an average vigorous youth, his intellect indicating more strength than brilliancy, and physically he was the equal of any of his contemporaries. While very young he became an expert horseman, and he showed particular courage and skill in breaking and managing horses, though on one occasion he broke his arm while attempting to ride an unruly colt. He conquered the colt, and while still carrying his arm in a sling controlled and stopped a runaway team. He was fond of hunting, and is still a good shot, and he enjoyed participation in the social life of the time. But his taste for study remained constant. In this as in all of his later endeavors the training of his youth proved invaluable—the habit of constant guarding against waste of time and substance necessary to maintain existence under pioneer conditions has been one of the most potent influences in his success. He learned to exert himself to the utmost in whatever he undertook, and the lessons of simple honesty and integrity taught at home proved sufficient for every occasion.

At the age of fifteen he entered college. He had excellent health, was accustomed to economy, and was very glad of the opportunity with all its difficulties. So with a companion from the home neighborhood, whose aims were the same as his own, he went to Delaware, Ohio, not far away, and became a student at the Ohio Wesleyan University. The companionship had the double advantages of social and material benefit. Young Fairbanks made part of the furniture needed for their room, a table, a bookcase, and a washstand, and they took care of their room and did their own cooking, receiving supplies of provisions from home whenever it was convenient to send them. They were comfortable, they had plenty of nourishing food, and their expenses amounted to a very small sum. Charles Fairbanks became a carpenter's assistant, or did odd jobs at the trade on Saturdays, having learned the use of tools while working around the farm. His room-mate recalled that once they cut cordwood for a farmer, taking their pay in wood for their winter fuel. They knew nothing of physical luxuries. Nevertheless Mr. Fairbanks found time for enjoyment and friendship among his classmates, with whom his disposition made him popular, and in time he became a member of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity; he was also, by election from his class, one of the three editors of the college paper. He was a participant in the social gatherings of the institution, and his qualities as an advocate received early and general recognition. Upon one occasion, when there was a difference between the faculty and the fraternities, he was one of the chosen spokesmen of the latter bodies, although there were a number who had the advantage of him in years and length of membership. It is in such respects that he is best remembered by his contemporaries at college, for his genial and lively temperament, his kindly nature and his success as a leader. But his object in going to college was to study, and study he did, to such good purpose that he crowded five years' work into less than five, and graduated in 1872, at the age of twenty, with high honors, though during the period of his college life, as in his earlier years, he was better known as a serious student than a showy one. However, he was distinguished for an ability to absorb knowledge, and for his ready grasp of all subjects.

His college days over, Mr. Fairbanks returned to the farm, temporarily. He had chosen the law for his profession, but he needed money to continue his studies and he was looking for the means of acquiring it. His maternal uncle, William Henry Smith, was at that time general manager of the Western Associated Press, and through him the young man found employment as agent, first at Pittsburgh and later at Cleveland. His duties as press reporter afforded him much valuable experience, and though they were arduous and time-consuming he applied his old habits of industry with such good effect that he made good progress with his law studies during his spare hours. Finally, he attended one term at a law school in Cleveland, being admitted to the Bar by the Supreme court of Ohio in May, 1874. The choice of a location was his next important step, and after visiting Indianapolis he decided upon that city as a growing municipality and the capital of a State which was advancing to a place among the foremost in the nation.

Mr. Fairbanks was destined to realize his highest hopes of success in his chosen profession. His steadiness of purpose, patience, industry and conscientious attention to duty, as applied to his legal work, were exactly the qualities he needed to sustain him in the first few years of his climb toward fame. Clients were few and far between, but his faculty for making friends held those he met in a professional capacity as well as his social acquaintances. He not only won the confidence of his clients, but the respect and good will of his legal brethren, for he depended upon the merits of his cases and their careful preparation. Moreover, his courtesy was unfailing. Thus he advanced quietly, but rapidly and surely, toward his goal—the top. In less years than would have seemed reasonable to him at the beginning of his career he had a large practice, which continued to grow until his clientele was one of the most notable in the country. More remarkable still, his legal success, though of the most enviable degree, was not of the spectacular order, but gained in his own characteristic way. He had no criminal practice, having in fact had but one criminal case, most of his business concerning large affairs, which brought him before the Federal courts and in contact with, or opposition to, many of the most gifted legal men of the country. His reputation, indeed, was greatest among the members of the bench and bar. His practice was by no means confined to Indiana, but extended into many other States. Judge Walter Q. Gresham, who had closely observed the young lawyer in his court, once proposed to resign from the Federal bench and engage in the practice of the law with him.

Meantime, though really devoted to his profession, he had been an interested student of politics, for which, however, he could spare little time. It was to him a subject of absorbing interest. All the great political questions of the day, the political history of the country, and the policies of all the political organizations, had been the objects of thorough investigation on his part. He had an opportunity to enter politics at the outset of his professional career, but he felt at the time that he could not afford to sacrifice his legal prospects. But he kept himself well informed, and during campaigns assisted the Republican party by making effective speeches. His first political speech was made in his native county, before he attained his majority. His professional success assured, however, and his material affairs placed upon a sound basis, he felt that he could yield something to his inclinations. During these years his legal business had brought him into acquaintanceship and sometimes close relations with many men of national importance and distinction, and when he was ready for public service he found they had not forgotten him. His activity during various campaigns had also attracted favorable notice from the party leaders in the State, who sought his advice and counsel, but he did not come out as a party leader himself until 1888. That year Walter Q. Gresham was one of the two candidates Indiana had to offer for the Presidency. Mr. Fairbanks had the most intense admiration for both men. General Harrison was the leader of the bar at the time of his removal to Indianapolis, and his high character and great abilities ever commanded the esteem and warm appreciation of the younger man. Judge Gresham, on the other hand, had been judge of the United States court for the district of Indiana when Mr. Fairbanks began practice, and his kindly consideration of the young lawyer won him from the start. The Judge's fascinating personality held his affection to the end of his days. All his energies, therefore, were given to the furtherance of Gresham's interests.

During the national campaign of 1888 he won his title to a high place among the ablest political orators of the State. His preparedness was probably something of a surprise to those who had known of him as only an occasional speaker in previous contests. At that time also he was noted for another trait which had won him particular esteem in court—the absence of any language or insinuations detracting from the character of his opponents or their policies. This has been recognized to such an extent that the speakers of opposing parties have, so far as Mr. Fairbanks is concerned, returned the favor in kind. It has been his policy, in making speeches, to advocate the cause he represents, to present the merits of his candidates, and base his arguments upon reason. In fact, his creed then as now might be summed up in a statement he made upon one occasion. "Political parties are undivided as to purpose—the highest and best welfare of the country; their differences arise as to the best method of obtaining the end." Much of the credit for the large vote polled in Indiana was due to his exertions, for he not only had an abiding faith in his party, but a firm belief that General Harrison would do credit to the State that sent him to the Executive Chair, and his personal zeal communicated itself to his audiences everywhere. With the acumen of a successful lawyer, one who had much experience of human nature, he was found to be a valuable counselor as well as speaker—an opinion none of his fellow-workers has found cause to revise.

In the twenty years which have elapsed since his first notable activity Mr. Fairbanks has become a national figure in politics. His record is national history, and needs no repetition here. It is enough to say that as counselor and campaign speaker, as candidate and public servant, no citizen of the country has been more honored, more relied upon, or more universally trusted. To quote from one authority, "No step has been taken by the party in his State that he has not been consulted on, and it may be added that for some years no step has been taken against his advice, so fully has the party come to depend upon his political sagacity." His popularity as a speaker has been great. In 1892, during Harrison's second campaign, he was heard in almost every part of the State, and his phenomenal industry enabled him to do what few men would have been willing to undertake. In the party councils he was equally active, and there was no phase of the contest that did not bear his mark. He had the honor of being the choice of the State convention for chairman, and as such was intrusted with the delivery of the "keynote" speech of the State campaign—a responsibility of which he acquitted himself to the general satisfaction of the party. It was upon that occasion that he made his first public stand for the sound money doctrine—an attitude which in the light of later events seems like a foreshadowing of the deflection which almost disrupted the other great party. In that fall, however, the Republicans were unsuccessful. In the course of this campaign Mr. Fairbanks first met William McKinley, with whom he was ever after on terms of the utmost friendliness.

The reaction of 1894 toward Republican standards was felt nowhere in the country more keenly than in Indiana. Under the leadership of Mr. Fairbanks the party carried the elections all over the State and regained a majority in the Legislature, and he had made himself more than ever secure in the confidence and good-will of the people, to whom he was becoming very well known. He had spoken in every county of the State, had won universal friendship among the members of his own party, and had made no enemies among those opposed to him politically. The next election, which came in Presidential year, presented new difficulties, for the free silver movement had gained strength, though scattered, in the country districts, even among the Republican element. Mr. Fairbanks was one of the few men who had at once the courage to risk personal popularity by running counter to this current, and the wisdom to feel that a sound political doctrine, if properly exploited, would receive the support of the people. He has always believed that it is poor policy to disown good principles, even though they may not meet with the popular favor of the moment, or to beat about the bush by equivocation of any kind. The financial plank of the State platform that year was intrusted to him, and he advocated from the first the straightforward policy which he persuaded his fellow-workers to adopt—the open stand for honest money, even though it carried the risk of a temporary split in the party. One of the leading candidates on the ticket remarked: "It is brave, it is right; but I shall prepare to be snowed under." Mr. McKinley led among the candidates for the Presidential nomination, and Mr. Fairbanks managed his interests in Indiana with such success that he had every district in the State, Mr. Fairbanks himself being one of the delegates-at-large. Mr. McKinley was so favorably impressed with his stand on the money question that he requested him to act as temporary chairman of the St. Louis convention, and he delivered a strong speech, covering with completeness all the issues of the day.

The signal victory of the party in Indiana that year was due in no small degree to Mr. Fairbanks' tireless and persistent efforts in his canvass of the State, which was saved to the Republicans against heavy odds. The resultant majority in the Legislature immediately turned to him as the choice for United States senator.

In accepting the senatorship Mr. Fairbanks made personal sacrifices not easily appreciated by anyone unfamiliar with the circumstances. He had always depended for success in his undertakings upon the course he adopted in his studies and in his professional calling—that of undivided attention to the matter in hand. When he answered the call to public service he did so with the intention of giving his duties the same care he devoted to every matter which claimed his attention. Accordingly he retired from his law practice and gave himself up completely to his latest responsibilities, for which he proved to be most admirably equipped by his earlier experiences. Calm and judicial in his outlook, sane in his judgment, and accustomed to taking the helm in trying moments, he was a fit compeer of his associates in the national body of law-givers. He took his seat in that body in March, 1897, the same day that his friend, William McKinley, was sworn in as chief executive. They had so many aims and ambitions in common that it is not surprising their friendship endured. Such an acknowledgment of superior qualities, coming from the head of the nation, gave him high standing among his colleagues immediately, and they found him well able to sustain the dignity. He did not find it necessary to make his way into councils and debate. His reputation as a counselor had preceded him, and he was soon invited to join his party colleagues in conference, on the most important problems. He participated in all the vital legislation of the day. His advice was sought in the most momentous questions. His intimacy and thorough sympathy with the President commanded the utmost attention for his utterances as being expressive of the sentiments of the Chief Executive. His championship of McKinley and his policies never faltered, as the record of his services in the Senate amply testifies. Their close relations were continually cemented by acts of mutual helpfulness, and so well was Mr. Fairbanks' affectionate esteem for the President known that he was asked to address a service of thanksgiving called by the G. A. R. at Cleveland when the announcement was made that the Executive would recover from the attack made upon him at Buffalo. Their rejoicing was speedily followed by the news of the President's death. To Mr. Fairbanks it was a personal calamity unmitigated by any circumstances save the memory of his friend's greatness and a legacy of patriotic ideals which impelled him to renewed activity in his official capacity. Upon several occasions, when a tribute to the late President was to be a feature of the program, Mr. Fairbanks has had the honor of paying it. When a memorial tablet was placed in the Metropolitan Methodist Church at Washington, where McKinley attended services, he made a speech which, though brief, commended itself to all present as a perfect estimate of the President's character; at the unveiling of the monument at Toledo, on Sept. 14, 1903, he delivered an elaborate address. He was prominent in the movement which led to the erection of the McKinley monument at Canton.

We shall make no attempt to cover Mr. Fairbanks' numerous activities as a member of the Senate. As already intimated, he was early honored with the confidence of his fellow-members to an unusual degree, and he proved himself worthy of the distinction in every respect. His stand upon every question was taken only after mature deliberation, but having declared himself upon any point he adhered firmly to his expressed opinion, a line of conduct possible only to one of his temperament. His speeches upon any subject have defined his position clearly, leaving no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to his views, and containing no loop-holes of which he might avail himself in some subsequent emergency. He has ever continued firm in his support of the Republican financial policies, and one speech in particular upon this topic is so complete that it is virtually "an epitome of the history of financial legislation in this country, and is valuable for reference to the student of finance."

When the Spanish war cloud arose he was one of those who believed in dispelling it if such action were consistent with our national honor, but war becoming inevitable, he stanchly upheld the government. His patriotic conduct throughout the course of the war was consistent with his spoken opinions and highly creditable to him both as a man and as a legislator. His subsequent acts gave every evidence of earnest thought and striving toward the highest ideals of man's duty to man. He endeavored to give practical values to his own ideas of administering the laws in their highest interpretation. His attitude on the Philippine and Cuban difficulties, the labor question, the tariff, the Panama canal, international arbitration, immigration, and other matters of the highest importance, have placed him among the progressive thinkers of the nation.

While his speeches have shown such thorough preparation as to command the most flattering attention in the Senate chamber his work in that body had outward evidences of serious work in other lines, particularly on important committees. Shortly after entering the Senate he was made chairman of the important committee on Immigration, and the bills introduced for the proper restriction of immigration had his support. The Chinese exclusion act had his earnest advocacy. He rendered service on some of the most influential committees, such as the Committees on Foreign Relations, Judiciary and the like. His labors on the Joint High Commission appointed to settle Canadian questions deserve especial mention. In May, 1896, a protocol was signed between the United States and Great Britain for the appointment of this Commission for the adjustment of the Canadian questions, to consist of ten commissioners, five to be appointed by each government. Later the number was increased to twelve, six from each country. Many of the questions to be submitted for the consideration and determination of the Commission were of long standing and of great importance, and had been the source of more or less friction between the two great powers for many years, and the two governments anxiously desired to have them adjusted in order that good neighborhood between them might not be disturbed. President McKinley appointed as commissioners of the United States: Charles W. Fairbanks, United States Senator from Indiana; George Gray, United States Senator from Delaware; Nelson Dingley, Member of Congress from Maine; John W. Foster, of Indiana, ex-Secretary of State; John A. Kasson, of Iowa, ex-Minister to Spain; T. Jefferson Coolidge, of Massachusetts, ex-Minister to France. Great Britain's representatives were: Lord Herschel, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain; Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada; Sir Richard J. Cartwright, Minister of Finance of Canada; Sir Louis Davies, Minister of Marines and Fisheries of Canada; John Carlton, Member of the Canadian Parliament; Sir James Winter, Premier of Newfoundland. The Commission met at Quebec in August, 1898, and addressed itself to the consideration of the subjects embraced in the protocol. After being in session some weeks it adjourned to meet in Washington, assembling in the latter place in December, 1898, where it labored for several months in an effort to compose the differences between the two powers. After the adjournment of the Washington meeting of the Commission without reaching any definite results Senator Fairbanks, at the instance of President McKinley, visited Alaska to obtain what light he could on the question involved. He visited all the waterways and studied the topography of the country. He also made extensive inquiries of the residents as to what jurisdiction, if any, had been exercised by Great Britain over any portion of the disputed territory. The work of this Commission while not conclusive in many respects paved the way for the amicable settlement of many of the points of difference embraced within the protocol. In 1902 the United States and Great Britain agreed upon a Boundary Tribunal composed of six jurists of repute, three of whom were appointed by each government, and this tribunal held that the construction of the treaty under which the United States acquired Alaska was substantially as claimed by the United States, thus justifying the position maintained by the United States commissioners before the Joint High Commission.

Every campaign has added to Mr. Fairbanks' reputation and popularity as a party worker. In the Presidential election of 1900 he labored zealously for McKinley's re-election, and the late President invited him to a place in the Cabinet. Marks of favor from his fellow senators and from his constituents appealed to him constantly to live up to the high mark of public service he had set, and these took substantial form at the close of his first senatorial term, when he was re-elected. Though his latest honor, his elevation to the Vice-Presidency, allowed him a service of but two years of his second term he had rounded out a period on the floor of the Senate memorable for efficient activity.

The nomination for Vice-President came to Mr. Fairbanks wholly unsought. At the convention of 1904 he was one of the delegates-at-large from Indiana, and the enthusiasm and favor with which he was received demonstrated beyond dispute the trend in his direction. Chauncey M. Depew, who seconded the nomination of Mr. Fairbanks for the Vice-Presidency, paid him a compliment which reflected the feeling throughout the country generally: "Eighty millions of people want for Vice-President a Presidential figure of full size. He presides over the Senate, but he does more than that. He is the confidant of the senators. He is the silent-member of every committee. He is influential in that legislation which originates and which is shaped in the Senate, and now that we have become a world power, now that treaties make for either our prosperity, our open door, or our closed harbors, he is necessarily an important factor in the machinery of the government. By the tragic death of McKinley the Vice-President was elevated to the Presidency, and to-day for the first time we have renominated the Vice-President who thus came to be the President. All that has been said here about Theodore Roosevelt—all of which is true—the highest tribute to him is that the American people, for the first time, unanimously demand a Vice-President shall be the elect of their choice for the Presidency of the United States. Now, gentlemen, it is my privilege, in looking for Vice-Presidential possibilities, to announce what you all know, that we have found a Vice-Presidential candidate of full Presidential size." None in this land has ever attempted to deny that he has shown himself to be "full size."

Mr. Fairbanks has always been a decided Republican. But that is because of his abiding faith in the principles which that party advocates. "Power and control only come to the party that serves the country best" is his reason for being a Republican and maintaining the tenets of the great organization in which he has long been a leader. As a senator he was noted for non-partisanship on all questions not essentially implying adherence to party principles.

In 1908 Vice-President Fairbanks was presented by his friends for the Republican Presidential nomination. Though defeated, he was the only candidate for the nomination who had behind him the solid support of his own State, and received votes from a larger number of States than any other candidate except the nominee of the convention. He retired from the race with the respect of his competitors, having employed no methods and adopted no means not consistent with his high sense of the proprieties and his regard for the welfare of the party to which he yields allegiance.

During his twelve years of public service Vice-President Fairbanks has delivered hundreds of addresses on public occasions. These speeches cover a wide range of subjects, and so admirably as to demonstrate Mr. Fairbanks' unusual versatility as a speaker. In the campaign of 1904, as the running mate of President Roosevelt, it fell to the lot of Mr. Fairbanks to bear the burden of the speaking campaign. His activities in that campaign are unprecedented in the history of American politics. He made a speaking tour 25,000 miles in length, speaking as often as twenty times in one day, and yet showing at the end of the campaign no diminution in physical form. His vitality was a source of surprise to all those who became familiar with it. That his speeches were a source of strength to the cause he advocated was generally admitted, in fact Mr. Fairbanks stepped in this campaign to the very fore-front of American campaigners. During his incumbency as Vice-President invitations by the hundred have come to him to deliver public addresses. He has accepted a large number of these invitations, and in filling his engagements has come in contact with hundreds of thousands of his countrymen, in almost every State of the Union, and wherever he has gone, his popularity has been strengthened, his hold on public confidence increased. The breadth of his views, his wide sympathies, his thorough understanding of the essential qualities of good citizenship and their highest expression in the daily life of the average citizen, have gained him many friends among thinking people generally. His addresses before labor organizations have been particularly well received. His respect for workingmen, their organizations and institutions, is founded upon personal experience and is whole-souled and sincere.

Personally Mr. Fairbanks has so many kindly and admirable traits that it may well be said every many who knows him is his friend. Friendliness has ever been the rule of his life, and his affections have always governed his actions to an extent rather remarkable for a man of his strength of character. Some of his most active political opponents are among his warmest personal friends. He is perhaps best known for his serious, earnest, sincere nature. He takes all things seriously, probably from the habit he has formed of giving his best attention to whatever he has in hand at the moment. He enters no undertaking without faith in it, and, having entered upon it, proceeds to justify his faith. In his profession it is this trait that has gained him the confidence of both clients and the legal fraternity. In his political career it gained him the many admirers he held both in and out of the party. It was this that governed his views on political promises. He made none he was not prepared to fill. He never indorsed candidates for office without a personal investigation of their claims as to fitness, etc. He had no patience with politicians who used the party only as a means of personal profit, and he has never aided them. The sacrifices he has made in accepting office show clearly his own high estimate of the opportunities he sees in public office holding. The men who represent a party in office should be there only because there are none better to be found in any party. His unselfish appreciation of the achievements of others in the government employ has been an inspiration to those working with him to yield the best that is in them.

As a born student Mr. Fairbanks has always spent much of his leisure among books, and he enjoys good fiction as well as more erudite literature. His ability thus to indulge in lighter recreations enables him to resist the heavy strain of continued arduous exertion necessary to the proper discharge of his duty as he sees it. At all times he is never too busy or too hurried to be courteous, to be pleasant, to be gracious. And there is always the impression that these are not surface manners, but the natural expression of one kindly disposed toward all.

Perhaps much of the peace and good-will which have characterized Mr. Fairbanks' public acts and utterances have been the reflection of an ideal home life. On Oct. 6, 1874, he was united in marriage with Miss Cornelia Cole, a fellow student at the Ohio Wesleyan University, one who has been his inspiring companion and sympathizer in every step of his career. Their household has always have been noted for that simplicity and kindliness which are the highest expression of refined domesticity. Mrs. Fairbanks, no less than her husband, has the happy faculty of making and keeping friends, whom the wholesome cheer and hospitality of their home have charmed without fail. Five children have been born to them, four sons and one daughter, all of whom have had the advantages of collegiate education, the first two graduating from the alma mater of their parents, the Ohio Wesleyan University. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have maintained their interest in the institution, of which he has long been a trustee. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are members of the Meridian Street Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Fairbanks' busy life has never been so full of weighty matters as to exclude social pleasures, in which he and his family take the keenest enjoyment, their genius for hospitality manifesting itself in many delightful ways.

JOHN NEWTON RECORDS, M. D., an able physician of Franklin, Johnson county, Ind., was born Feb. 17, 1862, in Franklin township, Johnson county. His parents, Franklin S. and Susan M. (Utterback) Records, were both of old pioneer stock, distinguished for moral and intellectual strength, high ideals of patriotism and deep religious principles.

The family is of English extraction. John and Anna (Galloway) Records were the Doctor's great-great-grandparents. Their son Josiah Records, born in Delaware, married into the Tully family of Welsh descent.

Spencer Records, son of Josiah, was also a native of Delaware. He took part in the Revolutionary war, and was noted as an Indian fighter after his removal from Pennsylvania to Kentucky, where he was a pioneer. His trade was that of a millwright, and he followed it in connection with farming. He died aged eighty-seven years, eight months, being the same age at his death as his son, William P. Records.

William P. Records, the paternal grandfather of Dr. Records, was born in Ohio. In 1801 he emigrated to Indiana and bought land in Bartholomew county, later removing to Shelby county, where he carried on farming through life. He died esteemed and respected in his neighborhood, when he was aged eighty-seven years and eight months. He married Elsie Harvey, who became the mother of a large family and died at the age of ninety-three years. She was a daughter of Longstreet Harvey (whose mother was a Longstreet), who married Charity Bennett; she died at the age of ninety-three years, while Mr. Harvey's death took place at the age of eighty-eight years. These ancestors were all noted for lives of industry and integrity, the men useful as citizens, and the women of high character and Christian attributes. Franklin S. Records learned many things from his father, who was a man of vigorous mentality as well as physical strength. Mr. Records recalled many tales told of the early days when his grandfather fought Indians in Kentucky. Both father and grandfather were Whigs, men of prominence in their communities, and died esteemed by all.

FRANKLIN S. RECORDS always followed an agricultural life. He was born in Bartholomew county, Ind., and was eight years old when his parents moved to Shelby county and twenty-two when he married and came to Johnson county. It was in 1854 that he moved to his late home, three and one-half miles southwest of the city of Franklin, buying a farm of 120 acres of land at that time. This original purchase was increased, and the estate now comprises 240 acres of fertile, well cultivated and excellently improved Indiana land. He was successful in his life work and a useful member of his community, for a period serving as a justice of the peace, and whenever called upon he proved himself a valuable and worthy citizen. He was regarded as a man of more than ordinary intelligence and influence for good. He first belonged to the Whig party, but later was in active accord with Republican principles. He and his wife belonged to the Christian Church, in which he was an elder for many years. His death occurred Feb. 24, 1907, when he was eighty years and five days old.

Mr. Records married Susan M. Utterback, a native of Kentucky, and they had a family of eight children, two sons and six daughters, the three survivors being: Mary V., the wife of William Craig, of Franklin township; Dr. John N.; and Harriet, the wife of Frank Cox, of Franklin township.

Perry Utterback, the father of Mrs. Susan M. (Utterback) Records, was a native of Kentucky, of German ancestry. As a farmer in search of desirable land he became an early settler in Indiana, and camped on Young's Creek in 1831, when there was not a house on the present site of the prosperous and bustling city of Franklin. He bought land in what is now Union township, in the western part of Johnson county, and cleared up a fine farm. Later, with pioneer spirit, he moved to Iowa, locating near the city of Ottumwa. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Susan M. Records was John DeWitt, a native of Kentucky, who lived there until advanced in age and reared a family.

In recalling the early life of three-fourths of the successful and prominent men of our times the biographer finds that this proportion passed the formative portion of their lives on a farm. Such was the case with Dr. John N. Records. His early school days were spent in his home district and he pursued the higher branches of study at the Danville Normal School, following which he took up the study of medicine, graduating from the Medical Department of the University of Louisville in 1894, and from the Southwestern Homeopathic Medical College in 1895. Dr. Records practiced for two years in Danville, locating in Franklin in 1897. Since that time he has been unusually well supported by the best patronage of the city, and by his skill and ability has won the commendation of his brother practitioners as well as the favor of the public. His personal standing is as high as his professional record.

On Aug. 19, 1885, Dr. Records was united in marriage with Agnes A. Saunders, daughter of John and Sarah (Robbins) Saunders. Her father, a native of Stratton, Cornwall, England, came to this country when a young married man, and settled first in Pittsburg, Pa., where he was a merchant and later he located in Salineville, Columbiana Co., Ohio, where he was a dry goods merchant. From that place he enlisted for the Union service in the Civil war, in an Ohio volunteer regiment, fighting for his adopted country until the close of the war. He died in 1875, aged sixty-nine. He was twice married, Sarah Robbins being his second wife. To Dr. and Mrs. Records has been born one son, Frank S., born April 1, 1889, his grandfather's namesake. He is a graduate of Franklin high school and at present is attending Franklin College. He is a working member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. The pleasant and attractive home of Dr. Records is at No. 349 West Jefferson street. The Doctor and his wife belong to the Christian Church, and during his residence in Union and Danville the Doctor was a deacon in that body. In politics he is a sturdy Republican, was made chairman of the County Republican central committee in 1900, and is now serving his fifth consecutive term. He is a member of the Johnson County Medical Society and the State Homeopathic Medical Society, and is up-to-date in all matters connected with the profession, and also of county and civic interest. Dr. Records is a Royal Arch Mason, holding membership in the Chapter at Franklin, Indiana.

T. E. LAWRENCE is a citizen of Mooresville whose success reflects credit upon himself and upon the community in which he has passed the greater part of his life. A worthy descendant of the sturdy pioneer stock which laid firm the foundations of progress and civilization in this section, he has shown himself able and willing to continue the work so well begun by the generation which preceded him, for he has always been foremost in the solution of the public questions of his day, and has proved a valuable citizen on many occasions. He is a man who has tried to live for others as well as for himself, and his influence in Mooresville will endure for many a year.

Mr. Lawrence was born in Grant county, Ind., June 19, 1847, son of William and Priscilla (Williams) Lawrence, grandson of Peter Lawrence, and great-grandson of Edward Lawrence, the founder in America of this branch of the Lawrence family, which is traced back to the eleventh century in England. The family was influential in all public movements and private enterprises and enjoyed distinction and wealth, its members occupying high offices. At one time they owned the whole of Lancashire. The American branch of the family has never shared this great wealth. Edward Lawrence, with two brothers, came to America about 1750, first settling on Long Island. Later they separated, one going to Massachusetts, one to the State of New York, and Edward to Pennsylvania and later to Virginia, where he became a large planter and slave owner. He left a will by which his property, including his slaves, was divided among his children.

Peter Lawrence, son of Edward, was born in Virginia, but removed to North Carolina, where he came under the influence of Friends and became a member of their peaceful society. He probably gave his slaves their freedom, as it would have been against his principles as a Friend to have sold them. In North Carolina he married Sarah Henshaw, a native of that State. In 1833 he moved to Indiana, settling in Henry county. He had been preceded in 1832 by his son Isaac, who entered land and built a cabin for the reception of the family. The father lived there all the remainder of his life, improving his farm until he owned one of the best in the county. He was a member of the Society of Friends, was opposed to slavery, and emigrated to Indiana to avoid its influence. By his three marriages he became the father of twenty-three children, three of whom, of the first marriage, died young, the others of that union being: John, Isaac, Jonathan, Nathan, Susanna, Mary, Nancy and Betty. The mother of these children was Abigail Haddock, of Ireland. His second marriage was to Sarah Hinshaw (or Henshaw), and the only child of this union was William, the father of our subject. His third wife had eleven children of whom survive: Thomas, Stephen, Daniel, Rebecca and Sarah.

William Lawrence was born in North Carolina, and coming to Indiana with his parents in 1833, grew to manhood in Henry county. There he married, after which he removed to Grant county, Ind., where he bought land and improved it, making a good farm, upon which he remained until 1864, when he sold it and removed to Morgan county. There he bought a farm near Monrovia, at which place he lived until his death, in 1885, at the age of sixty-five years. He also was of the Quaker faith, and never aspired to any notoriety, but lived a kindly, gentle, Christian life. He was most highly respected by all who ever came within his kind influence. Mr. Lawrence was thrice married, his first union being with Sally Peacock, by whom he had one daughter, Cyrena, now deceased, who was the wife of Jabez Hunt. For his second wife Mr. Lawrence married Priscilla Jessup, a widow of Indiana, who died in 1856. For fifteen years previously she had been a preacher in the Society of Friends. She was highly gifted. Her parents, Isaac Williams and wife, were early and honorable settlers in Henry county, Ind., the father being very prominent in the Society of Friends. His children were: Betsy (Mrs. Smitson), Emma (Mrs. Hazely), Jonathan, Isaac, John, and Priscilla (Mrs. Lawrence). The children of William and Priscilla Lawrence were: T. E., the subject of this sketch; Isaac, a merchant of Kansas; Sarah, Mrs. Israel Moon; Jonathan, of Chicago; Esther, Mrs. A. Morris; Miss Mary; Miss Anna; Bell, who died at the age of fifteen years; Barclay, who died at the age of two years, and one that died in infancy. Mr. Lawrence married as his third wife Mrs. Elizabeth Overman, who had two sons and one daughter by her first marriage, but no children by her second.

T. E. Lawrence remained under the parental roof until grown, and received good home training and a common school education. He was seventeen years old when the family moved to Morgan county, and he then taught his first term of school, making a present of most of his salary to his parents, retaining for himself only one dollar and a half. The gift was accepted with feelings of astonishment and appreciation, and was but one expression of his tender regard for his beloved parents. He taught five terms of school, and remained at home until he was twenty-four years of age, when he married, April 26, 1871. He then bought a sawmill in Clay township and settled down to hard work. At the end of his first year the mill burned and he lost heavily, as he had no insurance. After that he, for about ten years, followed farming, in 1883 moving to Mooresville, where he engaged in the hardwood lumber business, dealing mainly in ready-made lumber, mostly walnut. He soon began to buy logs, and after having them sawed found a market for all he could handle, at good prices, in Indianapolis.

When Mr. Lawrence entered this business it was without capital and he rose to his present substantial position in a unique manner; his success is an object lesson to the younger generation. He was about twenty-six when he felt that his ambition and independence of spirit would have better chances of development if he could but engage in business on his own account. His first venture was necessarily on a small scale. He bought a few trees at a time from the neighboring farmers, had them cut and hauled to a sawmill, and there sold them. By hard work and economical management he was soon able to pay for having the logs sawed for him, and sold the lumber to Mr. M. J. Osgood of Indianapolis. That gentleman recognized in him a desirable business associate, and offered to advance him all the money he needed to purchase lumber, the profits they made in partnership deals being divided as they went along. In this way

Mr. Lawrence often had as much as $20,000 of Mr. Osgood's money at his disposal, a very advantageous arrangement for both. After five years of this agreeable business connection Mr. Lawrence formed a partnership with Charles Osgood, a nephew of Mr. M. J. Osgood, buying out the latter's interest, and the new firm did a wholesale and retail lumber business in West Indianapolis for about eighteen months, at the end of which time Mr. Lawrence sold out to his partner. Returning to Mooresville, he continued in the same line, in which he has become one of the most prominent men of the day in that section. He has bought all kinds of lumber and large and small tracts of standing timber, rented and built mills, and worked a large force of men and teams. He extended his lumbering operations from Mooresville to Martinsville, and many other points in southern Indiana, as well as other States. For twenty years he has handled 2,000,000 feet of lumber annually, and he has always maintained his standing at the head and front of his own business. He has always looked after all the details of the business, doing his own bookkeeping and managing all of his important enterprises himself. Mr. Lawrence is one of the substantial men of the county and his fortune has been amassed in the legitimate lines of trade. Though he made a humble beginning his honesty and industry gained confidence, and he was given credit for all the working capital he needed; he has never betrayed the trust his associates placed in him. He has always retained the high respect of all who know him and have had dealings with him, and he has prospered steadily, now, in addition to his business property, owning two excellent farms, a fine stone quarry, and miscellaneous holdings. His home is a commodious two-story frame residence, set in ample grounds, in a desirable part of Mooresville, and he has many rental properties. He has been successfully associated with business lines other than the one in which his principal reputation has been made. At one time he was interested in the Mooresville Sorghum Mill, which proved to be a poor investment, but he has suffered very little from lack of business judgment, finding most of his enterprises profitable.

That Mr. Lawrence's business judgment is generally well thought of is shown in the fact that he has figured in the settlement of many estates. In 1891 he was appointed receiver for R. R. Scott, who had failed for a large amount. The invoice comprised $40,000, two stores, five farms, twenty-six town lots and a business house at Mooresville. Mr. Lawrence settled the business satisfactorily, and paid the creditors more than they expected to receive. This is but one instance of his thorough fitness for such tasks. In politics he is a Republican, but he has always been too busy to accept many offices, although he at one time served the township as trustee for four years.

Mr. Lawrence had a birthright membership in the Society of Friends, but he is a member and stanch supporter of the M. E. Church, in the work of which he is prominently and zealously interested. Soon after joining this church he was made a member of the official board, and he has served efficiently as steward, trustee and Sunday-school superintendent. His interest is centered particularly in the welfare of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital and Deaconess Home of the State of Indiana, which is situated in Indianapolis, to which he has given liberally of both time and means. He was one of the original movers in the establishment of that institution, to whose funds he has made very substantial contributions, especially before the project was on the assured footing it now enjoys. He is still serving on the board of managers, of which body he is one of the most influential members, his interest in and support of this institution having been one of the elements of its prosperity. He deserves high credit for the part he has taken in furthering this good work. Mr. Lawrence was a delegate from Morgan county to the State convention at Indianapolis. He is an ardent advocate of temperance, and a well known member of the local lodge of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed all the chairs.

In 1871 Mr. Lawrence was married to Miss Delfina Harvey, who was born in 1853, in Morgan county, a daughter of Jonathan and Lucretia (Free) Harvey, early settlers in Grant county, farming people, who later removed to Morgan county, where they became owners of a fine farm. Mr. Harvey took sick while on a trip to Danville and died before reaching home. He was a most highly esteemed member of the Society of Friends. His widow removed to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence, where she died in 1904, at the age of seventy-seven years. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs.

Harvey: Elam, a bookkeeper; Daniel, a farmer in Iowa; Albert, a farmer in Morgan county; Zemus, who died in 1902, leaving no family; and Delfina, Mrs. Lawrence.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence are: Ivalue, who married F. E. Carlisle, a merchant and undertaker at Mooresville; Gertrude, Mrs. Fred Likely, of Indianapolis; and Chester E., now at DePauw University, who it is expected will follow in his father's footsteps, a path which any young man would do well to pursue. With the high example of his father before him, he has every hope of success as a high-class business man. Mrs. Lawrence, like her husband, is an active religious worker, and she is president of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

Mr. Lawrence is a representative man in many ways, but in none more than as an example of the value of inheriting high principles and sound integrity of character. The influence of the kindly, intelligent Friends is seen in many of his acts and characteristics. The strength of the pioneers who risked all to make new homes in the wilderness is seen in his own forceful nature. The high principles of those of his forebears who left the South to escape the influences of slavery is reflected in his strict adherence to duty and right. Many noble elements have entered into his character, and in his virile, useful life he has developed them to high purpose.

C. M. LINDLEY, M. D., who for many years has been a prominent physician and surgeon of Brooklyn, Ind., was born on a farm in Crawford county, Ill., Jan. 1, 1832, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Conrad) Lindley, the former of whom was born in North Carolina and the latter in Kentucky, their marriage taking place in Illinois.

William Lindley, grandfather of the Doctor, was a prominent farmer in North Carolina for years, and a leader in the Society of Friends. Opposed to slavery, in 1811 he removed to Orange county, in the free Territory of Indiana. He was a pioneer, and was surrounded at that early day by Indians, who committed so many depredations that it was necessary for some member of the family to stand guard at night over the stock. Mr. Lindley improved a large tract of land, and when it came into the market, entered it and made here a fine home. He was a man of intelligence and public spirit as well as substance, and assisted in the building of the second fort erected in that locality for protection against the Indians. He lived up to the simple faith of the Quaker religion, and died honored and respected far above the ordinary citizen. His wife belonged to the equally prominent North Carolina Quaker family of Chambers, and it was her cousin, Samuel Chambers, who platted the town of Chambersburg, in Orange county. The children of William Lindley and wife were as follows: Owen; Jonathan; James; Samuel; David; Thomas; and Mrs. Ann Harned.

Samuel Lindley, son of William, was born in North Carolina: He accompanied the family in its exodus to the Territory of Indiana. Like his father he later entered a large tract of land in Orange county and improved the same, although he was obliged to endure many privations incident to those pioneer days. On account of the numerous bands of roving Indians, the early settlers located as near as possible to a central point where they erected a fort or block house to which they could retreat when attacked by the savages, such occasions often recurring. In 1820 he removed to Crawford county, Ill., where he was also a pioneer, but here he was able to secure a very desirable tract of 640 acres of land in the Wabash River Valley. This he improved and later sold to great advantage and bought still another tract which also, under his management, became a fine, productive farm. Mr. Lindley was a man of peace, and soon established friendly relations with the Indians who hunted through the valley, and he was never the object of their wrath. He reared his family in the Quaker faith, and died as he had lived, a man of exemplary life. His superiority of judgment was recognized by his neighbors, and he was generally called upon to settle disputes between them. A practical and successful farmer, he never took any active interest in political matters. His death took place in 1837. Samuel Lindley married (first) in North Carolina, a Miss Henderson, by whom he had two children, Owen and Queen, the latter of whom married a Mr. Green. His wife died in Crawford county, Illinois. His second marriage was to Elizabeth Conrad, daughter of a pioneer farmer from Kentucky, whose other children were: Abram; John; James; and Mrs. Susan Guyer. To this second marriage were born: Mrs. Rachel Williams; Abram; Susan, who died young; Mrs. Amey Provo; and Dr. C. M., the only surviving member of the family. Samuel Lindley married (third) Miss Mary Harrison, a cousin of the late President Harrison, and a daughter of a farmer of Wayne county, Ind., later of Crawford county, Ill. Three children were born to this third union, namely: Mrs. Elizabeth Woods; Mrs. Mary J. Cox; and Samuel, who resides on his grandfather's homestead on the edge of Clark county, Illinois.

Dr. C. M. Lindley was very young at the death of his father, and he had lost his own mother when but a babe of two months. After the death of his step-mother, he made his home with his brother Owen, a farmer in the locality. His early education was obtained in the little log country schoolhouse and was confined to the essentials—reading, writing and arithmetic. In 1846 the youth was unfortunate enough to suffer so seriously in an accident that the amputation of his hand was necessary. This was before the introduction in the west of the blessed anaesthetics, and it was a severe test of courage to submit to the operation. As it was now impossible for him to plan a life of agriculture, he looked about for something to do, and wisely decided that the first thing was to secure a good education. In 1850 he went to Parke county and attended the Friends' Graded school at Bloomingdale, and here became so well qualified that he was able to secure employment as a teacher during the winters and attend school during the other seasons. His proceeds from his share of his father's estate were small, but, added to his earnings as a teacher, enabled him to pay his way. While teaching he began the reading of medicine, and in 1854 came under the tutelage of Dr. Allen, of Rockville. In the fall of 1854 he entered the Michigan Medical School at Ann Arbor, and remained there during that winter, returning to Rockville in the spring, practised with Dr. Allen during the summer, spent the winter again at college, returned to Rockville in the following spring and then located, in the spring of 1856, at Waverly, Ind. Dr. Lindley's experience during those early years was such as to tax the strongest constitution. There were few good roads, fewer bridges, and almost continual high waters between him and many of his best paying patients. On many occasions the good doctor swam the angry waters of White river, when it was choked with slush and ice. His mode of travel was necessarily on horseback and many miles were covered daily for a long period. Dr. Lindley justly became prominent. He has always been a close student and has kept abreast of the times in his profession and has gained the confidence of not only the public, but his brother practitioners who hold him in high esteem as a consulting physician. In 1860 he graduated from the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati. In 1899 he went to New York and took a post-graduate course, determined to be prepared to give his patients every advantage which modern methods have introduced into practice. Probably no physician and surgeon stands higher in the public estimation in Morgan county than does Dr. Lindley. He loves his work and has found much compensation in every way in his profession.

Dr. Lindley has made some substantial investments and owns two very fine farms. He has a commodious and comfortable home and office in Brooklyn, and also possesses some excellent rental property. In politics he is a Democrat, and under the administration of President Cleveland, he served four years on the board of Pension Examiners. He is liberal in his support of all religious bodies and moral movements, and is a consistent member of the Methodist Church and one of its trustees. His fraternal associations include membership in the county and State medical societies and the Masonic order.

In May, 1858, Dr. Lindley was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth J. Province, born in Henry county, Ky., daughter of Samuel Province, of Ireland, who came to Kentucky in boyhood. He became a prominent farmer and passed his life in that State. In religious belief he was a Methodist. His widow later removed to Indiana and spent her life among her children: Elizabeth J., wife of Dr. Lindley; Dr. William, a prominent physician at Providence; Rebecca, Mrs. B. Shufflebarger; Mary E., who married Reuben E. Aldrich, a prominent farmer and stockman of Morgan county; and Daniel, a successful teacher at St. Joseph, Mo. Mrs. Lindley is also a Methodist.

Dr. and Mrs. Lindley have two children: Mary E., who married J. C. Galloway, cashier of the Commercial Bank of Santa Anna, Orange Co., Cal.; and Minnie R., who married M. W. Fields, a prominent attorney and a leading Republican politician at Princeton, Ind. Among the successful physicians who have been tutored by Dr. Lindley are the following: William Province, of Johnson county; W. F. Herved, of Washington, Ind.; O. B. Griggs, of Charlestown, Ind.; Osman Horton, Greene township, Morgan county; and Dr. Monical, of Martinsville. Dr. Lindley has taken into partnership Dr. J. S. Spoor, a promising young physician of Brooklyn. His practice still continues with families who secured his services forty-five years ago. Many honors have been shown him during his career, notably when Governor Morton commissioned him twice during the Civil war, as surgeon to be called in emergencies.

GEORGE E. FINNEY, editor and proprietor of The Democrat, Martinsville, Ind., was born in New York State Oct. 8, 1833, son of Paulinus and Hannah (Taylor) Finney. The father was a native of Essex county, N. Y., and the mother was born just opposite in Vermont.

Paulinus Finney was a shoemaker, but did not follow his trade long, becoming a farmer. He was a son of Joel Finney, of Essex county, N. Y., who married Nelly Brown, a sister of John Brown, the noted emancipator.

Mr. Finney's parents moved out to Butler county, Ohio, where they both died of cholera in August, 1849, leaving nine children. George E. Finney was but fifteen years old at this time. He went to Eaton, the county seat of Preble county, Ohio, where he served three years as a printer's devil. Then he became a journeyman printer, and in that capacity went to Illinois, Iowa and through Indiana, being at Lafayette, Franklin and finally near Columbus, Bartholomew county, where he located in 1858. In the winters of 1858, 1859 and 1860 he taught school in Bartholomew county, Ind. In April, 1861, the second day after the firing on Fort Sumter, he enlisted for the Union service, but failed to get into the army because of excess of enlistment. He was one of 130 that enlisted and went into camp; they could take but eighty-eight in a company at that time. But on the 8th day of July, following, he went into a company which afterward became a part of the Nineteenth Indiana Infantry Volunteer Regiment, and was assigned to Company H, Capt. R. M. Keely, Col. Sol. Meredith. This regiment after reaching Washington, D. C., became a part of what was during the war—and is still—known as the "Iron Brigade." His service covered a period of three years and eight months. After serving nine months he was promoted to second lieutenant of his company, then to first lieutenant and then appointed adjutant of the regiment. Captured on the first day of the second battle of the Wilderness he was held ten months in prison at Macon, Ga., Charleston, S. C., and Columbia, S. C., and was removed from the latter place on the 15th day of February, 1865, one day before Sherman captured the city. The Federals were accused of burning the city, but it is believed that the Confederates set fire to it to prevent its capture. It is remarkable that while confined in Roper hospital, Charleston, S. C., for three months Mr. Finney was constantly under fire from the Union army's cannon. At one time a fragment of a shell struck the hospital in which Mr. Finney was. He was exchanged March 1, 1865, reported at the adjutant-general's office in Washington, D. C., and was on March 12, 1865, discharged by Secretary Stanton. Mr. Finney was wounded by a bullet which passed through his right arm, at the second battle of Bull Run. After his discharge he went to Bartholomew county, Ind., and taught school one winter. Then, in 1871, he became editor of the Columbus Democrat, published by J. D. Lyle, remaining there eight years, in the meanwhile becoming Mr. Lyle's partner in the publication. They sold out in 1878, when Mr. Finney started a paper known as the Columbian. He became associated with Luther Short at Franklin, Johnson Co., Ind., as partners in the Democrat, which is still published at Franklin. In ten months Mr. Finney sold out to his partner and started the Columbian again. Six months later he sold out to the Democrat at Columbus, and that fall started the Herald, at that place, in the publication of which he was associated with Charles Lacy. The paper was made a daily in 1882, and ran as such until 1892, when they sold out to Dipbooy & Locke; the latter firm still publishes the paper. In January, 1895, Mr. Finney came to Martinsville and bought the old Gazette, changing the name to The Democrat, which he has since published.

Mr. Finney married Miss Mary Neal, at Elizabethtown, Bartholomew Co., Ind., in 1868. She died four years later, in 1872, the mother of one child, Nellie, who died at Columbus aged twenty-five years. Mr. Finney married (second) Aug. 25, 1873, Alice R. Anderson, of Columbus, who was born at Xenia, Ohio, and they have four children: Dena, wife of Prof. Emil Catalano, residing in Martinsville; Frank, who is with his father on The Democrat; Fred T., publisher and editor of the Hymera Herald at Hymera, Sullivan Co., Ind.; and Barbara, wife of H. O. Burgett, a dentist of Martinsville. Mrs. Burgett is a musician and a teacher of the piano in Indianapolis.

Mr. Finney is a member of K. P. Lodge No. 17, at Columbus. He was postmaster at that place under President Cleveland, and during his incumbency succeeded in establishing the free delivery system there. He is an influential and respected citizen of Martinsville, and personally as well as through the columns of his paper indorses every project for the betterment of the town.

REV. ISAAC N. THOMPSON (deceased), of Mooresville, Ind., who had been for more than forty years a minister in the Methodist Church, and had been the means of adding largely to its membership and influence, was born Dec. 18, 1823, on a farm in East Tennessee. He was a son of James and Hannah M. (Logan) Thompson, natives respectively of Virginia and North Carolina.

James Thompson was a son of Isaac and Mollie (Duff) Thompson, the former born in Virginia and the latter in Ireland. The Thompson family was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and settled in America at an early day. Although a Quaker, Isaac Thompson served in the Patriot army during the Revolution, in the capacity of a teamster. He located in Virginia, but later removed among the pioneers to Tennessee and there spent his remaining years, tilling the soil and setting an example by an exemplary life. Prior to his death he embraced the Methodist doctrine. His children were as follows: James, father of the Rev. Mr. Thompson; Isaiah; Isaac; Samuel; Joseph; Haskin; Mrs. Jane Brakebill; and Rachel, Mrs. G. Numan.

James Thompson was born in 1793, and was reared on a farm in Tennessee, in which State he married and settled down to the pursuit of agriculture, this peaceful life being broken into by the Indian wars. With Gen. Jackson he served in the Creek Indian war, and participated in the battle of Horse Shoe Bend, where the Indians lost 1,500 and the whites but seven killed and twenty-seven wounded. In 1831 Mr. Thompson decided to penetrate into what was then the far West, the fertile lands across the borders of Indiana. He settled on a tract of land in Bartholomew county, where the former tenant had built a log cabin and prepared some ten acres of land for cultivation. Here he continued until 1835, when he sold this farm and purchased another near Livonia, but in June of the same year, he died. In his early days he was a successful and popular teacher of singing, and conducted many schools where the youths of the neighborhood passed many happy and profitable hours. Probably few men in the locality exerted a stronger influence in the direction of temperance, and he was known through the community as a man of honor and integrity. His widow remained on the farm until 1839, and then removed to the home of a daughter, where she died in 1856. She was a daughter of Rev. David Logan, a farmer and local minister of the Methodist Church, who died in 1828 in Tennessee. His children were: Alexander, a physician and local preacher, who became widely known and universally esteemed, dying in Tennessee; James R., farmer, who settled in Illinois in 1834; John, who died early; Hannah M., mother of our subject; Rachel; Elizabeth, and Margaret.

The children born to James Thompson and wife were: Roseanna married (first) W. C. Linn, and (second) Jacob Roberts, nephew of Bishop Roberts; John D., a local Methodist minister, died in 1867, in Indiana; David R., a local Methodist minister, died in 1864, in Washington county, Ind.; Rev. Isaac N.; and James H. The latter settled on a farm near Omaha, Nebr., where he became very prominent, and was identified with large business interests in Omaha, which city he also served as postmaster.

Rev. Isaac N. Thompson was about seven years of age when his parents brought him to Indiana, and but twelve when he was deprived of the care and advice of his father. At the age of sixteen, he began to learn the blacksmith's trade, preparing to make his own way in the world by this honest occupation, and after three years apprenticeship was declared proficient, and successfully followed it for thirteen years. His early education had been secured in the district schools, and after completing his trade he became a student at Livonia Academy, under Prof. R. D. Walters. While a youth he had been converted and became an interested and active worker in the church and looked forward to the time when he could enter its ministry. In 1846 he operated a general store for one year at Mt.

Carmel and in connection with his trade lived a busy life. His zeal and activity in the church prepared the way for him to be accepted as a local minister in 1850, and in 1852 he was admitted to the Conference as a traveling minister, this being followed in 1854 with ordination. Mr. Thompson then abandoned his trade, his new duties requiring all his time and attention. As a pioneer preacher Mr. Thompson started out and visited many points where no pastor was installed, besides filling regular charges. He was located first in Anderson, with twenty-five appointments in parts of four counties. His second charge was Leavenworth, with eleven appointments; the third was the Rockport circuit with eleven societies; then two years at Brookville, ten societies; one year at Gentryville, twelve societies; two years at Orangeville, ten societies; and in 1860 he was stationed two years at Fredericksburg, with eleven societies. While serving here, in 1862, he was appointed Presiding Elder in the Jones District, to fill a vacancy caused by the minister going into the army. He kept up the work of the absent minister four months, and attended to his own appointments. In this year the Conference then sent him to the Mitchell District, where he served four years as Presiding Elder. In 1866 this was made a station to which he was appointed for two years, during which time he attended to his ministerial duties, and also acted as financial agent of Rockport Institute. In 1868 he was sent for two years to Petersburg station; in 1870, three years to Martinsville; and in 1873 came for two years to Mooresville. In 1873 he was appointed Presiding Elder in the New Albany District, in which he served four years. In 1879 he was sent to Evansville station with the local church; in 1881 to Indianapolis, remaining two years; 1883-85, at Rockport station; 1885-88, at Fort Branch; in 1888, at West Newton; in 1889, at Brooklyn; in 1890-92, at the church at Mooresville, where he located after being placed on the superannuated list in 1892. During these many years of service, Mr. Thompson passed through much hardship, but they were also fruitful in many conversions and additions to the church.

After settling at Mooresville, he engaged in merchandising in which he continued until 1900 when he sold out and retired entirely from business activity. During his ministerial service, he solemnized several hundred marriages. He was a faithful and loving worker and was always a welcome guest among his people. His last years were made comfortable by ample provision. He was universally respected and much beloved.

Mr. Thompson was married (first) Oct. 13, 1846, to Caroline Johnston, born Feb. 18, 1825, in Indiana, daughter of James H. Johnston, who was born in Ireland. He was an early settler in Lawrence county, Ind., served in the war of 1812 and was an upright man, honest citizen and good farmer. His children were: Priscilla, Mrs. L. Gould; Halbert H., a wealthy merchant at Mitchell, Ind.; Matilda, Mrs. George Rogers; Jane, Mrs. Dr. H. Montgomery; Caroline, Mrs. Thompson; and Henrietta, Mrs. L. Elgin. The four surviving children of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are: A. G., now a business man in St. Louis, served in the late Rebellion and was captain of a company in the Signal Corps, during the Spanish-American war; Emma is the wife of B. F. Jones, a merchant of Mooresville; Charles is a supply merchant, prominent in St. Louis; and Florence married Joseph Taggart, a well-known baker of Indianapolis. The mother died July 19, 1898. For many years she was a consistent and worthy member of the Methodist Church. In September, 1899, Mr. Thompson was married (second) to Mrs. Margaret Osborn, daughter of Rev. J. W. Welker, for forty years a local preacher of the Methodist Church, and a prominent farmer and merchant of Harrison county, Ind. Mr. Welker was the father of ten children, those living being: Sherman; John K.; Samuel L., a Methodist minister; and Margaret. Mrs. Thompson has one daughter by her former marriage, who married Bertram T. Jones, of Hamilton, Ohio.

Mr. Thompson belonged to the Masonic fraternity and filled all the chairs in the I. O. O. F. He was well known all over the southern part of the State and it was gratifying to him, when the weight of years made his responsibilities too heavy, to have the Conference, in superannuating him, pass a resolution testifying to his high character and calling the attention of the young men to his career as a worthy one to follow. "Well done, good and faithful servant."

DR. SAMUEL RECORDS, who died July 5, 1904, at the age of eighty-four years, eleven months and twenty-three days, was one of the highly esteemed physicians of Indianapolis. He was born in Pendleton county, Ky., July 13, 1819, son of Spencer and Mary (McDaniel) Records. The first member of the family in America came from England, and settled in Delaware.

Laban Records, the paternal grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Pennsylvania, but at a very early day moved to Kentucky from Pittsburg. He died in Livingston county, Ky., in 1823, in middle life. He was the owner of 1,600 acres of land in Pendleton county, and 350 acres in Bracken county, Ky. He was quite noted as an Indian fighter. His family consisted of several sons and daughters.

Spencer Records, son of Laban, was born in Kentucky. He was a farmer and lumberman on the Ohio River at Cincinnati. In 1834 he moved to Indiana, and stopped for a short time on Lick Creek, and then moved to Castleton, in Lawrence township, Marion county, where he bought land and spent the remainder of his life. He died in 1843, aged forty-seven years. He married Mary McDaniel, who was also born in Kentucky, daughter of Robert McDaniel, a native of Scotland. Robert McDaniel was a cabinet-maker, and an early settler of Bracken county, Ky., where he died advanced in years. He was a soldier all through the Revolutionary war. His wife, Mary, also born in Scotland, lived to the advanced age of one hundred and six years. Mrs. Mary (McDaniel) Records died in 1866, when upwards of seventy years of age. Both she and her husband were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They were the parents of six children, four daughters and two sons, of whom the only survivor is Sarah Jane, of Lawrence township.

Dr. Samuel Records lived in Kentucky until he was fifteen years of age, being reared on a farm. From 1834 he lived in Indiana. He attended the old-fashioned subscription schools, and remained at home until he was twenty-one, and then for many years he followed farming. When quite young he decided to take up the study of medicine, and he began practice first in Lawrence township. His medical training was secured in the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, from which institution he was graduated; he was also graduated from the Medical Department of Asbury University, and later he received an honorary diploma from the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis. He practised in Marion county from 1847 until his death, with the exception of one and one-half years, which he spent in Florida.

In 1841 Dr. Samuel Records was married to Miss Martha Fletcher, daughter of David Fletcher. Five children blessed this union: Mary Jane, Martha, Elizabeth, Tabor and William, of whom only Elizabeth is living, and she is the wife of John Newhouse, of Lawrence township. Mrs. Martha (Fletcher) Records died in 1855, in the faith of the Methodist Church. In 1856 Dr. Records married Miss Sarah Jane Tyner, who bore him three children: Tyner, a farmer in Lawrence township, who married Emma Hansing, and has three children; Adah, who married Richard Hartsock, of Elwood, Ind., and has three children; and Melinda, who married (first) James Cory, had one son, and (second) Hezekiah Sparks, and had one daughter by this union. Mrs. Sarah Jane Records died in 1864. She was a member of the Old School Baptist Church. Dr. Records was married (third) in 1866 to Mrs. Amanda M. Millard, widow of Mordecai Millard, and daughter of Collom Plummer. Two children were born of this union: Athalia, who married John Danforth, and has one son; and Samuel, a physician in partnership with his father, who graduated from the Indiana Medical College, and who married Miss Anna Kohlmann.

Dr. Records was a Master Mason. In politics he was independent, voting for the men and measures he thought best for the community or country at large.

JAMES FINLEY WEBB is one who, endowed by nature with the qualities which insure success, has made good use of his natural advantages. Perhaps there is no career which excites more interest than that of the farmer lad. Strong, healthy in mind and body, filled with ambition, he starts out with full assurance that he can achieve his ideals, and, as the history of our broad land has shown, often, indeed, his hopes are realized, and he is crowned with success in the field of his chosen endeavor. Such a youth was the one we review. Commencing his life work upon his father's farm, he there learned all the varied departments of an agriculturist's work, and then in early manhood, alone and unaided, rented lands and started upon his own account to make his way in the world, with what success it is the purpose of this narrative to show.

Mr. Webb was born in Shelby county, Ind., April 9, 1842. He was one of fifteen children born to his parents, Zachariah and Nancy Ann (Huff) Webb, there being nine sons and six daughters in the family, of whom seven are now living, as follows: Eliza Jane, widow of James Tilson, of Franklin township; Calvin F., of Anderson; Albert F., of Needham township; Frances A., wife of Jesse Beard, of Clark township; Alfred T., living retired in Franklin City; Hampton T., of Shelby county, on the old homestead of the parents; and James F. John S., of Franklin township, died March 2, 1907.

The father was a native of Kentucky, and came to Indiana with his parents when six years old, in 1814, the family first settling in Clark county. Two years later they entered land in Shelby county, where he grew to manhood and married, his wife Nancy Ann Huff coming from Xenia, Ohio. He lived to the advanced age of eighty years and eleven months, dying March 9, 1889; his wife died three years before, in 1886, at the age of about seventy years. Both were members of the Baptist Church. Throughout his life Zachariah Webb was an enterprising and prosperous farmer, doing also carpentering and some blacksmithing, and acting as a veterinarian.

John Webb, the paternal grandfather of James F. Webb, came to Clark county, Ind., in 1814, from Woodford county, near Lexington, Kentucky, and settled in Shelby county, Ind., in 1816. He and John Cline were among the first settlers in Hendricks township, that county. Once after the killing of the people at the Haw patch, near Hope, Bartholomew Co., Ind., they started back to Kentucky with their families, and got as far as the Ohio. But they returned and were never molested. John Webb engaged in general farming and gunsmithing, afterward moving in middle life to Missouri, where he died leaving a large family. His wife, Nancy Taylor, was a cousin of Zachary Taylor, the President of the United States.

The maternal grandfather of Mr. Webb was Joseph Huff, who claimed Ohio as the State of his nativity. He was a millwright by trade, and was one of the early pioneers of the Hoosier State, coming to Indiana before the majority of the pioneers, when Indians were very numerous, and when the country was wholly wild and unsettled. His nearest white neighbor was seven miles away, when here in this new country he settled on Sugar Creek, entering a large tract of land, which by his labors and endeavors he cultivated. At one time he was the owner of 1,400 acres, but sold off a considerable part in order that he might induce settlers to locate there and become neighbors. In 1833 he built the old mill on Sugar Creek, now known as the Red Mill, and owned at this time by John Rasp. The old hewed log frame is still good. This he conducted for many years with great success, afterward turning it into a woolen factory. This in turn was refitted after a number of years, with other machinery and equipment, it being used as a flour mill again, and the woolen machinery being taken to Franklin. Throughout his long career as a pioneer he was largely instrumental in building up that section of the country, and his name has gone down in local history as one of the most prominent and able men of that early time. He lived to a ripe old age, his wife, Hannah Finley, surviving him a number of years, and dying near Ottumwa, Iowa, at the advanced age of ninety-two. Mr. Huff for many years kept a store at the Red Mill and in order to procure his supplies it was necessary to transport them all by wagon from the far away settlement of Cincinnati. In this work and in opening up his new lands Mr. Huff had many thrilling experiences and narrow escapes. To him was born a large family, to whom he gave all of the scanty advantages which the country afforded, and whom he carefully reared. Joseph Huff's wife, Hannah Finley, was a sister of Rev. James B. Finley, of Ohio, a celebrated Methodist preacher, as was his father, who preached among and converted the Wyandotte and other Indians of Ohio.

James F. Webb was reared in Shelby county upon the farm of his father, and there remained until he reached the age of twenty-five years, attending the subscription schools, in which he received all his education. He also worked at the trade of carpentering to some extent during this period. His first independent venture was renting land of his father on shares. In this he was highly successful, and continued to follow agricultural pursuits in this way until he was married in the year 1868, to Angeline Beard, who was the owner of sixty acres of fine land in Clark township, Johnson county. Upon their marriage they settled there and Mr. Webb built a home on the place and soon after bought sixty acres adjoining on the north. He has kept adding to the farm as the years have gone by until they now own 351 acres at that place. In 1891 they moved to their present residence in Needham township, Johnson county, buying fifty acres of land, and renting the farm lands formerly occupied by them. Their present residence is but two miles from the court house in Franklin, and to the fifty acres originally purchased Mr. Webb has added 116 acres in one piece, and twenty-two acres in another, and has improved all of this land until it is one of the finest farms in all the country-side. He formerly owned 140 acres in Shelby county, and with his wife was the owner of 680 acres of land in all. Selling his Shelby county land, however, he bought 200 acres in Franklin township, nearly two miles from the court house, now owning 791 acres in Needham, Clark and Franklin townships.

Mrs. Angeline (Beard) Webb was the daughter of William and Mary J. (Tucker) Beard. To her three children have been born: Cora Etta, Guilford and Wallace. Cora Etta, an intelligent and accomplished woman, is the wife of Elmon M. Fisher, who has an elevator at Needham Station. Guilford married Bertha Owens, resides in Needham township, and has four children, Lauren, Merrill, George and Landon. Wallace married Fannie Wright, and they also live in Needham township, and have two children, Bethel and Inez.

Mr. Webb and his wife are members of the Second Mount Pleasant Baptist Church, in which they have long been active and influential members. Mr. Webb has always been ready to aid in all movements tending to the uplifting of mankind and the cause of the church. He has occupied various local public offices of responsibility, and for several terms was school director and supervisor, in which positions he served with energy and ability, and won the admiration and esteem of all. He is a staunch Democrat in sentiment, and has done much to promote the interests and principles of his party.

Now, at over threescore years, Mr. Webb can look back with much satisfaction upon a long series of successes and achievements, the results of his years of toil and industry. His large properties, their excellent state of cultivation and repair, his many financial interests, and the good will and admiration of all, bespeak the character of the man and his extraordinary attainments and high social standing.

FRANCIS T. SINGLETON, editor and proprietor of the Weekly Republican and the Daily Reporter, leading journals of Martinsville, was born March 14, 1863, on a farm in Washington township, Morgan county, Ind., son of Thomas and Sarah (Roney) Singleton, the former of whom was born in County Armagh and the latter in County Down, Ireland.

Thomas Singleton and his wife came to America in 1849, and lived for a time in the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and then came to Morgan county, Ind. Just before the Civil war Mr. Singleton bought eighty acres of land located five miles south of Martinsville, and kept adding to the original tract until he owned 234 acres. His death took place March 7, 1898, at the age of seventy-eight years, while his widow survived him for five years, residing with her son, Francis. Mr. Singleton was a member of the Catholic Church, and her husband was a Methodist. Mr. Singleton served for three years during the Civil war in the 70th Ind. V. I.; took part in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Murfreesboro, Peach Tree Creek, and many others, and at one time was slightly wounded. As he understood the principles of engineering, he did much service in that direction. In politics he was a Republican, and served as township assessor and county commissioner. The grandparents of Francis T. Singleton died in Ireland, three daughters of the Roney family coming to America.

Francis T. Singleton was reared on the farm and resided at home until manhood, obtaining his education in the public schools. He graduated from the Martinsville high school in 1882. In 1886 he graduated from Indiana University at Bloomington, becoming then the city editor of the Martinsville Republican. In August, 1888, he was made city editor of the Terre Haute Express, and remained there until 1892. In July, of that year, he bought the plant of the Martinsville Republican and the Daily Reporter, and has published both papers since that date.

On April 26, 1893, Mr. Singleton was united in marriage with Miss Hannah S., daughter of Aaron and Elvira S. (Welty) Rose, and three children have been born to them: Rose, Aaron and Mary, Aaron dying at the age of two years and ten months. Mr. and Mrs. Singleton are consistent members of the M. E. Church.

In politics Mr. Singleton is a Republican, and has been president of the Indiana Republican Editorial Association, of which he has been secretary and a member of the executive committee for ten years. In 1900 he started the movement for organizing the Indiana Associated Daily Papers, for mutual improvement, which was a non-partisan enterprise. Mr. Singleton owns his office property, the home farm south of Martinsville, and has a comfortable home at No. 60 South Ohio street, Martinsville.

LEROY TEMPLETON, a prominent and representative citizen of Indianapolis, is a descendant of an honorable old pioneer family of Indiana. He was born Nov. 20, 1829, in Shelby county, Ind., son of Isaac and Rhoda (Gregory) Templeton, grandson of James Templeton, and great-grandson of James Templeton, Sr.

James Templeton, Sr., was born in Scotland, and when he came to America located near Fairfax Court House, Va. He was a member of the Society of Friends. His three sons were: James, Thomas and Edward, the latter of whom died in Ohio.

James Templeton, the paternal grandfather of Leroy, spent his whole life on the farm in West Virginia where he died in 1862, aged 102 years. He was reared a Quaker, and never departed from the faith and the record of his long life was that of a man who was kind to the needy and ready to extend a helping hand to all who required assistance. In politics he was a Whig. His religious faith precluded his being a slaveholder. His second wife inherited slaves, but he never consented to hold them as property and she disposed of them. His children were: Thomas, William, Isaac, Edwin, Sarah, Elizabeth, Jane, John and James. Of these, Thomas settled in Ohio, where he became a substantial farmer and lived to the age of ninety-six years. William, a cabinet-maker by trade, accompanied his brother Isaac to Indiana in 1822. Sarah became the wife of A. Miller, who was once treasurer of Shelby county, Ind. Elizabeth married S. McCrav, and they reared a family, many members of which became prominent. Jane married a man named Gillup. John and James both died in Indiana and they, with Isaac, all became leading advocates of Methodism.

Isaac Templeton was born in Virginia, and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years of age. On starting out for himself he located first at Lawrenceburg, Ind., where he remained until after his marriage. He moved then to Shelby county, where he worked for a time by the month as a farm laborer, and then became a barn builder. He erected many barns for farmers through the country, and seemed particularly well adapted to such work and later was employed on public works. He assisted in the construction of many of the bridges on the National turnpike road. He was a prudent man, and in 1832 he invested some of his savings in the securing of land in Warren county, Ind., to which he moved. This land he improved and subsequently sold, and then he went to Iowa, where he bought a farm on which he continued to live during the remainder of his life. His death took place in 1874, at the age of seventy-three years. In early life he was a Whig, and later a Republican. Wherever he lived he was a popular and prominent man. In Warren county he served three terms as county assessor, and three terms as high sheriff. For his time he was considered a man of substance and he provided well for all those dependent upon him. Isaac Templeton married (first) Rhoda Gregory, who was reared near Lawrenceburg, Ind., daughter of James and Lizzie (Lee) Gregory, both of Virginia. On the Lee side she was a connection of the distinguished old Virginia Lee family, of which the Confederate General Robert E. Lee was a member. James Gregory was a prominent and useful man in the new country, and he was a member of the State Senate when Indiana was admitted to the Union in 1816. He introduced the bill for the removal of the Capitol from Corydon to Indianapolis, and he it was who put the bill through the Legislature by force of will. The hostility of the people of Corydon toward Colonel Gregory for his course was intense, and caricatures of him were posted about town and indignities offered him. James Blake, Calvin Fletcher, Samuel Henderson, Colonel Paxton and James Ray inaugurated a movement to give him a public dinner, which came off at Washington Hall and was attended by the leading citizens of the town. The act was passed Jan. 28, 1824. He was a leader in all public measures of reform, and served as colonel of the militia regiment which protected the settlers from the Indians, who, at that time, were still numerous and troublesome in this section, where now the heights of modern civilization have been reached. James Gregory was a man of much more than ordinary ability and enterprise. He was an extensive farmer and stockraiser and was one of the pioneer pork packers, shipping his produce to New Orleans on flat boats, superintending its delivery in many cases in person. During the last trip he made he was stricken with yellow fever, and died quickly, in 1844. His family never recovered his remains, nor did they receive any pay for his boat load of produce. He was a liberal contributor to the Methodist Church, and, with the most of his family, belonged to that religious body. His children were as follows: Rhode; Lee, a graduate of West Point, who died in young manhood; Robert C., who became a prominent lawyer and served two terms on the Indiana Supreme Court Bench; Benjamin F., an attorney, who accumulated a large estate, and died at Williamsport, Ind.; Alfred, a farmer; Nuny, who became Mrs. Collins; Elijah, who engaged in farming; Clay, who became a Methodist minister, and went to California and later to Oregon; Rebecca, who married a Ferguson and they both died in Iowa; and Edward, who died young. The Gregory name has always been one held in high repute wherever members of this family have been located.

The children born to Isaac and Rhoda Templeton bore the following names: Martha; James, who lived in Illinois; William Jackson (became a substantial farmer), who was lieutenant-colonel of the 60th Ind. V. I., under Col. Owen, and was severely wounded; Jemima, who married George Brier; Newton, who removed to Sacramento, Cal.; Rhoda, who married W. Dennis, and lived in California; Lucy, who became Mrs. Sheetz; Leroy; and Jasper, who was killed in the battle of Stone River during the Civil war.

Leroy Templeton remained with his parents until grown to manhood. In boyhood he attended the subscription schools when farm work did not press too heavily, and he completed his education after he had a family of his own. However, if his early educational advantages were meager, his physical training was of the most practical kind. After he married he bought a tract of new prairie land, securing the first piece on credit, but through industry and good management soon being able to pay for it and to purchase more, so continuing until he owned 500 acres in Warren county. This land he continued to improve as long as he retained it. In 1854 he sold out and moved to Iowa, where he bought land on which there was a good mill site, and there he erected a mill and operated it in connection with farming, for a number of years. Later he sold the mill, and then embarked in a mercantile business and also became interested in dealing in fat stock, shipping to Chicago. He took an intelligent man's interest in all that concerned his locality, and at all times was willing to contribute to the general welfare. He helped to organize the Upper Iowa University, and was one of the twelve original directors of the same, eleven of the body being ministers. He was the balancing wheel as it were, the business man, and he donated the sum of $1,000 to the construction of the buildings. In 1859 he attended school for a year, and at that time had as a schoolmate Speaker Henderson, and other men who later attained a National reputation. During the time he engaged in merchandising he did some pork packing, shipping to New Orleans, but at that time the business did not prove sufficiently profitable to cause him to continue it.

In 1862, Mr. Templeton enlisted for service in the Civil War, becoming a member of Company F, 3rd Ia. V. I., of which he was made first lieutenant. His company was assigned to the Western Department and he first saw service in Missouri, where there were numerous engagements with Gen. Price's soldiers. From Missouri the regiment was sent to Tennessee and later took part in the fights at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Pittsburg Landing. It was during this campaign that Mr. Templeton contracted rheumatism from sleeping on the cold ground without his blankets, which in the goodness of his heart he had given in pity to some soldiers who were doing picket duty while almost too sick to do so. This disease finally rendered Mr. Templeton so helpless that he was sent home, where he remained for six months, having served two and one-half years. He was then offered a captain's commission by Governor Kirkwood, if he would re-enter the army, but he declined, fearing the return of his rheumatic pains.

In 1864, Mr. Templeton purchased a large drove of horses and mules, and drove them over the plains to California, where he received high prices for them although he had to pay correspondingly high prices for all they consumed. When he returned to Indiana he resumed farming, and engaged in the cattle trade in Benton county in association with a brother, during 1868-9, and then went into a commission business in New York. He attended to the business at that point, his brother shipping car loads of stock to him, but the profits, on account of a misunderstanding, did not encourage him to continue in the business, the railroads not living up to their contracts. After he returned to Benton county, through the financial assistance afforded him by a friend, he again secured a stock of cattle and horses, and by hard work again attained a competency. Land that he had previously purchased rose in value, and when the county seat was moved from Oxford to Fowler, he was able to dispose of a part of this property at a very high figure. He then invested in more land, including 6,000 acres of swamp land in Newton county, which only required a little drainage to become valuable for corn and pasture. He acquired land in Newton, Benton, Marion and other counties in Indiana, the greater part of this immense estate being put under cultivation, competent agriculturists being hired to manage the same. At one time Mr. Templeton was the largest stockman in the State. For many years he resided at Fowler, where he built an elevator and conducted it successfully, contributing largely to the business prosperity of that place. In 1897, Mr. Templeton moved to Indianapolis, where he erected a commodious and tasteful residence, but he by no means settled down to the comfort and ease of a retired life. His business was just as carefully looked after, although he saved himself much fatigue by liberal use of the telegraph and telephone. In all essentials, Mr. Templeton is a self-made man, and few men in Indiana are better known either in business or politics.

Mr. Templeton has always had strong political convictions. He was reared a Republican, but in 1876 he left that party to unite with the Reform party, and for fifteen years was a prominent factor of that organization. For a number of these years he published a Reform or Populist newspaper at Indianapolis—"American Nonconformist"—which had a subscription list of 45,000. By this party he was nominated for Governor and for Congress, but it was not yet strong enough to be successful. He later united with the Socialist party. His personal attitude has always been that of a man anxious to do right and to secure justice for his fellow men.

Mr. Templeton was married (first) in Warren county, to Miss Mary Patterson, a member of a respected agricultural family of that section, and six children were born to this union, namely: Orin O., George, Henry, Wallace, Frank and Laura. The sons have all engaged more or less in agricultural pursuits. The daughter possesses great musical talent and engaged for a time in teaching music in Chicago. In 1881, Mr. Templeton was married (second) to Miss Jennie McKinney, born in Benton county. To this union have been born two daughters: Leona and Lenore.

CHARLES ROBERT SOWDER, M. D., is one of the most distinguished of the younger physicians and surgeons of Indianapolis, where he has not only been engaged as a practitioner but also as a teacher of the medical science.

Dr. Sowder is a native of Kentucky, born Feb. 16, 1870, near Mount Vernon, and both his paternal and maternal ancestors have long been settled in America, being of German and Scotch-Irish descent. Madison and Sibbie Sowder, his grandparents, were natives of western Pennsylvania, and early emigrated to Kentucky, settling there in pioneer days. His maternal grandfather was also a pioneer of Kentucky, from which State he enlisted for service in the Civil war, and he was killed in the service in Tennessee. His wife, whose maiden name was Mahala Owens, was a member of an old Eastern family that moved to Kentucky from Lee county, Va., in 1785.

Daniel R. Sowder, the Doctor's father, was born in Rockcastle county, Ky., where his parents had settled, near Mount Vernon. He was a farmer by occupation, but he was obliged to retire at a comparatively early age on account of broken health caused by his service during the Civil war. He gave his support to the Union cause at the outbreak of the Rebellion, enlisting in Company K, 14th Kentucky Vol. Cav. He was discharged in 1864, on account of disability. His record is an enviable one, but he has never fully recovered his strength, and he is now living retired in Indianapolis. Mr. Sowder married Eliza Cummins, like himself a native of Rockcastle county, Ky., who passed away in 1888, and they had a family of four children: Charles Robert; Ralta, wife of Oliver Graham, a farmer of Hendricks county, Indiana; Bertha, wife of O. Tomlinson, of Indianapolis; and Lizzie, who died in 1905.

Charles Robert Sowder was reared on his father's farm, and attended school winters until he was eighteen. He then began to teach, and after following that profession for seven years in Hendricks county, Ind., entered De Pauw University in 1889. He was a student there for two years, after which he returned to teaching, continuing thus until 1896. In that year he went to Chicago and took a term at the Illinois Medical College, thence coming to Indianapolis, where he matriculated at the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons, graduating in 1898. He took a post-graduate course at Johns Hopkins University, and was made professor of Physiology and lecturer on Internal Medicine at his alma mater, the Central College. Later he was made professor of Diseases of Children. Early in 1906 he with several others organized the State College of Physicians and Surgeons, which became the Medical Department of the Indiana State University. In this school he was clinical professor of Medicine and Medical Diagnosis. In the union of medical schools in 1908 he was elected clinical professor of Medicine. He is one of the trustees of the State College Hospital. In addition to his general practice and work as an educator he has contributed to medical literature articles on general medicine, and he has served as visiting physician to the Indianapolis City Hospital, his specialty being internal medicine. He is a member of the Indianapolis Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Sowder was married Nov. 24, 1897, to Miss Orra Bartley, daughter of R. Madison and Catherine (Barker) Bartley, and a descendant of old North Carolina stock. The Doctor and his wife have one son, John R., born March 29, 1903. They are members of the Third Christian Church of Indianapolis, and in fraternal connection he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows and the Freemasons, belonging to Oriental Lodge, No. 50, A. F. & A. M., and to the Chapter.

Dr. Sowder is an earnest student, popular personally as well as successful in his profession, for the practice of which he has proved himself particularly well-adapted, and he takes front rank among the younger physicians of the city.

GREELEY SMITH, who held the office of county recorder in Morgan county, Ind., from 1900 to 1904, is a native of that county and a member of a family which has been settled there for seventy years. He was born in Adams township Feb. 2, 1858, son of Joseph J. and Nancy J. (Bray) Smith.

The Smiths came from North Carolina, whither they emigrated from Pennsylvania. Jonathan Smith, the paternal grandfather of Greeley Smith, was a native of Chatham county, N. C., and he was a mustering officer and drillmaster there, notwithstanding his Quaker proclivities, serving as a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1835 he came to Indiana, first locating in Hendricks county, whence he came to Morgan county. He lived with his sons, Joseph J. and George W., until his death, some time in the fifties, at the age of about seventy-eight years. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Hackney, bore him a large family. She was a sister of the famous Hon. Daniel Hackney, a member of the North Carolina Legislature for a number of terms, over twenty years, who took a very prominent part in Southern politics. He was facetiously called "Dan Tucker" by his friends, his people being very aristocratic slave owners, and he himself an ardent defender of Southern rights. The song was gotten up and sung by those opposed to slavery.

Joseph J. Smith, born April 8, 1817, in Chatham county, N. C., came to Indiana in 1835, and made his first location in Hendricks county. But about 1836 he moved to Morgan county, and settled on the farm in Adams township he owned and occupied until his death, which occurred there March 5, 1907. This property comprises eighty and one-half acres of an original tract of 160 acres, which he and a brother purchased, cleared up and improved upon settling here. Farming was his principal vocation. Mr. Smith cast his first Presidential vote for Gen. William Henry Harrison, but as he was a Quaker in religious faith he never himself took up arms, though he was a constant and beneficent friend to the soldiers of the Civil war and their families, being a pronounced Union man in sentiment.

In politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and for about twenty-five or thirty years he served as a justice of the peace.

Mr. Smith married Nancy J. Bray, a native of Morgan county, Ind., and they became the parents of three sons and four daughters, viz.: Martha E., wife of A. L. West, who lives in Shawnee county, Kans., near Topeka; Greeley, whose name introduces this sketch; and George W., Mary E. (wife of Marion Donelson), Elias R., Susan Novella (wife of John Gregson) and Amanda Estella (wife of Rufus Wilhite), all residents of Adams township, Morgan county.

William Bray, father of Mrs. Nancy J. (Bray) Smith, was a native of North Carolina, as was also his wife, Eleanor (Dorsett), and there they were married. In an early day they came to Indiana and settled near Mooresville, Morgan county, where Mr. Bray followed farming, also making trips between Martinsville and New Orleans on flatboats, with pork, etc. He died in Monroe township at the patriarchal age of ninety-two years. His family was a large one.

Greeley Smith was reared in Adams township, Morgan county, received his preparatory education in the subscription schools, and later attended high school in both Morgan and Hendricks counties. After his graduation from high school he became a bookkeeper, and followed that profession for some time. He returned to farming, but in 1896 he was obliged to abandon that calling because of ill health, and he rested for two years. In 1900 he was elected county recorder for a four years' term, and served ably in that office. The popular support he received at the polls is the best comment upon the value of his services. He proved himself equal to every demand of his work, and placed the work of the office on a business like basis which was a credit to him as well as a source of satisfaction to all who had business relations with that department. In political life Mr. Smith is an active and ardent Republican, and in fraternal connection is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, Freemasons, I. O. O. F. and Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Smith was married to Mrs. Martha Newman, of Hendricks county, Ind., but a native of Morgan county, and they reside at No. 940 East Morgan street, Martinsville. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and Mr. Smith holds membership in the Christian Church.

On her mother's side Mrs. Smith is also descended from North Carolina stock, her maternal grandfather, Pleasant Page, having come to Morgan county from that State at an early day and settled in Adams township on a tract of land he purchased. Her paternal grandfather was James Mason, Sr., a Virginian, who also came to Morgan county among the pioneers, purchasing land in Clay township. His son, James Mason, Jr., married Nancy J. Page, daughter of Pleasant Page, both coming to this county with their parents. All these pioneers reared large families.

BUCHANAN FAMILY, of Indianapolis. This family, at present represented in Indianapolis by several substantial citizens of the name, has a worthy place in the history of this section of Indiana. Coming hither in pioneer times, when the city and State were just emerging from the obscurity of the backwoods, they proved to be possessed of the virile strength required for the proper development of a liberal and progressive commonwealth. They have not aspired to prominence or power, but they have ever been found among the intelligent, sturdy, patriotic, thrifty and enterprising elements of the communities in which they have settled, taking part in movements designed to promote the general welfare, and discharging their personal obligations conscientiously and creditably. To the rugged Scotch stock from which they spring may be traced most of the traits which make them notable for strength and courage, morally and physically, in all the relations of life.

The name Buchanan was first associated with this family toward the middle of the thirteenth century, when Gilbert, Seneschal to the Earl of Lennox, obtained from him a part of the lands of Buchanan in Stirlingshire, Scotland, and took the name from them. Donaldarth, Earl of Lennox, renewed to Maurice, of Buchanan, the grant through marriage with a daughter of Monteith of Rusky. His son, Walter of Buchanan, became connected with the Royal house, his wife being the sole heiress of the ancient family of Leny. Their eldest son, Sir Alexander, distinguished himself under Stuart of France, and in 1421 is said to have slain the Duke of Clarence. Sir Alexander was slain in the battle of Venie in 1424. His brother Walter married Isabel, Countess of Lennox. Their eldest son, Patrick, married the heiress of Killearn and Auchreoch. Their youngest son, Thomas, founded the House of Drumkil, whence in the third generation sprang the historian, George Buchanan. Patrick fell at Flodden. He left two sons, George, sheriff of Dunbarton, in 1561, and Walter, founder of the line of Spittal. By Margareth of Duntreth he had John, his heir, and by a second wife Janet Cunningham of Craigends, William, founder of the now extinct line of Auchmar. The principal line became extinct in 1682, and was claimed by Buchanan of Auchmar, whose line perished in 1816. The Lairds of Buchanan built the ancient peel of Buchanan. The mill town of Buchanan is near the parish church. The family lands lay in Monteith, and the Lennox near Lochs Katrine and Lomond, and are now possessed by the Duke of Montrose. The present chief is John Buchanan Hamilton, of Leny. A Buchanan was created a baronet in 1788.

"Buchanan" was the war cry of the Clan Innis, who inhabited an island in Loch Lorn or the Firth of Lorne. Badge: Drare Bhrair-leag, Bilberry Or Drachlon.

The early history of the family in America is mostly traditional. About the year 1775 three brothers of the name of Buchanan came to this country and entered the service of the Colonies in the Revolutionary war. After the conflict one settled in New York, one in Pennsylvania and one in Virginia. The record of the New York branch is not known to the others. James Buchanan, fifteenth President of the United States, was of the Pennsylvania branch, and the Indianapolis family is descended from the brother who went to Virginia. Their home was in Washington county, that State, near Abingdon. Three brothers, of this Virginia branch, Robert, John and David Buchanan, were born in Washington county, Va., where their father had acquired land and slaves. Robert remained in that State. John settled near Connersville, Ind., where he and his wife, Maria, died on a farm at a ripe old age. They were childless, and as Mr. Buchanan died first the property went to Mrs. Buchanan's heirs. The third brother,

David Buchanan, grandfather of Joseph W. and Charles J. Buchanan, of Indianapolis, was born Jan. 2, 1790, and on Nov. 11, 1811, married Sarah Tilson, who was born July 3, 1795. She had a most beautiful voice, so remarkable that when she sang in church people stopped to listen. In 1826 Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan came out to Indiana with their family, their destination being the then new city of Indianapolis, which at that time was but a small and unimproved town, the stumps of trees still standing in the main thoroughfares, and dog fennel was growing luxuriantly in every vacant place. Building was confined entirely to the original plat between North and South streets and East and West streets, and outside of these limits the forest trees stood thick, and nearby farming lands were seen.

After deciding to make his home in this hamlet, David Buchanan bought the "Buck Horn Tavern" (afterward the "Washington House" and "Little's Hotel"), at the southeast corner of New Jersey and Washington streets, together with some tracts of land in the near vicinity. He was a man of enterprise and soon had his inn in good running order and had teams ready for any kind of transportation service, either to Cincinnati or Madison. No railroads yet ran through this section of country, and the highways were in poor condition, so that strong, well-fed teams were required to do the necessary work. David Buchanan had brought with him a stanch old Virginia wagon, to which he would hitch a six-horse team, and in this way covered the ground in what was then considered an expeditious manner. He was given the contract to carry government money to Cincinnati, the proceeds of land sales, and was provided with a guard for the same. In 1831 he moved out of the city to a farm one mile west of Cumberland, on the old National road, which he purchased upon selling his town property, and upon which he made substantial improvements. He remained there during the rest of his life, dying March 19, 1853, shortly after his wife, who passed away Jan. 1st of that year. He is described as a man of middle height and of strong constitution. He was a worthy member of the Primitive Baptist Church, a man of strong religious and patriotic impulses. He served in the war of 1812 from Virginia. Children as follows were born to David Buchanan and wife: Thomas Tilson, born March 12, 1814, is mentioned below. Joseph Wilson, born March 31, 1816, was married Feb. 16, 1837, to Electa M. Fountaine, and died in 1899, in Missouri, whither he went from Indiana. Jane married Thomas McVey. George W., who served in the Civil war, died later at Lafayette, Ind. Theresa married Spencer Huntington. Maria married John Kitley. Catherine married William Askern. William died in Indiana. John, born in Indianapolis, Nov. 16, 1829, died in September, 1901. Eliza became Mrs. Joseph Church.

The Tilson family, to which Mrs. Sarah (Tilson) Buchanan belonged, had its ancestral home at Tilston, England, and the American branch has been on this side of the Atlantic from early Colonial days. The emigrant ancestor, (I) Edmond Tilson, came to Plymouth, Mass., 1638, and from him the line is traced through (II) Ephraim, (III) Edmond, (IV) Stephen, (V) William, (VI) Thomas, and (VII) Sarah (Tilson) Buchanan.

(IV) Stephen Tilson married Janet Murdock.

(V) William Tilson, born March 15, 1741, in Plymouth, Mass., on May 11, 1759, went to North Carolina, and in 1763 moved to Virginia. John Tilson, his brother, was in the Revolutionary war, being active in that cause from 1771 to 1779. William Tilson was married April 1, 1762, to Mary Ransom, of Plympton, Mass. Their children were all born in Washington county, Va., as follows: William, Nov. 13, 1763 (went to Tennessee); Peleg, 1766— (went to Tennessee); Thomas, July 15, 1767; Stephen, 176—; Lemuel, 1770; Mercy, 1771 (married Joseph Cole); Janet, 1773 (married Andy Bunker).

(VI) Thomas Tilson, born July 15, 1767, was a prominent planter and slave owner at one time in old Virginia. He was married May 3, 1792, to Eunice Hubbell, and they had the following named children: Ransom, William, Rachel, Stephen, Lemuel, James, Martie, Lorana and Sarah (Mrs. Buchanan). Thus it will be seen that the Buchanans are also of the early English stock which has made New England justly famous.

Thomas Tilson Buchanan was born in Virginia and there gained a knowledge of the wagonmaking trade, though he was but fourteen years old when he accompanied his parents to Indianapolis. A few years later he started the first wagonmaking establishment in the town, having a man by the name of Montague as a partner, thus associating the name of Buchanan with the carriage and wagon business in Indianapolis as long as that line of industry has been established in the city. Later he bought his partner's interest and continued the business alone until 1854, in which year, in partnership with C. E. Hawthorn, he embarked in the crockery and queensware business, opening the first store of the kind in the city. It was conducted as a high class store, Mr. Buchanan importing wares from England, and doing a wholesale as well as a retail business, having wagons visiting various parts of the country. The business prospered and he continued in it from 1854 until he was killed by the kick of a horse, Oct. 14, 1862. He dealt in horses and was a great lover of the animal, and his death was purely accidental.

Thomas T. Buchanan was much missed. He had been so active in promoting all the progressive agencies of the place, and had set so good an example of public spirit and enterprise, that his fellow-citizens had learned to depend largely upon him. He was a member of the old volunteer fire department, was one of the first school trustees, and was a working member of the city council for many years. He did not seek office, but office sought him, and when he accepted it he saw such a course to be in the line of duty. He was a man of many charities and gave support to all religious bodies, although his own views made him a Baptist. He was reared a Democrat, but at the opening of the Rebellion was constrained by his convictions to change his allegiance, thereafter being a strong Republican. He cheerfully surrendered three of his sons to fight for the flag of the Union.

Mr. Buchanan married Catherine Apple, who was born in Ohio March 4, 1817, and died in Indianapolis March 3, 1894. She was a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Scherer) Apple, people of Pennsylvania-Dutch descent, who moved to Ohio, and in 1829 to Indianapolis. At first Mr. Apple engaged in a freighting business between Cincinnati and Madison, but later retired to a farm, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits during the rest of his life, dying in 1855. His children were: Catherine, Mrs. Thomas T. Buchanan; Barbara, who married (first) J. Weddle, and (second) Mr. Kline; Ludwig, deceased; Hannah, Mrs. A. Weddle; Lucinda, Mrs. Davis; and Joel, who went to the far West.

In this line the Buchanans can claim descent from one of the early settlers of Delaware. Baron Charles Christopher Springer was born in Sweden in 1658. While strolling the streets of London, England, in 1688, he was seized and taken on board a vessel bound for Virginia, being sold as a redemptioner for five years. After serving his time he went to Wilmington, Del., where he became identified with the Swedish Colony, and was instrumental in building the old Swedish Church, where he was buried, under the south wall of the church, east of the entrance. The Baron communicated with the King, requesting him to send over ministers for the church. He himself acted as the church warden and chief official, and most of the church records were kept by him until his death in 1738, at the advanced age of eighty years, when his two eldest sons, Charles and Christopher, became the officers. Charles was elected vestryman and Christopher was elected church warden. There were five children in Baron Springer's family. His grandson, Joseph Springer, born Oct. 17, 1739, was a prominent official of the church and is buried in the churchyard of the old Swedish Church at Wilmington; he died March 12, 1832, in his ninety-third year. The Springer family claim the land on which part of the city of Wilmington, Del., stands. The family is very ancient.

To Thomas T. and Catherine (Apple) Buchanan were born children as follows: Sarah E., born Jan. 26, 1835, married James P. Fowler; James M., who died in 1884, was captain of a company in the 70th Regiment, Ind. V. I., Col. Benjamin Harrison, during the Civil war, and was wounded at Chickamauga; Martha A. married L. Panse; David M. was a sergeant in the 70th Ind. V. I. during the war of the Rebellion; Andrew, who died March 10, 1896, marched with Sherman to the Sea, as a member of the 70th Ind. V. I.; Washington died young; Henrietta married Alfred O. Despo; Charles died in early manhood; Joseph W. is a representative citizen and business man of Indianapolis; Thomas died young.

JOSEPH W. BUCHANAN was born in Indianapolis July 24, 1855, and was reared in his native city. During his boyhood he attended the town schools, where he acquired a good, practical education. When he had reached the proper age his brother James M. advised him to learn the wagonmaking trade, which he had found to be a profitable one, and he followed the advice so thoroughly that during the whole of his active life, with the exception of a period of four years, when he was in the grocery business, he has been interested in this business. When he had completed his apprenticeship he bought a partnership interest with his brother, Capt. James M. Buchanan, on credit, and when the brother died he took upon himself the responsibility of the whole plant. It was located on South East street. Later Mr. Buchanan enlarged the business and built a brick shop, and by careful management and continued industry he paid all his debts, in time disposing of the property to advantage. In 1894 he bought ground and built a large brick structure at the corner of Liberty and Washington streets, where he installed his business, doing all kinds of repair work, remodeling and repainting, as well as manufacturing carriages and wagons, and carrying one of the finest stocks in the city. All kinds of light and heavy wagons are made to order; a specialty is made of tools for sewer work; and there is always a good line of new and second hand vehicles for sale. In 1907 the business was removed to Nos. 801-803 East Market street.

In 1879 Mr. Buchanan was married to Miss Ida Lee, a descendant of one of the prominent early families of Indiana, daughter of Lott and Drucilla (McClellan) Lee. Her father was a native of Ohio and a carpenter, which trade he continued to follow after coming to Indianapolis, where he died in 1882. Her mother was born in Preble county, Ohio. Prior to coming to Indiana Lott Lee had been a man of considerable prominence in Preble county, and had served in many honorable public capacities. He was elected high sheriff of the county and filled the office with complete efficiency. He was brave and resolute in the discharge of his duties, but ever kind and generous in his personal relations with all. On two occasions he made a horse back trip to Mexico, a daring and unusual performance in his day. In politics he was a Democrat. His wife was a daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Larsh) McClellan, and granddaughter of John McClellan, who was a native of Scotland. After emigrating to this country John McClellan settled in Pennsylvania, and in 1788 moved from there to Kentucky, where he died. Samuel McClellan was born April 22, 1785, near Harrisburg, Pa., and married Catherine Larsh, who was born in Lewis county, Ky., Sept. 18, 1789. In 1819 they moved to Ohio, where his remaining years were spent. He improved a fine farm in Preble county, and died on it in 1860. He was survived ten years by his wife. They had sixteen children born to them, and thirteen of these lived to maturity. To Lott and Drucilla Lee were born two children: Ida, Mrs. Buchanan; and Lott, who for many years has been connected with the Indianapolis Evening News.

Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan have had the following children: Bessie, born in 1881; Joseph, 1882; Lott Lee, 1883 (married Ellen Lowry); Henrietta, 1888; Harry, 1890; and Nellie M., 1893. The boys are associated with their father in the wagon and carriage business. The family have a pleasant home at No. 934 Fletcher avenue.

In his political views Mr. Buchanan is a Republican, but he has never been active in politics or aspired to public office of any kind. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow. He has been active in the management of the affairs of Indianapolis Lodge No. 465, the largest lodge in the State, for thirty years. He has passed all the chairs in the Subordinate Lodge and the Encampment, and the Patriarchs Militant, the highest branch of the I. O. O. F.

JOHN BUCHANAN, youngest son of David and Sarah (Tilson) Buchanan, was born Nov. 16, 1829, in Indianapolis, at the northeast corner of New Jersey and Washington streets. Though but two years old when the family moved to the farm near Cumberland, he remembered the event, and also the little song he composed at the time, "I'm going out in the country, when they come back, when they come back; I'm going out in the country, when they come back again." This talent for music thus early shown remained, and afforded him his chief diversion through life.

On Dec. 23, 1852, at Furgason's Tavern, six miles east of Indianapolis, John Buchanan married Jane Caroline Furgason, who was born Aug. 17, 1835, daughter of James C. and Nancy Furgason. They settled on a farm, where he had lived since 1831, and there seven children were born to them, as follows: James Marion, Oct. 11, 1853; John Charles, Aug. 31, 1856; Albert Edward, June 8, 1860; Rosabel, Sept. 22, 1862; Nannie Frances, Jan. 1, 1866 (died April 7, 1889); Minnie Laura, Sept. 16, 1870; and Ida M., who died Dec. 13, 1872.

CHARLES J. BUCHANAN was born on the old Buchanan farm on the National road one mile west of Cumberland, Ind., Aug. 31, 1856. He was named for John Charles Fremont, the great explorer and first Presidential nominee of the Republican party. He was educated in the common schools and at the Valparaiso Normal school, where he was fitted for the profession of teacher, and he began teaching at the age of eighteen years. Continuing in the profession for fourteen years, he was engaged in Marion county, Ind., all that time except one year when he was in Alma, Wis. The closing years of his professional experience were spent at North Indianapolis and at Brighton, as township principal. In September, 1887, Mr. Buchanan entered the undertaking business in partnership with his brother-in-law, Frank W. Flanner, and the firm of Flanner & Buchanan, located at No. 320 North Illinois street, is one of the best known in that line in the State. In addition to undertaking and the regular business of funeral directors, they are proprietors of the Indianapolis crematory, which gives them a wide acquaintance in the trade over a large territory. However, Mr. Buchanan does not devote all his attention to this line. He has two fine farms on Fall creek, where he raises registered red-pollled cattle and saddle horses, both of which have become famous. Monte Mark No. 1249, the most noted saddle horse outside of Kentucky, champion of the four States of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, is the pride of the estate.

On Sept. 3, 1884, Mr. Buchanan was married to Anna P. Flanner, sister of Frank W. Flanner, his business partner, and they are the parents of two sons: Albert F., a graduate of Williams College, and Indianapolis Law School, and Paul H., now a junior in the University of Wisconsin. The family home, No. 1902 North Meridian street, is one of the best frame houses in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan spend their summers at Tippecanoe Lake, Kosciusko county, where they have a handsome summer home.

Mr. Buchanan's interests and sympathies have drawn him into association with many progressive movements. A man of intelligence and public spirit, social disposition and unbounded activity, he is identified with various organizations principally of a religious and fraternal character, and he is as popular in that connection as he is in business circles, where he enjoys the respect and confidence of all his associates. He is a prominent member of the Mayflower Congregational Church, in which at present he holds the offices of trustee and deacon. He is a director of the Young Men's Christian Association, to whose welfare he has ever given most devoted aid, and is now the oldest member of the board in point of service. He was captain of one of the teams in the "whirlwind canvass" for the new building. As a Mason Mr. Buchanan is affiliated with Oriental Lodge, No. 500, F. & A. M.; and Raper Commandery, No. 1, K. T. He is also a member of Philoxenia Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F. His advice and counsel in the Winona movement were sought and highly valued by Dr. Sol. C. Dickey, who had him placed as chairman of the board of trustees of the Winona Normal School and Agricultural Institute.

CAPT. CHARLES T. MACINTIRE, of Indianapolis, has been assistant to the chief of the detective force of that city since 1902. Previous to that time he was known in business circles for a number of years as a broker and insurance man, and for a long period was prominently connected with the National Guard of the State.

The Captain was born July 4, 1853, at Columbus, Ohio, son of John and Elizabeth L. (McDonald) MacIntire, and the family is of Scotch origin. On the paternal side he comes of patriotic New England stock, being a great-grandson of William MacIntire, and a great-great-grandson of Col. David Shepherd, one of the electors of Frederick county, Va., who voted for Col. George Washington for member of the House of Burgesses. In 1770 Colonel Shepherd moved from Shepherdstown, Va., to the forks of Wheeling creek, where he built Shepherd's fort and blockhouse—one of the strongest and safest in what was then known as "the West." He was prominent throughout the Revolutionary period as one of the stoutest champions of the American cause. At Fort Pitt, March 20 and May 26, 1775, David Shepherd was chosen a member of the executive committee for the safety of Augusta county, Va.; on Jan. 6, 1777, he took oath as justice of the peace; on June 2, 1777, Colonel Shepherd presented his commission as colonel of militia from Gov. John Page, and took the oath in open military court; on July 6th of the same year Gov. Patrick Henry appointed him county lieutenant of Ohio county, Va.; he was commandant at the siege of Fort Henry, Aug. 31-Sept. 1, 1777, when for twenty-three hours thirty-three men, assisted by their brave wives, resisted a besieging party of 380 Indians, led by the white renegade, Simon Girty, then a commissioned British officer. On April 6, 1778, Colonel Shepherd was appointed high sheriff. In 1781 he accompanied General Broadhead on the Coshocton campaign against the Delaware Indians, commanding 134 men. He died Feb. 2, 1795, on his estate near Wheeling creek, and was buried there. Thus closed a long and useful career, one that had distinct bearing in shaping the historical events of the day, and five volumes of the Colonel's letters and reports are preserved by the Wisconsin Historical Society as valuable archives. David Shepherd married Rachel Teague, and their daughter, Elizabeth, became the wife of William MacIntire.

William MacIntire, great-grandfather of Capt. Charles T. MacIntire, was also a patriot of the Revolution, serving as bursar, commissary officer and quartermaster of Fort Shepherd, and later of Fort Henry, at Wheeling. His name, as quartermaster, is on the pay-roll of the field and staff officers of militia of Virginia, at Wheeling, and he also served as quartermaster during the Coshocton expedition, in 1781, from April 10th to 28th. His reports and receipts are included in the above mentioned manuscripts of his father-in-law, Col. David Shepherd, in the library of the Wisconsin Historical Society.

Joseph MacIntire, son of William and Elizabeth (Shepherd) MacIntire, married Jane Crawford, and their children in the order of birth were: William, Martha, Elizabeth, James and Sarah (twins), David, Rev. Dr. Thomas, Margaret, Ruth, Joseph, Shepherd and John. Of these children, Rev. Dr. Thomas MacIntire was for twenty-seven years superintendent of the Indiana State Deaf and Dumb Institute, and at the time of his death was superintendent of a State institution in Pennsylvania. He married Mary Barr, and had children: Harriet, born in Ohio, who married Chapin Clarke Foster; Susan, wife of Merrick Vinton; Martha, wife of Charles Martindale, an attorney; and Frances, wife of Morris Ross, editorial writer on the Indianapolis News.

John MacIntire, son of Joseph, was born in Ohio, ten miles east of Columbus. He was one of the pioneers who traveled overland to California in 1849. He was married in Philadelphia to Elizabeth L. McDonald, a native of London, England. In about 1861-62 they settled in Indianapolis, where John MacIntire and his brother Thomas, in company with Jerry McLean, built the first paper-mill in the place. Mr. and Mrs. MacIntire had a family of six, all sons, namely: Charles T., Lacell V., William N., Frank S., Harry and Henry, the two last named dying in infancy.

Charles T. MacIntire attended public school in Columbus and Indianapolis, coming hither with his parents in 1861-62. His school days over, he became a telegraph operator, in which capacity he was employed by the Western Union Company, and he was subsequently engaged as a mail carrier in Indianapolis and special agent of the United States census bureau, holding the latter position until the completion of the census of manufacturers. He finally embarked in business on his own account, as a broker and insurance man, continuing thus until appointed to the public position he now holds, Oct. 15, 1902. He has rendered the city notable service as assistant to the chief of detectives, and has won recognition in the department as an able and tireless worker. All who have had business relations with him have been impressed by his devotion to the matters he has in hand, and his intelligent comprehension of the requirements and possibilities of his official obligations.

Captain MacIntire's connection with the Indiana National Guard began with his enlistment in the Indianapolis Light Infantry, an independent company which had become well known in military circles all over the United States, having won many first prizes in competitive drills at different places in the country. Previous to its muster into the State service as part of the then Indiana Legion, about 1891, it was known as the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Reserve. A brief record of Captain MacIntire's service is as follows: Enlisted, 1887; promoted to quartermaster-sergeant June 8, 1890; commissioned assistant chief signal officer, with rank of captain on the staff of Gov. A. P. Hovey, and assigned to the command of the corps of the Indiana Legion, June 15, 1891; by the death of Gov. Hovey and the succession of Ira J. Chase recommissioned as above, Jan. 1, 1892; promoted to major and assistant chief signal officer, July 1, 1892. On the reorganization of the Indiana Legion into a brigade he was recommissioned captain and chief signal officer, commanding corps, on the staff of Brig.-Gen. William J. McKee, by Gov. Claude Matthews. By an act of the Legislature revising the military laws of the State the name "Indiana Legion" was changed to the Indiana National Guard, and he was promoted to major and chief signal officer by Gov. Claude Matthews, June 29, 1895. James A. Mount was elected governor in 1896, but under the provisions of the new military law a recommission by him was not required, and Major MacIntire continued his services under him for nearly two years, until the breaking out of the Spanish-American war. He was nominated for a captaincy by President McKinley (his name was spelled in error McIntire, which was not changed on records); confirmed by the Senate June 13, 1898; accepted and assigned to duty by the War Department June 22, 1898, at Indianapolis, as recruiting officer, United States Volunteers, completing the muster July 7th; proceeded to Washington (D. C.) Barracks with detachment; assigned to command of 14th Company, Signal Corps, July 10th; attached to 7th Army Corps, under command of Maj.-Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, Aug. 1st; honorably discharged Oct. 16, 1898, close of war, on order of War Department. Then followed the reorganization of the Indiana National Guard, the whole brigade having been mustered into the service of the United States, and Charles T. MacIntire was again commissioned major and chief signal officer, commanding, on the staff of Brig.-Gen. William J. McKee, by Gov. James A. Mount, and continued as such into the terms of Govs. Winfield T. Durbin and J. Frank Hanly until his resignation, when he was placed on the honorary retired list, in July, 1905. An incident of the early part of his military career, on the occasion of the first appearance in camp of the signal corps, is worth relating. Owing to the fact that no appropriation had been made for the equipment of the corps, Captain MacIntire discovered that in order to make a showing as a signal corps organization in camp he was compelled to avail himself of the kind permission of Mr. John F. Wallick, district superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to rummage through his scrap pile of instruments and appliances, from which he assembled several fairly good instruments, out of scrap, as well as wire, cells, batteries, etc., the loan of which made possible a successful first effort, pronounced superior to service of orderlies. The corps received favorable mention for its telegraphic and other service, which has since been improved and developed into the well-equipped organization of the present day.

Captain MacIntire is equally well known in fraternal connections, being a thirty-second-degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Indiana Consistory and various other Masonic bodies. He is a Republican in political faith, and familiarly known in his party, as in every organization with which he has become identified.

The Captain has been twice married. By his first union, to Miss Florence Gresh, daughter of Benjamin F. and Emily (Rich) Gresh, he had two children, Benneville E. and Bertha M. The mother of these dying, Captain MacIntire married Miss Niota B. Johnson, of Indianapolis, daughter of John Warner and Frances Harriet (Scott) Johnson, members of the Society of Friends. Two children have also been born to this union, Charles Leland and Marguerite Harriet.

H. D. HARRIS, one of the honorable, self-made men of Indianapolis, is a descendant of an old Virginia family. He was born Feb. 5, 1845, in Washington county, Va., and was reared on a farm until the age of twelve years and was educated in the common and subscription schools. He is a son of David and Malinda (Ramsey) Harris, both of whom, of Scotch-Irish descent, were natives of Virginia, where they married.

The Harris family was one early planted in Virginia. The paternal grandfather of H. D. Harris was a hatter by trade, and this business he followed for many years at Abingdon, Va., where his death took place. Very little is known of him beyond the fact that he was an honest, industrious man, and that he left five sons and four daughters, the sons being: John E., a Methodist minister, who lived to the age of ninety-three years; William, a pioneer in California, who settled in Grass Valley; Samuel, who settled in Ohio; Alexander, who still lives in Virginia; and David, the father of H. D. The names of the daughters are all forgotten but Jane, who lives at Emory and Henry College, Va.; two daughters died unmarried. The parents of these children brought them up in the faith of the Methodist Church.

David Harris was born in 1807 in Virginia, and died at Indianapolis in 1898. He was reared and married in Virginia, where his children were born and where he lived until the sad days of the great Rebellion. He was firm in his convictions and believed in the principles of the Whig, Know Nothing and Republican parties, in turn, and as he was outspoken in his sentiments, his life was in danger and only his fraternal brotherhood preserved it. Finally all his goods were confiscated and he was escorted by the provost marshal to the Federal lines in Kentucky. All that he preserved was the clothing worn by himself and family, two horses and a wagon. By trade he was a mill-wright and was also engaged in farming. He settled near Lexington and worked at carpentering and contracting until October, 1865, when he removed to Bloomington, Ill. He worked there as a carpenter and later entered the railroad shops of the Chicago & Alton, and continued in that employment until 1878, when he came to Indianapolis and spent his remaining years with his son, dying at the age of ninety-one years. Mr. Harris was above the average stature and had a strong constitution. He was a man of temperate habits and of kindly nature, and in every way commanded the respect of all who were not blinded by party strife in his old home. In 1856 he was one of two who voted for Bell & Everett in his township. In 1874, at Bloomington, he lost his faithful wife. She was born in Pennsylvania, of sturdy Dutch stock, and was the third in her parents' family, the other members being: Hiram, who ran the "Old Colony Hotel" at Abingdon; and Elizabeth, Mrs. Hilyard, of Bristol, Tenn. The Ramsey family were all Methodists.

David and Malinda (Ramsey) Harris had children as follows: Elizabeth married William Augustus, and died at their home in Missouri; Samuel L. went in 1864 to Lexington, Ky., in 1866 to Bloomington, Ill., and then to Wichita, Kans.; James H. entered the Confederate army, but escaped to the Federal lines at the Battle of the Wilderness, was sent to Philadelphia and joined his father at Bloomington after an exciting time, later settled in Howard county, Ind., and is now engaged in a grain business at Kansas City; Rebecca married John A. Dillon, who was in the Confederate army, left in 1863, went to Kentucky, later to Bloomington and finally died in Missouri; Joseph H. served in the Confederate army, was wounded and died in front of Richmond; H. D. is the subject of this sketch; Jennie married W. Clark, and died at Bloomington in 1880, leaving three children; Alexander C. went West; and Ella is the widow of M. Waldron, and lives at Peoria, Ill. The three eldest sons were forced into the Confederate army, and while one was killed, the other two escaped to the Union lines.

H. D. Harris, although born and reared in Virginia, did not sympathize with the Secessionists, and at the age of eighteen, he joined seven other young men, all eligible to the army service, and together they managed to reach the Federal lines at Greenville, Tenn., but they grew homesick and decided to make a secret visit. It was found impossible to get through, and they returned, joined the army and went to Knoxville. At a later date he made another attempt to see his family, by way of Cumberland Gap, and enjoyed a short visit before the Confederates realized that he was in the vicinity. By great good fortune he managed to evade them, went to the hills and joined a band of refugees, and from there he worked his way first to Richmond and thence to Bloomington. During these unsettled times he found some employment as a farm hand, and when he reached Illinois he found plenty of work, assisting on farms and caring for the fine fat stock. During all these trying experiences there is one notable feature, and that was that at no time did our subject forget his family. As soon as he had accumulated sufficient by his hard work, he went to Kentucky, and brought to the fine new home where he was given peace, plenty and encouragement, his father and family, David Harris later making his home in Bloomington as before mentioned. He worked in the car shops of the Chicago & Alton Railroad until 1869, and then went to Carroll county, Ind., and operated a sawmill until 1870. He next went to Urbana, Ill., and in 1871 was employed by the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railroad as engine carpenter, remaining eleven months. At the end of that time he worked at building pumping houses operated with horse power. In 1872 he came to Indianapolis, finding work in the car shops and later in the factory of Tucker & Dorsey, manufacturers of money tills, afterward changing to another firm engaged in the manufacture of money drawers. In 1873 he engaged with Stone & Osgood, and operated machinery in their chair factory until October, when he returned to the Indianapolis, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad as engine carpenter and car repairer, and remained with this corporation, in July, 1877, being made foreman of the car repairing and wrecking master. Mr.

Harris still retains this important position and when the road was made a part of the Big Four system, he continued with it. He is a man well qualified, and is capable of directing large and important enterprises. For over thirty years he has held a position with one company and that speaks volumes for his efficiency, intelligence and industry.

Mr. Harris has accumulated considerable property by his own efforts and owns his comfortable and commodious house on Spann avenue, where he resides. In politics he is a strong Republican, and fraternally a York Rite Mason and also a member of the Druids, Garfield Grove, No. 24, has been master of the lodge and helped to organize Logan Lodge at Indianapolis.

In 1872 at Indianapolis, Mr. Harris married Miss M. T. Murphy, born in Illinois in 1851, a lady of intelligence and culture, a daughter of M. J. Murphy, a native of Ireland. She lost her mother in infancy and was reared by her aunt. Her parents died in Illinois and left these children: Sarah, Mrs. M. J. Ward, of Bloomington; Luke, who died in Kansas City; Emma, wife of John Brady, a member of the police department at Toledo, Ohio; and M. T., Mrs. Harris. Three children were born to our subject and his wife: Charles W., who died at the age of eight years; Corina Lucy, who married, Dec. 9, 1904, James D. Schively, of Indianapolis, and died Oct. 22, 1906; and Lotta May. Both Mr. and Mrs. Harris are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. They are highly respected residents of the city of Indianapolis.

JAMES H. BILLINGSLEY, for several years a member of the firm of Billingsley & Co., of Indianapolis, at present a resident of Galena, Ill., has spent the greater part of his life in Indianapolis, and during his connection with its business circles bore a high reputation for ability and integrity. He was born near Roachdale, Putnam Co., Ind., July 17, 1864. Mr. Billingsley comes of a family which has long been settled in America, and which has been represented in Indiana since pioneer days, his grandfather, Alexander D. Billingsley, having come to the State in 1834. His father, John J. W. Billingsley, has done, perhaps, as much for the agricultural interests of his section of the country as any one man.

Alexander D. Billingsley was born in Kentucky, and there grew to manhood and was married, bringing his family thence to Indiana, in 1834. He settled in Putnam county, near Roachdale, and for many years was profitably engaged in stock farming. He passed the last few years of his life in retirement in Indianapolis, dying there at the age of sixty-eight. He married Elizabeth McMurray, and to them were born three sons and three daughters.

John J. W. Billingsley was born Sept. 18, 1832, near Bowling Green, Warren county, Ky., and was in his second year when the family came to Indiana. He received his early education in the home schools in Putnam county, later attending Franklin College, at Franklin, Ind. After finishing his course there he returned home, where he was his father's assistant on the farm until his marriage, when he decided to start on his own account. Selecting 400 acres of fertile land in Effingham county, Ill., he moved there with his wife, and for some years worked the farm, also dealing in live stock. In 1861, when the war broke out, he sold the property. He was ready to offer his services in defense of the Union, but after counselling with his two brothers they decided that he, having a family, should remain at home to take care of the family, and of their father and mother, who were invalids, and to carry on the business. This he did faithfully for four years. His parents then moved to Indianapolis, in order to receive medical treatment, and he then bought a farm in the southwestern part of Marion county, so that he could be near his parents and give them the attention which he was ever ready to bestow upon them.

Upon moving to Marion county, Ind., Mr. Billingsley settled in Decatur township, where he lived for several years. In 1870 he had become interested in a trade journal called "The Northwestern Farmer," which name was later changed to "The Indiana Farmer," a publication which to-day is to be found among the leading agricultural journals. In 1872, seeing the possibilities of the journal, to whose success he could only contribute by giving more of his time and active assistance, he sold his farm and with his family moved to Indianapolis, where he has ever since resided, interested in agricultural journals and in the real estate business, though he is now leading a comparatively retired life. He has been a useful and prominent citizen in many ways, identified with the best interests of Indianapolis.

Mr. Billingsley married Elizabeth Hymer, daughter of Jesse P. and Eliza (Gill) Hymer. Seven children were born to them, four sons and three daughters, as follows: Ada A. (wife of T. A. Randall), Denton F., Eva B. (Mrs. Harry Rowley), James H., Nettie H. (wife of Dalton Stivers), Alexander D. and Judson W.

Jesse P. Hymer, Mrs. Billingsley's father, was a native of Kentucky, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. The name originally was Pickelhymer. Mr. Hymer, who was a farmer, came to New Roachdale in the early days, cleared a farm there, and cultivated it until his death, at the age of eighty-two. He and his wife had eleven children. Mr. and Mrs. Billingsley are members of the College Avenue Baptist Church, of which he has been a trustee for many years. He is also prominent throughout the denomination, at present serving as treasurer of the Indiana Baptist State Convention, and as a member of the State Mission Board. Charitable and kindly by nature, he has ever been ready to give a helping hand where it is needed, and his friends are many wherever he goes.

James H. Billingsley lived on his father's farm until he was about ten years old and then was brought by his parents to Indianapolis, where he attended the public schools of the city, securing a good education. When old enough to start out for himself he began working on road and railroad contracts. In May, 1900, he entered into the cut stone business, having a half interest in it with Edward F. Brinkmeyer, under the firm name of Billingsley & Co. They furnished cut stone for all kinds of building work, employing from twenty-five to forty-five men, and had a most successful career, with even broader opportunities opening before them. Mr. Billingsley has since moved to Galena, Ill., where he is engaged in business.

Besides being well known in the financial circles of Indianapolis, Mr. Billingsley became prominent in the fraternal orders as he is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Murat Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and one of the old time members of the Knights of Pythias. In political sentiment he is a Republican, and he took an active interest in municipal affairs, representing the Second ward in the city council. His residence was at No. 2861 Sutherland avenue, where he built a commodious home in 1902.

The marriage of James H. Billingsley and Miss Nellie Hutchins, a daughter of Dalphin and Ellen (Matkins) Hutchins, occurred Dec. 24, 1886. To this union have been born two children, Clifford H. and Elizabeth.

PORTER FAMILY. (I) John Porter emigrated from the North of Ireland about the year 1755, and settled on a farm in Drumore township, Lancaster county, Pa. In his will probated June 17, 1765, he made bequests to his wife Rebecca, his sons Thomas and William, his daughter Violet, and to his grandsons, John Porter, John Price, John Mitchell, John Whiteside and John Porter. This will was witnessed by Thomas Whiteside and others.

(II) Thomas Porter, son of John Porter, was born in Ireland about 1740. He came to America about the year 1750, in company with a rich uncle (probably James Porter), who had gone back to Ireland on a visit. They landed in Philadelphia. The father emigrated later as above. Thomas was a redemptioner. After growing to manhood he became a considerable land owner in Drumore township, and a man of influence. His farm contained 350 acres. He married Jennette Mitchell, of York county. He became a colonel in the Revolutionary war, being commander of the 3d battalion of Associators, organized in Lancaster county in 1775. He was also a member of the Legislature in 1775, and a delegate to the First Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania in 1776, which was presided over by Benjamin Franklin. While in the army he participated in several battles and a family tradition has it that he was a member of General Washington's staff. He was taken ill late in the fall of 1778, and died soon afterward of pneumonia. His four sons removed to Kentucky, and settled in Boone county, in 1810.

(III) John Porter, eldest son of Col. Thomas Porter, married Rebecca Long, daughter of Hugh Long, a prominent citizen of Lancaster county, about the year 1786. He had five children, one son and four daughters. He moved to Kentucky in 1810, but afterward in 1814 went to Lawrenceburg, Ind., where he became Judge of the First Judicial District. He died in Lawrenceburg in 1836, at the age of seventy-two years.

(IV) Capt. Thomas Porter, the only son of John Porter, was born in Lancaster county in 1789. After reaching maturity he was for some years connected with Andrew Oliphant's iron manufactory at Uniontown, Fayette county, Pa. Upon the breaking out of the war of 1812 he joined Ball's regiment of volunteers, and he was badly wounded in a battle with Indians and English at Mississinewa, near Fort Meigs. At the close of the war he became an officer in the regular army, and was stationed at Carlisle, Pa., until about the year 1816, when he resigned, removing to Lawrenceburg to become a civil engineer. He had much to do with the survey of the southern portion of Indiana, and assisted in the survey of Indianapolis, which the Indiana State Legislature had designated as the future State capital. At one time he held the office of recorder of Dearborn county, after which for some years he was the cashier of a Lawrenceburg bank. His old wound broke out afresh later in life, causing him great pain and distress, and doubtless shortened his days. He was the owner of the ferry at Lawrenceburg, one of the few ferries on the Ohio river where horse-power was then in use, and the business was carried on by his two sons, Oliphant and Albert. Thomas Porter died at the age of sixty-five, and was buried in the old Touseytown graveyard on the hill, in Kentucky, opposite Lawrenceburg.

(V) ALBERT GALLATIN PORTER, son of Capt. Thomas Porter, was born at Lawrenceburg, April 20, 1824. He attended Asbury (now DePauw) University, at Greencastle, Ind., where he graduated with high honors. He began the practice of law at Indianapolis in the year 1846. He was at one time reporter of the Supreme Court of Indiana, and afterward represented the Indianapolis district in the United States Congress from 1858 to 1861. He was appointed comptroller of the Treasury by President Hayes, and resided at Washington for nearly four years, but resigned this office to enter the campaign, having received the nomination for governor at the Republican convention. After an exciting campaign he was elected, and served as governor for four years. He was for many years a law partner of Gen. Benjamin Harrison. He had the honor of nominating Harrison in the Republican convention at Chicago, and was his first appointee after Harrison became President, being appointed United States Minister to Italy, stationed at Rome. He had much to do with settling the dispute which arose between the two countries over the Mafia outrages in New Orleans. He died at Indianapolis in the year 1896, aged seventy-two years. He was twice married, his first wife being Minerva Brown, a daughter of Hiram Brown, an eminent lawyer of Indianapolis. His second wife was Cornelia Stone, of Jamestown, N. Y., an accomplished and excellent woman. Mr. Porter was the father of five children, Omer T., George T., Edward B., Annie and Albert B., all of whom, excepting the one first named, are still living.

JAMES H. JORDAN, Judge of the Supreme Court of Indiana, is serving his third term in that responsible office. His official duties keep him in Indianapolis a large part of the time, but he maintains his home in Martinsville, where he practised until his elevation to the Bench in 1894.

Judge Jordan was born in Woodstock, Shenandoah county, Va., Dec. 21, 1842, and his parents, Charles B. and Elizabeth R. (Burke) Jordan, were also natives of that State. They were of German and Irish extraction, respectively. David Jordan, the Judge's grandfather, was born in Germany, and on coming to this country became a planter in Virginia. For a time he owned slaves, but he freed them. He died in Shenandoah county, Va., when over eighty years of age, leaving a family of ten children. Several of his sons participated in the war of 1812.

Charles B. Jordan followed his father's calling, becoming a farmer, but on coming to Indiana, early in the fifties, he located near Corydon and took up the stonemason's trade. There he died when over seventy-five years of age. His wife died in early life, being only thirty-one years of age at the time of her death, which occurred in 1849. She belonged to the Presbyterian Church, her husband to the Reformed Church. They were the parents of three children, of whom James H. is now the only survivor.

Thomas Burke, father of Mrs. Elizabeth R. (Burke) Jordan, was born in Ireland, of the same family as the eminent Edmund Burke. He came to this country and made his home in Shenandoah county, Va., where he followed the stone-mason's trade, reared his family of three children, and died when an old man. He served as a soldier during the Revolution, espousing the cause of the Colonies.

James H. Jordan lived in Woodstock, Va., until he was eleven years old, after the death of his mother coming to Indiana under the care and protection of his two aunts, Elizabeth and Catherine Jordan. Here he was reared to manhood on a farm in Harrison county, two and a half miles distant from Corydon. In 1861 he enlisted in the Indiana Legion, and subsequently, in July of the same year, became a member of the 1st Indiana Cavalry, which afterward became the 3d Cavalry, 45th Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, under command of Col. Conrad Baker. He served three years in the latter regiment, being mustered in as sergeant. At the close of the war he became lieutenant-colonel in the Indiana Legion. His service was one of almost constant activity. Altogether he was in seventy-nine pitched battles, engagements and skirmishes, was with General Sheridan on his raid against Richmond, Va., in May, 1864, and with General Wilson on his raid south of Richmond, Va., when he destroyed the Weldon railroad. He was in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Gettysburg, Brandy Station, Chancellorsville, the Wilderness, Cold Harbor and others. He was slightly wounded at Gettysburg, and again at Culpeper Court House, Nov. 8, 1863, where he received a wound in the left thigh from the effects of which he is quite lame.

After the war Judge Jordan attended Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, for two terms, and subsequently was graduated from the Indiana State University, in 1868. Having previously commenced the practice of law, he entered the law department of the same institution, from which he was graduated in 1871. After spending a year at Clinton, Mo., in the practice of his profession, the ambitious young lawyer returned to Indiana and located at Martinsville, where he was engaged in general legal business until he went on the Bench. In 1894 he was elected a judge of the Supreme Court, and his fitness for the position was recognized by the people of the State in a most practical way by his re-election to that office, by a large majority. At the Republican State Convention in 1906 he was nominated for a third term without opposition, and is now one of the foremost jurists of the State.

Judge Jordan's public services, however, are not covered by his labors on the Supreme Bench. He was district prosecuting attorney a short time, having been appointed by Governor Baker in 1872. For twelve years he was city attorney in Martinsville. In 1882 he was a candidate for judge of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, which at the time was a strong Democratic district, and he was defeated by only twenty-three votes, running far ahead of his ticket. He has been active in the Republican party for many years. His first vote was cast for Lincoln, in 1864. In 1880 he was a member of the Republican State committee from the old Fifth Congressional District, and for six years he was on the State executive committee, serving as its chairman a portion of the time, in 1882.

Judge Jordan was appointed a member of the board of trustees of the deaf and dumb asylum by Governor Porter, but the appointment was not confirmed by a Democratic Legislature. For four years prior to his election to the Supreme Bench he was on the board of trustees of the State University.

Since his election to the Supreme Court Judge Jordan has taken high rank as a jurist, and his opinions have been received with much favor by the professional public and the people in general. One of his most noted decisions is State vs. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, in which the validity of the Nicholson law was sustained, and another was the State ex rel. Snyder vs. the Portland Natural Gas Company, 153 Ind. 483, in which the right of a State to forfeit the rights and charter of a corporation when it enters into an unlawful trust or combination was declared. This decision has become prominent as a leading case in the general trust and exposition of the law relative to unlawful trusts or combinations. Judge Jordan has pre-eminently a legal and judicial mind, and is thereby enabled to comprehend the details of a case, and as he is thoroughly rooted and grounded in the fundamental elements of the law he brings to bear upon the settlement of every application of law to the problems of social and business life all the resources of his great profession. His office is in Room 61, at the State House in Indianapolis. His home is in Martinsville, where he is held in high respect and esteem by the people of the community.

On Jan. 13, 1886, Judge Jordan was married to Miss Emma R. Johnson, of Sandusky, Ohio, a daughter of John T. and Mary A. (Ryan) Johnson. Mrs. Jordan is a member of the Episcopal Church, and the Judge is a stanch Presbyterian. He belongs to Martinsville Lodge and Encampment of the I. O. O. F., to Anniversary Lodge, K. P., of Martinsville, to the Phi Kappa Psi College fraternity, and to Blankenship Post, No. 77, G. A. R., being particularly active in the last named organization. He was the first commander of his post, was appointed judge advocate of the Department of Indiana, G. A. R., in 1893, serving one year, and the same year was on the staff of the national commander of the Grand Army.

WILLIAM JOHN BROWN, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Indianapolis Stove Company, the oldest and largest stove manufacturing concern in the State of Indiana, is maintaining in business life the reputation for consummate ability which his father and grandfather achieved in public affairs. These three generations have for three-quarters of a century played prominent parts in the history and development of Indiana. The family is an old-established one in America, and its members have ever displayed an active interest in the important events of their respective days. Thomas Brown, the great-great-grandfather of William John Brown, and his son, George Brown, the great-grandfather, were soldiers in Colonel Gibson's First Virginia Regiment. They were present at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, at Yorktown, in 1781, as was also George Brown's father-in-law, John John, who enlisted in Pennsylvania among the first troops in the winter of 1776-77, joining General Washington in Boston. He was a large and powerful man physically, and was a member of Washington's body-guard.

Thomas Brown, the great-great-grandfather, was a native of Virginia. In 1796 he moved to Mason county, Ky., and in 1808 to Clermont county, Ohio, he and his son George having been granted land warrants for their services in the Revolution. Thomas Brown married Mary Ball, daughter of William and Mary Ball, the former of whom was a brother of Col. Joseph Ball, General Washington's grandfather.

George Brown, son of Thomas and Mary (Ball) Brown, like his father, migrated to what was then the "Far West," finally, in 1808, settling in Clermont county, Ohio. He was a Revolutionary soldier, enlisting when he was but fifteen years of age. He was a farmer by occupation. He married Hannah John, daughter of the John John previously mentioned as a member of Washington's body-guard.

William J. Brown, son of George and grandfather of the William J. Brown of the present generation, was born Aug. 15, 1805.

in Mason county, Kentucky. He entered the legal profession, and was a noted attorney in his day. But from the number and importance of the public offices he filled it would seem that his great abilities as a lawyer were turned to more advantage in increasing his value as a public servant than merely in winning him laurels in that particular line. Coming to Indiana in the year 1821, he was during all his active career a citizen of this State. He lived in Milroy, Rush county, until elected secretary of the State, taking that office in 1838, when he removed to Indianapolis. He served as secretary of State until 1842. He was a member of Congress from the Indianapolis District for many years, and was assistant postmaster-general under President Polk. Mr. Brown's oratory was one of the potent factors in the political campaigns of his day. He was considered one of the greatest stump speakers in Indiana, or indeed throughout the West, and his name is still a proverb among the survivors of that period. One who knew him, no less a personage than Gen. John Coburn, wrote:

"William J. Brown was the son of George Brown and Hannah (John) Brown, born in Mason county, Kentucky. He was a man of note in the State of Indiana for many years. In early manhood he was a representative from Rush county in the Legislature of the State, and after that was elected secretary of State. He represented the central district of Indiana in Congress several terms. He was a member of the National Committee of the Democratic party for sixteen years. He was a fluent and rapid stump speaker, being an ardent and influential Democrat. His wife was Miss Susan Tompkins, a native of Cynthiana, Ky., and socially held a high rank at home in Indiana and in Washington as the wife of the representative there in Congress from the central district of Indiana. Their son, Austin H. Brown, held many prominent offices in county and State. He was for several years the proprietor of the Indianapolis Daily Sentinel. He was collector of internal revenue in the central district of Indiana; four years county auditor; four years clerk of Marion county. He was also sixteen years the National Democratic Committeeman for Indiana. He was chief of one of the divisions in the National Treasury Department under Cleveland. He was a thirty-third-degree Mason. He served on the Indianapolis school board thirteen years, and a like term in the City Council." Mr. Brown died in 1857.

William J. Brown married Susan Tompkins, who was born Dec. 26, 1807, in Cynthiana, Harrison county, Ky., and died in October, 1888. She was a remarkable woman, of excellent mental qualities and strong personality, and admirably fitted, socially and intellectually, for the position in which her husband's prominence placed her. An ardent Democrat in sentiment, and possessing decided taste for and appreciation of the activities of political life, she was herself a great politician, and her acquaintance among the leading men at Washington during the forties was extensive, including celebrities from both the great parties. Jefferson Davis, Thaddeus Stevens, and others of equal prominence boarded at the same place, and it was Mrs. Brown's privilege and delight to meet nearly all of them in social intercourse.

To William J. Brown and wife were born six children who survived infancy. Of these, Austin H. (father of William J. Brown) was the eldest. The second son, Admiral George Brown, of the United States Navy, retired, is still living, and makes his home in Indianapolis. All of their other children are dead. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Mary Browning, died only a few years ago, leaving three children: Miss Eliza G. Browning, city librarian; Henry L. Browning, secretary of The C. B. Cones Manufacturing Company; and Dr. William J. Browning.

Austin Haymond Brown, son of William J. and Susan (Tompkins) Brown, was born in Milroy, Rush county, Ind., March 19, 1828. He was one of the most vigorous workers in his day for the success of the Democratic party in Indiana, and as joint owner with his father of the Indianapolis Sentinel, and national committeeman for sixteen years, wielded a large influence in national as well as State affairs. However, he was not a mere politician, striving for his own ends, but a sincere believer in the responsibility of those in high places to devote their best energies to the good of their fellowmen; and he did not fail in the performance of his duty, even at the cost of personal sacrifice. For fifteen years he was a member of the city council, and for thirteen years a member of the Indianapolis school board, and he and Judge Roach were the authors of a law establishing commissioners for the public schools and the present Public Library. As clerk of Marion county he served four years, and he was also county auditor. During the period of the Civil war he was very active in the Government service, acting as collector of internal revenue at Indianapolis; was later chief of one of the divisions of the treasury at Washington, and was assistant adjutant-general under Gov. W. H. H. Terrell. His versatility and long familiarity with public affairs made him a valuable member of the various bodies—boards, etc.—with which he was connected, and his high personal character and strong mentality carried the promise of efficient service in every capacity. That he measured up to this promise in every respect is evidenced in his repeated calls to the performance of important duties. He died Jan. 1, 1903.

Austin H. Brown married Margaret Noble Russell, a native of Indianapolis, daughter of Major Alexander Wilson Russell (one of the pioneers and first postmaster of Indianapolis) and Katherine Leach (Noble) Russell (daughter of the first senator from Indiana). Besides William J. Brown (the subject of this sketch), Austin H. Brown was the father of Austin H. Brown, Jr., who is located in Northern California as a mining engineer, having been connected with some of the largest interests in the West, such as The Anaconda Company and The Montana Ore Purchasing Company, of Butte, Mont., and the Thomas Lawson copper interests of California; and Mrs. George R. Sullivan, of Indianapolis, a niece of Mrs. Brown's, was raised by Mr. and Mrs. Brown as their daughter, her parents having both died when she was eight years old.

William J. Brown, son of Austin Haymond and Margaret Noble (Russell) Brown, was born in Indianapolis Aug. 20, 1857. He was educated in the public and high schools of the city, graduating from the latter in 1875, and in the same year took a position as clerk with Hibben, Pattison & Co., afterwards Murphy, Hibben & Co., wholesale dry-goods merchants. After some experience in that capacity he began to travel for the house in Indiana, being engaged as traveling salesman for thirteen years. In 1893 he bought an interest in the Indianapolis Stove Company, to whose interests his attention has since been devoted. He began his official connection with the company as vice-president, later becoming secretary and treasurer, and general manager. The concern holds an important place in the commercial world as a factor in the industrial development of the city, and has a standing second to none.

Mr. William J. Brown was united in marriage, in 1884, to Miss Cornelia I. Garvin, of Evansville, Indiana, daughter of Hon. Thomas E. and Cornelia (Morris) Garvin, the latter a descendant of Gouverneur Morris, signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have three children: Garvin Morris Brown, who has just graduated at Princeton; Austin H., a student at Wabash College; and Miss Cornelia S. Mrs. Brown is a member of the D. A. R. and the Colonial Dames, and Mr. Brown is treasurer of the Indiana Society, Sons of the American Revolution.

HORACE E. SMITH, of Indianapolis, Ind., is a member of the law firm of Hawkins, Smith & Hawkins, whose offices occupy Suite 825, Lemcke Building.

WALTON C. HOBBS (deceased) who was well known throughout the territory of the Big Four railroad as one of the most active officials of that road, was related in both paternal and maternal connections to educators whose influence in Indiana has been noteworthy both for efforts and results.

Mr. Hobbs was born April 2, 1852, at the Shawnee Mission, in Kansas, near Kansas City, his parents, Wilson and Zalinda (Williams) Hobbs, being Quakers and preachers of the Society of Friends in charge of that mission. Wilson Hobbs was a physician and surgeon, a man of fine education, having been brought up by his uncle, Barnabas Hobbs, a noted preacher and educator of the Society of Friends, who traveled extensively abroad, and was recognized not only in this country but also in Europe, by men high in authority, as an educator of profound worth. Barnabas Hobbs gave effective service as superintendent of public instruction in Indiana.

Zalinda (Williams) Hobbs, mother of the late Walton C. Hobbs, was a daughter of Achilles Williams, in his day a prominent public official of Wayne county, Ind., where he served several years as postmaster at Richmond. During Abolition days he was well known as an "officer" on the famous "under ground railway," which assisted so many fugitive slaves to freedom.

Walton C. Hobbs was only a small child when his parents returned to Indiana, settling at Spiceland, in Henry county, near Knights-town. His schooling was finished at Bloomington, Ind., and he early engaged in railroad-ing, which proved to be his life work, though he tried other lines in his young manhood. He first came to Indianapolis at the age of eighteen and found employment in the drug business, also acting as clerk in the recorder's office. Then he became engaged at railroad work at Terre Haute and also at Lafayette, in 1877 returning to Indianapolis to take the position of agent for the Big Four road. With this line he remained to the close of his life. Seven years after taking the agency at Indianapolis he was sent to Chicago as general freight agent of the Big Four, and at the time of his death was acting as agent of the Kanawha Dispatch, a freight line. His reputation was very high, both for ability and faithfulness in the discharge of his duties, which were both multitudinous and important. He died Dec. 19, 1896, at Indianapolis.

On Nov. 20, 1878, Mr. Hobbs was united in marriage with Miss Annie Bence, daughter of Dr. Robert F. and Caroline (Coburn) Bence, the former from Louisville, Ky., the latter the youngest of the family of Henry P. and Sarah (Malott) Coburn. Dr. and Mrs. Bence were married in Indianapolis in 1856. Mrs. Coburn's father, Capt. Hiram Malott, a soldier of the war of 1812, married a daughter of Peter Haas and his wife Mary (Boyer). Thus Mrs. Hobbs has patriotic ancestors who have given the country distinguished service in every struggle for liberty which have marked its history. Peter Haas was a Swiss Mennonite settler of Lancaster county, Pa., and a prominent defender of the Patriot cause. Himself a member of the committee of Safety and Observation, and active in ferreting out enemies to the cause of independence, he was a member of the first company from Lancaster county to pass the committee en route for Long Island. He was well to do, and became a large land owner. The coat of arms of the Haas or Hare family shows a hare with collar and motto "Fleet and faithful." The family is an ancient one.

Another ancestor of Mrs. Hobbs who bore an active part in the Revolution and also in the pioneer history of the West was Capt. John McKeown, of Hanover township, Lancaster county, who became celebrated for faithful services and lived to become a Revolutionary pensioner. His sons went to Kentucky and settled in Jefferson county, and of their experiences more will be found in the sketch of Volney T. Malott, in this volume. Capt. Peter Coburn and his son, Peter, grandfather and father, respectively, of Henry P. Coburn, were both soldiers of the Revolution. All are more fully mentioned in the sketches of Henry P. and Gen. John Coburn, in this volume.

To Mr. and Mrs. Walton C. Hobbs were born children as follows: (1) Robert Wilson, born Feb. 12, 1880, graduated from Butler College in 1899, and from Law School in 1902, since which time he has engaged in newspaper work, acting as commercial editor of the Indianapolis News, night editor and acting manager editor of the Star, and has been on the staff of New York, Cleveland and Oklahoma papers. (2) Julia Coburn, born Nov. 29, 1881, graduated from the Shortridge High School in 1899, and the University of Chicago in 1903; she is a member of the Gen. Arthur St. Clair Chapter, D. A. R.

JOHN A. SWAN, former editor and proprietor of the Greenwood Era, of Greenwood, Ind., and now one of the leading school teachers in Princeton, Ind., was born in Harrison county, Ind., March 6, 1860, son of Daniel H. and Ruth (Cunningham) Swan, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively.

James C. Swan, his great-grandfather, was known as General Swan, having served on General Washington's staff as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He was immensely wealthy and after the war was over returned to his native land, France. There he lost his life during the French Revolution. He had previously sent his wife and family—which was a small one—to the United States.

Julius Swan, son of James C., was a native of France, and was but a child when brought to this country. During the pioneer days he came to Indiana, and during his early life he was a miller, later pursuing farming. His family was a large one, and he died in Harrison county, Ind., at an advanced age.

Daniel H. Swan, father of John A., was a farmer from boyhood, and came to Indiana when a child, with his parents, settling near Corydon, where he lived for many years, though his home is now in Nebraska. He married Ruth Cunningham, daughter of Samuel Cunningham, a pioneer of Harrison county, Ind., where he carried on farming, and where he died when about sixty-eight years of age, the father of a numerous family. Mrs. Ruth Swan died in 1901, aged sixty-eight. Mr. Swan is a member of the Universalist Church, as was his wife. Five children were born to Daniel H. Swan and wife, three sons and two daughters, four of whom are now living: Hugh, of Fairmount, Nebr.; John A.; Ella, wife of George Pfrimmer, of Oklahoma; and Dudley H., of Francisco, Indiana.

John A. Swan was reared in Harrison county, near Corydon, on his father's farm, and attended the district schools for his primary education. Later he was graduated from the Central Normal School at Danville, after which he taught school for ten years, proving himself an efficient and popular instructor. At the expiration of that period, Mr. Swan embarked in the printing and publishing business, for which he always had an inclination, first buying an office at Princeton, Ind., where he published the Princeton Democrat for one year. Then he sold this paper and bought the Pulaski County Democrat, at Waynesville, Mo., which he published for four years. This paper he also sold, and in February, 1900, he purchased the Era, conducting it as an independent weekly, in addition having an excellent job printing trade, and making a success of his undertaking, his paper being one of the best of its kind in this section of the county.

Mr. Swan was married to Miss Carrie Hotte, daughter of Conrad F. and Nancy Hotte. Three children were born of this marriage: Kenneth, Wilsie and Brenda. Mr. and Mrs. Swan are members of the Presbyterian Church and now very popular among the leading people of Greenwood. In politics he is a Democrat, and has always taken an interest in the operations of his party in both local and national affairs.

DUDLEY PEEK is engaged in the furniture and undertaking business at Franklin, Johnson county, Indiana.

HENRY N. RIDPATH, M. D., a prominent member of the medical fraternity of Indianapolis, belongs to an early settled Indiana family, and was born in Putnam county, Ind., in 1858, son of Abraham and Sally (Matthews) Ridpath, natives of Virginia.

Abraham Ridpath was reared a farmer, and the cultivation of the soil was his life occupation. The wife and mother died when Henry N., the youngest of seven children, was but eighteen months old. The death of the father occurred in 1876. The other six children were: (1) John Clark, a noted historian and one of Indiana's most famous citizens, was born in Putnam county, and was educated at what was then Asbury University, now Depauw. His home was in Greene county, where nearly all his literary work was done. His death occurred in New York City, where he had gone to attend to the publication of an important work in July, 1900. He was not only an interesting and popular historian, but was a scholar of liberal attainments in science and literature. As a citizen he was highly esteemed, and his death was greatly deplored. (2) Gillum died at Evanston, Illinois, in 1882, where he was engaged in educational work. (3) Anna married Prof. T. J. Bassett. (4) Albert E. lives in Indianapolis. (5) Hiram C. resides in Putnam county. (6) Miss Martha J. is next in the order of birth. Abraham Ridpath married a second time, and by this union had two children: Emma and Elma.

Dr. Henry N. Ridpath received his primary education at the public schools and was a student for six years at Asbury University, graduating in the full classical course with the class of 1881. After his graduation he taught school for a year, and in 1882 became a student at the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons, from which he was graduated in 1884. For a year and a half he served as hospital interne, and since that time has been successfully engaged in the practice of the healing art. In 1889 he held the position of deputy coroner, and for fifteen months was the physician at the Marion county jail. At the end of that period he resigned to accept the office of secretary of the county board of health, a position he still holds. The Doctor is a gentleman of liberal attainments in both science and literature. He belongs to the Marion County Medical Society, and to the Medical Society of Indiana.

Dr. Ridpath was married in June, 1886, to Miss Callie S. Tribbey. To this union have come two children: Raymond C. and Carol M. In politics the Doctor is an ardent Republican, and as a citizen is enterprising and progressive.

REV. WARREN B. DUNHAM, former pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Greenwood, Ind., and now of the First Presbyterian Church, Hillsboro, Ohio, a clergyman of scholarly attainments and winning personality, was born Feb. 4, 1863, in the village of Liberty Corner, Somerset county, N. J., son of David H. and Ellen Ann (Van Deripe) Dunham, both of whom were born in New Jersey.

The Rev. Mr. Dunham comes of combined English and Dutch ancestry, his paternal grandfather, Benyew Dunham, being of the former, while on the maternal side all the family belonged to old Holland stock. Both grandfathers were born, however, in the State of New Jersey, where Mr. Dunham followed the business of a wheelwright, reared a family of three sons and five daughters, and died in his eighty-ninth year. The founder of the Dunham family in America, was Deacon John Dunham, who came from England and settled in Massachusetts, during the latter part of the 17th century. From him descended two branches, one of which settled in New York and the other in New Jersey, the former engaging principally in mercantile pursuits, the latter in agricultural. The maternal grandfather died on his farm in New Jersey, aged about fifty years, leaving one son and seven daughters.

David H. Dunham, the father of Rev. Mr. Dunham, removed to Indiana in 1879, locating in Center township, Benton county. Both he and wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he served as an elder for twenty-five years. Seven children, two sons and five daughters, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dunham, the survivors being: Rev. Warren B., of Hillsboro, Ohio; Jennie A., wife of Charles C. White, of Chicago, Ill.; and Miss Elizabeth V., of Indianapolis.

Until he was sixteen years of age, Rev. Warren B. Dunham remained in his native State, and there acquired his primary education. In 1879 he accompanied his parents to Indiana, and lived on the farm for two years. The two succeeding years were spent in Missouri, and upon his return to Indiana, he began his preparations for a collegiate course in Wabash College. Later he entered Princeton University, from which he graduated in 1890, and then attended the great seminary of his church, at Princeton, and graduated from that noted institution, in 1893, a school of theology which has sent out into the world many of the most distinguished leaders of religious thought. Mr. Dunham became associate pastor of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, at Indianapolis, and was connected with that charge until in September, 1899, when he went to Greenwood Presbyterian Church, of which he was the beloved and useful pastor for several years. He is now in charge of the First Presbyterian Church at Hillsboro, Ohio.

On Oct. 19, 1892, Rev. Mr. Dunham was married to Miss Martha Lee Harman, daughter of Jacob M. and Rachel A. (Bond) Harman, who were natives of Virginia. In 1876 they located in Benton county and settled at Oxford, which is their present home. Mr. Harman has retired from activity as a farmer, being a man of ample means. His father, John Harman, lived and died in Virginia, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. The family is of German descent. Other members of the family settled in different parts of the State of Indiana, a brother of John Harman at one time locating in Warren county, when it was still the home of the Indians, and there became possessed of large tracts of land, and also owned land in Benton county and in Illinois. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Dunham was Abner Bond, a Quaker, a farmer by occupation, and a native of Virginia, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. Harman had a family consisting of two sons and three daughters, the survivors being: Mrs. Dunham; and William, who is a banker in Oxford, Indiana.

Rev. Mr. Dunham and wife have two sons, David H. and Harman W. In his political sentiment, Rev. Mr. Dunham is independent. His religious duties and spiritual care over a large congregation leave him but little time to engage in outside matters, but his fellow-citizens know that they may always count on his support in enterprises which promise to elevate the tone of society or to be of lasting benefit to the community.

OTTO T. CHAMBERS, proprietor of a prosperous confectionery and cigar business in Mooresville, Ind., was born March 23, 1885, in Morgan county, Ind., son of Baxter K. and Sylvia (Hadley) Chambers. He is a grandson in the maternal line of Thomas Hadley.

Baxter K. Chambers, a native of North Carolina, comes of pioneer and honored stock in that State. He received his education there, after which he came to Indiana and settled on a farm in Morgan county, which he purchased, where he raised stock and grain. Mr. Chambers was married three times, and the mother of Otto T. was his third wife. They became the parents of three children: Nellie, Mrs. Arthur White, of Hendricks county; Hattie, Mrs. Clayton Hadley, of Morgan county; and Otto T. The father was a member of the Society of Friends, and was highly regarded as a representative citizen of Mooresville. In politics he was a Republican. He passed away when his son Otto was but four years old.

Otto T. Chambers was born in Morgan county and received his education in the Mooresville schools. Meanwhile he helped on the farm, and after leaving school he served two years in the capacity of engineer at the Electric Light Plant in Mooresville. When twenty-one years of age he was possessed with an ambition to be independent, and tastefully furnishing a store started in business for himself in the confectionery and cigar line. After a short duration in this he sold out, and buying out his sisters' interest in the old farm, which the children had inherited at the mother's death, he commenced farming, dealing in stock and raising grain. After devoting two years of untiring attention to this farm, bringing everything up to date, and putting the place in a high state of cultivation, he obtained the services of a trustworthy manager, and leaving the farm in his hands returned to Mooresville. He bought back the cigar and confectionery stand, and his qualities as a manager are demonstrated by the large patronage that he enjoys to-day. His success is due in no small measure to his ever ready smile, which is bestowed on all alike. Mr. Chambers has recently bought the Skating Rink at Mooresville, and this and his cigar and confectionery business do not prevent him from giving proper attention to his farm.

Mr. Chambers is a young man of good character and a respected citizen. He is a member of the Society of Friends, and in fraternal circles belongs to Tribe No. 327, I. O. R. M., and Lodge No. 89, K. of P. In politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM W. HEROD, for over thirty years a prominent member of the Indianapolis Bar and until his death senior member of the law firm of Herod & Herod, was a man of influence in his profession and in the moral and intellectual progress of the city throughout his long residence there. He was a native of Columbus, Ind., born Feb. 8, 1835, son of William and Cassandra (Wingate) Herod.

William Herod, his paternal grandfather, was born in Virginia, of an agricultural family that owned large estates. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. In the very early days he came as a pioneer to Bartholomew county, Ind., where the balance of his life was spent. Mr. Herod's maternal grandfather was John Wingate, who served as brigadier-general under Gen. William Henry Harrison. He moved from Hamilton, Ohio, to Kentucky and Missouri, but his death occurred at Hamilton, when he was about eighty-five years old. By his second marriage General Wingate had five children; the one daughter of his first marriage became the wife of William Herod and the mother of William W. Herod.

William Herod (2) was born in Bourbon county, Ky. In 1824 he settled at Columbus, Ind., where he engaged in the practice of law until his death, in 1871, interrupted only by his absence in the performance of public duties. He became very prominent in politics and filled a number of important offices, in the thirties serving three terms in Congress. Subsequently he was a member of both bodies of the State Legislature. The last public position he held was that of clerk of the court of Bartholomew county. He lived to the age of seventy-one years, and throughout life retained the vigor of intellect which made him one of the forceful characters of his day in Indiana. He married Cassandra Wingate, who was born at Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio, and died in 1864, aged fifty-four years. They had a family of five children.

William W. Herod was reared at Columbus, Ind., and attended the public schools during his boyhood. He then entered upon the study of law with his father, under whose able instruction he was thoroughly trained for his life work. Graduating from the law department of the University of Louisville, Ky., he was admitted to the Bar in 1861, and upon his return to Columbus opened an office for general practice, in which he continued at that point until 1875. At that time, searching for a wider field, he came to Indianapolis, where he made a reputation which stamped him as a worthy successor to his father. From 1887 until his death, in September, 1906, he had as his partner his son William P. Herod, and the firm was considered one of the strongest in the city.

On June 20, 1861, Mr. Herod was married to Miss Susan C. Rogers, daughter of Bernard F. and Mary A. (Coons) Rogers, and to them were born two sons and two daughters: William P., Elizabeth, Joseph R. and Lucy. The eldest son graduated from Yale College, was later admitted to the Bar and became the father's partner in 1887. He married Mary Beaty Applegate, and they have three children. Elizabeth married Frank M. Baldwin, of Indianapolis, and Lucy married Hiram G. Keays, of Logan county, Ill. Joseph R. Herod graduated at Yale College in the class of 1891. From 1892 until his resignation of the office, in the summer of 1900, he was first secretary of the United States Legation at Tokio, Japan. He is married to Annette Verner Atchison, of Detroit.

In political sentiment Mr. Herod was a staunch Republican, and at various times he was chosen as the standard-bearer of his party for its most important offices, from 1879 until 1881 serving as a member of the State Legislature. Mr. Herod was ever a useful citizen, ready to lend his influence in the direction of public improvement and contributing liberally to enterprises of a charitable nature. His strong mind, high integrity and broad spirit made him a leading factor in the movements designed to promote the general welfare, and his unselfish devotion to such causes entitled him to a place in the vanguard of the most progressive citizens of Indianapolis.

GENERAL LEW WALLACE, distinguished soldier, tactician and author, was born in Brookville, Franklin county, Ind. His father, Gov. David Wallace, was a graduate of West Point. His mother was a sister of the late Judge Charles Test, and daughter of Hon. John Test, a distinguished citizen of Salem, N. J., where he was born. He was a man of great ability, a Hicksite Quaker, and he and another Hicksite Quaker, Butler, were pioneers of Brookville, Franklin county, Ind., in 1805. John Test was regarded as the best lawyer and scholar in the State, and he was foremost in progress in every line. He brought the first carding machinery to Franklin county, and was instrumental in introducing other improvements for the benefit of the community. He was admitted to practice in 1811, and was the first Congressman from Indiana. Scarcely a vestige remains of the old Test mansion, the home of a family which furnished as much good brain and ability to the making of the early history of Indiana as any other family of the State.

John Test was the grandson of John Test, who came over in the good ship "Welcome" with William Penn, and whom Penn regarded as the bravest and best man in his colony, having him appointed high sheriff.

Lew Wallace inherited his best talent from the Test side. His grandfather, Andrew Wallace, was from Fayette county, Pa., moving to Cincinnati, Ohio, and thence to Brookville, where he was a man of influence and kept a hotel.

General Lew Wallace was a great man, a student of history, a judge of men and things. As an author, his books "The Fair God," "Ben Hur" and "The Prince of India" have won a place for him in the Hall of Fame of our nation. Few people can understand the great amount of study, research and careful analysis of historical facts required for the production of these great historical novels. The late Bishop Newman, LL. D., of the M. E. Church, U. S. A., paid Lew Wallace a great compliment when he said that General Wallace, in his wonderful description of the crucifixion of our Saviour, gave the impression that he must have been an eye-witness. In writing his "The Fair God" he was obliged to learn the Spanish and Mexican languages, and his "Prince of India" was by far the most difficult of all. General Wallace was loud in his praise of the late Gen. John Coburn, who encouraged him in his earlier works, and he considered General Coburn one of the best men that ever lived.

ISAAC WILSON, a Revolutionary soldier who lies buried beside his second wife at No. 612 Maxwell street, Indianapolis, was a most remarkable man. He served throughout the Revolutionary war. The celebrated family to which he belonged emigrated from Pennsylvania to Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky. He himself went from North Carolina to Tennessee, then called the Watauga country, and was one of a gallant band of Scotch-Irish pioneers and patriots who signed the Watauga petition, asking North Carolina to extend her boundaries far enough to take in the Watauga country, they to stand or fall with North Carolina in the struggle for independence during the Revolutionary war. Isaac Wilson was a man of means and opposed to slavery. Accordingly he freed his slaves and moved to Franklin county, Ind., then the Northwest Territory, about 1800. We find he was appointed captain of militia in 1803, and major in 1807. He built a block-house and fort there. Two of his daughters, Elizabeth, born in 1812, and Patsy, born in 1815, were born in this fort. Patsy married S. J. Patterson, of Indianapolis, in 1831, when she was but sixteen years old. Elizabeth married Isaac Harris, from Plainfield, New Jersey.

Isaac Wilson was married first to Katy Griner, and they had a large family. The oldest son, William, was a pioneer of Napoleon, Ripley county, Ind., where he had a mill. In 1823 he moved to Morgan county, Ind., where he erected the first gristmill on Indian creek. He was a very remarkable man, of powerful physique and great strength. He had sons: Isaac, who did not marry; William, who was the first husband of the late Mrs. Amos Thornberg, of Martinsville; and a daughter who married Huitt Nutter, they being the parents of Isaac Nutter, of Martinsville. Katy (Griner) Wilson, wife of Isaac, died and her husband moved to Jefferson county, Ky., where he soon after married an accomplished young lady several years his junior, Miss Sarah Neal, of Lexington, daughter of Jno. Neal, a Revolutionary soldier, who at one time was a member of Washington's body-guard. There were two sons by the second marriage of Isaac Wilson, Lorenzo and Neal Dow Wilson.

Isaac Wilson's will, recorded in 1823, the year he died, is the first will recorded in Marion county. From Franklin county he moved to the twelve-mile purchase or Fayette county, Ind., and in 1820 came to Indianapolis and built the first log cabin on the Donation, at the northeast corner of the State-house square, Indianapolis. He built the first gristmill, not far from No. 612 Maxwell street, on Fall creek. He entered several tracts of valuable land in and near what is now Indianapolis, and died in 1823, honored, respected and beloved for his generosity to the pioneers. His daughter, Patsy (Wilson) Patterson, was honored by the Caroline Scott Chapter, D. A. R., with the presentation of a gold spoon just prior to her death, for being a real daughter of the Revolution.

JAMES BLAKE, one of the oldest and most useful citizens in Indianapolis, was born in York (now Adams) county, Pa., March 3, 1791, and died at his residence in Indianapolis, Nov. 26, 1870. His father came from Ireland in 1774, was among the earlier settlers of York county, and lived to the age of ninety-nine years. He was a volunteer in the war of 1812. In November 1818, he set out for the West on horseback, going as far as St. Louis, and returned. On the 25th of July he came to Indianapolis. With James M. Ray and

Nicholas McCarty, he built the first steam mill in Indianapolis, and there was the pioneer in the manufacturing industry which is now so vital an element in the city's prosperity. As a surveyor he assisted in laying out and platting the city. He was selected commissioner to receive plans and proposals for the old State-house. He was the first to urge upon the State Legislature the importance of establishing a hospital for the insane, the location of which he selected. He was an early friend, and was a member of the first board of directors, of the Madison & Indianapolis railroad, and was also a director of the Lafayette & Indianapolis railroad. He was trustee of Hanover College, of Indiana, and of the Miami University, of Oxford, Ohio, and at his death was the Indiana commissioner for the building of the Gettysburg monument. For thirty-five years he was president of the Indianapolis Benevolent Society. In 1847 Mr. Blake was a most liberal contributor to the relief of starving Ireland, and, indeed, no worthy appeals of such nature were ever made to him in vain. His wide sympathies are shown in the various interests he sustained. He was a prime mover in the organization of the Indiana branch of the American Colonization Society. He was the first captain of the first militia company organized in Indianapolis, and held the same rank in the first fire company. He also started the first wholesale dry-goods house in Indianapolis. On all public occasions Mr. Blake was looked to as the leader and manager of affairs. In the temperance movement he was a leader, as in everything else, and his adhesion to the Democracy was first broken by its conflict with his firmer support of the cause of temperance.

Mr. Blake married Miss Eliza Sproule, of Baltimore, in March, 1831, and they had four children. His granddaughter, Mrs. John A. Kurtz, of Woodruff Place, Indianapolis, wife of a prominent citizen of Indianapolis, has some of the furniture of James Blake, and also some chairs which belonged to Mrs. James Blake's mother.

CALVIN FLETCHER was born Feb. 4, 1798, in Ludlow, Vt., which is located in the county of Windsor, on the eastern slope of the Green mountains, midway between Rutland and Bellows Falls.

Mr. Fletcher was a descendant of Robert Fletcher, who was a native of the north of England, and settled in Concord, Mass., in 1630, dying there at the age of eighty-five years, April 3, 1677. He left four sons, Francis, Luke, William and Samuel.

Jesse Fletcher, father of Calvin, was a son of Timothy Fletcher, of Westford, Mass., and was born in that town Nov. 9, 1763. He was preparing for college under his elder brother, Rev. Elijah Fletcher, of Hopkinton, N. H., when the troubles of the Revolution arrested his progress. He joined the Patriot army and served in two campaigns of six or eight months each, toward the close of the war. Jesse's brother Elijah was the pastor of the church in Hopkinton from Jan. 23, 1773, until his death, April 8, 1786. The second daughter of Elijah Fletcher was Grace, a most attractive and accomplished person, who became the first wife of the great American statesman and orator, Daniel Webster. Col. Fletcher Webster (who fell at the head of his regiment in the second battle of Bull Run, Aug. 30, 1862) received at his christening the family name of his mother. Calvin Fletcher and Elijah's eldest son, Rev. J. C. Fletcher, more than once talked with Daniel Webster concerning this cherished first wife (Grace). The daughter of Grace's brother Timothy became the wife of Dr. Brown-Sequard, the famous specialist of Paris, France.

Jesse Fletcher married in 1781, when about eighteen years old, Lucy Keyes, of Westford, who was born Nov. 15, 1765. They emigrated from Westford to Ludlow, Vt., about the year 1783, and were among the first settlers of the place. Jesse lived there until his death, in February, 1831. He was first town clerk of Ludlow, was a justice of the peace, and second representative to the General Court from Ludlow. In that town all his fifteen children, except the eldest one, were born. His widow died in 1846.

Calvin Fletcher was the eleventh in his parents' family, most of whom lived to maturity. Under the teachings of an excellent father and mother, of more than ordinary ability, he early learned those habits of self-reliance and those principles of uprightness which uniformly characterized him in after life, while performing all the duties exacted from a boy on a New England farm in those early days. He soon manifested a strong desire for a classical education, which was stimulated both by his mother and the success of his brother Elijah, who had, a few years before, completed his college course at Dartmouth. Through his own exertions Calvin earned money enough to pay the expenses of a brief course of instruction at the academies of Randolph and Royalton, in Vermont, and Westford, Mass. His classical studies were interrupted by pecuniary difficulties at home. His father became financially embarrassed; the older sons and daughter had already gone out into the world and Calvin obtained permission from his father to go also. He determined to be a sailor, and in April, 1817, he went to Boston and tried to obtain a berth on board an East Indianman. He failed to get an engagement as a sailor before the mast, and therefore turned his face toward the country west of the Alleghanies. He worked his way, mostly on foot, to Pennsylvania. His intelligence attracted the attention of a gentleman named Foote, by whom he was encouraged to travel further westward, to the State of Ohio, where he settled in Urbana. In the fall of 1817 he was employed in the law office of the Hon. James Cooley. In 1819 he went to Richmond, Va., and was licensed to practice by the Supreme court of the Old Dominion. He returned to Urbana and became a law partner of Mr. Cooley in 1820. Coming to Indianapolis in 1825, when there were only a few cabins on the site of the present beautiful city, he was appointed State's attorney for the Fifth Judicial Circuit that same year, for one year, and elected to the State Senate in which he served seven years, when he resigned and gave up official life for a while. In 1834 he was appointed by the Legislature one of four to organize a State bank, and to act as sinking fund commissioners for seven years. From 1843 to 1859 he acted as president of the branch of the State Bank at Indianapolis, until the charter expired. In 1860 he became corresponding member of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society.

Mr. Fletcher was twice married. His first wife, Sarah Hill, was born near Maysville, Ky., in 1801, but her father, Joseph Hill, moved to Urbana, Ohio, when she was very young. This marriage, which took place in 1821, was a happy one in every respect. Mr. Fletcher died May 26, 1866.

HENRY JAMESON, M. D., whose professional standing in Indianapolis is among the very best, has his office at No. 212 Newton Claypool building. He was born in Wayne township, Marion county, Ind., son of Alexander and Lydia (Thompson) Jameson, both of whom were born in Indiana, the father being a native of Jefferson county, where he first saw the light in 1814.

Alexander Jameson was reared to farming in Jefferson county, Ind., until he attained maturity, when he became a school teacher, teaching one of the first schools in Indianapolis. After spending some years as a pedagogue he removed to Wayne township, Marion county, where he bought a farm, on which he died Jan. 6, 1886, at the age of seventy-one years. His widow survived until Sept. 27, 1892, when she passed away at the age of sixty-four years. They were members of the Christian (Disciples) Church. They had three sons and three daughters, and four of their children are now living: Irene V., who is the wife of Leonidas Webb, of Indianapolis; Dr. Henry; Thomas, of Indianapolis; and Alexander, of Irvington. For years Alexander Jameson was a justice of the peace, and his neighbors for many miles around were wont to submit to his decisions and arbitration of all kinds of questions. He was one of the commissioners who built the present court-house in Indianapolis.

Thomas Jameson, the father of Alexander, was born in Franklin county, Va., in 1783. In 1795 he accompanied his parents to Kentucky, and in 1810 the family came into Indiana to escape the blight of slavery, settling near Madison, in Jefferson county, where they were engaged as farming people. There Thomas Jameson died in June, 1843, at the age of sixty years. His was a numerous family. Thomas Jameson was the son of Thomas and grandson of John, who came from Scotland to America in a very early day and made his home near York, Pa. He was the first progenitor in America of that branch of the Jameson family whose fortunes form the theme of this article.

John Thompson, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Jameson, followed the occupation of a carpenter. His father, Adam Thompson, was of Scotch-Irish descent, and settled in Indiana in 1821, coming from Pennsylvania. He lived on what was known as the John Mars farm, but moved to Pittsboro, in Hendricks county, where he followed farming during his remaining active years, and where he died at the age of ninety-eight. His wife passed away at the age of ninety-seven, the two dying within a month of each other. Their son, John, the grandfather of Dr. Jameson, was married in Indianapolis, after which he moved to Lagro, where they were building the Wabash & Erie canal, on which he secured a contract. About 1835 he returned to Indianapolis and became a contractor and builder, remaining here until about 1848, when he removed to Lafayette. There he died in 1870, at the age of seventy years. In his family were three children. In 1832 he joined the "Bloody Three Hundred" who went out to catch Black Hawk.

Henry Jameson was reared on the farm in Wayne township, Marion county, and in his boyhood attended the district school. In 1869 he graduated from the Northwestern Christian University, now known as Butler College, at Irvington, Ind., and at once entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, from which institution he was graduated in 1871. After serving a year as interne in the Randall Island Hospital he came to Indianapolis and opened an office of his own. Here he has remained to the present time, reaping a rich reward for his industry, ability and thorough mastery of medical science.

Dr. Jameson was married Nov. 25, 1875, to Miss Gertrude, daughter of Harvey Gatch and Mary (Newman) Carey, and they occupy a fine home at No. 962 North Pennsylvania street. They have two children, Eunice and Augusta, both of whom are living at home. Dr. Jameson belongs to the Christian Church, while his wife is a Methodist. He is a Scottish Rite Mason, of the thirty-second degree, and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is connected with the various important medical organizations of the day, such as the Marion County and Indiana State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association and the Mississippi Valley Medical Association.

Throughout his professional career Dr. Jameson has held important positions as instructor in medical science. For some years he was Demonstrator of Chemistry in the Indiana Medical College, and when the College of Physicians and Surgeons was organized, in 1876, he took the Chair of Chemistry. Two years later he was made Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics. When this institution was consolidated with the Medical College of Indiana he was made Professor of Chemistry in the New School. In 1889 he was chosen to fill the Chair of Practice of Medicine and Clinical Medicine. He was also made Lecturer on Obstetrics and Children's Diseases, and since 1899 has been Dean of the Faculty. While filling the Chair of Chemistry he devised an instrument for showing the phenomenon of the total reflection of light, and his apparatus was adopted by the Stevens Institute of Technology, as well as by other scientific schools. Widely known for his thorough understanding and complete mastery of the subject of Medical Jurisprudence, his services as an expert are in much demand. Deeply devoted to the microscope, his researches have greatly helped in the development of that important branch of medical study. He was one of the organizers of the American Society of Microscopists.

Dr. Jameson is a member of the consulting staff of the St. Vincent, Deaconess and City hospitals, and of the Dispensary of the City of Indianapolis. Under Governor Mount he served as president of the State Board of Health, and was Surgeon-General of the State on the staff of Governor Durbin. In politics the Doctor is a Republican.

This is but a brief review of an exceedingly active and useful life, and it pays only a just and merited tribute to Dr. Jameson's professional ability, his manly character, his upright spirit and his many excellencies as a man and a citizen.

WILLIAM J. FICKINGER, paying teller of the Indiana National Bank, of Indianapolis, was born in Indianapolis Nov. 16, 1877, son of David H. and Mina (Schomberg) Fickinger. Through his father, who was born in Dauphin county, Pa., Mr. Fickinger is descended from the old Swiss Mennonite stock, which, fleeing from persecution in the old world, took refuge in the section colonized by William Penn and has ever since been identified with the prosperity of Pennsylvania, its representatives upholding the traditions of the early generations for industry, integrity, religious zeal, love of liberty and loyalty to the country which sheltered them in the troublous times of long ago. The Fickingers, coming to what is now Dauphin county, Pa., nearly two hundred years ago, have ever since been identified with that part of the State. Through his mother, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Brinkman) Schomberg, William J. Fickinger is a grandson of one of the early pioneers of Indianapolis, William Schomberg having moved with his family to this city in its early days. Years ago he was engaged as a shoe merchant on Washington street, just east of the courthouse, and he was the friend and associate of such men as Daniel Yandes and Robert S. McKee, both of whom were interested in similar lines of business, Mr. Yandes being the first tanner of the city and Mr. McKee a man of high standing in the shoe business.

Four children were born to David H. and Mina (Schomberg) Fickinger: William J., Stephen H., Harry (deceased) and Estella. The mother was a member of the First Evangelical Church of Indianapolis.

William J. Fickinger received his education in the Indianapolis public schools, receiving his higher education in what is now the Shortridge high school. In 1896 he entered the Indiana National Bank as clerk, later becoming bookkeeper, and in 1908 being advanced to his present position, that of paying teller.

Fraternally he is a thirty-second-degree Scottish Rite Mason. He is a member of the Central Avenue M. E. Church.

W. A. DORMAN, M. D., has his office and medical dispensary in the Stanley Block, Lebanon, Boone county, Indiana.

THOMAS J. HARRINGTON, passenger engineer on the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad, who for about twenty years served the same company as engineer on a freight train, has won the unlimited confidence of his employers. He was born in Janesville, Wis., Aug. 20, 1857, and comes of a highly capable family.

His paternal grandfather was a man of remarkable vitality and much ability, and made his home in Ireland, where he died at the advanced age of one hundred and five years. He, as well as all his family for generations, belonged to the Catholic Church. He was the father of three children: Patrick, mentioned below; Thomas, a grocer at Columbus, Ohio; and Bridget, who resides at Denver, Colorado.

Patrick Harrington, father of Thomas J., possessed the nerve and shrewd business judgment characteristic of his race. Born in Ireland, he there passed his early years, and at the age of eighteen came to the United States, eventually settling in Wisconsin. He worked on the construction of railroads in that section of the country, and commanded very good wages. Some time after his arrival in America he married Margaret Linch, who was born in Ireland, daughter of a worthy couple, who passed their entire lives in that country. Her brother, David Linch, came to the United States, and was here engaged as railroad hostler, having charge of a large number of engines; he died at Crestline, Ohio. To Patrick Harrington and wife were born nine children: Miss Mary; Thomas J.; Bridget, who died young; Ella, deceased; Dan, a fireman on the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad, who was killed with his engineer, in a wreck caused by a washed-out bridge May 18, 1883; Maggie, who married a Mr. Sweeny, who is engaged in the Big Four Freight House, at Indianapolis; Julia, who married a Mr. Sullivan, employed in Kingan's Slaughter House; Toda, wife of a Mr. Griffith, who is employed by the Terre Haute Brewing Company; and John, a fireman on the Vandalia Freight Line.

After his marriage Patrick Harrington continued his railroad work as usual, making his residence in Wisconsin for some years. Later he moved to Ohio, and soon afterward began firing an engine. After a while, however, having received an injury in a wreck, he began track laying, which he followed as a regular business throughout the rest of his active life. About 1870, while still engaged in this line of work, he took up his residence in Indianapolis, and entered the employ of the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad Company, continuing with this company until the completion of its line of railroad. He later worked on several different lines, making an unqualified success of his business. Hard work eventually made inroads upon his health, and after two years affliction with rheumatism, he died in May, 1897, at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. Harrington was a man of more than average size, physically strong, and possessed of a large capacity for work. In the development of the great railroad system of the West he performed no insignificant part. Honesty, straightforwardness of character, and determination were among his salient traits.

Thomas J. Harrington passed his early years in Janesville, Wis., where he attended school, and being of a studious disposition became well-grounded in the rudiments. In 1870, when about fourteen years old, he moved with his parents to Indianapolis, and soon afterward secured a position as water boy on the old Bee Line Railroad, for one season, making runs to Piqua, Ohio, and the following year on a construction train on the Indianapolis & St. Louis Road. He then passed a varied career for a few years, working first at heating rivets at Sinker & Davis's factory, later as a hand in a copper-smith's shop, and finally at cleaning works in a Singer Sewing Machine factory—acquiring a large fund of valuable experience. He next became yard master for Kingan's Pork House, where he superintended the handling and placing of cars for several years, and in 1879 he began firing an engine at the yards of the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad. After a year and a half he began firing an engine on a freight train, and in 1883 he was advanced to engineer on the same train, making his run to Mattoon, Ill., and in this position he remained for fully nineteen years. At the end of that time, in April, 1902, he was promoted to engineer of a passenger train, on the same line—a position he is still filling. During his long period of service he has shown himself at all times a thoroughly trustworthy and competent workman, and he has been remarkably free from accidents. A few mishaps, inexpensive to the company, and resulting in a few slight injuries to himself, it is true, have occurred, but from no fault of his. He has amassed some property, and owns a pleasant two-story residence, of modern architecture, which he erected at No. 1118 North Arsenal street, Indianapolis, in 1890. At the present time he is making his headquarters in Mattoon, Illinois.

In 1884 Mr. Harrington married Miss Kate Hamilton, who was born in Pennsylvania, in 1858, daughter of George Hamilton, of that State, a German by descent. Mr. and Mrs. Harrington have had no children. Mr. Harrington has mainly devoted his energies to his work, but is, however, well known in Indianapolis, and as a member of the B. of L. E. and the K. P. figures prominently in fraternal circles. In politics he affiliates with the Democrats.

DAVID F. HAVENS, of Cicero, Hamilton county, Ind., served in the Civil war as a private in Company B, 7th Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

ISAAC W. NUTTER. One of the old and highly regarded residents of Morgan county, Ind., is found in Isaac W. Nutter, who has been identified with the growth and development of Martinsville and vicinity all of his life. He was born Dec. 2, 1839, in Washington township, one mile west of the city on the old homestead farm of his father, son of Huitt and Katherine (Wilson) Nutter, the former of whom was born in Georgetown, Ky., and the latter in White-water, Indiana.

Huitt Nutter was a son of a Virginian who moved to Kentucky and passed the rest of his life there. Huitt came early from Kentucky to Warrick county, Ind., and later became one of the first settlers in Morgan county, entering land one mile south of Martinsville, in Washington township, in August, 1823. He lived there for a number of years, and then moved to Martinsville and engaged in the hotel business. Later he returned to the country, where he engaged in farming until his decease in 1848. He was twice married. His first wife was Susan Talbott, who became the mother of twelve children, all of whom are deceased. She died in Morgan county, and he married (second) Katherine Wilson, who bore him two children: Isaac W.; and Robert, a resident of Nelson, Nebr. Mrs. Nutter's grandfather, Isaac Wilson—for whom Isaac W. Nutter was named—was a soldier of the Revolution, serving throughout that struggle. He was born in either Pennsylvania or North Carolina, and was a pioneer in what later became the State of Tennessee. He and other brave pioneers had made a settlement in the Watauga country (now Tennessee), prior to the war of the Revolution, and he signed the celebrated "Watauga Petition," petitioning the State of North Carolina to extend its borders far enough to take in the Watauga country, they to stand or fall by the result of the war. Isaac Wilson married Miss Katy Griner, possibly in North Carolina, and they had several sons and daughters. [See Isaac Wilson's will in Book A, Indpls., which mentions all his children.] His first wife died, and Isaac Wilson moved with his family to Kentucky, where he married Miss Sarah Neal, daughter of John Neal, a member of George Washington's body-guard. Isaac Wilson and his second wife had two sons and two daughters. One daughter, Patsy, married S. J. Patterson of Indianapolis; she was a real Daughter of the Revolution, and was the mother of Mrs. Cortland Van Camp, of Indianapolis. Isaac Wilson was the first miller in Indianapolis, built the first cabin on the site of the present State Capitol; and he was a great benefactor to the pioneers during the years 1820-21-22-23. When he died he was buried beside his second wife at No. 612 Maxwell street, Indianapolis. William Wilson ("Ripley Bill"), son of Isaac and father of Katherine (Wilson) Nutter, was a pioneer miller on Indiana creek. He came to Martinsville among the very early settlers and lived to a good old age, being occupied as a farmer and miller all his life. He was the father of four children, William, Isaac, Katherine (Mrs. Nutter) and Margaret (Mrs. John Parker). Mrs. Huitt Nutter survived her husband six years. In religious belief she was a Presbyterian, while he was a Methodist.

Isaac W. Nutter was reared in Washington township and spent all his early years on the farm. His first schooling was gained in the neighborhood of his home. After the death of his parents he lived with his brother, John, and started out in life for himself by renting one of his brother's farms. Later he purchased 120 acres which he improved, and some fifteen years ago sold to advantage, removing then to Martinsville. After locating in the city he engaged in the hotel business, in connection with operating a sanitarium, and for two years was connected with the Nutter-Major Sanitarium.

On Sept. 17, 1861, Mr. Nutter married Emily Jane Hendricks, born Aug. 20, 1845, on her father's farm, two miles north of Martinsville, daughter of Thompson and Mary Jane (Evans) Hendricks. Four children were born to this union, namely: (1) Huitt, who was engaged in the dry goods business in Martinsville, is now traveling for Kepp Brothers, dealers in notions in Indianapolis. He married Callie Cunningham, and they have one son, Noyelles. (2) Carl, who is cashier of the First National Bank, married Blanche Parks, and they have one son, Parks. (3) Mary Josephine, who married W. W. Culmer, of Martinsville, Ind., has three children, Bruce, Elizabeth Jane and Genevieve. (4) John died at the age of eleven months. Both Mr. Nutter and his wife are members of the Christian Church. His fraternal connection is with the Masons, he belonging to the Martinsville Lodge, No. 74, and the Chapter, No. 71. In his politics he is a Republican.

The Hendricks family, to which Mrs. Isaac W. Nutter belongs, is an old and prominent one in America. They were early pioneers from Pennsylvania to Virginia in an early day, and among the members were many influential people and large land holders, men of distinguished mental and moral worth. Thomas Hendricks, grandfather of Mrs. Nutter, was a native of Pennsylvania, and went from near Richmond, Va., to Nashville, Tenn. From there he and his wife, Mary (Pearry)

Hendricks, moved to Morgan county, Ind., at an early date, and entered land in Washington township, in 1829. Thompson Hendricks, father of Mrs. Nutter, was born in Nashville, Tenn., in 1814. He married Mary J. Evans, who was born at Maysville, Ky., in 1824, daughter of Carson and Eleanor (Mills) Evans. Thompson Hendricks was engaged in early manhood in building flatboats, which he used to transport goods and commodities of various houses down White river to the Wabash, the Ohio and the Mississippi, to New Orleans. He was a man of progressive ideas and operated a brick yard in connection with his other enterprises. He died Aug. 14, 1881, in his sixty-eighth year. For many years he was a valued member of the Christian Church.

GEORGE BYERS, in his lifetime a highly successful and popular grocer at Malott Park, Ind., was born in Lancaster county, Pa., Jan. 16, 1832, son of Michael and Susan (Martin) Byers.

Michael Byers, a farmer, was born in Pennsylvania, and there died in about the year 1835. His widow, who was also born in Pennsylvania, survived him until 1883, when she died at the age of seventy-two years. She was a Lutheran in her religious faith. They were the parents of two children: George; and Elizabeth, who is the wife of Samuel Styers, of Hamilton county, Ind. David Martin, the maternal grandfather of George Byers, was a native of Pennsylvania, and served in the war of 1812. He was the father of six children and died in his native State.

George Byers was born in Lancaster county, Pa., on a farm where he was reared. His was a common school education, and in his seventeenth year he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving a regular apprenticeship lasting three years, for which he received as compensation his board and twelve dollars a year. For five years he worked at his trade in Lancaster county, and for one year in Maryland. In 1856 he came West to Indianapolis, stopping there a short time, then going to Millersville, where he remained until 1874. That year he moved to Malott Park, which place was his home up to the time of his death. For several years he did contract work, was postmaster nineteen years and for over twenty years he conducted a very popular and successful grocery store.

Mr. Byers was married Nov. 28, 1860, to Miss Margaret Silvey, a daughter of Hillary and Patience (Williams) Silvey. To this union were born children: Dora, Eddie, Charley and Ella, who died in early childhood; Annie, who married Edward Dodd, a farmer of Malott Park, and has one child, Claude; Carrie, who married John Moore, a section boss on the Lake Erie and Western railroad, and has one child, George; and Maggie, who is now Mrs. Lewis. Mrs. Byers is a Methodist in her religious faith. Mr. Byers belonged to the Knights of Honor, and was a Democrat in politics. He owned a good home and business in Malott Park, where his widow now resides, and also owned twenty-two acres of ground in Washington township.

Mr. Byers was a soldier in the Civil war and served from the time of his enlistment, in 1864, in Company I, 79th Ind. V. I., to the close of the war, and though his term was not a long one he made a good record as a capable and gallant soldier.

REES R. WILLIAMS, who after more than half a century devoted to engineering is now living retired at his comfortable home, No. 901 South Illinois street, Indianapolis, is a native of Wales, born at Merthyr Tydvil, Dec. 21, 1829, son of Robert and Mary Williams, of that country.

Robert Williams was a civil engineer in the coal mining regions, but died when his son Rees was but a year old. After the death of her husband the widowed mother built and carried on a bakery, but death claimed her when her son was but twelve, and her mother then took charge of the bakery. She, too, passed away two years later.

Rees R. Williams was but fourteen when his grandmother died, and he then entered the home of his maternal uncle, but this did not prove satisfactory to him, and he went to board with the family that had rented the bakery, to which he was the legal heir. He decided to learn engineering, and began by engaging in repairing and doing outside work for the Plymouth Iron Works. Possessing a natural aptitude for mechanics he easily applied himself to his work, and in a comparatively short time became an expert engineer, a business that engaged his attention all his active days. The stories of fortunes to be gained in the New World inspired him with a desire to come to America, and in July, 1858, with his wife and child, he landed in New York. They soon after went to Philadelphia, and from there to Pittsburg, where his wife had relatives. After a short time there he went to Blair county, Pa., where he took charge of the weighing scales of the Johnstown Mining Company. Here he remained for over a year, and then went to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he was employed by the Henderson Company, of New York. This company failed, and he went to Atlanta, Ga., where he remained until the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861, when he came to Indianapolis. In this city he followed his trade, and was engaged as an engineer until his retirement in 1899.

Mr. Williams was married in January, 1857, to Miss Mary Jones, who died Aug. 21, 1899. They were the parents of but one child, Elizabeth, born Dec. 31, 1857, before the emigration to America. She is now Mrs. Berry, and has three children: George, May and Rees. Mr. Williams makes his home with his daughter.

In politics Mr. Williams has always been a Republican, casting his first Presidential vote for General Grant. He is a worthy member of the Presbyterian Church, in which faith his wife died. He has proved himself a patriotic and progressive citizen, and an upright, honorable man.

SAMUEL R. KISSEL resides in New Augusta, Pike township, Marion county, Indiana.

JOHN M. KILER. Few railroad engineers have given more thorough systematic study to their profession, or more careful execution of every duty pertaining to it, than this man of long tried experience, who has now been in the service of the I. B. & W. R. R., a part of the Big Four system, for well on to forty years. He was born at Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 25, 1842, son of George W. and Hester (Marshall) Kiler.

The paternal grandfather of John M. Kiler, was of good German stock. For many years of his life he made his residence in Maryland. Upon reaching manhood he married, and of this union there were four children, all of whom were born in Maryland: John, Sebastian, Daniel, and George W. After marriage Mr. Kiler settled in Maryland and there in the steady pursuit of business continued for many years. Eventually, however, impressed with the excellent business openings in the West, he with his family started out for Ohio, but unfortunately, he was soon taken ill, and died en route. The widow heroically continued the journey, settled upon a farm in Ohio and there carefully reared her children.

George W. Kiler, father of John M., learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed, and later was engaged very successfully in running boats on the Miami Canal. From the start he carried on a flourishing business, and he continued it throughout the rest of his active life, in all fully twenty years. During this period he lived for some time at Huntsville, Ohio, and there, in 1867, he died. During his young manhood Mr. Kiler married Hester Marshall, who was born in Ohio, daughter of John Marshall, a pioneer settler of Montgomery county, Ohio, who there cleared up a good farm for himself and family, where he passed his last days and died. He was a man of progressive ideas, and was a Universalist in religious sentiment. By his marriage there were six children: James, Jessie, Hester, Sarah (who married a Mr. Black), Betsey (who married William Morgan) and Nancy (who married J. McConnell). Of these Hester (Mrs. Kiler) died at Dayton, Ohio, in 1884, at an advanced age. Four children were born to her and Mr. Kiler: Caroline, who married D. Belden; William H., a salesman; Fanny, who married Mr. A. Beebe; and John M.

John M. Kiler passed much of his early life in Dayton, Ohio, and there attended school. At the age of fourteen he hired out as an apprentice in machine shops in Dayton, and there he continued until 1865, when he began firing an engine. Thoroughly competent, after six months he was promoted to engineer, making his run over the N. Y., Pa. & Dayton R. R. from Dayton to Gallion, Ohio. Here he remained for two years, and then in 1867 accepted a similar position on the Pan Handle R. R., making his run from Piqua, Ohio. On the outlook for a better opening, in 1869, he settled in Crawfordsville, Ind., where he served as engineer on a construction train, distributing iron and other supplies for the building of the I. B. & W. R. R. With the completion of this road and its consolidation with the Peoria branch he took a place as engineer of a passenger train making its run from Indianapolis to Peoria. The place proved in every respect a most desirable one, and he has since filled it most acceptably. The road during his service has undergone some changes—being now a part of the Big Four system—and engineering some advancements. He has, however, kept abreast of new movements in his line, and is thoroughly informed upon all matters pertaining to his profession. His only accidents have come through such contingencies as open switches, but no harm has come to passengers under his care. It was his misfortune to run over one unwary outsider at a crossing.

In 1876 Mr. Kiler married, at Champaign, Ill., Henrietta Arms, who was born at Rockville, Ind., Feb. 1, 1852. Of this union there have been three children: Nellie A., born Aug. 12, 1877; Albert B., born June 1, 1880, now a machinist in Indianapolis; and Hazel H., born April 30, 1882, at home. Mr. Kiler is a man of domestic tastes and passes his leisure moments in the enjoyment of his family at his pleasant residence in Indianapolis, which he purchased some years ago. His wife and daughters are highly esteemed members of the Episcopal Church. In politics he affiliates with the Democrats.

C. T. ARMS, father of Mrs. Kiler, at whose home he now resides, is one of the oldest living civil engineers, and he has won for himself a world-wide reputation. He comes of good old New England stock.

William Arms, the first American representative of this branch of the family, came to America from England, in 1640, and in 1648 purchased a large tract of land at what is now Deerfield, Franklin Co., Mass., where he erected a large fort as a protection from Indian depredations, which has since been occupied by four generations of the Arms family.

Aaron Arms, the next in this line of descent of whom we have record, married Lucy Tyler, daughter of a seafaring man of Massachusetts.

Christopher T. Arms, grandfather of Mrs. Kiler, was born in the old fort, in 1781, and here he made his residence for many years of his active life. For an occupation he followed civil engineering very successfully for many years of his active life. He married a Miss Stebbins, daughter of Joseph Stebbins, whose family figured prominently in the early New England wars, and had many representatives in the Revolutionary war.

C. T. Arms, son of Christopher T., was born at the old family fort, March 29, 1813. Availing himself of every opportunity of cultivating his studies, he laid the foundation of a solid education and early became very proficient in mathematics. Later under the supervision of his father, and as many as twenty noted civil engineers, he studied civil engineering, and in that profession he embarked upon life for himself. Real merit soon brought him to the front and he was first sent to South America, where he performed some skillful work in Peru and other countries. South Africa was his next territory, and here he spent nine months, making his travels during this period upon pack mules. After assisting in the construction of the Suez canal he did work in Siberia and Moscow, and other parts of Russia, being associated during this period with some of the greatest civil engineers of the world. He eventually returned to America, and in July, 1837, came with a corps of engineers to Terre Haute, Ind., and he afterward assisted in the surveys for five different railroads, through Indiana and Illinois. He was always a traveling engineer, never having a permanent location. Soon after his return from Europe he settled for a time in Pennsylvania, where he wrote a history of twenty different counties. Later he performed a similar work on counties in Ohio. While making his surveys through Indiana and Illinois he resided for some time at Rockville, Ind. He retired from his profession when he was eighty years old, and since 1896 has made his residence with his daughter, Mrs. Kiler.

Mr. Arms married Lucinda Hayden, a descendant of the Haydens, who originally platted Haydenville, Massachusetts, and who figured prominently in several different walks of life. Mrs. Arms died at Columbus, Ohio, in 1872, in the Presbyterian faith. To Mr. and Mrs. Arms were born six children: Christopher T., an engineer by profession; Richard C., a florist, residing at Champaign, Ill.; Walter T., a civil engineer, residing at Punxsutawney, Pa.; Isabelle, who married James H. Moore, a Civil war veteran, of Columbus, Ohio, who served in forty battles without receiving a single wound; Anna P., who married Julius Smith, and after his death, Col. John Wilson, a noted engineer of Philadelphia; and Henrietta, Mrs. Kiler. Mr. Arms has been a man of exceptional ability and is highly cultivated, and in his work he has been brought into contact with the crowned heads and aristocracy of Europe as well as many of the great men of his own country. Among his personal friends he has counted such men as Abraham Lincoln.

HORACE PARROTT, who is now living retired at No. 627 North Delaware street, Indianapolis, was born at Cynthiana, Ky., Sept. 23, 1830, and is descended from an old American family, his paternal grandfather being a wealthy sea captain who at one time commanded a privateer. His maternal grandfather, Hiram Wyatt, died in the East, leaving a large family.

John Parrott, father of Horace, was born in Maryland. He married Sarah Wyatt, daughter of Hiram, she being a native of New Jersey. John Parrott was a coach trimmer, and bore arms in the war of 1812. Coming to Kentucky at an early age he located later at Cincinnati, where he had his home for a few years. He later went to Missouri to make his home with one of his children, but afterward came to Indianapolis. He died in Germantown, Pa., about 1857, and his remains were brought to Indianapolis for interment. Some years prior to his death his wife had passed away. He was a member of the Christian Church. Four sons and three daughters had been born to them, but Horace is now the only living member of the family.

Horace Parrott when a small boy moved from Kentucky to Cincinnati with his parents, and received the education common to the youth of the time. After a time he went to Shelbyville, Ky., where he attended school for one year, and then went to Louisville and entered the office of the Journal, there learning the printer's trade. This he followed some years, but was compelled to abandon after a few years on account of ill health. For a time he was employed on the river with his uncle, and for two years held a position in the railroad office at Dayton, Ohio. In 1855 he came to Indianapolis to take a position with the Indiana Central Railroad Company, which he held for seven years, becoming general ticket agent. In 1862 he formed a partnership with John R. Nickum, and bought out Alexander and Jacob Metzger in the bakery business. After conducting this together for a few years, Mr. Nickum sold out his interest to his partner, and Mr. Parrott took in a Mr. Smithers, but a year later Mr. Parrott sold his interest and he and Mr. Nickum again went into business and were together for several years. Mr. Nickum finally retired in favor of his partner, who took his son, Burton E., into the business and later still a Mr. Taggart was received as a silent partner. Mr. Parrott continued in the bakery business until 1891, when leaving his son and Mr. Taggart as partners, he retired from the business.

Horace Parrott was married Jan. 4, 1854, to Miss Rebecca, daughter of William and Frances (Houton) Matthews, both natives of Maryland. To the union of Horace and Rebecca (Matthews) Parrott came four children, namely: (1) Burton E., who married Sue E. Cumingore, is the father of three children, Mary, Robert and Josephine. (2) Eugene is in the Parrott-Taggart Baking Company. To him and his wife Pauline was born one child, Grace Eleanor. (3) Frances married Hamilton R. Lancaster, and they live in Indianapolis, and they have two children, Horace and Ralph. (4) Kate married Lawson Harvey, and they live on Alabama street. They have a family of three children, Thomas, Horace and Jeannette. Mrs. Parrott is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Parrott is a Universalist. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and a Knight Templar. He is also a member of Philoxenia Lodge, I. O. O. F. In politics he may be classified as an independent Republican, usually voting the Republican ticket. He built his present home in 1857, and enjoys the respect and confidence of a host of friends.

CHARLES STAKE. Few, if any passenger engineers of the Indiana Central railroad, now a part of the Pennsylvania system, are held in higher esteem by their employers than this man of long-trying service, now making his run from Indianapolis, Ind., to Columbus, Ohio. By hard work and faithful service he rose to his present position from that of fireman, and he has by efficient service retained his place for nearly thirty years. A practical business man as well as engineer, he is well-to-do and owns considerable property in Indianapolis, where he has long made his residence.

Mr. Stake comes of good German stock. His father, Lewis Stake, was born in Germany, and there passed many years of his life. He learned the trade of weaver, and worked at it for many years in his native land. In 1833 he broke home ties and came to America, and soon afterward settled in Dayton, Ohio. Here he entered the employ of Judge Farley as a day laborer, and so continued for the most part throughout the rest of his active life. He was industrious and thrifty, and made a comfortable home for himself and family. He died in Dayton in 1849. Mr. Stake married in Germany Mary Amman, who was born in that country, daughter of good German Catholics. She had five brothers: Joseph, a farmer who settled at Sidney, Ohio; Ex, a tailor by trade; Charles, who also settled at Sidney; Ferdinand, also a tailor by trade, who filled the office of county treasurer at Sidney, and who served in the Mexican war, and later as lieutenant and major in the Civil war; and Philip, a boot and shoe dealer at Frankfort-on-the-Main, who remained in the old country and died there, leaving two sons, who are now engaged in the boot and shoe business in Paris, France. A sister of Mrs. Stake married a Mr. Fifer. After the death of Mr. Stake, Mrs. Mary (Amman) Stake married F. Carom, and settled upon a farm in Greenville, Ohio, where in 1877 she died. By her marriage to Mr. Stake there were six children: Lewis, a wealthy shoemaker and manufacturer of shoe lasts at Dayton, Ohio; Mary, born in Germany, who married Philip Weaver, a horseshoer at Dayton, Ohio, and died in April, 1901; Joseph, a finisher by trade, residing in Indianapolis; Caroline, who married F. Rolla, of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Charles, mentioned below; and John, an engineer connected with the Indianapolis fire department. Lewis Stake, the father, was a good business man, and a person of some prominence in his native home. He was a faithful workman, honest in his dealings, and a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church, to which his wife also belonged.

Charles Stake was born in Dayton, Montgomery county, Ohio, Jan. 2, 1843. Losing his own father at the early age of six years, he was reared on the farm of his stepfather, near Greenville, Ohio, and in the district schools of his locality procured his early education. For some years he assisted in the management of the farm, and thus acquired considerable knowledge of agriculture. At the age of twenty, desiring to better his condition in life, he went to Indianapolis, and procured a position in a furniture store, where, giving good satisfaction, he remained for a year. Of a mechanical turn of mind he secured a position with the Indiana Central Railroad and began firing an engine. Fourteen months later he was promoted to engineer, and had charge of the engines in the yard. Efficient service won him the confidence of the company, and after five years, about 1870, he was made engineer of a freight train, making its run to Piqua and Bradford Junction. After four years—in 1874—he was transferred to the passenger line, between Indianapolis and Columbus, Ohio, and he has remained in this position steadily, and is now one of the most trusted men in the employ of the company in his line. He has at all times been very fortunate in escaping accidents, and no mishaps have occurred through any fault of his, nor has any one been injured or killed by him through all his years of service. At all times commanding good wages, he has invested his earnings so as to procure a good income, and in addition to a fine residence in Indianapolis, he now owns other property there which he rents to good advantage.

In 1881 Mr. Stake married Ella Smith, who was born in Kenton county, Ky., Oct. 31, 1857, and by this union there has been one child, Jessie, born July 2, 1882. Mr. Stake has achieved success entirely through his own efforts. Possessed of sound judgment, great energy under thorough control, he is eminently fitted for the position he has filled so long and ably. He is a man of high morals, marked integrity of character, and is independent in his religious views. In politics he usually affiliates with the Democrats, but reserves the right to vote for the best man as he chooses. His wife is well known, and they have a large circle of friends. She is one of the active members of the Presbyterian Church.

David S. Smith, father of Mrs. Stake, was born in Massachusetts of good English stock. At an early date he settled in Kentucky, upon a farm which he purchased, and engaged in agriculture very successfully for many years. About 1860 he moved to Indianapolis, where he engaged in business for a number of years, and later he tried his luck for some time in the gas belts, but eventually settled upon a farm near Covington, Ohio, where he passed his last days and died. During his early manhood Mr. Smith married Ann Riley, who was born in Kentucky of good Irish stock, and of this union there were three children: Sarah, who married H. Drake, and resides in Ohio (he is now deceased); Ella, Mrs. Stake; and Alfred, who is engaged in farming in North Dakota. Mr. Smith affiliated with the Democrats, and in local affairs always evinced a keen interest.

WILLIAM H. SCHRADER, the popular and successful state agent for the Pacific Mutual Life, Accident and Health Insurance Company, with offices in the Lemeke Building, at Indianapolis, was born in that city, Oct. 11, 1871, son of William and Rachel (Buschmann) Schrader, both of whom were born in Germany.

Mr. Schrader's maternal grandfather was born in Germany, coming to this country while still a young man, and engaging in farming in Ohio. In his later years he lived in Indianapolis, where he died at the age of seventy-three years, the father of a numerous family. The history of the paternal grandfather of Mr. Schrader is not known.

William Schrader, father of William H., was a cooper, and when a young man came to this country, following his trade in Indianapolis up to the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the 11th Ind. V. I., and served throughout the war with credit. While in the army he contracted disease with such ill effect on his health that he was early awarded a pension from the Government. In 1866 he married Rachel Buschmann. His death occurred Dec. 5, 1874, at the comparatively early age of thirty-eight years. His widow still survives, and is passing a serene old age in her home in Indianapolis. Both were members of the German Lutheran Church. They had two children born to them, Rose Margaret, the wife of Robert Allen, of Toledo, Ohio; and William H.

William H. Schrader, whose name begins this article, was reared in Indianapolis, and attended the public schools. Until 1887 he was engaged in various occupations, but that year he went into the life insurance business, and displayed those peculiar qualities that make for large success in soliciting and closing life insurance. In 1888 Mr. Schrader went to Chicago, and was engaged at Cleveland and Cincinnati until 1897, when he returned to Indianapolis to take a position as State Agent for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company. He has written himself on the rolls of life insurance a very creditable history, as an enterprising and pushing representative of a large interest in the modern world, and the value of his work to the beneficiaries of his insured can hardly be estimated. When he entered upon this agency he was only twenty-six years of age, but he came to the front almost immediately with a very brilliant campaign of aggressive works, and the results thoroughly vindicate the committing of such important interests to so young a man.

Mr. Schrader is a member of the Marion Club, and the Independent Turners' and the Maennerchor Societies. In politics he is a Republican. His home is with his mother in "The Taggart." Personally he is highly esteemed by a host of friends, who appreciate his frank and manly qualities.

DR. J. W. DAVIS, medical examiner, is located at No. 29 West Eleventh street, Anderson, Madison county, Indiana.

ARCHIE ALEXANDER DIXON, who carries on a drug business at No. 1127 Madison avenue, Indianapolis, is making his way to the fore in his line of trade by hard work and strict attention to business. He is a native of Akron, Ohio, born Dec. 28, 1874, son of James R. and Rebecca Dixon. His father is of English extraction, his mother of German descent, her family being prominent in Summit county, Ohio.

Mr. Dixon first attended the public schools of his native place, later pursuing his studies at Buchtel College, and preparing for his profession at the Scio College of Pharmacy, Scio, Ohio. After graduating from the latter institution he returned to Akron, where he found employment as clerk in one of the leading drug stores, holding the position for a period of eight years. Desiring to become better acquainted with the surrounding country he then accepted a position as traveling salesman, and in that capacity went out from Indianapolis all over the West, selling drugs and druggists' supplies. He was very successful in that line, and not only familiarized himself with the situation in the territory he covered but also became widely acquainted in different States during the two years he continued thus. At the end of that time he decided to settle down to the regular work of his calling again, and he obtained a position with the firm of Mooney & Miller, wholesale druggists. His wide experience in different branches of the business enabled him to serve them most satisfactorily, and he remained with them until ready to start on his own account. Meantime he was obliged to regulate his expenditures with the utmost economy, for he was ambitious and anxious to begin business for himself, and the fact that he had only a quarter in his pocket when he commenced to work for Mooney & Miller indicates the rapid strides he has made toward prosperity within the last few years. In time he was in a position to take the store he has since owned and operated, though after paying for the business he did not have enough left to change a five-dollar bill. His success is the old story of perseverance, square dealing and courteous treatment of patrons, which always bring their reward. He became popular with all whom his business brought him into contact, and his business increased until it is now upon a most substantial basis, and steadily growing. He has ability of a high order, and is gaining confidence among all his associates.

Mr. Dixon is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a Protestant in religious faith.

GENERAL JOHN COBURN: MEMORIAL.—Gen. John Coburn departed this life Jan. 28, 1908. The State lost one of its greatest characters. He was intensely a Hoosier. His life almost spanned the entire life of the State. Very few if any men did as much public service as he. Judge Daniel Wait Howe says: "General Coburn was the greatest Congressman, and did more effective service in that office than any other man the State had honored with that position." He was laid to rest in Crown Hill Cemetery, of which he had been a director since its founding.

The whole city mourned his death and felt the loss. This was especially true of the older residents. The Marion County Bar met, and a committee on Memorial was appointed, consisting of Daniel W. Howe, John S. Duncan, Eli F. Ritter, W. H. H. Miller and W. W. Wollen. Addresses were made testifying to the high character of General Coburn as a citizen, statesman, lawyer, judge and soldier, the speakers being George McDonald, Judge Leathers, Daniel W. Howe, John S. Duncan, Col. E. F. Ritter, William Patterson, William Irvin and W. W. Woollen. The following memorial was adopted:

Gen. John Coburn came of old Massachusetts Puritan stock. His great-grandfather, Peter Coburn, was a captain in the Continental army, and commanded his company at the battle of Bunker Hill. His father settled at Corydon, then the capital of the State, the year after its admission, in 1816, removing from there in 1824 to Indianapolis, where General Coburn was born Oct. 27, 1825.

Few, if any, have lived so long in this city. He saw the beginnings of it in a vast wilderness, and lived to see all the marvelous developments of it for nearly a century. He was graduated from Wabash College in 1846, and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme court of the State in 1849. For nearly fifty years after that he was in public life, beginning as a representative in the Indiana Legislature in 1851. He practiced law until 1859, when he was made a judge of the old Common Pleas court. When the gun was fired at Fort Sumter that aroused the nation to the realization that the threats of secession were not the vaporings of Southern fire-eaters, but foreboded the impending calamity of civil war, General Coburn was among the most zealous of those in this State who stood for the old Union and the old flag. It was a time that tried men's souls in this State, a border State, where there were many who sympathized with the secessionists.

In September, 1861, he resigned his office as judge to accept appointment as colonel of the 33d Indiana Volunteers. He served in the army with conspicuous fidelity and courage. His regiment participated in the battle of Wild Cat, the first fought on Kentucky soil. Afterward his regiment joined the Army of the Cumberland and participated in all the notable battles of the Atlanta campaign. For gallant and meritorious services in this campaign he was brevetted a brigadier-general.

After the close of the war he again entered public life, serving first as Circuit Judge for the circuit then comprising Marion and Hendricks, and afterward Johnson, counties, to which position he was elected without opposition in the fall of 1865. In 1866 he was elected to Congress and served as Congressman until March, 1875. He was one of the most useful and hard-working members of that body, serving on many important committees. While a forcible and at times an eloquent speaker, he never aspired to make a reputation as an orator, but aimed throughout his Congressional career to serve what he deemed to be the best interests of his country. He opposed further land grants to the railroads, favored rigid economy in the expenditure of the people's money, and originated the measure for the publication of the Rebellion Records, a work of the utmost value in the preservation of the history of the Civil war, and took an active part in all the important questions of the day. After the close of his Congressional services he served as one of the United States Commissioners at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and also for a time as one of the judges of the Supreme court of Montana Territory.

He took great interest in his native city, and was active in every movement for its welfare. He was for a time one of the school commissioners, and was active in introducing the manual training system. To him, probably more than to any other one man, we are indebted for the preservation of Garfield Park, now a beautiful and restful resort for thousands, that for several years was neglected and seemingly about to be abandoned.

In the last few years of his life General Coburn, like most men of his age, lived in the past. To talk with him was like opening a volume of history. He knew thoroughly the early history of this State, of the hardships and dangers of pioneer life, of the transformation of the swamps and forests into beautiful landscapes, of the very beginnings of railroads and telegraphs, of the development of all our agricultural, manufacturing and mining industries, of all the changes the nineteenth century wrought in Indiana, more magical than any created by the touch of Aladdin's lamp. He had known nearly all the great men of this State. With many of them he was on terms of intimate acquaintance; with many, of close personal friendship. He knew personally all the Presidents from Lincoln down to the present time; he knew personally nearly all the commanding figures in public affairs at Washington during and long after the close of the Civil war; he knew nearly all the generals, Federal and Confederate. On all these subjects his mind was clear up to nearly the very close of his life, and one never tired of listening to his talk about them. In listening to him, the past seemed to be turned into the present, and the hearer felt that he himself was talking to the historic figures of days gone by.

But the highest tribute that can be paid to General Coburn, the highest that can be paid to any man, is that from the beginning to the end of his life, in all his professional, judicial, military and official career, his integrity was never questioned. He held many public offices that he might have used for his personal profit, but he never was suspected of using any of them to put a cent into his own pocket. He was conspicuous for rugged honesty and fidelity to every trust that was reposed in him. He was a man of strong convictions, of great earnestness of purpose, outspoken in his advocacy of right and denunciation of wrong. Such a man is certain to arouse antagonisms. But even in times when men were influenced by party zeal or embittered by party rancor, his political opponents acknowledged his sterling honesty and uprightness of purpose.

He lived to be almost a stranger personally to the young men of the present generation, but his works will live after him. We of the legal profession should be the first to pay tribute to his memory.

His widow and mate for more than fifty years still survives; character equally good, equally strong in her separate individual way, and with the passing of these two, the nation, the State, and especially the city loses the greatest connecting link between the days of long ago and the present time.
